Although the workers were later rehired "under the pressure of an arbitrator's decision," backed by a court ruling, the national boycott continued and was intensified because the San Francisco incident was "only the climax of a long series of anti-labor acts by the world's largest general merchandise corporation," the union said.

In Factory Sector:

3.7% Jobless Rate Reflects Softening

Simultaneously, the number of workers on involuntary part-time started to increase and weekly hours fell.

"In February, manufacturing employment began to decline, hours dropped sharply and involuntary part-time employment continued to rise.

"In March and April, factory hours and economic part-time employment were no longer absorbing the slack. As a result, the number of employes on manufacturing payrolls fell off sharply.

"The reduction in manufacturing activity is connected with the working off of excessive inventory accumulation. While the inventory reduction continued, there was a steady rise in the demand for personal services and in government employment—especially at the state and local level. In addition, retail trade employment has expanded moderately since mid-winter."

Jobs Up 98,000

The overall employment gains totaled 98,000, seasonally adjusted, pushing the non-farm total to its record 65.6 million. The biggest gains over the month were 187,000 in retail trade, 43,000 in state and local government, 21,000 in federal government and 17,000 in services.

These gains more than offset the losses of 117,000 in manufacturing, 41,000 in construction and 30,000 in transportation and utilities.

While construction employment picked up by 210,000 in April, the Labor Dept. report noted, this was 41,000 less than was seasonally expected, adding:

"The spring employment pick-up in construction has been sluggish, resulting in a seasonally adjusted decline of 70,000 since February."

The April jobs report pointed up again the long-range shift in employment from the factory to the service sector. Over the year, non-farm payroll employment rose by 2.1 million. Factory jobs were up 300,000, while in the service-producing sector the gains were 750,000 in government, 500,000 in services and 350,000 in trade.

The Labor Dept. also introduced in the jobs report for the first time its estimates of hours and earnings for 44 million workers on private non-farm payrolls. Previously, these estimates were confined to the group of 14 million factory production workers. So a broader picture is now regularly available.

In April, the report said, the workweek for those non-farm payrolls averaged 37.9 hours, down six-tenths of an hour from April 1966.

Despite the drop in hours, the report noted, weekly earnings were up by $2.27 over the year to $99.68.

The factory workweek—the earlier indicator—averaged 40.5 hours, seasonally adjusted, in April. This was up slightly from March but was well below the range of 41.0 to 41.5 hours that prevailed from December 1964 through November 1966, the report said.

Weekly earnings for factory production workers were $112.56 in April, up by $1.32 from a year earlier. The rise trailed that for the non-manufacturing sector, the report observed, but this was traced to the workweek decline of one hour.

The over-the-year drop in hours was described as "especially large" —1.7 to 1.9 hours—in furniture, transportation equipment, primary metals and electrical equipment.

Dr. Arthur M. Ross, Commissioner of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, utilized the jobs press conference to call for "a most intensive effort" to provide meaningful work experiences for 3.4 million youngsters this summer.

Of this large group of 16 to 21-year-olds, who will enter the labor force between April and July, Ross said, about 1 million will be seeking permanent jobs and 2.4 million will want summer work.

HISTADRUT HUMANITARIAN AWARD is presented to Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey at a dinner attended by American and Israel trade union leaders. Zeev Barash, U.S. representative of Israel's trade union federation, made the presentation. Joining in the ceremony is AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, a previous award winner.

Humphrey Warns Cuts Threaten Social Gains

Some of the great social programs passed by the 89th Congress are in jeopardy over appropriations, Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey has warned.

"Unless we come to grips with it, we may see some of the basic programs of the Great Society starved of funds, and some of its most promising innovations cut off altogether," Humphrey declared here.

The occasion was the presentation to the Vice President of the 1967 Histadrut Humanitarian Award, and American and Israel trade union leaders joined together to honor him.

Histadrut Award

The award has been given since 1950 to a dozen men in public life and the trade union movement who have been selected by the National Committee for Labor Israel.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, a previous recipient, told the 600 guests at the dinner here that Humphrey is a "militant advocate of every cause that has to do with civil rights, human rights and for the little people of America."

Machinist Pres. P. L. (Roy) Siemiller, chairman of the dinner, declared that the Vice President "is the best man we liberals and trade unionists have going for us today."

Pres. Louis Stulberg of the Ladies' Garment Workers referred to Humphrey as "symbolic of the spirit of American liberalism."

Zeev Barash, American representative for Histadrut, the General Federation of Labor in Israel, presented the bronze plaque to the Vice President "in grateful appreciation of his outstanding efforts in fostering sympathetic understanding between the people of the United States and the people of Israel; and his warm encouragement to the cause of Histadrut."

Humphrey, in warning of the threat to the Great Society programs, said that those who seek to eliminate or reduce the programs have "their chosen alibi, the war in Viet Nam." But, he added, "they are grievously mistaken."

"This nation," he declared, "with its Gross National Product running over three-quarters of a trillion dollars a year, can afford to extend freedom at home at the same time that it defends it abroad. And it must."

It would be "scandalous if the many of our brave soldiers who came from our slums returned to find them just as they were, or even worse," he said.

He stressed that the war on poverty is but another step in the great social programs which were first started by Pres. Roosevelt and continued under Presidents Truman, Kennedy and Johnson.

Another speaker, Israel Ambassador Avraham Harmen, told the dinner guests that Humphrey "is regarded throughout the world for his guiding doctrine of the equal rights of each human being to develop his own personality and capabilities to the fullest extent."

A Histadrut scholarship fund will be endowed in Israel in Humphrey's name.

Laborers Get Federal Pact To Train 1,500

Classroom and on-the-job training as construction laborers will be given 1,500 men in 11 states and the District of Columbia under a Manpower Development Training Act contract between the Laborers and the federal government.

The program will be carried out over the next 15 months and will start with four weeks of classroom and related instruction in the language of the trade and the safe use of equipment and materials. It will be financed by grants from the Labor Dept. and the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare totaling $1.6 million.

Under the agreement, the Laborers will initiate subcontracts with locals to provide instructors, training facilities and supplies. If necessary, assistance will be provided by state and local vocational education personnel.

The training includes four weeks of on-the-job experience during which the trainees will earn full-time salaries and perform basic work, such as operating air and hand tools and power saws, setting road forms, and sand-blasting.

Sixty-five percent of the trainees will come from disadvantaged families and will be chosen by local U.S. Employment Service Offices. They will receive training allowances and transportation expenses.

Enrollment will be divided as follows: Texas 256, Pennsylvania 192, Illinois and Washington 160 each, Indiana and Ohio 128 each, West Virginia, Missouri and Oregon 96 each, Delaware and Maryland 64 each, and the District of Columbia 32.

AFTE Picks Woodside as New President

James Woodside has been named president of the American Federation of Technical Engineers by the union's executive council.

Woodside, 50, has been AFTE secretary-treasurer since 1965 and previously had been the Atlantic area organizer. He succeeds Russell M. Stephens, who recently accepted a post with the U. S. Civil Service Commission after having served as president since 1951. Woodside will fill the unexpired term until the union's next convention in the summer of 1968.

A native of New Jersey, Woodside worked as a mechanical engineer in Philadelphia before becoming an AFTE organizer in 1957.

The council named John H. Dunne, 37, as secretary-treasurer until the convention. Dunne, from Chicago, has been AFTE midwest organizer for the past five years. Stephens was awarded the honorary post of president emeritus.

2,600 Hunt Jobs as N.Y. Daily Folds; Guild 'White Paper' Calls for Probe

New York—The sudden closedown of the World Journal Tribune forced 10 newspaper unions to activate job placement centers for 2,600 WJT employes and brought a demand from union spokesmen for a government inquiry into the real reasons for suspension of publication.

The afternoon daily, an amalgam of three dailies, made a bulletin board announcement May 5 that it was shutting up shop at the close of business that day.

The Newspaper Guild, representing 750 white collar employes, issued a "white paper" saying that as late as the night before the closing, top management told supervisors that the WJT was making progress. Even on the closing day, WJT management gave notice that the paper was calling back a number of employes whose names were on a rehiring list, it said.

The Typographers also called for a congressional investigation of the closing so the public "would not have to depend on self-serving management statements."

Charges and counter-charges followed the WJT's death notice.

Publisher Matt Meyer blamed the unions. Pres. Bertram A. Powers of Typographical Local 6 ascribed the paper's demise to "internal problems" among the owners. A New York Times report quoted a businessman "intimately involved with newspaper affairs" as saying the WJT had "structural problems" well outside the labor field, such as inability to write off tax losses, that doomed it.

The shutdown came shortly after the Daily News and ITU Local 6 reached agreement on terms of a new three-year contract. Similar terms, except for minor differences due to separate pension plans, were agreed to by Local 6 and the Times.

Next on the ITU schedule were two S. I. Newhouse newspapers on Long Island. Powers said his union was close to agreement with the Long Island Press and Long Island Star-Journal.

The printers won wage hikes of about $33 a week over the contract period at the News and Times; a cost-of-living bonus if the Consumer Price Index rises more than 4 percent by the end of the first and second contract years; a half-hour reduction in the workweek on night and lobster shifts, and improved fringe benefits.

Automation Study

The Newhouse chain offered to match the other papers' terms if Local 6 would agree to more automation in the "back shop." Powers said he gave the same answer to all three publishers—the union will study the problem during the life of the new contract.

The closing of the WJT was unexpected, though the Sunday editions were reported losing money. In expectation of some job losses, Local 6 cut back several months ago on admissions of apprentices and journeymen. The result is that of 500 jobs lost, about 300 can be assimilated because of attrition.

While the ITU prepared for an early end to negotiations, the Printing Pressmen and the Mailers resumed talks with the News and Times that had been disrupted by the closing of the WJT and the need for help to job-hunting members. Other unions also held contract talks.

The Times and the News, both morning papers, said they were looking into the possibility of entering the afternoon field. Publisher Dorothy Schiff of the afternoon Post, which negotiates separately with the unions, stepped up her paper's press run and started looking for additional printing facilities. Publisher O. Roy Chalk of El Diario-LaPrensa spoke of proposing contract terms to unions which would staff a new afternoon daily.

An estimated $8 million in severance pay was due the 2,600 WJT employes who lost their jobs.

The Attack on School Aid

THE ELEMENTARY & SECONDARY EDUCATION ACT of 1965 has been hailed widely and correctly as historic legislation providing a breakthrough in the area of federal aid to education.

Today, this legislation is in serious jeopardy. The AFL-CIO Executive Council is determined that the great educational gains achieved by the 89th Congress shall not be destroyed.

Despite support for the continuation of ESEA from every major educational organization, the vast majority of state school superintendents, local school districts, and the non-public school organizations, the Republican Policy Committee of the House of Representatives has chosen to make this vital legislation a partisan political issue.

Waving the banner of "federal control," this Republican leadership is seeking to wipe out ESEA and substitute a form of financial block grants to the states. In playing politics with the education of America's youth, the Republican leadership is guilty of a national disservice.

Over 8 million educationally deprived children in virtually all of the country's 23,000 school districts already have received direct benefits under ESEA. This far-reaching law has established a national policy directed at meeting the special needs of the educationally poor.

As proposed by Rep. Albert Quie (R-Minn.), the Republican substitute would permit the states to ignore this national policy. It would, instead, permit the individual states to practice economic discrimination.

Block grants can only intensify the present financial conflicts between the large cities and respective state governments. Programs developed at the state level can provide no federal guarantee that funds will go where they are most needed—to help the children of the slums and the rural depressed areas.

The block grant approach also threatens to rekindle the flames of controversy over the state-church issue that frustrated enactment of federal aid to education for over 20 years. Private school organizations are deeply concerned that their students will no longer be able to participate in many federal programs if these programs are administered by state departments of education.

The allocation formula as now spelled out in the Quie substitute provides half the states with less funds than they would receive under H.R. 7819. These are the states most in need: those with low per pupil expenditures and those with the largest number of youths living in poverty.

The Quie substitute also prohibits the use of such funds for general classroom construction and improved teacher salaries, while —at the same time—eliminating provisions for such successfully operating programs as the Teacher Corps, aid for the children of migrant workers, foster children, and many others.

The Quie substitute also has a detrimental effect on civil rights. The elimination of "federal control" will not make it easier to enforce desegregation guidelines. A cutback in funds to the cities will punish severely the economically poor children of minority groups.

The Quie substitute would reduce by $281 million fiscal 1969 authorizations provided in H.R. 7819. No such reduction is justified.

The AFL-CIO Executive Council, therefore, urges the members of both parties in the House to join together in rejecting the Quie substitute and giving bipartisan support to H.R. 7819—a continuation of the landmark Elementary & Secondary Education Act.

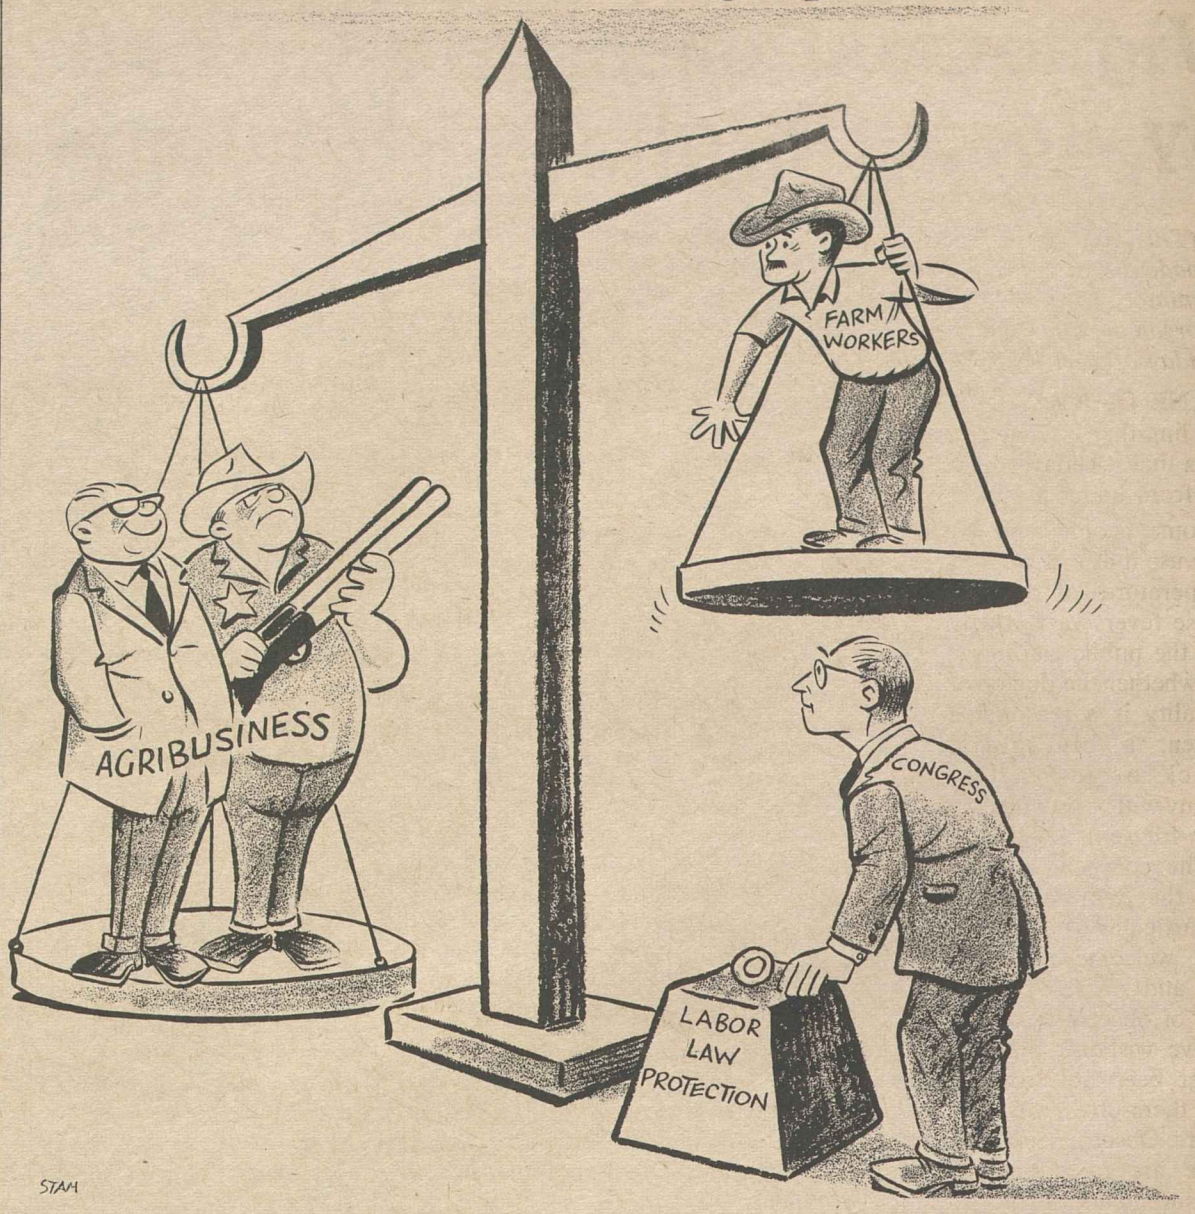
Let's Even Things Up



Marks 70th Anniversary:

Jewish Daily Forward Traces Trade Union Ties to Its Birth

The following is exerpted from "The Forward—Labor's Ally for 70 Years," by J. C. Rich, appearing in the May 1967 issue of the AFL-CIO American Federationist.

THE JEWISH DAILY FORWARD, 70 years old this year, has always cherished its labor credentials as its most valued asset. It began life on an issue of trade union allegiance and has maintained its close bond with labor through all the years of its existence.

This association consisted not merely of generally sympathetic leanings. Beyond all other libertarian strivings was the Forward's own direct, intimate and intense involvement with the cause of labor. The Forward is well-known in the labor movement as spokesman and protagonist of the apparel trades unions. What is less well-known, perhaps, is that it came into being in defense against an assault on the former American Federation of Labor by a coterie of left-wing fanatics grouped in the Socialist Labor Party of those days. Insufficiently defined also is its opposition to the Intl. Workers of the World in the decade or two after its founding and, finally, the Forward's victorious struggle with the Communists in recent decades in their effort to capture the needle trades unions and obtain leverage for dominance over the entire labor movement.

Beyond its immediate sphere of the garment unions, the Forward also mobilized the Jewish populace of the United States and Canada in behalf of labor's major struggles. In the strikes of coal miners, steel workers, textile workers and in other of labor's ordeals, the Forward contributed not alone its own funds but also aligned the entire Jewish community in aid of the strikers.

The Forward came into being in 1897 in a ferment of conflicting ideologies. Then, as now, there were men who sought shortcuts to Utopia. The dictatorship of the few on the premise that it would benefit the many was a novel idea in the radical circles of the time, yet in effect it held dominance among them. Indeed, long before there were bolsheviks, the idea that all power must be vested in an elite group of radicals was already being advocated as a matter of right and of humanistic prerogative.

The spark that gave birth to the Forward was a revolt against the dictatorial rule that had fastened itself on the American socialist movement toward the end of the last century. In the 1890s, as in the 1920s, the war was an ideological one, but the battlefront was on the field of trade unionism. At that time, the leader of the then Socialist Labor Party was Daniel De Leon. De Leon could not brook any sort of opposition or even criticism. This intolerance came to a head on the issue of trade unionism. A union that was not socialist and subservient to his direction was of no use to him. He had no compunction about destroying it, even if he had to send his disciples to act as strikebreakers.

IN THE PERIOD just before the founding of the Forward, the Knights of Labor were already on the decline but several of the early Jewish unions were still affiliated with it. De Leon had tried to infiltrate the rising American Federation of Labor but was thwarted by Samuel Gompers. Thereupon De Leon cast his lot with the Knights and tried to take over its national office in 1895. Defeated in this attempt, he created an independent labor federation, the Socialist Trade & Labor Alliance, in opposition to both the Knights and the AFL.

By that time, a Yiddish labor daily, the Ovend Blatt ("Evening Journal") was already in existence. Under De Leon's auspices, it was steeped in radical dogma and had a puny circulation. The one man who might have given it vigorous editorial direction refused to assume the task. He was Abraham Cahan who later, as editor of the Forward, demonstrated creative genius as journalist, mentor and guide of the Jewish immigrant community in America.

The break came when De Leon attempted to force branches of the Socialist Labor Party to act as strikebreaking agencies against the AFL. To the Jewish workers this violation of union principle was unspeakable sacrilege and they refused to engage in strikebreaking.

In April the anti-De Leon, anti-dogmatic, anti-strikebreaking group had raised enough money to begin publishing a new labor daily in the Yiddish language. It was called Forverts ("Forward").

Under Cahan's direction the Forward became an organ of extraordinary power and persuasion. The Jewish immigrants who came to these shores in wave upon wave found in the Forward an instrument of education and enlightenment such as they had never known before. The paper brought them knowledge of the American nation and the modes and customs of the new way of life. It taught them an awareness of their dignity as human beings and their right to just treatment as working people.

Morgan Says:

'Vigilante' Censorship Curbed By Recent High Court Rulings

By Edward P. Morgan

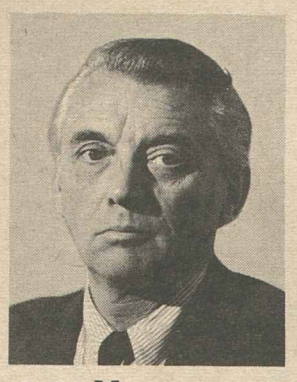
ONE OF THE DIFFICULTIES about corralling that lascivious commodity called obscenity is that it behaves like a blob of mercury rolling out from under a pursuing thumb.

Some people have tried to bottle it, but then they use it as one would use a thermometer to take temperatures of outrage. These fevers vary widely and the public can never tell whether the doctor of morality is a reasonable citizen, a blue-nosed quack or a Playboy Bunny with a provocative nose for sex.



Morgan

The courts in general and the Supreme Court in particular would probably welcome a sound, fair and durable definition of obscenity. In all their individual and collective wisdoms the judges and the justices have never been able to come up with a satisfactory one themselves. As indicated the reason is quite clear. Obscenity involves emotional reactions and these are mercurial, not reducible to accurate measurements.

Just a year ago in sharply divided opinions which alarmed a number of responsible people, including dissenting justices, the Supreme Court upheld two convictions for obscenity. The defendants were New York Publishers Ralph Ginzburg and Edward Mishkin. In the Ginzburg case especially the court developed a new criterion, not for obscenity per se, but for the manner in which erotic material was merchandized. Speaking for the majority, Justice Brennan said Ginzburg's sales pitch for a magazine called Eros and other publications bore the "leer of the sensualist."

Some legal observers concluded that meant content might escape classification as obscene if undue promotional attention were not called to it. Nevertheless the decisions encouraged a series of censorship efforts, some by self-appointed protectors of public morals. Indeed, the New York Times reported that a member of the John Birch Society recently elected to the board of trustees of the Farmingdale, L. I., public library, one Carl E. Gorton, confiscated on his own authority a library copy of the Paris Review because he found a short story in it objectionable.

But, the Supreme Court [has now] indicated, with what might be described as prudent clarity, that it had not intended to sponsor a field day of vigilanteism on the subject of obscenity.

It did not withdraw or contradict the unique reasoning it had developed last year on the point of sensuous salesmanship, though one is tempted to wonder if the majority had not regretted its vintage rationale—especially in view of the fact the new action took the pains to spell out the existence of a wide difference of opinion among the nine justices on some aspects of obscenity.

But in throwing out three state cases on the subject, the court showed an impressive lack of difference. The votes were seven to two, Justices Harlan and Clark dissenting.

Involved were 10 girlie magazines and two paperback books. The court ruled that they were protected by the free speech guarantee in the First Amendment. This was precisely the logic used last year by Justice Potter Stewart, usually described as a moderately conservative member of the court, in dissenting from the Ginzburg decision. The censorship of anything but the worst "hard core" pornography, he argued then, not only violates the First Amendment but betrays society's lack of confidence in itself.

"If the First Amendment means anything," he continued, "it means that a man cannot be sent to prison merely for distributing publications which offend a judge's esthetic sensibilities."

By such process, he warned, "we forsake a government of law and are left with government by Big Brother."

WITH JUSTICE STEWART voting with the majority this time, the court noted that in the three cases brought up, three significant things were absent.

"In none . . . was there a claim that the statute in question reflected a specific and limited state concern for juveniles. . . . In none was there any suggestion of an assault upon individual privacy by publication in a manner so obtrusive as to make it impossible for an unwilling individual to avoid exposure to it. . . . And in none was there evidence of the sort of 'pandering' which the court found significant in Ginzburg vs. United States."

It is possible that the court is suggesting a future distinction to protect tender young minds, that if it is specifically contended, as it was not in these cases, that juvenile morals are openly threatened by such material, then perhaps sterner lines must be drawn.

Sex used to be daubed in dirty words on the back of the barn. It still is, but something new is being added in the living room and the classroom: the belated realization that sex is not inherently ugly or evil. If this sophistication continues obscenity will continue to lose its secret, lurid thrill and the only real losers will be self-appointed guardians of other people's morals, facing unemployment.

State Laws 'Deficient':

Need Cited for U.S. Standards On Workmen's Compensation

ORGANIZED LABOR renewed its call for federal legislation to give industrially-injured workers workmen's compensation protection that meets the "standards of a great society."

More than half a century after the states began setting up on-the-job injury insurance systems "basic deficiencies" remain, said Lawrence Smedley, assistant director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security. And, he declared, there is no indication that long-overdue reform of the state systems will ever come. Smedley made the charges on the nationwide radio interview, Labor News Conference, Tuesdays at 7:35 p.m. (EDT) on the Mutual Broadcasting System.

Inadequate cash benefits is the most serious flaw in state workmen's compensation laws, he said, but there are other major shortcomings:

- Only 27 states have compulsory coverage.
- Twenty-nine states exempt small employers.
- Twenty states fail to cover all occupational diseases.
- Limited medical coverage in 22 states often throws the financial burden of job-related injuries and deaths on workers and their families.
- Administrative agencies in 29 states lack supervisory authority to assure adequate medical treatment of injured workers.
- Thirty-two states make no provision for maintenance of workers undergoing rehabilitation.

A start toward federal legislation—probably in the area of radiation injury—is a possibility in the current Congress, Smedley said, pointing out that the AFL-CIO has been pressing for this since 1959.

He said concern over latent radiation injury has been heightened by recent disclosures that a number of men are developing cancer and leukemia 15 and 20 years after working in uranium mines, but are denied workmen's compensation under strict time limitations in state laws.

Reporters questioning Smedley on the AFL-CIO produced public affairs program were Al Goldsmith, editor of the Washington Insurance Newsletter, and Alex Uhl, editor of Press Associates, Inc.

REP. FRANK THOMPSON, JR., New Jersey Democrat, has just announced that his subcommittee on labor intends to find out why the National Labor Relations Act is working so poorly in such areas as the South and what can be done about it.

In a statement announcing the probe, Thompson pointed to the more and more notorious J. P. Stevens textile case, with its overtones of actual conspiracy in the South to prevent unionization, and asked whether the Labor Relations Act might need more teeth than it has.

The new investigation, which is supposed to start some time in July, is the latest in a long series of probes and investigations into what has been going on in the South on the labor front.

"The Southern Labor Story" is not a pretty one. From the earliest days of the textile mills of the past century to today's steadily increasing industrialization, there has been steady, frequently violent and unrelenting opposition to union organization.

The result is that today the South lags far behind the rest of the nation in the number of men and women who have succeeded in setting up unions and sometimes even more importantly, in keeping them.

In 1950 a Senate subcommittee, whose membership included the late Sen. James Murray (D.-Mont.) and Hubert H. Humphrey, now vice president, made an in-depth investigation of southern opposition to the unions, notably in the textile industry.

The story they unearthed in a series of hearings in the field was the story of a brutal conspiracy by southern industrialists to keep unions out and to destroy them when they came in.

Frequently there was violence, including kidnapping, and beating of organizers by management thugs. There were firings of union sympathizers by the hundreds. There were threats and pressures on workers whose livelihood depended on their jobs. There were appeals to racial prejudices whereby white workers were turned against Negroes as rivals for their jobs. There was opposition on the community level that took in the local churches, local businessmen and storekeepers, the local police and courts.

"The extent and effectiveness of this opposition in the southern textile industry are almost unbelievable," the subcommittee report eventually said.

In 1960, another probe under the chairmanship of Rep. Roman Pucinski (D-Ill.) turned up much the same story—the use of violence, fear, intimidation, firings, marshaling of anti-union public opinion.

THE PUCINSKI subcommittee made a number of proposals to strengthen administration of the NLRA and the operations of the National Labor Relations Board which administers it. These included suggestions as to how the board could more effectively meet the hostility to labor that it found in southern managements.

The board has since sought to toughen its "remedies" for unfair labor tactics in an effort to make them more effective. It has added 6 percent interest to back pay awards. It has ordered guilty corporations to mail copies of board orders to its employes. It has adopted administrative procedures to shorten the intolerable delays that have marked many board cases—11 years for Kohler is an example.

Yet, the southern labor story is still pretty much the same as it was in the 50s and early 60s. There may not be as much violence—though it still exists—but there are innumerably more sophisticated legal stratagems added to the usual firings, intimidations and massing of public opinion.

The Stevens case is a prime example. Actually there are four of them with a fifth in the works. There have been adverse decisions against Stevens by the NLRB and each one is in a different stage of legal wilderness. Not a single worker has been restored to the job from which he was illegally fired and to which the NLRB has ordered his return. Nor is the end in sight. Thompson has said that he wants to find ways to give the NLRB power to enforce its decisions to make it a match for the powerful corporations that time after time have succeeded in thwarting it.

FEDERAL LEGISLATION is essential to cure "basic deficiencies" in state workmen's compensation systems, AFL-CIO Assistant Social Security Dir. Lawrence Smedley (center) said on Labor News Conference. Al Goldsmith (left), editor of the Washington Insurance Newsletter, and Alex Uhl, editor of Press Associates, Inc., questioned Smedley on the AFL-CIO public affairs program on the Mutual Radio Network.

How to Buy:

Study Reveals Generic Drugs Reliable as Brands, Cost Less

By Sidney Margolius

A RECENT pilot survey by the U.S. Food & Drug Administration confirms that drugs and medicines sold at lower prices under their own generic or brand names really are as reliable as similar drugs sold under patented brand names.

Most doctors continue to prescribe the high-priced brand-name drugs because they find it easier to prescribe that way, and also feel more reassurance about quality. The doctors also have been encouraged to prescribe by brand name by the American Medical Association, which gets a large part of its income from ads by large drug manufacturers in the AMA Journal.

Many retail pharmacists also tend to feel safer with the brand-name products of the large manufacturers. In any case, the pharmacists must fill the Rx with whatever brand the doctor prescribes. Between the two of them, about 92 percent of prescriptions are filled by brand-name products.

The brand-name manufacturers always have used "safety" and "reliable quality" as one of their chief justifications for their much higher prices.

But as this writer reported almost two years ago, mistakes have been found among some of the largest manufacturers of the expensive brand-name drugs as well as some of the smaller companies making generic products. The FDA pilot study reports that 7.7 percent of drugs sold under generic names, which it had tested, and 8.8 percent of those sold under brand names failed to meet acceptable potency standards. On the basis of this study, the generic products appear to be even a little more reliable.

FDA Commissioner James L. Goddard also has revealed that several of the variations in potency of vital medicines were rather drastic. One batch of Rutinal-C tablets, an anti-hypertensive drug, failed to disintegrate under laboratory conditions equivalent to the digestive system. This means a 100 percent loss of potency. Some nitroglycerine tablets, used for some heart conditions, failed to disintegrate—again for a 100 percent loss.

The quality variations were especially noticeable in anti-hypertensive drugs, anti-histamines and digitalis.

Thus, the fear of inferior quality is no longer a valid reason for buying a brand-name drug instead of the lower-priced generical equivalent. Actually it never was a valid reason because the FDA always tended to inspect the smaller producers more closely than the big ones. Too, the big manufacturers themselves often sell the same drugs under their generic names to other distributors, for repackaging.

MOREOVER, the U.S. government and large state and municipal purchasers all buy drugs under generic names for their hospitals and institutions.

Prices of prescription drugs sold under brand names continue to be much higher than under generic names, although a few have come down a little since enactment of the Kefauver-Harris Drug amendments in 1962. For example, tetracycline, a frequently-prescribed antibiotic drug, now usually costs at retail 30 to 40 cents a pill or capsule, compared to the earlier 50 cents. But the brand-name tetracycline drugs, like Achramycin, still cost about twice as much as tetracycline sold under its own name.

The classic example of price difference is Dexedrin, which sells for around $8 per 100 tablets, while the generic equivalent, dextroamphetamine sulfate, usually costs about $1.20. Among others, the brand-name Serpasil sells for $6.75 per 100; the generic reserpine, for as little as 75 cents. Seconal costs $3.25 per 100; the generic secobarbital, $1.70.

A drug like Tedral, often prescribed for asthma sufferers, costs the retail pharmacist $24 per 1,000. He in turn may retail them in lots of 100 at $4.50 to $5. A group service like the mail service sponsored by the National Council of Senior Citizens in Washington, D. C., or group plans or consumer co-op drug stores in various cities may retail Tedral in the neighborhood of $3.75 per 100. But comparable generics such as Theophenedrine retail for as little as $1.50 to $2 per 100.

The drug service operated by the Senior Citizens, Farmers Union and Washington area co-ops fills prescriptions for their members by mail. It saves members some money on even brand-name Rx's, but much more if the doctor prescribes the generic name.

The address of the National Council of Senior Citizens is 1627 K Street, N.W., Washington, D. C. 20006. People aged 50 or over are eligible for membership.

Union Pacts Protect Employes of Expo 67

MONTREAL—This summer tens of thousands of American trade unionists and their families are expected to be among the 50 million guests who will visit a vast and fascinating complex on the St. Lawrence River called Expo 67.

Expo 67 has written a new chapter in labor-management history which has led to all employes at the fair being covered by contracts providing for union shop, checkoff, grievance procedure, etc. There is also an inter-union committee to resolve jurisdictional disputes.

It started five years ago when Montreal Mayor Jean Drapeau was caught up with a dream of a world exposition with a constructive theme, free of over-commercialization.

The Intl. Bureau of Exhibitions in Paris sets high standards for awarding a Number One, universal classification for fairs. One requirement is that it be government-sponsored and government-controlled. Another is a structure that provides for resolution of labor-management disputes.

So, in 1962 the Montreal Labor Council, the Montreal Building & Construction Trades Council and the Confederation of National Trade Unions based in the Province of Quebec signed a pledge of their intention to do their part. Giving strong endorsement to this move were the Canadian Labor Congress and the Quebec Federation of Labor. The QFL and the city labor council are CLC affiliates.

On Nov. 4, 1964, a general agreement with respect to labor relations was drawn up and signed by representatives of labor and management, the Canadian Corp. for the 1967 World Exhibition.

"We could do this," said Jean Paul Menard, who heads the Montreal Labor Council and signed the agreement, "because Montreal is a good labor town. We have two major labor groups here but we have learned to live with one another."

Menard, who is business representative for the Sheet Metal Workers, said that he was "quite confident that there won't be any problems." He has visited and studied other fairs to make Expo 67 as dispute-proof as possible.

LABOR-MANAGEMENT harmony is a two-way street. The director of labor relations for the Expo corporation is J. H. Jodoin, a soft-spoken, able former union attorney and counsel for the city of Montreal. He is no relation to CLC Pres. Claude Jodoin, who is a member of the corporation's board of directors.

When Expo opened on Apr. 28—it closes Oct. 27—some 20 unions had negotiated individual agreements with the corporation.

The Hotel & Restaurant Employes set up a new Local 1967 and expects to enroll 2,500 to 3,000 members for the duration. Some of the foreign restaurants will employ up to 25 percent of their own national workers but they, too, will operate through Local 1967.

Unions in the food and drink producing industries also have contracts. The meat unions will be governed by strict regulations prescribing the amount of meat that must be in hamburgers. The Brewery Workers have joined the brewers of Canada in sponsoring a special pavilion and serving Canadian beer.

The Retail Clerks will have more than 3,000 members who will operate as ticket sellers and work in the La Ronde amusement center.

Members of the Building Service Employes will maintain all the buildings and operations.

Some 1,500 office employes, hostesses and guides, most of whom are experiencing unionism for the first time, mark a breakthrough by the Office Employes in Montreal, said Rep. Alfred Robindaine of Local 298. Contracts have been negotiated with the entertainment unions, such as Actors Equity and the Musicians.

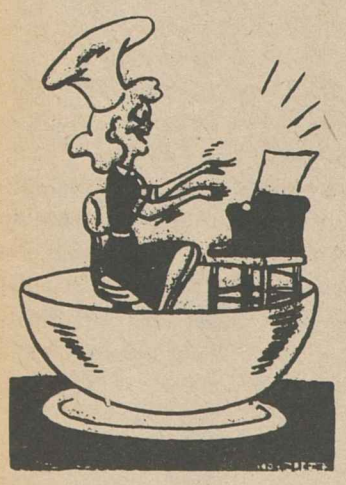
The building trades unions have completed their construction work but they have the big dismantling job, too, although some structures are permanent. Also, unions such as the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers will operate a complex communications network (PAI).

From Soup to Nonsense:

Swatches and Samples Banish That Over-Ripe, Lived-in-Look

By Jane Goodsell

A LADY CAN LIVE placidly for years with frayed carpets and sagging sofas, and then one day she looks around her. What she had previously thought of as a mellow, lived-in look now appears to her cold and squinty gaze as squalor that would barely pass the standards of the Geneva Convention.



How, she asks herself hysterically, could she have allowed her house to get into such disgraceful condition? She must take steps—and quickly. Even if she is willing to risk bankruptcy, a lady can't do over her living room with the same impulsiveness that she'd decide to become a blond or file for Congress. It takes time and thought to decide whether a Wedgewood blue print or a soft gray texture best expresses her personality.

Mercifully, there is a solution—a simple, practical, inexpensive solution: pin two or three upholstery swatches to her swaybacked chair and toss a book of drapery (or wallpaper or carpet) samples on the coffee table, where they can't help but be noticed. And presto, the room is revitalized!

No longer need the lady hang her head in shame over peeling wallpaper, threadbare rugs and bedraggled slipcovers. Her swatches and samples clearly proclaim that she is in the process of redecorating. What the sofa looks like at the moment has become a matter of supreme unimportance.

WHILE IT MIGHT seem that a wallpaper catalog on the coffee table is only a temporary stopgap, giving the lady a period of grace, that's not necessarily so. Swatches can become a way of life. Unless the lady cares deeply and personally about living graciously, she can postpone decorating practically forever.

I have a friend who has been in a state of indecision over the precise shade of off-white to paint her living room walls for six years. Meanwhile, her house crumbles and sags, but her friends wouldn't think of criticizing her. They understand that it's because her home is so important to her that she can't make up her mind.

I'm not saying that all of us can—or should—follow her example. I, myself, am too intimidated by House Beautiful to be capable of such defiance. But I can't help admiring her bravura.

Dennis Cites Overlap:

Rail Unions Urged To Explore Merger

Minneapolis—The sweep of technology on U.S. railroads has created a situation in which the industry now has "too many unions with increasingly overlapping jurisdictions," Pres. C. L. Dennis of the Railway Clerks told the union's convention here.

In a keynote address to nearly 1,200 delegates, Dennis said "nobody likes to face the fact, but we must." He urged leaders of all rail unions to meet together to explore "equitable" mergers of their organizations.

Dennis also said that since the brotherhood's "common destiny" is shared with transportation management, "we must raise our voices to make certain that in modern America, and modern Canada, the transportation industry meets its full responsibilities."

The BRC, with 270,000 members in the two countries, is the largest transportation union affiliated with AFL-CIO. It has members employed by REA Express, airlines, freight forwarding firms, bus companies and steamship offices as well as railroads.

Appropriately for a union gathering in Minnesota, the convention was addressed at its opening session by Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey, who represented the state as a U.S. senator.

President's Message

Messages also were received from Pres. Johnson and Transportation Sec. Alan S. Boyd.

Humphrey praised the BRC for its "responsibility and sense of service" in the transportation industry, declaring that the lives of its members, the railroads and the nation "are better because of your union."

He sharply disagreed with those pessimistic about the future of railroads. He pointed to the ever-increasing freight tonnage being carried by trains and the current high-speed rail transportation program. Declaring that the latter has to be successful, he added:

"Any nation that plans to put a man on the moon and bring him back ought to be able to get him from New York to Washington in something less than a week—don't you think?"

The Vice President noted that recent years have brought new benefits for older citizens, progress in education and civil rights, "breakthroughs" in eliminating disease, and training programs for unemployed workers. But he conceded it was only a "beginning" in many areas with much more still to be done.

He spoke at length on the struggle for equal rights, "to have one citizenship for one people." He called for understanding that "a great revolution is taking place in this country in human relations." While it may bring "turbulence" at times, he continued, "if we have fortitude and courage, we are going to come out into clear skies."

Dennis charged that railroad managements have thrown thousands of employes out of jobs and stripped areas of the country of rail service through an "indecent haste to abandon the job of transporting passengers," despite the fact the industry "has never been more prosperous."

He praised Johnson for seeking improved rail passenger service and for deciding to create the Transportation Dept. He pledged the union's assistance to the new department in its effort to develop "a constructive transportation policy."

However, in a statement issued prior to the convention's opening, Dennis sharply criticized the President's proposal for averting a strike by rail shopcraft unions, declaring that it "smacks strongly of compulsory arbitration" and should be rejected.

Other speakers included Mayor Arthur Naftalin of Minneapolis, Rep. Joseph Karth (D-Minn.), Chairman Paul Rasmussen of the Minnesota Railroad & Warehouse Commission, Chairman Francis A. O'Neill of the National Mediation Board, Pres. Paul Hall of the Seafarers, Zeev Barash, American representative of Histadrut, the Israeli labor federation, and A. E. Lyon, labor member of the Railroad Retirement Board.

Washington Site Picked By Pressmen

Pressmen's Home, Tenn.—The Printing Pressmen will move their international headquarters from this Eastern Tennessee community to Washington, D.C., following a referendum vote of the 122,000 members.

The move will be made later this year, depending upon the completion of a building under construction a few blocks from AFL-CIO headquarters, the union announced.

The shift was made possible when the members removed from the constitution a requirement that the headquarters be here and authorized the directors to locate them in a "major metropolitan city."

The headquarters have been here since 1911, when they were moved from Cincinnati, O. The area was chosen because it was regarded as ideal for a tuberculosis sanatorium, which was a major occupational disease of pressmen early in the century. It also was to be used as a technical school for training and retraining pressmen in new processes and equipment.

More than 900 patients were admitted to the 35-bed sanatorium until medical advances and improved working conditions reduced the incidence of TB to the point where the facility was no longer necessary. Many of the patients were restored to health and returned to their jobs before it was closed Mar. 14, 1961.

Enrollment Down

The technical school was started in a two-story frame building which has grown to a four-story brick building, completed in 1948, in which thousands of members have kept pace with advances in the graphic arts industry. The school now is operating at only one-fourth of its capacity because of increased training facilities throughout the United States and Canada.

This factor, combined with rising maintenance costs and the need for a more central location, were among the reasons for the move to Washington.

Pres. Anthony J. DeAndrade announced that the union's apprentice training program, its sponsorship of in-plant training, its technical service to employers and its educational program to keep members informed of technological developments will be continued.

Several staff members now at Pressmen's Home also will make the move to Washington.

Shoe Workers to Vote On Higher Per Capita

Miami Beach, Fla.—The United Shoe Workers wound up their 14th triennial convention here by sending to membership referendum a number of constitutional amendments calling for raises in per capita payments, the election of officers at conventions and increases in death benefits, strike fund benefits and officers' salaries.

The amendments won convention approval and will become effective Aug. 1 if members of the union's 150 locals ratify them in a June 20 referendum. They call for:

- Increasing monthly per capita payments from the present $1.60 per member to $1.85.
- Raising death benefits, strike benefits and the salaries of officers, vice presidents, general board members and organizers if the per capita proposal is ratified.
- Eliminating present initiative and referendum procedures and providing for the nomination and election of officers and board members at conventions.

The vote to abolish current referendum provisions was unanimous, Sec.-Treas. Angelo Georgian said.

The delegates approved 33 resolutions and the reports of Pres. George O. Fecteau and other officers. Fecteau said the union made major advances in contract bargaining and increased its membership by 20 percent since 1964.

The convention approved a resolution calling for relief for U.S. and Canadian workers against a flood of footwear imports from overseas plants, including those owned by American employers who pay wages far below the U.S. average of $2.40 an hour.

Delegates called on the officers to seek contract protections against automation, including provisions that workers with the most seniority shall have first preference in changed job operations or job displacement.

They voted continued support for members of five unions on strike since March 1963 against the strikebreaker-run Kingsport, Tenn., Press, and asked no letup in union efforts for repeal of Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act which permits states to outlaw union shop agreements.

The convention lauded the Johnson Administration for social legislation adopted by the 89th Congress at the President's urging and pledged support of a continuing effort to "achieve a society where insecurity, poverty and injustice no longer exist."

Another resolution called for a federal program to encourage the development of a nation-wide system of tuition-free community colleges.

The Shoe Workers also gave strong endorsement to proposals to withhold federal government contracts from employers who repeatedly discriminate against workers because of union activities in violation of the National Labor Relations Act.

Hall Assails Proposal To Build Ships Abroad

Pres. Paul Hall of the AFL-CIO Maritime Trades Dept. condemned a proposal by Transportation Sec. Alan S. Boyd to build U.S.-flag ships in foreign yards.

Boyd had testified before a Senate Merchant Marine subcommittee that while he had not been able to secure a "consensus" of maritime labor-management backing for his plan, he had obtained support in all segments except for shipbuilding, including management and labor.

The effect, Hall wrote Subcommittee Chairman E. L. Bartlett (D-Alaska), was to lead to the conclusion that "virtually all" of the maritime industry supported Boyd.

"Nothing could be further from the truth," he added.

The Maritime Trades Dept., with 36 affiliates representing 5.5 million workers, is "vigorously opposed" to Boyd's proposal, Hall declared. He continued:

"Further, we are vigorously opposed to the secretary's insistence on putting the Maritime Administration in the Dept. of Transportation."

Hall said the position of the department and its affiliates is the same as that of the AFL-CIO, which its 1965 convention adopted a resolution calling on the President and Congress to reject any "build-abroad" philosophy with respect to the merchant marine and endorsed the move for complete independence for the Maritime Administration.

In a separate statement, Hall hailed House action in requiring Congress to vote annual authorizations of funds for such Maritime Administration programs as construction and operating subsidies and research and development.

Funds Urged

He expressed the hope that the Senate will approve the legislation, which he called "an important step toward restoring the American flag to a position of importance on the high seas."

"But it should be emphasized," he continued, "that this legislation is just one step on the road we must travel. The House and Senate should now move promptly to approve legislation that will reconstitute the Maritime Administration as an independent agency."

Catholic Unionists Cite Paul Jennings

New York—Pres. Paul Jennings of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers was presented with the Msgr. John P. Monaghan Social Action Award at the 30th anniversary meeting of the New York chapter of the Association of Catholic Trade Unionists.

The ACTU award is presented annually to a person who has distinguished himself in the application of Christian social principles.

Urban League Offers Course On Unionism

Philadelphia, Pa.—Training to help non-white workers participate actively in their unions on an informed and responsible basis is being given in an eight-week course offered by the National Urban League's Labor Education Advancement Program—LEAP.

The course is directed by the local Urban League in cooperation with the Board of Public Education's Extension Division. It also is intended to enable its participants to work with the labor movement to obtain equal job opportunities for minorities.

Subjects taught include labor union history and structure, principles of collective bargaining, labor laws, union contracts, Negroes and the U.S. labor movement, labor in community affairs, and social change.

Instruction is being given for two hours on consecutive Wednesdays. Unions involved in the program include the Ladies' Garment Workers, Steelworkers, Molders, Clothing Workers, Hotel & Restaurant Employes and Teachers.

Congress Listens to Farm Workers...

THE LEADERS of the AFL-CIO United Farm Workers Organizing Committee who testified before a House Labor subcommittee did not have prepared statements to read. They came to tell Congress in their own words of the need for including farm workers under the National Labor Relations Act. Here are excerpts from their testimony—testimony that led Subcommittee Chairman Frank Thompson, Jr. (D-N.J.) to say at one point, "I am struggling not to weep. . . ."

CESAR CHAVEZ—In September of 1965, the farm workers' strike started in Delano. The strike was for recognition. Over 3,600 workers assembled and voted to strike 40 grape growers in the area.

We asked the workers for a four-day period in which to try to get to the growers and see if we could convince them to negotiate with us.

In that four-day period, we sent to them people who we thought they would listen to in the community. They were rejected.

We sent registered letters to them. When they refused to accept the letters, we sent wires. We tried to get a priest to go to see them and see if we could get some negotiations going. We called on the state conciliation service and its representative, too, was rebuffed by the growers.

When all of the attempts had failed, the strike went into effect, and it has been now almost 21 months since we went out.

Because of lack of legislation, the grower has the upper hand in such a struggle. Those workers who were on strike were blacklisted. Those who were sympathetic and not going on strike were also blacklisted, and those who dared to speak up in favor of the union.

When we struck the DiGiorgio Corp., after six or seven months, we instituted a national consumers' boycott against them. They began then to try to find a way in which they could get rid of our union and they tried to organize a company union inside the farm. They closed the entrances to the camps because about 90 percent of the workers live inside the camps.

When this failed because the workers rejected the attempt to force them into a company union, the next development was the appearance of the Teamsters Union in the fields working alongside the employer trying to sign up people. While this was going on, we were being excluded from the property. Arrests were made when our organizers attempted to go into the camps and talk to the workers after hours.

Gov. Brown saw the injustice and called on the American Arbitration Association to send in an arbitrator who was able to get the three sides together—the Teamsters, DiGiorgio, and ourselves. Once the workers were permitted to vote, they voted almost 3 to 1 in favor of our union.

We have run into growers who say, "We would like to give you a representation procedure . . . but if we do, we would incur the wrath of the other growers and we cannot afford that."

Because the main issue of the union at this point is recognition, the only avenue open to us is to strike for some recognition procedure. So I would say that if we get the coverage of the law, strikes would be lessened.

We know that a union of farm workers is going to be built somehow because workers are on the move and they want a union. Whether we get legislation or not, the effort is going to continue.

Will Congress give the workers the democratic right to self-determination by enacting this legislation?

Or will Congress remain mute as it has for these many years and not give the workers any other avenue except that which they have now—the law of the jungle where the fittest survive?

REP. FRANK THOMPSON—Were workers who belonged to your union fired this period?

CHAVEZ—Anyone who appeared at our meetings or who appeared in the picket lines, for instance workers from other ranches who joined us after work, if they were identified they were fired. The police, the sheriff's department, photographed all of our pickets, everyone leaving and entering our office, took down license plate numbers of every car.

THOMPSON—Were there any charges made by the police against your pickets?

CHAVEZ—We had many, many arrests. On one occasion, 44 strikers were arrested for refusing to remain silent on the picket line. The strikers yelled "huelga," which means "strike" in English. The sheriff's officer said they could not use the word "huelga" and all 44 were jailed.

REP. JAMES G. O'HARA—Mr. Chavez, let me say that I hardly find the things you seem to be seeking revolutionary. As I see it, all you are asking is the protection of your members from being fired or blacklisted because they join the union.

You are asking that if a majority of the workers decide they wanted you to represent them in a secret ballot election conducted under the National Labor Relations Board, that they be permitted to do so.

And you are willing in return to abide by all the limitations imposed upon labor organizations under the Taft-Hartley Act?

CHAVEZ—That is right.

O'HARA—Well, I can't think of a more reasonable request.

REP. CARL ALBERT—Are your relations on the whole good with those growers with whom you do have contracts?

CHAVEZ—I think they are very good. The Schenley Corp. made a statement to our negotiating committee when we went back to renew the contract that once we made an agreement we stuck to it and we did our best to have that agreement work. Even with the DiGiorgio Corp., where there was this conflict and intense feeling, I think that we are getting along together now.

JOE SERDA—I have been working in the Delano area since 1934. Many people have asked me why it is that being a foreman I chose to help the strike. There are many reasons, but I would like to cite one.

Not too many years ago, we were picking juice grapes. We had local people there and my supervisor told me he wanted me to put a lot of pressure on the workers. I didn't understand why he wanted to do this because we were a little short of men.

When I asked him, he said, "Joe, you don't understand. If we can get these people to quit, we can show the Labor Dept. that we have not got any help and then we can get braceros."

This is only one example. Of course, there are hundreds of others, like a man getting fired because he went up to the boss and told him he was short on his paycheck or overcharged for his board.

DOLORES HUERTA—I will give testimony regarding the contracts—you might say the successful part of our strike story—to indicate to the committee that collective bargaining is possible in agriculture.

Wages are still very substandard, but at Schenley we got a 35-cent increase, at DiGiorgio a 25-cent increase over what they were getting before. We have a very tight seniority clause. Workers cannot be fired if they are working slowly on an incentive rate. What makes agricultural work so hard is the backbreaking pace at which it is done.

We are trying to establish a health and welfare plan that will be able to take care of a worker regardless of where he works. One item that is important is protective garments for the workers: gloves if they need them; goggles if they need them; clothing that will protect them from pesticides.

We try to upgrade from the ranks. There was a tremendous amount of discrimination. You will often find all of the Mexican, Negro and Filipino people working in the field and all the Anglo people doing the lighter work.

REP. PHILIP BURTON—Mrs. Huerta, the mother of seven children, is truly one of the unsung heroes of this effort to help the poor.

LEADERS of AFL-CIO United Farm Workers Organizing Committee came from California and Texas to testify at House hearing for legislation bringing agricultural workers under federal labor law.

MRS. HUERTA—I am not alone in this and I would hate for the committee to feel that any one person does more than any other because we have in Delano many people who have been walking a picket line now for 21 months. Everyone who works on the staff, which includes Mr. Chavez, we earn $5 a week plus our subsistence.

MACK LYONS—You know, it has been said by the growers that "The people that work for me are satisfied the way things are. We get along perfectly." But with the workers, this is not true.

It is pretty tough to organize without being covered by the laws that other industries have. When the workers started to organize at the DiGiorgio Farms, they had to organize secretly.

GILBERT PADILLA—I came down in January to help the strikers in Rio Grande City in Texas. The strike started on June 1, 1966, with La Casita Farms, one of the biggest growers. Immediately after the walkout, the deputy sheriff deputized the growers and the growers became deputies. The growers recruited green card Mexican nationals from towns adjoining the U.S.

The second day I was in Texas, I was called to the courthouse after four of our pickets had been arrested. The county counsel said he had a complaint signed by one of the workers in the field, a strikebreaker, for abusive language. He said the pickets were calling the strikebreakers scabs.

That night a minister from California and myself, together with 15 other workers, went to the courthouse and had a prayer vigil. We started our prayer and the deputy came out and said to go away, that if we wanted to pray, go to church. We started the Lord's Prayer and he arrested me and placed me in jail. I asked why and he said I was disturbing the peace.

THOMPSON—By praying?

DOMINGO ARREDONDO—I was born and raised in Rio Grande City and I went out on strike. I was arrested in November 1966 for picketing. I have been a farm worker all my life.

Before November, I was operating a tractor at night, working 13 hours at 80 cents an hour.

THOMPSON—How many days a week?

ARREDONDO—Seven days a week.

THOMPSON—So then you made $72.80 a week. Do you have a wife?

ARREDONDO—I got a wife and six kids.

THOMPSON—You are just one of millions of people just like yourself, aren't you?

You know, I sit up here and really at this moment I am struggling not to weep. I am ashamed of all of the things that I enjoy and that I have and that my children have. I swear to you I will stick with this thing as long as I live here to see that you get the opportunity that you want. All you want is to have an opportunity to make things a little bit better.

ARREDONDO—That is right.

LARRY ITLIONG—I am a Filipino American. I came to this country in 1929. I am the son of a small farmer and I never did know what hunger was until I came to this country.

From year to year, I traveled all over trying to get a job that I could make money on. I never made enough money, and whatever money I make from one job is not even enough to live on until I get to the next job.

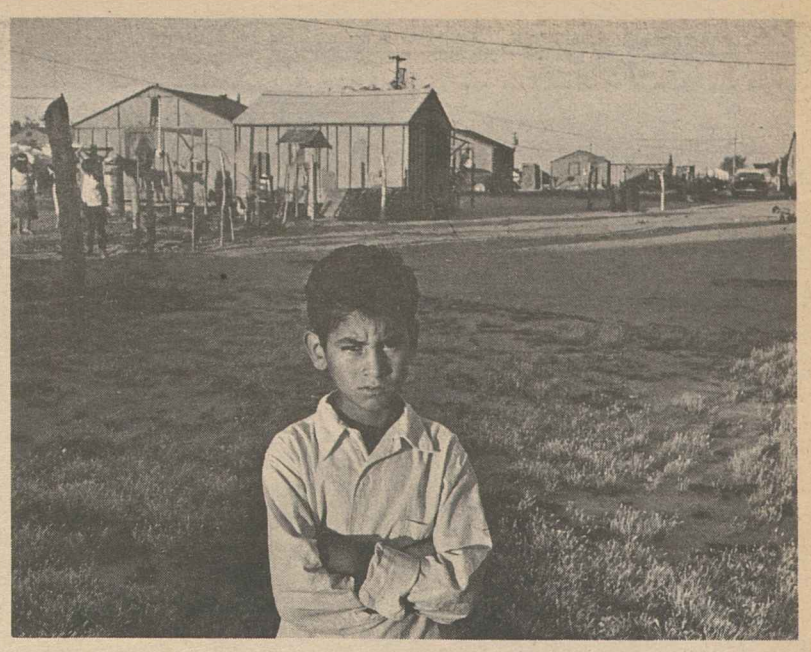
I learned also that other farm workers have the same kind of problem. I learned that if you do not have any kind of organization, your complaint is going to be heard in one ear and it passes through the other ear. Like if you say to your employer that you wanted some cold water while you are working for him during the hot season, they are going to tell you to bring your own jug, they have no time to bring any water to you.

The farm workers in wanting to organize are not organizing because they want to put the growers out of business. They want to be organized because they want to have some dignity in the work they do. I think our people have suffered long enough.

THOMPSON—I am very grateful for all of this testimony. I do not know what is going to happen with this legislation. History shows that it takes a long, long time to pass social legislation benefiting people.

You people are going to persist and you people are going to win. For myself, I say stay with it and keep fighting.

I am convinced of the need for this legislation. I think it is imperative, and long overdue.



FIELD HANDS, moving from crop to crop, are the human material with which the United Farm Workers Organizing Committee, AFL-CIO, seeks to build the "effective and permanent union for agricultural workers" that the federation, and the committee, believe they can have. Shown left to right are farm workers, bundled against wind and sun, engaged in "stoop" labor; packing grapes in crates; and a workers' child, too young to work in the fields and too restless to profit from school.

Union Breakthrough Offers Hope To Poverty-Ridden Field Hands

California farm workers once again have a union of their own whose future seems bright. But many barriers remain, a West Coast labor editor reports in the current American Federationist.

Two groups of field workers, succeeding where their predecessors for half a century had failed, joined this year to form the AFL-CIO United Farm Workers Organizing Committee. They scored their first contract breakthrough recently with federation help, surviving "police bullying, harassment of pickets and growers' strikebreaking attempts," Editor David F. Selvin of San Francisco Labor recounts.

"At bottom, the job of building a farm workers' union belongs to the farm worker himself. No one else has either the incentive or the opportunity to do the job or to do it as well," Selvin says, adding: "Yet he is more urgently in need of the tools to do the job than any other worker on the American scene today."

The "very poverty of his job, the almost total lack of legal protection, the almost complete denial of participation in the welfare aspects of this welfare society, the anachronistic anti-union attitudes of growers —all these put him in the disadvantaged position of the industrial worker of the early Thirties, with even fewer resources," Selvin writes.

If the farm workers' union is to survive in this hostile clime, it will need a full measure of assistance, the author believes.

Much Help Needed

"It will need money and organizers," he writes. "It will need all the help it can muster to secure remedial legislation, to win an equal place in the state and national framework of rights and welfare."

The months since September 1965 have made it perfectly clear that, "given this help, the farm worker is determined to make his union both permanent and effective," Selvin concludes.

His report tells how farm workers suffer under liabilities imposed on no industrial worker for some 30 years, since the Supreme Court upheld the Wagner Act giving workers the right to organize without employer interference.

The farm worker is outside the unemployment insurance system, the writer notes. Only a small group of farm workers—women and minors—are covered by the state minimum wage law. The worker stands "only on the edge" of the social security system, he observes.

In California, the migrant farmer has only recently been covered by the state disability insurance plan. A Senate subcommittee recently recommended a re-examination of extension of workmen's compensation protection for farm workers.

"Beyond this," Selvin says, "the farm worker is penalized by low pay, aggravated by the seasonal and migratory nature of his work.

"He suffers in health care, housing, education for his children. He is compelled to live in slums and is denied an effective part in community life. He is exploited at every turn. Some tentative steps have been made in the direction of meeting his needs, but they always seem too little and too tentative."

Most of all, the writer declares, the farm worker is "denied the right given every industrial worker by law: the right to bargain collectively through a union of his own choosing. He is, in the main, excluded from the National Labor Relations Act."

Despite all obstacles, the UFWOC holds contracts with Schenley and the DiGiorgio Corp., and a third is in the making with the producers of Christian Brothers products. It is pressing the fight for unionization "by picket and by boycott," with whatever leverage it can bring to bear. It is, says Selvin, only a beginning.

The new DiGiorgio contract he calls "the pattern of the future." Little in it is new—except for farm workers. Its wages will make no farm worker wealthy or—considering the seasonal nature of the work—particularly comfortable, but "they will make his lot substantially better," the writer forecasts.

Even more important in the long run, he predicts, is the hiring hall provided by the agreement, and the beginning it offers of welfare programs for the agricultural worker.

Basically, the hiring hall makes the union "the first and major source of labor" for DiGiorgio. Employes with the longest continuous service are given the preference in filling vacancies and in sharing available work.

"If farm work is ever to provide a decent, year-round living," Selvin declares, "it must offer job opportunity not merely at the seasonal peak but, somehow, for all or a large part of the year."

Farm work can be decasualized like longshore work was, he asserts. The process would require a central source of labor, working closely with farm placement services and growers over large stretches of agricultural country in crops "stretching around the calendar," Selvin suggests.

It would, however, be neither complete nor fully effective without a union and collective bargaining, the writer says. No other way "offers equal protection for the workers' interests or as great a potential for winning participation."

In such "rudimentary beginnings," the article says, "the way is pointed toward bringing the farm workers into the mainstream of the benefits that are almost universally a part of every other job."

Inter-American Bank Fund Boost Endorsed

Legislation to increase U.S. participation in the Inter-American Development Bank received a strong labor endorsement at House hearings.

William C. Doherty, Jr., administrator of the American Institute for Free Labor Development, said the international lending agency has contributed to the economic integration of Latin America, spurred agricultural development in nine nations, and has made a start in assisting workers' housing.

The bill being considered by a House Banking subcommittee would increase the U.S. commitment to the bank's Fund for Special Operations by $150 million over a three-year period.

This, Doherty noted, is a 20 percent increase in U.S. participation while the Latin American nations are raising their contribution by 50 percent.

Because of the bank's program, Doherty said, rural workers have "better seed, irrigated crops, credit, better market roads and marketing facilities." Loans have been made for trade union housing developments in Colombia, Honduras, Argentina, Ecuador and the Dominican Republic.

Doherty said the AFL-CIO hopes that in the future the special operations fund will also be used for "seed capital loans for workers' banks, savings and loan associations, credit unions, cooperatives and the development of vocational schools." He added:

"The workers of Latin America must be made to feel that they, too, are part of the Alliance for Progress. Financing of projects which will have a direct and immediate effect upon the workers' lives will awaken such a feeling and strengthen the free trade union movement as an institution essential to the growth of democracy in this hemisphere."

Rothman Named For OEO Liaison

Julius Rothman, assistant director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security, has been designated coordinator of anti-poverty programs for the federation.

He will have responsibility for liaison with the Office of Economic Opportunity and its component agencies and will work with the OEO Labor Advisory Council headed by Pres. David Sullivan of the Building Service Employes.

Canada's Steel, Mine-Mill Units Plan Merger

Toronto—Officers of the Steelworkers and Canadian locals of the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers have signed an agreement to merge, subject to ratification by Mine-Mill delegates at a special convention of that union in Winnipeg, Man., June 23-25.

The agreement followed the pattern of the merger pact last January between the USWA and U.S. locals of Mine-Mill, a 73-year-old labor organization in the metal mining, smelting and refining field. The target date for merger of all the affected locals is July 1.

The addition of Mine-Mill's 12,000 members in Canada will bring Steelworker membership to 150,000 in 715 Canadian bargaining units, with 54,000 of these in the basic metal field—about 90 percent of all the workers in that field, the steel union said.

Major Mine-Mill concentrations are at Falconbridge Nickel Mines Ltd., Sudbury, Ont., and at the big Consolidated Mining & Smelting Corp. operations in Trail, B.C. The USWA already represents Falconbridge office workers.

USWA was represented at the signing here by Vice Pres. Joseph P. Molony, Canadian Dir. William Mahoney, and Toronto Regional Dir. Lawrence F. Sefton. Mine-Mill signers were Vice Pres. Harvey Murphy, Sec.-Treas. William Longridge, and board members William Kennedy of Sudbury and Albert King of Vancouver, B.C.

Glenn Ford Fills SAG Board Vacancy

Hollywood, Calif.—Glenn Ford has been named to the board of directors of the Screen Actors Guild to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Inger Stevens. Ford had served previously from 1946 to 1949 and from 1950 to 1953.

NLRB Says It Can Handle Farm Elections

The National Labor Relations Board assured Congress that it could handle representation elections for farm workers without difficulty if agricultural employes were brought under collective bargaining laws.

NLRB Exec. Sec. Ogden W. Fields said the labor board "has had a wealth of experience in exercising jurisdiction over seasonal and migratory industries," including industries "directly and immediately" related to agriculture.

He testified before a House Labor subcommittee which is considering labor-backed legislation to bring farm workers under the National Labor Relations Act.

Field said that if Congress decided to extend coverage, standards governing which farms would be covered would be set after hearings in which the views of all interested parties would be sought.

He suggested that it might be in the interest of both workers and employers to set up bargaining units on a multi-employer basis in certain areas. This, he said, could be done either by voluntary agreement of the parties or by congressional authorization for the NLRB to impose multi-employer units where necessary.

Machinists Hit FAA Proposal For Test Fees

Pres. P. L. Siemiller of the Machinists denounced a Federal Aviation Administration proposal to charge aviation mechanics $54 for tests that now are free, and said his union will file a formal protest with the FAA.

"The FAA tells us we have a critical shortage of mechanics," said Siemiller. Charging fees would "simply add another barrier" to recruiting men for skilled careers, he declared, adding "the cost of an aviation mechanic's training is already too high."

Most young prospective mechanics in aviation training schools have to pay from $1,500 to $2,400 for their 18 to 24-month course, plus living costs, the union head observed. To add FAA fees to that high cost is unreasonable, he said.

FAA was established by the government in the public interest and aviation mechanics should not be forced to subsidize it in the performance of its duties, Siemiller declared. Most aviation mechanics are members of the IAM, he said.

Senate Ends 6-Week Debate:

Election Fund Issue Goes to Conference

The Senate wound up a six-week debate over tax financing of presidential election campaigns by voting to leave the 1966 law on the statute books, but suspend its application until Congress enacts stricter controls.

A House-Senate conference committee will have the next word in the controversy. Suspension of the campaign law was added by the Senate as a "rider" to a House-passed bill reinstating the investment tax credit and other tax benefits for business and industry. If House conferees balk, the campaign financing amendment could be dropped.

The Senate's action was billed as a compromise between two evenly-divided blocs. Senators Albert Gore (D-Tenn.) and John J. Williams (R-Del.) led the drive to repeal last year's law permitting taxpayers to earmark $1 of their payments to a fund that would pay most of the campaign expenses of presidential candidates. Sen. Russell B. Long (D-La.), chairman of the Senate Finance Committee and author of the campaign financing law, led the fight against repeal.

At various stages in the intricate parliamentary maneuvering, the Senate voted both for and against repeal. On the final day of the Senate debate, Long won a moral victory when the Senate rejected a Gore amendment which would have made the campaign law "inoperative" on Sept. 15 unless Congress directed otherwise.

Vice Pres. Humphrey, the Senate's presiding officer, exercised his right to cast a tie-breaking vote and the amendment was defeated 49-48.

The next vote was to have been on a compromise proposal of Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield, which was acceptable to Long, that no money be paid out of the fund until spending controls were written into the law.

But Mansfield then accepted a Gore-Williams modification of his proposal to hold off putting the voluntary checkoff boxes on tax returns until Congress tightened the law. Long initially protested that this was tantamount to repeal of the law, but did not fight it after Mansfield urged its acceptance.

The Senate then passed the investment tax credit bill, 93-1. It would restore, retroactive to Mar. 10, a 7 percent tax credit for investment in new equipment and allow faster tax depreciation of new commercial buildings.

In other congressional action:

● The Senate Commerce Committee unanimously approved the Administration bill creating a nonprofit public corporation to promote educational television and radio broadcasting. The AFL-CIO had testified in strong support of the legislation.

● In its formal report, a majority of the House Labor Committee gave solid endorsement to the on-site picketing bill, declaring that it would "restore to employes in the building and construction industry the rights which are currently available to the employes in every other segment" of industry.

Foreshadowing a sharp battle on the House floor, 10 of the 14 committee Republicans filed minority views. Five of them flatly opposed any legislation, declaring that the bill would give "a powerful new weapon to unions" which they said are already too strong. Five other GOP members endorsed a substitute bill by Rep. Charles E. Goodell (R-N.Y.) which would impose new picketing restrictions as the price of allowing on-site picketing.

● AFL-CIO postal clerk and letter carrier unions pressed their case at House hearings for upgrading the classifications of postal workers. More than 200 House and Senate members have joined in sponsoring the union-backed, Administration-opposed legislation.

● The Federal Reserve Board gave a strong and influential endorsement of truth-in-lending legislation as a Senate Banking subcommittee wound up hearings on the bill that has been introduced by Sen. William Proxmire (D-Wis.).

J. L. Robertson, vice chairman of the reserve board, said the FRB believed the need for the legislation was so great that its members had unanimously endorsed the bill, which calls for the reserve board to administer the act.

WHAT CAN a congressman do when he's hemmed in by delegates to the Washington legislative conference of the Clothing Workers Joint Board of Shirt, Leisurewear, Robe, Glove & Rainwear Workers? Rep. Jacob H. Gilbert (D-N.Y.), a member of the key House Ways & Means Committee, did the best possible thing, which was to assure the ACWA delegation that he strongly supports the Administration's social security bill.

AFL-CIO Backs Wirtz's Action Setting Mine Radiation Standard

100 picocuries of radon per liter of air.

He set the safety standard under Walsh-Healy at three tenths (.3) of 1 WL. This is the level the AFL-CIO recently recommended to the Federal Radiation Council, which at the time was leaning toward a 1 WL standard.

In his letter to Wirtz, Biemiller called the 1 WL "dangerously permissive." He expressed confidence that the .3 WL standard can be enforced and "with the full cooperation of other federal agencies with responsibilities in this field, a control program can be swiftly mounted."

Relief Sought

"We urge that you undertake programs in the field of workmen's compensation and manpower training," Biemiller continued, "to provide some relief, inadequate though it may be under the circumstances, for the miners in increasing numbers who are becoming victims of incurable lung cancer, and for their families."

Wirtz's proposed standard becomes effective 30 days from May 5. It means that Labor Dept. inspectors can go into the uranium mines, check the WL and withdraw federal contracts in case of violations.

Industry spokesmen said a number of smaller mines may be forced to close and that larger mines, subject in the past only to state regulation, may be forced to provide inhalators and improve ventilators.

Wirtz was quickly forced to defend his action at a hearing before a Joint Committee on Atomic Energy subcommittee on radiation, where it came under fire as arbitrary and unworkable.

He told the committee that there is "unmistakable" evidence of high frequency of lung cancer among uranium miners, that 98 have died from it and another 250 to 1,000 (the estimates vary) are "incurably afflicted."

"The best evidence available," he said, "is that over two-fifths of the approximately 2,500 underground uranium miners are working under conditions which at least triple their prospects of dying from lung cancer if they continue this work and these conditions remain unchanged."

He also said:

"The basis for adopting the .3 WL standard is that the available evidence reflects a widely held view that this represents the maximum level of radioactive material to which a person can be exposed without creating some appreciable hazard of lung cancer above what we are all exposed to.

"Put differently, this evidence is that a man working in a uranium mine where the radioactivity is at or below .3 WL is no more likely to get lung cancer than someone else; if there is more radioactivity than at present, he is more likely to get lung cancer."

Rep. Chet Holifield (D-Calif.) challenged the qualifications as a radiation expert of acting Surgeon-Gen. Leo J. Gehrig. Wirtz had quoted Gehrig as saying that a .3 WL would drop the death rate among uranium miners to "about the same as would be expected in a non-exposed population." He said Wirtz appeared to have set an "arbitrary standard."

Sen. John O. Pastore (D-R.I.), chairman of the full committee, noted that "we're dealing with human life" and that people cannot be allowed to "go down there and get lung cancer" because of the difficulty of measuring the risk.

Monopoly Threat Hit In Shale Oil Proposal

Udall the option of putting his five-point, 10-year program into effect within 30 days.

"Apparently the secretary of the interior is unwilling to wait for your subcommittee to complete these hearings," Biemiller's letter stated. The AFL-CIO believes, he said, that Hart's subcommittee has clear jurisdiction "where there are present or potential monopoly problems, as indeed there are in shale oil developments."

Yardstick Plan

He cited for subcommittee consideration a 1965 AFL-CIO convention proposal that (1), the federal government build oil-extracting demonstration plants as yardsticks to measure private industry performance and costs, and (2), the government enlarge its efforts to develop economically competitive techniques of processing the multi-billion dollar reserves of liquid petroleum.

"We believe these resources should be developed in such a way as to bring the broadest possible benefits to the public welfare, to strengthen the economy, to insure constructive competition and to prevent private monopoly," he said. The public will not be protected, he warned "if the major possibility for shale oil development is turned over to private industry."

Biemiller said that serious monopoly problems existed in two of Udall's five proposals. One would exchange private lands for public shale oil lands in order to assemble "manageable blocks" for private development, and the second would open up small areas of federal shale oil lands to test development by private interests.

"We oppose these proposals," Biemiller said because they could "open the gates to private commercial leasing before public policy and safeguards are formulated and effective."

He pointed out that at present there is nothing to prevent "the giants of the oil industry" from developing extraction and processing methods for the shale oil lands they already own. "There is no need to lure these companies into action with give-away open-door opportunities to lease or to acquire federally owned oil shale lands," he said.

GOP-Led Coalition Kills Token Rent Subsidy Bill

U.S. Rejects Rail Labor Strike Plan

Government officials brushed aside rail labor's offer to move essential shipments in the event of a strike as "not practical or economical."

The rejection of the offer was announced by Transportation Sec. Alan S. Boyd after a meeting of union and government officials at the Pentagon.

Union participants charged that the agency heads had determined to reject the offer before the meeting began. The session was set up under prodding by congressional committees after the Defense Dept. had turned down a union request to plan the continued shipment of goods necessary for defense or public health.

Chairman G. E. Leighty of the Railway Labor Executives' Association and Pres. Michael Fox of the AFL-CIO Railway Employes Dept., said the agency officials showed little interest in exploring the union offer. Leighty said Deputy Defense Sec. Cyrus R. Vance "very early in the meeting indicated the Administration's decision had already been made against our proposal."

As congressional hearings continued, compulsory arbitration to block a strike was attacked by rail unions and praised by rail management.

Union witnesses, representing nearly all of the nation's railroad workers, urged Congress to reject the Administration bill which would ban any strike and impose "mediation to finality."

Kill Bargaining

Leighty, speaking for the RLEA's 23 affiliated unions, warned that the proposed legislation, "coming on top of the compulsory arbitration Congress enacted in 1963, threatens to kill whatever life now remains in collective bargaining in the railroad industry."

The chief management negotiator, J. E. Wolfe, told Congress that the only thing wrong with the Administration proposal is that it is a one-shot bill.

Wolfe asked Congress to amend the Railway Labor Act to make all recommendations of presidential emergency boards final and binding—thus establishing a permanent system of compulsory arbitration in the railroad industry.

His proposal, he claimed, is "the American way" to settle differences when collective bargaining breaks down.

High Prices For Drugs Hit Elderly

Prices for prescription drugs are so high that "the elderly all too often must choose between having enough to eat and getting medication they need to keep alive," the National Council of Senior Citizens testified at Senate hearings.

Earlier the senators had heard testimony that cities which buy brand-name drugs for their municipal hospitals and welfare programs pay up to 40 times more for the same product than cities buying drugs under their generic names.

The witnesses were different and the senators were different, but the testimony was an echo of 1959 and 1960, when the late Sen. Estes Kefauver (D-Tenn.) presided at similar hearings.

Kefauver's probe eventually led to legislation correcting some of the abuses in the marketing of drugs, but a powerful combine of manufacturers and doctors blocked any action to force down prices.

The new effort is being mounted by Sen. Gaylord Nelson (D-Wis.). Nelson is chairman of the Monopoly subcommittee of the Senate's Select Committee on Small Business. The committee doesn't have legislative powers. It can't act on bills. But it can investigate and turn the spotlight of publicity on legislation before other committees.

Grower Agrees to Bargain:

Farm Workers Win Beachhead in Texas

Rio Grande City, Tex.—The AFL-CIO's United Farm Workers Organizing Committee won its first beachhead on Texas soil when a major Rio Grande Valley grower signed an agreement recognizing the union as exclusive bargaining agent for his workers.

The grower, Virgilio Guerra of Los Velas ranch near Roma, Tex., agreed to start negotiations promptly on contract terms that will be the first for UFWOC in Texas. The agreement provides that, if no settlement is reached within 60 days, remaining items will be submitted to an arbitrator chosen by union and management negotiators.

The pact was signed by Guerra and UFWOC Vice Pres. Gilbert Padilla in the shade of a large tree in one of the Guerra fields.

Union field workers, immensely heartened by the victory, went back to the picket lines after a lively celebration, determined to win similar settlements with other growers during the present cantaloupe and honeydew melon season, now at its height. The major objective is La Casita ranch, focus of a nationwide "Don't Buy" campaign which UFWOC has asked all American labor to support.

UFWOC achieved its first agreement with the aid of an international picket line, one of the first ever attempted. The Confederation of Mexican Workers (CTM) affiliated with the Inter-american Regional Organization of Workers (ORIT), stationed pickets across the Rio Grande in Ciudad Miguel Aleman, Mex., and hoisted the red and black "Huelga" flag that, under Mexican law, prohibits workers from

Model City Aid Slashed In House

By David L. Perlman

The House approved a sharply reduced appropriation to launch the model cities program but turned down a token expansion of rent subsidies for low-income families.

The first full-scale showdown between the Administration and a Republican-led conservative coalition ended with each side winning one key vote. But the price of salvaging the model cities program was acceptance of a $300 million cut made by the Appropriations Committee in the $537 million sought by Pres. Johnson for the coming fiscal year.

There were two decisive roll-call votes.

First the House voted 232-171 to knock out the $10 million provided in the committee bill for new rent supplement commitments, leaving only the $5 million budgeted for contracts already signed. The majority was made up of 163 Republicans and 69 Democrats, most from the South. Voting against scuttling the program were 159 Democrats and 12 Republicans.

Then the Republicans sought to kill all except $12 million in planning funds from the $237 million allocated for model cities programs by the Appropriations Committee. The GOP motion was beaten, 213-193. On this vote, 178 Democrats were joined by 35 Republicans to save the program, while 141 Republicans and 52 Democrats voted to kill it.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, Democratic and Republican mayors of major cities and a committee of prominent businessmen all sent wires to House members on the eve of the vote supporting the program.

Illinois 'Work' Law Bid Killed in Committee

Springfield, Ill.—Attempts to push a "right-to-work" bill through the Illinois General Assembly were stopped cold when the House Executive Committee voted 19 to 8 to reject the measure. Six Republicans voted with 13 Democrats to kill the proposal to outlaw union shop agreements in the state. All votes against killing the bill were Republican.

The Illinois State AFL-CIO fought a vigorous battle to defeat the bill, which was maneuvered by "work" law forces into the Executive Committee, the most conservative in the House. Illinois AFL-CIO leaders protested that the bill should have been assigned to the House Labor & Industrial Affairs Committee.

Backers of the anti-labor measure presented a film of U.S. Sen. Everett M. Dirksen (R-Ill.) stating that he was proud of his role in defeating repeal of Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act in 1966. The section permits states to enact so-called right-to-work measures. In the film, Dirksen never flatly said he was for a "right-to-work" law in Illinois.

Speaking for the State AFL-CIO were Pres. Reuben G. Soderstrom, Executive Vice Pres. Stanley L. Johnson and Chief Counsel Lester Asher. They were supported by large delegations from central bodies and local unions and hundreds of letters and telegrams.

Congress Urged to Pass Full Foreign Aid Budget

Approval of the full foreign aid program sought by Pres. Johnson was urged on Congress by the AFL-CIO with a pledge that labor will continue its own efforts to strengthen free institutions and social progress in the developing nations.

Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller said the AFL-CIO considers the aid program "an indispensable part of our nation's foreign policy for preserving world peace, promoting freedom and fostering economic progress based on social justice."

Biemiller testified before the House Foreign Affairs Committee in support of the $3.1 billion authorization sought by Pres. Johnson for foreign economic aid.

The amount sought, he noted, amounts to only one-third of 1 percent of the U.S. gross national product. In 1949, he pointed out, the percentage was nearly five times greater. He said the U.S. could well put 1 percent of its income into the program.

Appeals Court Upholds Rail Unions On Bargaining Over Train Crews

The nation's railroads violated the Railway Labor Act when they refused to bargain with four unions on the makeup of train crews in 1965 and 1966, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia ruled.

The ruling on appeals filed by the Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen, Railroad Trainmen, Conductors & Brakemen and the Switchmen, reversed a decision by U.S. District Court Judge Alexander Holtzoff. The judges, however, affirmed another Holtzoff ruling that the railroads had no obligation to bargain with one union—the ORCB—on a proposal to increase the size of train crews before a compulsory arbitration award on crew sizes expired.

At issue was the right of the unions to open negotiations by serving notices before the award expired on Jan. 24, 1966, for three of the unions and on Mar. 30, 1966, for the Firemen. The appeals judges said "the mere fact that the union notices were served prior to Jan. 25, 1966, did not relieve the carriers of their duty to confer and bargain" prior to that date.

Since management did not live up to its obligation to bargain, it forfeited the right to negotiations and the unions are entitled to call for mediation, the next step under the Railway Labor Act, the judges ruled.

BLF&E Pres. Harry E. Gilbert called the decision "a clear and ringing indictment of rail management's refusal to bargain" but said it was "unfortunate that we had to wait 18 months to have a court tell the railroads they have to bargain." Both unions and members "suffered irreparable damage" in the interim, he said.

Other Rulings

In related cases, the same court:

- Sent back to the lower court the issue of whether the BLF&E is entitled to a full hearing on the question of responsibility for a strike in 1966 that went 12 hours past a court-appointed deadline. Judge Holtzoff fined the union $25,000 and Gilbert $2,500 on a contempt finding.
- Affirmed a Holtzoff ruling that the Emergency Board in the compulsory arbitration case had authority to interpret its own findings in a dispute between the BRT and the Terminal Railroad Association of St. Louis.

Meanwhile, another appeals court panel heard arguments on whether the BRT has to bargain nationally with the railroads on the question of crew sizes, as Holtzoff directed, or whether local bargaining is lawful under the rail labor act. A government brief, filed by the Executive Dept., agrees with the union's position that local bargaining is customary and desirable.

The dispute between railroad unions and management over the size of train crews has been going on since 1960, when the carriers served notices proposing that management be given discretion to decide how many men should work in a train or yard crew.

After all mediation methods had been exhausted, the unions set strike dates and Congress passed a law calling for compulsory arbitration of the dispute. Arbitration Board 282, created under the law, ruled that management could eliminate the jobs of firemen on freight and yard diesel locomotives, and other employes for a two-year period.

The latest ruling was that the work rules created by the award of Board 282 "constituted a new plateau that was not automatically eroded when the award expired;" but that the railroads had the duty to bargain on new union proposals before the end of the award period.

The judges wrote that "the carriers flatly refused to engage in any statutory bargaining whatever prior to the expiration date" of the award and thereby "breached their statutory duty under the Railway Labor Act to . . . bargain on the merits of proposed changes."

The judges said they "detect no glimmer of an intimation that the carriers were authorized to regard this as a two-year hiatus in their obligation to bargain." No responsible businessman would conduct himself in that way, they declared.

The court found that of three bargaining notices served by the Firemen in November 1965, Notice No. 1 was a proper subject for bargaining, Notice No. 2 was not, and Notice No. 3 was set aside by agreement. Holtzoff agreed with the railroads that Notices 1 and 2 were premature. The appeals judges overruled him as to No. 1, which proposed setting a definite level of firemen's jobs for the period after the compulsory award expired.

6-Week Strike Wins Gains for 2 Glass Locals

Philadelphia—A six-week strike at two facilities of the Pennsylvania Glass Sand Co. has won gains in wages and fringe benefits for members of two locals of the Glass Bottle Blowers.

The strike action began Apr. 1 after negotiations had brought no acceptable contract proposal from management, the union said. Plants are located at McVeytown, Pa., and Mapleton Depot, Pa.

Settlement of the dispute provides wage increases of 15 cents an hour in the first year, 10 cents in the second, and 10 cents in the third year, with employes in certain classifications getting another 2 cents in both the second and third years.

It also calls for increased hospital and surgical benefits and major medical coverage. In the second year, the company will begin contributions of one and one-half cents per man-hour to start participation in the GBBA-Industry Pensioners Welfare Fund.

Some 275 members of the two GBBA locals are covered by the agreement. Executive Officer Frank Carter conducted the negotiations.

Unions Rebuffed:

Rail Shipping Plan Rejected by U.S.

Leighty, testifying before a Senate Labor subcommittee in opposition to what he termed a "forced labor" bill, put the issue in these terms:

"Who profits by this bill, if enacted?

"The nation's railroad corporations profit, whose earnings will be increased by paying lower wages than their shopcraft employes could win by exerting their own economic strength.

"Who loses by this bill, if enacted?

"The underpaid railroad shopmen lose, by losing their democratic right to strike and the wages it could bring them. This bill rewards the corporations and punishes the working man. We find that grossly unfair."

Pres. H. E. Gilbert of the Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen and Pres. Charles Luna of the Railroad Trainmen cited the 1963 compulsory arbitration law as an example of a good-intentioned effort by Congress which turned out to be a one-sided burden on the workers.

Gilbert told Congress that 20,000 workers were removed from their jobs under the arbitration award, compared with the predictions of 5,500 at the time Congress passed the law.

Legal Costs $650,000

The union, he said, has spent $650,000 in legal fees on cases arising out of the arbitration while management saved $179 million in wages during the first two years alone.

Speaking, Gilbert said, "from personal experience, compulsory arbitration does not solve the problem; it only postpones it, and escalates the original dispute to a point that almost defies solution."

Luna reminded the committee members that the rail unions are willing to move all railroad shipments necessary to the nation's military effort and public health.

He appealed to Congress: "Don't take away our economic power—don't destroy collective bargaining by encouraging the carriers to seek compulsory arbitration."

The railroads, he said, have had "a taste of compulsion" in the 1963 law "and they are back for more."

"Do it again and you will create a habit—and set a pattern for all labor that will spread like a cancer through free collective bargaining," he added.

In another development, Rep. Brock Adams (D-Wash.) said there is "substantial support" in the House Commerce Committee for a "seizure" bill that would put the railroads under a court-appointed receiver until the dispute is resolved. He said several other committee members are working with him on such an amendment.

The AFL-CIO has termed seizure as "the fairest and least oppressive alternative" if Congress intends to legislate against a strike.

U.S. Extends Bias Ban to Contract Bids

The Labor Dept. has issued an order barring consideration of bids for federal work from any contractor or subcontractor who maintains segregated facilities of any type.

While a non-discrimination clause is required in all federal contracts, the new order makes it a mandatory part of the initial bid for government work that the contractor certify that neither he nor any of his subcontractors have any segregated facilities — either by policy or practice.

The contractor must also guarantee that his employes are not assigned to perform work at any location where there are segregated facilities.

Laborers' Fund Aids Slain Staffer's Family

Executive officers of the Laborers announced the establishment of a trust fund in memory of a slain union representative and donated $5,000 to the fund for the "future care, maintenance, education and comfort" of his widow and four minor children.

The fund was established at the request of the Lafayette, La., AFL-CIO and the Building & Construction Trades Council there as a memorial to the late Cecyl P. Babineaux, who died at 33 after he was shot by an armed guard last Feb. 9 near Cankton, La.

LIU Pres. Joseph V. Moreschi said the fund will be administered by a trust department of a Lafayette bank for the use of Mrs. Arlene King Babineaux and her children, Drake Paul, 6; Dixie Anna, 4; Tracy Anna, 18 months, and Odie Dean, 3 months. Union locals, other labor bodies and individuals are free to contribute, Moreschi announced.

Lafayette labor named a committee of five men to supervise the fund—Gable Aguillard, Harry E. Delahoussaye, John P. Coleman, Anatole J. Plaisance, and Joseph Trotter, all of Lafayette parish, La.

The Louisiana AFL-CIO, meeting recently in Baton Rouge at its 12th annual convention, voted commendation and full support of the memorial fund.

Babineaux was a Marine veteran of the Korean War. As business manager of Oil Field Workers Local 1152, he met with union members Feb. 9 and then went with them to a drilling rig to talk to prospective members at shift change time. He was shot by Guard M. Joseph Hanks, who remains free pending possible grand jury action.

The shooting took place on a public highway as the union men approached a drilling rig operated by the Pernie Bailey Drilling Co., Houston. The guard ordered Babineaux not to come nearer, fired a warning shot over his head, and then fired the fatal shot, according to witnesses.

Hanks was quoted as saying he fired the shot because Babineaux had "reached into his pocket." The dead man was found to have been unarmed, without even a penknife. The union charged that Hanks was commissioned to carry a gun despite the fact that he had been released not long before from a state mental hospital.

Union representatives have carried their protest at the practice of giving private guards commissions as deputy sheriffs to Gov. John J. McKeithen (D). They are continuing their organizing campaign while the grand jury, and the governor, consider the case, the union said.

Companies Standing Pat:

Bargaining Stalled In Rubber Walkout

Akron, O.—Strikes by the Rubber Workers against three of the nation's major rubber companies moved into their fifth week with no movement on the major economic issues.

URW Pres. Peter Bommarito said that only minor contractual problems have been resolved in negotiations so far.

He indicated the companies are standing pat on their offer of a two-year wage increase package totaling 23.5 cents an hour for tire plant employes, 18 cents for non-tire employes and a fraction of a cent improvement in the Supplemental Unemployment Benefits program.

The last of the URW's contracts with the Big Five rubber companies expired at midnight May 15, but the union decided to continue negotiating with the company, General Tire, rather than strike. After an hour of bargaining the next day, the URW broke off the talks and said no further meetings were scheduled.

The union has been on strike since Apr. 20 against Firestone, Uniroyal and B. F. Goodrich. Production workers at Goodyear have been working since that date without a contract.

Strike Effects

Effects of the strikes are being felt elsewhere in the rubber industry and by the major auto makers.

Firestone announced layoffs at fabric plants in Gastonia, N. C., and Bennettsville, S. C. Goodrich said plants that supply the struck plants are affected but declined to say how. Uniroyal reported cutting hours at plants supplying cord.

The struck companies have admitted building bigger than normal tire stockpiles in preparation for new contract negotiations and the auto makers say they are well supplied.

However, all four—General Motors, Ford, Chrysler and American Motors—said they are watching carefully supplies of molded and extruded rubber parts such as motor mounts, window channels, pedal pads and shields.

General said that its orders for these items had been increasing.

Major bargaining goal of the union is a "substantial" wage increase. Bommarito called the companies' offer "ridiculously inadequate." He also indicated an area of understanding was nowhere near on the URW's guaranteed annual wage program based on SUB and called FEEP (Full Employment Earnings Program).

The rubber giants have admitted having a mutual aid pact to help struck companies. Bommarito has accused them of taking their pact to the bargaining table and collectively refusing to negotiate in good faith.

Bommarito describes the URW bargaining program as "realistic, logical and attainable," and has vowed that the goals will be reached.

The $6.5 million URW strike fund is being depleted at the rate of $1,250,000 a week with $25 benefits going to each of the 50,000 active strikers. But with pledges of financial support from other unions, Bommarito has said that money is the least of the URW's worries.

Steel Union Contract Ends Carbide Strike

Portland, Ore.—Ten months of strikes triggered by a lockout by the Union Carbide Corp. ended when Steelworkers Local 3103 ratified new contract terms.

The dispute began when management locked out 1,200 members of the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers last July 2 at Alloy, W. Va. The stoppages involved 8,000 members of the OCAW, the Steelworkers and the Chemical Workers in 11 Carbide plants and cut anticipated 1966 profits by $17 million, the corporation told stockholders.

Bargaining for the unions was coordinated by the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. The strikers won "substantially better" settlements than had been expected, the IUD said, although they failed to achieve their goal of nationwide bargaining.

After 246 days on strike, the USWA local here agreed to contract gains including 38 cents an hour in wage increases, better pension and vacation benefits, increases in shift differentials during 1969 and company-paid hospital and surgical benefits beginning next Jan. 1.

Similar settlements were achieved earlier at Carbide plants in Ashtabula and Marietta, O., Sheffield, Ala., Alloy and Sistersville, W. Va., East Chicago, Whiting, and Speedway, Ind.

The unions filed refusal-to-bargain charges after the Alloy lockout. A National Labor Relations Board trial examiner ruled later that Carbide had illegally insisted "to the point of impasse" on union acceptance of company pension and insurance proposals that were not open for bargaining that year.

Coopers Gird for Fight On Re-Use of Barrels

Miami Beach—The Coopers Intl. Union, one of the oldest labor organizations in the country, could face extinction unless it wins its legislative struggle with the distillers, President Ernest D. Higdon told the union's 38th convention here.

Higdon was referring to a petition filed by Seagram's with the U.S. Treasury Dept. asking permission to store whiskey in used or old barrels and still claim age on the label. A 1935 regulation requires that whiskey must be stored in newly charred white oak cooperage if age is to be claimed.

The Coopers now produce about 2.5 million new barrels a year. Higdon declared that 75 percent of the union members would lose their jobs if the distillers were permitted to change the ruling.

"And the consumers would also be the loser," he added. "Experts in the distilleries tell us that whiskey does not age properly in a barrel that has been used more than twice. The wood flavor is all gone after a three-year period."

The Coopers have found it necessary to fight proposed changes in administration of the Federal Alcoholic Administration Act almost every other year, he noted. To end this costly struggle, it is backing legislation in the 90th Congress to enact into law what has been the regulation.

Convention delegates, in attendance from 28 states, voted to expend "all funds necessary to fight changes in the regulation."

Per Caps Up

They also voted to raise per capita payments to the international from $1.85 per month to $2.05, and to transfer 20 cents per member per month from the strike fund to be used for organizing activities.

The initiation fee also was raised from $20 to $35 and the next convention was scheduled for June 1969 in Louisville, Ky.

The convention re-elected the entire slate of officers headed by Higdon as president and secretary-treasurer, First Vice Pres. John Branan, Second Vice Pres. George F. Calvert, Third Vice Pres. Howard Rollins, and Fourth Vice Pres. Jesse Williams.

Loan Helps Guyana TUC Build Homes

Georgetown, Guyana—Construction has begun on a low-cost housing project for members of the Guyana Trades Union Council to be financed with a $2 million loan from AFL-CIO union funds.

Plans call for 568 wooden dwellings of two, three or four bedrooms which will range in cost from $2,400 to $4,100.

The loan is guaranteed by the government of Guyana and the U.S. Agency for Intl. Development. Local participation is expected to add another $200,000 to the total expenditure. In addition, the AID has made a grant of $100,000 to help build an 800-pupil grade school at the site.

The American Institute for Free Labor Development provided the TUC with technical assistance in forming the TUC Housing Cooperative, which purchased the land from the government last July, and helped obtain the low-cost loan from the AFL-CIO affiliates.

The dwellings will be sold to workers for a small down payment and monthly installments over 20 years.

Rail Clerks Set Economic Goals, Map Vigorous Organizing Drive

Minneapolis, Minn.—The Railway Clerks, holding to the theme of "the modern union on the move," wound up a five-day convention here by charting plans for a strong organizing drive and setting new economic goals for the union's present 270,000 members.

In sessions marked by vigorous debate, the nearly 1,200 delegates adopted a program calling for future bargaining emphasis on improved holidays, vacations, sick leave provisions, overtime and a guaranteed annual wage.

A key resolution stressed the need for a "massive program of organizing" in all transport fields where the BRC has jurisdiction —railroads, airlines, buses, freight forwarding companies and steamship offices. BRC is the largest transport affiliate in the AFL-CIO.

The convention up-dated the constitution and by-laws in a number of areas. It also approved a $1-a-month increase in dues of working members. Of this sum, 45 cents will go to the grand lodge and 55 cents to system boards and local lodges.

Delegates reelected Pres. C. L. Dennis, Sec.-Treas. George M. Gibbons and Vice Presidents J. D. Bearden, W. Ray Clark, J. B. Haines, C. E. Kief, David A. Ligon, C. B. Moore, Kenneth D. Shaw and Dan J. Sullivan. They were unopposed.

Elected Canadian vice president was W. C. Y. McGregor, who has been Canadian Pacific Express general chairman. He defeated the incumbent, E. F. Downard. All officers begin four-year terms July 1.

The convention approved salary increases for all international officers. Dennis will receive $70,000, an increase from $35,000; Gibbons $35,000, up from $22,500; and all vice presidents $30,000, an increase of $9,000. The raises were the first for the offices since 1951.

In a spontaneous action from the floor, delegates approved a one-time $1 assessment on all working members to support the bitter, four-year strike on the Florida East Coast Railway. In addition, each delegate contributed $5 for strike aid.

Speakers stressed that the move—expected to raise more than $200,000 for the strikers—will serve notice on the carrier and its millionaire operator, Edward Ball, that rail unions are determined to see the walkout through to a final victory.

Pres. Paul Hall of the Seafarers, speaking just after the convention acted on the FEC issue, hailed the special assessment as proof of continuing militancy in labor. He termed it "the proper kind of answer to Mr. Edward Ball and his finks."

Joseph Jacobs, noted Chicago labor attorney, accused Administration leaders of misleading the public in describing the President's bill to ban a railroad strike as "mediation to finality."

"One does not have to go beyond kindergarten to recognize this as compulsory arbitration," he said.

Dennis also attacked the measure and delegates voiced their all-out opposition to it.

Among other actions, the delegates underscored the BRC's role on airlines by adding "Airline" to the union's name, making it officially the Brotherhood of Railway, Airline & Steamship Clerks, Freight Handlers, Express & Station Employes.

Friedman Named To Research Post

Marvin Friedman, an economist in the AFL-CIO Dept of Research since 1961, has been named assistant director of the department. Nathaniel Goldfinger is the director.

Friedman succeeds Frank L. Fernbach, who has taken a new post as assistant to the president of the Steelworkers in charge of special projects at the union's Washington office.

Friedman served as assistant director of research and education and as legislative director of the Chemical Workers before joining the AFL-CIO. Fernbach held a number of positions with the Steelworkers, including associate director of research, before joining the CIO Dept. of Research in 1946. He had been assistant director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research since 1963.

Board Order Bars Secondary Boycott

The National Labor Relations Board has made a secondary boycott finding against a group of building trades unions whose members worked on a Visitors' Center for the National Park Service at the 600-foot-high Gateway Arch in St. Louis, built for the city's 200th anniversary celebration.

By unanimous vote the board, upholding a trial examiner's findings, ruled that four unions and the Building & Construction Trades Council of St. Louis committed unfair labor practices in 1966 when they refused to work with plumbers who were not members of an affiliated union after threatening to strike unless work at the Visitor's Center was "entirely performed" by members of AFL-CIO unions.

The board issued a cease-and-desist order against the council and the four unions—Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Local 1, Pipefitters Local 562, Sheet Metal Workers Local 36 and Laborers Local 42.

Bargaining Derailed

THE ONE OVERRIDING yet practically non-reported fact in the rail shopcraft dispute is that the nation's railroads have as a matter of policy decided to try and set aside free collective bargaining and substitute compulsory arbitration.

They have essentially refused to engage in bargaining with the six shopcraft unions from the day the unions rejected the railroads' initial offer as falling far short of the needs of the men in the shops.

The railroads have made it clear that they would prefer legislation giving the government the power and authority to dictate the terms of a new agreement. They are ready to sell out freedom for profits.

THE GREAT MAJORITY of American business and industry has consistently opposed the concept of compulsory arbitration. The responsible segments understand the need for reaching an agreement on wages, hours and working conditions with their workers through freely elected unions around the bargaining table.

There are other segments of business and industry that relentlessly fight unionism and battle to prevent organization or improvement in conditions. But they, too, value the freedom of the bargaining concept and are opposed to a government agency dictating the terms of the final agreement.

The railroads have chosen to move away from the free collective bargaining concept that is a basic underpinning of a democratic society. They have reacted to the Administration's proposals—which despite all the semantics and words is a formula for compulsory arbitration—with the declaration that it does not go far enough. They are supporting it, however, because it goes down the road they are pursuing.

THE RAIL SHOPCRAFT UNIONS have not injected new or unique demands in negotiations with the roads. They are seeking first of all wage increases that will give workers a fair share of the fruits of their labor, and secondly recognition that the earnings of highly skilled workers in the shops are lagging behind the earnings of workers with the same skills doing similar work in non-rail shops.

The railroads apparently consider these attempts to bring equity and justice to shopcraft workers "far out" enough to require scuttling the entire system of free bargaining for a regime of government dictation.

Collective bargaining will not work despite the pleas and entreaties of mediators and conciliators, etc. unless both sides—union and management—are willing to sit down and work out their problems in hard, realistic sessions.

If one party—in this case the railroads—spurns bargaining and looks to a third party—the government—to make the final decisions, the system will not and cannot work.

It is difficult to understand why the railroads are willing to squander the precious currency of freedom for a few paltry dollars of profits. Short-sighted greed is too great a price to pay for the destruction of basic democratic principles.

'I Wonder How Much!'

Triflers With Truth:

Frenzied Right-Wing Assaults Try to Smear Social Security

A RIGHT-WING ASSAULT on social security is mounting in frenzy as the House Ways & Means Committee moves closer toward a decision on the improvements proposed by Pres. Johnson.

The wildest attack to date is a pair of articles by Jameson G. Campaigne, editor of the Indianapolis Star. The articles have not only appeared in that paper of the Pulliam chain, but have cropped up elsewhere.

The target is not just the labor-supported improvements in social security, but the social security system itself. The drive is directed toward young workers; the message is that social security is a "fraud" and a "swindle" which clips young people for more money than they will ever get back.

Here is a quote from Campaigne:

"Not one single young worker in the United States will ever, if he lives to be 100, get back from the government in retirement income what he and his employer contribute for his retirement."

By any yardstick, this sentence is a lie. Yet it is a lie ingeniously disguised to trap the innocent.

It is a lie supported by plausible but totally dishonest statistics.

Campaigne first assumes that without social security, the employer's contribution would be paid to the worker—a weirdly unlikely prospect, but for him only a beginning. He then projects the total contributions a worker and his employer would make to social security for the next 41 years, at the present maximum rate plus 4 percent compound interest. He comes up with a total of $63,894. And he compares this sum with the present maximum retirement benefit, for a couple, of $252 a month, or $3,024 a year.

But—as the articles are careful not to point out—this sets a 1967 benefit against a retirement in the year 2008. Without a shred of justification, it assumes that Social Security will be static into the 21st Century.

(Even on this basis, Campaigne is wrong. The worker would get all the money back—his, the employer's and interest—if he lived to be 86.)

Campaigne admits that many persons now retired will receive (and have received) far more from social security than was paid into their accounts. This is evidence, he charges, that young workers are being forced to foot the bill with money they could put to better use for themselves.

It just isn't so.

As Paul A. Samuelson, a distinguished economist, has pointed out, the national economy and the population will continue to grow; the taxable base will continue to broaden, and thus benefits can continue to rise. The young worker can look for an even better social security bargain than his elders are now getting.

ON THE BASIS of its past performance and future prospects, social security is a best buy simply as a retirement program. But as critics like Campaigne deliberately fail to mention, it is far more than that.

Social security provides pensions for the totally disabled, at the same rates paid to retirees.

Social security pays full benefits to widows and dependent children of workers who die.

Social security finances the medicare program.

In terms of insurance, these added safeguards are worth many times the retirement program. And no one could buy these safeguards anywhere else, at any price. No private insurance company can offer a policy to cover them.

And finally:

Social security isn't tied in to any particular employer; it is completely portable. Its protection follows a worker from job to job.

Social security doesn't "lapse" if the premiums aren't paid. A worker who is jobless—no matter how long—picks up his credits where he left them, when he returns to the payroll.

Yet in the face of this Campaigne can say:

"If they tore up your social security card, and you invested the money you've been forced to pay for it, you'd be at least twice as well off."

The shame is not so much the bare-faced lie, but the fact that supposedly responsible newspapers are willing to print it as the truth.

Morgan Says:

Chinese Stir Hong Kong Pot To Take Heat Off Home Front

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p.m., EDT.)

IN HONG KONG restaurants you can enjoy in season Australian rock oysters flown in from Sydney, fresh New Zealand strawberries and smoked salmon from Scotland, among other delights.

Morgan

The question is how red is the herring being served up on the political menu in the critical argument between Peking and London over the status of this jewel of a Crown Colony. A tiny piece of mainland and a cluster of islands glistening in the waters of the South China Sea, it is a 400-square mile paradox, a polished hangnail from the history of empire, its 4 million inhabitants—all but 2 percent Chinese—still under British rule. At some but not desperate risk, Mao Tse-tung could have seized this prize at almost any time after he ousted Chiang Kai-shek in 1949. So why hasn't he? Because it has suited his regime better to let Hong Kong remain as the only major international contact for the biggest group of shut-ins in history, 700-million mainland Chinese.

But an explosive situation has developed which may upset this whole delicate balance. The spastic Cultural Revolution which Mao invented last summer to put his own Communist party opponents in place has been more disruptive than constructive. A diversion against the "foreign devils" might take the heat off at home temporarily and the most convenient imperialists are the British in Hong Kong.

Thirteen months ago there were riots in Hong Kong protesting, among other things, higher ferry fares across the harbor to Kowloon where much of the working class lives. Significantly Peking did not try to exploit that situation.

But now it has used a wage dispute in an artificial flower factory and subsequent riots abetted by Hong Kong counterparts of the rambunctious, fanatical young Red Guards as a pretext to fire off a furious protest to London. Many of the accusations and demands are nonsense, including release and "apologies" to those arrested.

But there is one point pricking more than casual concern not only in London but Washington. The Mao regime charges that Britain is allowing the United States to use Hong Kong as "a base for aggression against Vietnam in disregard of repeated solemn warnings of the Chinese government."

An American serviceman who perhaps stayed too long in Suzy Wong's Bar may occasionally use Hong Kong as a base for private aggression and the U.S. consulate general houses a staff of several hundred persons concentrating on the esoteric exercise of China-watching. But no American offensive against Vietnam or anywhere else is being mounted in Hong Kong and Peking knows it.

What galls the Communist Chinese is the recurring presence of warships of the U.S. Seventh Fleet in Hong Kong's beautiful harbor. Not bent on belligerence but bringing—along with other transport — 5,000 or so sailors and GIs a month for rest and recreation from Viet Nam; these vessels, within a gunshot of China's sovereign territory, are more than a mild embarrassment to the Maoists who are committed, in effect, to drive the imperialists from Asia.

THEY HAVE NOT been so doctrinaire, however, as to ignore the fat fact that the Peking regime earns well more than half a billion dollars a year in trade alone through Hong Kong. This pays for the grain China has to buy from Australia and Canada. In the Colony's free money market the Bank of China's huge Hong Kong branch can buy dollars at the going rate. There are nine Communist-owned department stores in Hong Kong. Ninety percent of the pork, more than half the vegetables and a considerable amount of the water consumed in Hong Kong come from China. Tourists, especially Americans, have swelled the island's dollar reserves though it may not have occurred to them when they were consuming pork chow mein or even less exotic dishes that they were contributing to the economy of the world's most populous Communist state.

Peking knows, of course, that if it ousted the British the lucrative Hong Kong tourist trade would drop to near zero and the multi-million dollar-earning light industry that Hong Kong has developed for the export trade would also be gravely crimped. So a great deal of the current imbroglio, diplomatic and on the streets, must be discounted as bluster.

But it would be utterly frivolous to shrug the trouble aside as a tempest in a teapot. Some knowledgeable Washington sources muse that while there may be no duplication of the humiliation in neighboring Macao, where Portugal was forced to capitulate almost totally to Peking's demands, the Chinese may do their utmost to extract from the British a decree putting Hong Kong off limits to American troops, as a minimum face-saver.

It is pointed out that in a rare interview being syndicated by the Chicago Daily News, Chinese Premier Chou En-lai merely reaffirms the position that it will take an overt American act to provoke China's intervention in the war in Viet Nam. But at this stage of escalation an "overt act" may be hard to define. And as far as Hong Kong is concerned, the Red Guards are not exactly Boy Scouts dedicated to helping little old ladies across the street.

White Collar Surge:

'Quiet' Revolution Under Way Seen Spurring Union Growth

THE AUTHOR of "The Labor Revolution" says the revolt he predicts will be a "quiet" one, but fully as meaningful as the more turbulent trade union expansions of the past.

Gus Tyler, assistant president of the Ladies' Garment Workers, whose book was recently published by Viking Press, told Labor News Conference interviewers that a surge of union organization among white collar, government, service trades and professional workers will vastly increase both the membership and the political influence of the labor movement by the end of the present decade.

Organization of this newly-dominant sector of the labor force is already under way and "picking up momentum," he said. And, he asserted, "by the end of the 1960s, we will see a kind of revolution in the American trade union movement" that will parallel the breakthrough of craft unions at the turn of the century and the organization of industrial workers in the mid-1930s.

Tyler said the evidence, as well as theory, supports his predictions. He cited the rapid growth of union membership and collective bargaining activity among nurses, teachers, office workers, government employes and computer operators.

HE SAID that "semantic snobbery" among workers who have traditionally "looked upon themselves as part of the managerial group" is being broken down.

Pointing out that white collar workers are articulate people and more likely to vote than blue collar workers, Tyler said, "the addition of this legion is an additional legion of active voters."

Reporters questioning Tyler on the AFL-CIO produced public affairs program, heard Tuesdays at 7:35 p.m. EDT on the Mutual Broadcasting System, were Alan Adams, Washington correspondent for Business Week magazine, and Stanley Levey, labor correspondent for the Scripps-Howard Newspapers.

Washington Window

By Press Associates, Inc.

A FEW DAYS AGO Pres. Johnson spoke to the Conference of Women in the War on Poverty in the East Room of the White House. He was discussing the critics of the Job Corps, the Neighborhood Youth Corps, Upward Bound and other programs in the War on Poverty.

The President recalled that back in the days of the New Deal a similar program, the National Youth Administration (NYA), faced the same stripe of critics. "But for all the criticisms (of the NYA)," he said, "most of the programs went on—and more importantly, they helped millions of Americans to survive, and ultimately to prosper."

Johnson said that not long ago he was speaking to a Job Corps meeting in Texas.

"As I looked down the list," he said, "I saw a governor who had been on NYA. I saw a Congressman who had been on NYA. I saw the chairman of the State Board of Regents who had been on NYA. . . .

"Today, when I go through the state, I meet people who were helped by NYA more than 30 years ago. Most of them are now in their late 40s or 50s. Most are responsible and productive citizens. They are doctors, businessmen, teachers and skilled craftsmen."

This story should recall the revolution that not only the NYA but the entire New Deal made in America. It should even caution us not to dismiss the War on Poverty as a "boondoggle," as its critics have been labeling it.

In 1960 there was no War on Poverty. In the past six years we have spent, by the Administration's own figures, some $100 billion on all the social programs.

Speaking to a Histadrut dinner in Washington, Vice Pres. Humphrey spelled out in more detail some positive results of this program.

"There are 7 million fewer people living in poverty than there were six years ago," Humphrey said. "Then the poor amounted to almost 21 percent of the people—today they are less than 16 percent."

HERE IS a partial breakdown of accomplishments under the anti-poverty program which he presented:

- Some 50,000 young people have graduated from residential Job Corps centers with 35,000 more now in training in 119 centers.
- It has helped 25,000 high school youngsters through the slum-to-college Upward Bound program.
- It has given work and training to 900,000 young people through the Neighborhood Youth Corps.
- It has helped prepare 1.4 million pre-schoolers for the first grade through the Head Start program.
- Of the six million young Americans in college today one million are there because of federal assistance.
- More than one million persons are receiving job training under Federal programs, compared to none only six years ago.

The President is recommending almost $26 billion for programs directly aiding the poor in the coming fiscal year, an increase of $3.6 billion over the current fiscal year. In addition, he has asked Congress for a $75 million supplemental appropriation for summer programs. This could be a critical summer.

It is in the summer that we may well forever lose youngsters who become so disenchanted, so disillusioned with society they prefer to remain outsiders.

"We may never live to see an America without poverty," Johnson declared, "but we may see an America where a lifetime of poverty is not the inevitable fate of a child born into it."

That, alone, is sufficient to ask that the War on Poverty be escalated.

LABOR IS on the threshold of a new "revolution" that will be "quiet," but fully as meaningful in growth and expanding influence as more turbulent trade union expansions of the past, according to Gus Tyler (center), assistant president of the Ladies' Garment Workers. He was questioned by Alan Adams (left) of Business Week magazine and Stanley Levey of the Scripps-Howard Newspapers on Labor News Conference, weekly public affairs radio feature on the Mutual network.

White, Negro Molders Merge Alabama Locals

Holt, Ala.—White and Negro locals of the Molders have been united into a newly-chartered 1,350-member integrated local here.

The merger, carried out with the aid of international union officials directed by Pres. William A. Lazzerini, brought together white Local 63 and Negro Local 67 and created the integrated Local 311. The AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights also assisted.

The old locals at a ceremony surrendered their original charters to Intl. Vice Pres. Carl Studenroth, who presented the new charter and installed the officers of Local 311. Also present from the international office were Vice Presidents Draper Doyal and Anton Triza, and Financial-Auditor Merlin McCune.

The workers involved are employes of the Central Foundry Co., the largest single plant in the cast iron soil pipe industry. Organization of the plant and chartering of the original locals in 1933 paved the way to unionization of the bulk of the industry and a master contract covering some 70 percent of its employes. Plants are in New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Tennessee as well as Alabama.

The merger was worked out by committees from each local and provided for full equalization of members' rights. Both locals owned their own halls. That of the former Local 63 is larger and newer and will be used by Local 311; that of Local 67 will be sold and the assets will go to the new local.

The 14 officers of Local 311 are evenly divided between members of the former locals and are headed by Pres. Carl Cornett, who was president of Local 63.

Full-time officers are Corresponding Rep. Claude Simpson from Local 63, who also is business agent, and Financial Sec. Cleve Gordon of former Local 67.

The integration of other segregated Molders' locals is also in process.

8-Point Program Offered:

Welfare Plan Experts Propose Plan to Reduce Medical Costs

New York—An 8-point program to attack spiraling medical costs and their growing threat to health and welfare plans was presented by labor and management groups at a joint conference here.

The May 15 conference on the "Crisis in Uncontrolled Health Care Costs" was sponsored by the New York Labor-Management Council of Health & Welfare Plans, Inc., and the New York City AFL-CIO. Walter J. Sheerin, the joint council's executive director, served as chairman.

The parley's main resolution cited a report on medical care prices prepared for Pres. Johnson by William Gorham, assistant secretary of the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare.

The Gorham report, the resolution noted, provides much data on the nature of health care cost increases and reasons for them, but contains no concrete suggestions on controlling them. The conference proposed that:

- Prepayment plans and other insurance carriers revise their policies to safeguard against misuse of insurance paid in-hospital patient care, to cover diagnosis both in hospital and out, to provide effective home care and adequate post-hospital extended care.
- HEW develop new medicare and medicaid reimbursement formulas to improve hospital operational quality.
- Congress limit the charges made by doctors to medicare patients, and thus to the general community, to curb the rapid rise of physicians' fees.
- Group medical practice programs be coordinated and extended.
- Federal, state and local governments plan on finance programs that will increase medical manpower and utilize present manpower.
- So-called "fair trade" laws be eliminated as they pertain to drugs and medicines.
- Strong health planning agencies be established at state and local levels, concerning themselves with the entire spectrum of health services and facilities.
- Support be given for HEW plans for a national conference on medical costs, to be held June 28-29 in Washington, and that representatives of the organized health care consumers be invited.

Efram A. Kahn, the joint council's chairman and president of E. A. Kahn & Co., charged that "management hasn't contributed to the effort to bring down medical costs nearly as much as labor has." He gave absenteeism and poor working habits of employes as sufficient reason for industry to step up its efforts.

Jay Rubin, co-chairman of the labor-management council, adviser to Gov. Rockefeller on medicaid and president of the New York Hotel & Motel Trades Council, sharply countered an address to the conference by Hollis S. Ingraham, commissioner of the New York State Health Dept. Ingraham had stated that "no one is going to reverse the cost of health care in the foreseeable future." He predicted the cost per day for a hospital room in New York state will rise to $100 by 1973.

No Bargain

"And the state calls this a bargain?" Rubin asked. "If that is so, then our welfare funds will have to be tripled."

Rubin challenged the privileged use of expensive hospital facilities by doctors, now that federal programs reimburse them for treating those who would otherwise be charity patients. He said that city hospitals should be attached to medical schools and should be centers of medical care staffed by full time doctors.

"Organized medicine and its power in increasing medical costs will bankrupt every welfare fund eventually," he warned.

New York City AFL-CIO Sec. Morris Iushewitz, referring to "our crazy quilt health system," said that voluntarism has failed, that federal guarantees are needed. "This is by no means a wildly radical idea," he said, citing the Scandinavian and other countries which have established such programs "with a paucity of resources."

Medics' Income Up

The statement that the incomes of doctors have risen faster annually than at any time since 1927 came from a physician, Dr. Howard J. Brown, health services administrator for New York City. The goals of the medicare and medicaid programs will not be reached, he said, "unless strong and controversial steps are taken. We should have learned from experience that paid insurance only means higher fees for doctors. We should abandon fee-for-service payments."

Martin E. Segal, consultant to the joint council, said that health care increases are being felt through increases in social security taxes, through increased doctors' fees for everyone, and in the pinched welfare funds of union-management groups.

Mexican Labor Backs Farm Union; Texas Grower Grants Recognition

crossing a picket line, or a bridge leading to a work place.

The flags were up from May 11 to May 13, when the governor of Tamaulipas state ordered them down, due to a misunderstanding, the union said. Negotiations are under way to have them hoisted again, UFWOC headquarters here reported.

Not a single Mexican worker crossed into the U.S. while the flags were posted at the Tamaulipas end of the border crossings—at Miguel Aleman, opposite Roma, and Camargo, across from Rio Grande City, the committee staff said.

While the flags were down, 17 workers with green work cards crossed the bridges to work at La Casita, compared with 130 before CTM local and national leaders lent active support to the U.S. strikers.

Now the word is that the growers have turned to the lower valley for new strikebreakers — around Brownsville, McAllen and Harlingen.

Guerra, a grower who employs 50 to 100 pickers, is one of six brothers with extensive land holdings in Starr County and the principal stock interest in this border county's only bank. A family spokesman said the brothers have been "under pressure" from growers and businessmen not to sign the agreement with UFWOC, but Virgilio signed anyway.

Besides strikebreakers, union organizers have had to contend with the Texas Rangers and local politicians who, the workers say, favor the growers.

'Private' Police

When Starr County Atty. Randall Nye called the troopers into this county, the state police met with growers and county officials before starting their tour of duty, UFWOC officials reported.

Since then, they charge, the troopers have "harassed us at every turn" by arresting union pickets—85 at this writing—using boisterous and profane language, jailing UFWOC representatives unnecessarily, and holding one union man—Ismael Dias, driver of a union car—five hours before charging him.

When a train stopped at Mission, Tex., where four women workers were picketing a grade crossing, Rangers removed the crew and took over operation of the train, loaded with melons, the UFWOC reported.

Eugene Nelson of UFWOC was arrested and held on a warrant charging he "threatened the lives" of all Rangers in Starr County. A local constable accused him of coming into the court house and using threatening language. He was held in jail over the weekend before union attorneys obtained his release in bail.

On the other hand, AFL-CIO Organizer David Lopez and the Rev. Ed. Krueger, here as an observer for the Texas Council of Churches, filed charges May 15 that they were "roughed up" by a trooper at the Texas end of the international bridge here. They reported no action from the county attorney as of May 17.

The union sent a telegram to Pres. Johnson charging the Rangers "acting under color of law" are using physical violence and intimidation to deprive citizens of their constitutional rights and urging him to authorize an investigation. The Justice Dept. then sent investigators here.

Metal Trades Name Raftery to Council

Pres. S. Frank Raftery of the Painters has been elected to the executive council of the AFL-CIO Metal Trades Dept. to fill a vacancy.

Russell M. Stephens resigned as third vice president of the department when he left the presidency of the Technical Engineers to accept a government post. Other vice presidents moved up and Raftery was chosen ninth vice president.

Prescription Drug Cost Poses Crisis for Elderly

signed to encourage prescriptions by generic names.

Sen. Joseph M. Montoya (D-N.M.) and 21 co-sponsors have introduced a bill to reimburse persons covered by medicare insurance for the "reasonable" cost of prescription drugs. Based on a bill by former Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D-Ill.), it would base payments on the lowest cost at which the drug can be purchased, as a means of encouraging physicians to prescribe by generic name.

Sen. Russell B. Long (D-La.) has a bill that would require drugs purchased under federally-financed programs to be the lowest-priced products meeting quality standards set by a committee of government, medical and pharmaceutical experts.

Opening witness before the Nelson subcommittee was William F. Haddad, head of a New York citizens committee and a former official of the poverty program.

Haddad cited dramatic savings made by New York City, which buys drugs for hospitals and welfare programs under generic names, over prices paid by cities that buy by brand names.

A stimulant tablet that cost New York 57 cents a thousand cost Atlanta $22.60 and Boston $20.21, he said. An antibiotic that New York buys for $25.95 a thousand costs Atlanta $59; Portland, Ore., $52.50, and Chicago, $50. Another product, prednisone, is bought by New York for $4.58 a thousand and by Erie County in the same state for $20.90.

The savings possible by generic name prescriptions were stressed by the senior citizens in testimony presented by NCSC Exec. Dir. William R. Hutton.

Hutton said his organization had joined with other groups in a cooperative mail order drug service.

When doctors cooperate by prescribing by generic name, he said, the service can furnish prednisone costing $30 under a brand name for only $2.40 for the same quantity.

Spending for drugs, Hutton noted, rises with age and the heaviest burden falls on the elderly living on a sparse retirement income.

U.S. Comptroller Gen. Elmer Staats told the subcommittee that millions of tax dollars could be saved each year if local welfare officials bought drugs by generic rather than brand names.

He cited as an example California's experience. In 1959, it spent $17.3 million on brand name drugs for 532,000 welfare recipients. The following year, after the Kefauver hearings, it switched to generic name purchases and spent only $7.9 million though the welfare lists had grown to 540,000.

Potters Pick Barbaree As Secretary-Treasurer

East Liverpool, O.—Acting Sec.-Treas. George Barbaree of the Operative Potters has been elected by referendum vote to fill the post permanently. Pres. E. L. Wheatley announced.

The union executive board picked Barbaree, who has been fourth vice president, to serve temporarily after the resignation of his predecessor, Charles F. Jordan, last December. He led a field of eight candidates in a preliminary vote and in the runoff defeated James R. Norris of Local 9, East Liverpool, by 4,182-594. He is a member of Pomona, N. J., Local 236.

Union Expert Wins Challenge:

N.Y. Districts Fail 1 Man, 1 Vote Test

A three-judge federal court unanimously upheld a union expert's contention that New York's congressional districts violate one man, one vote standards and ordered the state legislature to draw up new congressional districts before the 1968 elections.

The court described the shape of many of the congressional districts as "bizarre" and cited differences of more than 100,000 in the population represented by adjoining districts.

New York's 41 congressional seats under which no district would vary from the state average population by more than 4.7 percent as an indication that redistricting posed no unsurmountable problems.

The legal challenge to the districts drawn up by a Republican legislature in 1961 was initiated last year by David I. Wells, assistant director of the Political Dept. of the Ladies' Garment Workers.

Wells, an authority on reapportionment who is currently serving as an adviser to the New York State Constitutional Convention, was joined in the suit by Donald S. Harrington, state chairman of the Liberal Party.

They charged that the population differences among districts were excessive—with the range from 350,000 to 471,000—and that many of the boundaries had been drawn in an arbitrary and irrational manner in an effort to elect more Republican congressmen.

The three-judge court, whose decision can be appealed only to the U.S. Supreme Court, said it is "too clear for debate" that the present districts violate constitutional standards of equal population.

Many of the grossest violations of one man, one vote standards, the court noted, could be corrected merely by adjusting the boundary lines of adjacent districts.

The court noted that Wells had submitted a districting map for

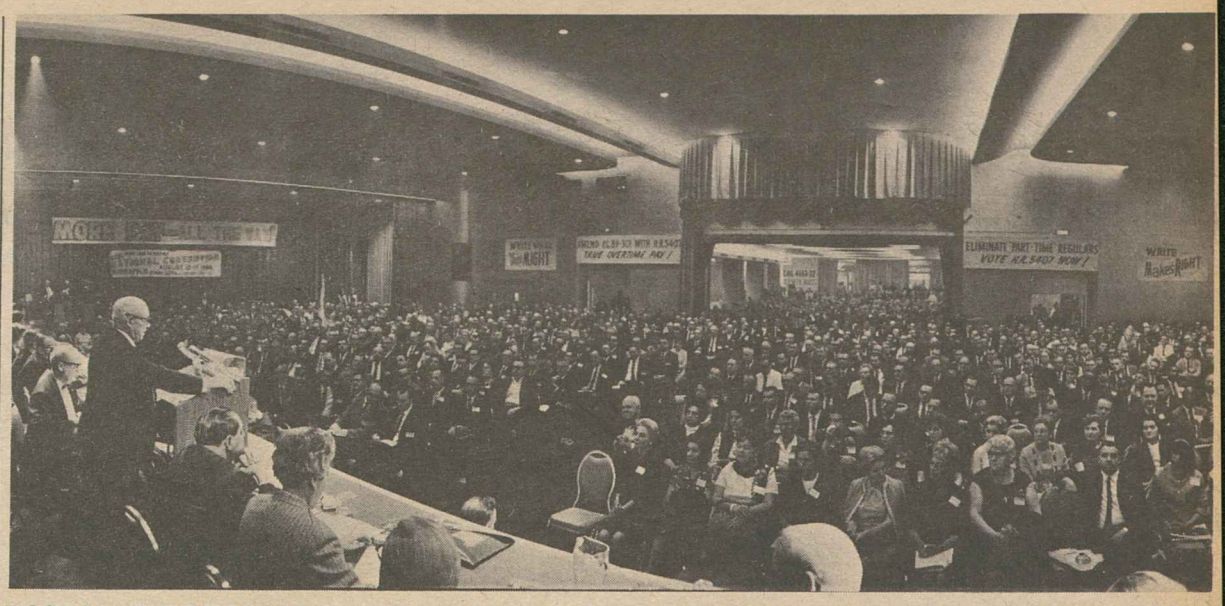
The actual redistricting, the court said, should be done by the legislature within the judicial guidelines that have been established by Supreme Court decisions.

It said the redistricting could be done either in the next regular legislative session, which will begin next January, or in a special session before then.

The court acknowledged that population shifts may have outdated 1960 census figures in some areas, but it suggested that reliable estimates are possible from more recent data.

In any event, it said, the 1968 and 1970 congressional elections "ought to be held in districts far more equalized than they are at present. There are enough changes which can be superimposed on the present districts to cure the most flagrant inequalities . . . Even if perfection cannot be achieved between now and 1973, improvement is worth the effort."

The court said it would retain jurisdiction in the case, enabling it to scrutinize any new districting law enacted by the legislature.



POSTAL CLERKS legislative conference in Washington heard AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany pledge labor's full support for the higher pay, job upgrading and union recognition law sought by the nearly 2,000 delegates. Joining in the conference were members of three other postal unions.

Projectionists Merge Locals In Philadelphia

Philadelphia—Movie projectionists here have climaxed six years of negotiations with the merger of white and Negro locals.

United in Motion Picture Machine Operators Local 307 are the former Local 307, with 255 white members, and the former Local 307-A, with 21 Negro members.

Present for the signing of the merger agreement was Pres. Richard F. Walsh of the Theatrical Stage Employes, an AFL-CIO vice president, who had taken an active part in the previous discussion.

The settlement opens the way for Negro projectionists to obtain, for the first time, jobs in central city motion picture theaters. They have been employed in the past exclusively in Negro neighborhood theaters.

Pres. Milton Bell of Local 307-A and other officers retired except for Business Agent Charles Polk, who becomes a member of the new eight-member executive board. Pres. Harry J. Abbott, an international vice president, continues as president of Local 307.

The merger talks were based on a set of guidelines drawn up in 1961 by Leon Higginbotham, now a federal judge. The unity pact was the second between Negro and white IATSE locals, the first having been in Miami, Fla.

4 Postal Unions Rally For Legislative Goals

Two thousand postal workers from all parts of the country took no chances on their letters to congressmen and senators going astray.

They came to Washington to deliver their messages in person—for higher pay, job upgrading, a union recognition law and other legislative goals.

Most of the delegates to the three-day legislative conference were from the Postal Clerks, national bargaining representative for 319,000 workers employed in 32,000 post offices. Others came from three smaller AFL-CIO affiliates—the Post Office Motor Vehicle Employes, the Post Office & General Service Maintenance Employes and the Special Delivery Messengers.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany keynoted the conference with a pledge of the labor movement's "full and complete support . . . for your entire legislative program."

Meany said the start made toward collective bargaining by the 1962 presidential executive order on union recognition had represented "a real breakthrough" but that experience has turned up shortcomings.

The AFL-CIO, he stressed, is firmly on record for legislation to bring collective bargaining in the government service closer to private industry standards.

Vice Pres. Humphrey and more than a score of senators and congressmen who addressed the opening daily rally were greeted with rhythmic applause, a band and standing ovations.

Home town delegations of postal workers visited every House and Senate office. Hundreds of delegates crowded into House Post Office & Civil Service Committee pay hearings as Pres. E. C. Hallbeck and Legislative Dir. Patrick J. Nilan testified for the union's program.

The union termed the 4.5 percent raise proposed by the Administration "totally inadequate" and urged an increase of at least 11 percent. For the past two years, the clerks stressed, federal workers have been confined to artificial "guideline" increases.

The conference was the second big postal worker rally Washington has seen in a month. Earlier a big Letter Carriers conference carried a similar message to Congress.

Hallbeck told the delegates that passing an adequate salary bill will be "a long, drawn-out process." But he predicted that it will be done and served notice that if the bill hits a snag—or a veto—"we'll be calling you back here."

Youth Appeal Stressed In Worker Education

Chicago—The problem of educating the rapidly increasing number of young workers entering the ranks of unions was explored in depth here at the annual AFL-CIO Education Directors Conference.

A parallel problem—the identification with organized labor of affluent union members who have moved from the cities to the suburbs—also was examined.

The two-day session drew about 50 labor educators from 40 international unions or state federations and 75 members of the University Labor Education Association from 25 colleges and universities.

Programs Described

Successful education programs for new members carried out by a half-dozen internationals were described at a session on current developments in workers' education. The discussion was led by AFL-CIO Education Dir. Walter G. Davis as chairman and a panel composed of Education Dir. Holgate Young of the Communications Workers, Pres. John Schmitt of the Wisconsin AFL-CIO and Assistant Dir. Jack McKenzie of the West Virginia University Institute for Labor Studies.

A session on the 1968 elections, with Assistant AFL-CIO Education Dir. George Guernsey as chairman, discussed the impact of issues on union members. Education Dir. Gus Tyler of the Ladies' Garment Workers said issues must be developed so as to appeal to younger and better-paid members and pointed out that newly-organized workers may provide new ideas and stimulus for labor movement needs.

Civic affairs Dir. Laroy H. Purdy of the Communications Worker listed issues turned up in polls the union has conducted among its members and explained how programs based on their findings were developed.

The potential for improvements in social security, retirement and disability programs and the extension of union contract health protection clauses based on comprehensive, prepaid programs, was found good by four panel members at a session of which AFL-CIO Assistant Education Dir. Otto Pragan was moderator.

Panel Speakers

Discussing the possibilities were Julius Rothman, AFL-CIO coordinator for anti-poverty programs; Social Security Administrator Robert Ball; Raymond Munts of the University of Wisconsin's Institute for Research on Poverty, a former AFL-CIO social security director, and Education Dir. John Brumm of the Machinists.

The results of the recently completed Appalachian Workers Training Program, co-sponsored by AFL-CIO central bodies in 10 states under an Office of Economic Opportunity grant, were reported.

The discussion was directed by Dir. Frank McCallister of the Labor Education Division at Roosevelt University. The panel was composed of Guernsey, Rothman, Assistant Dir. Robert Miller of the West Virginia University Institute of Labor Studies, and Thomas Cosgrove, labor liaison representative in the Office of Economic Opportunity.

Labor Urged to Take Active Role In Latin American Common Market

New Orleans, La.—The participation of organized labor in developing the Latin American common market is essential if the resulting benefits are to improve the lot of people, AFL-CIO Inter-American Rep. Andrew C. McLellan declared here.

He told graduates of the first course for Latin American labor economists sponsored by the American Institute for Free Labor Development that the prospects and opportunities for an active labor role in planning the common market are promising "and appear at this stage only to require our full and active participation."

Fifteen students, one a woman, from 10 Latin American nations were graduated after nine months of study at Loyola University here. The course was set up by the AIFLD to train economists who can help Latin American unions participate directly in the Alliance for Progress at the national development level. The director is Dr. Robert F. Smith, on leave from his post as professor of economics at Louisiana State University.

McLellan in his speech stressed the self-help nature of the Alliance for Progress, recalling that the late Pres. Kennedy emphasized it in his original proposals and that the presidents of Chile and Peru referred to it at the recent Punta del Este meeting.

He told the graduates they were the beginning of Latin American labor's "own self-help effort" at three levels:

- Making the labor movement "more powerful and more professional" at the bargaining table.
- Bringing unions into the complex of economic planning at national and international levels.
- Strengthening the social and political foundations for economic progress and enhancing human well-being in Latin America.

"We must emphasize in no uncertain terms," McLellan said, "that it is precisely the broad masses of underprivileged people that the Alliance is designed to help.

"It would be both ironic and counter-productive if workers and farmers, through their free unions, were not given a strong voice in their own economic and social development programs."

Albert Brown, director of the Office of Institutional Development, Latin American Bureau, in the Agency for Intl. Development, also spoke.

NLRB Names Deputy Executive Secretary

The National Labor Relations Board named Howard W. Kleeb, veteran of 30 years of NLRB service, to the new post of deputy executive secretary to help process the NLRB's increasing business. Kleeb, 53, has been associate executive secretary since 1960.

Handicapped Award Named for Fogarty

The Public Personnel Award of the President's Committee on Employment of the Handicapped has been renamed in honor of the late Rep. John E. Fogarty (D-R.I.) in recognition of his work on behalf of the disabled. The award goes to a public employe who has done outstanding work in encouraging employment of the handicapped.

Rent Subsidy Killed, Model Cities Slashed

With applications from problem-pressed cities far exceeding the funds available, a strong effort is expected in the Senate to increase the appropriation closer to the budget level.

The model cities program requires cities to draw up comprehensive plans to rehabilitate entire neighborhoods—including, in addition to housing, improvements in transportation, health services, recreation, child care and other facilities. Federal funds for most parts of these programs are available under existing laws on a matching grant basis—requiring cities, counties or states to put up a large part of the money. Communities accepted for the model cities program would be eligible for additional funds to cover 80 percent of the cost of matching grants.

For this portion of the program, Johnson asked $400 million, but the Appropriations Committee hacked that down to $150 million.

The President also asked that $125 million in urban renewal funds be earmarked for the model cities program the first year, and an equal amount in the second year. The Appropriations Committee dropped the second year request and allocated $75 million for the first year.

While the cuts were sufficient to save the program from being killed on the House floor, not even heavy budget slashes could salvage the rent subsidy program.

$40 Million Sought

The President had sought $40 million to carry on an attempt to ease some of the problems of public housing by contracting with non-profit organizations to provide modest apartments for families who agreed to pay one-fourth of their income for rent, with the government picking up the difference. The Appropriations Committee knocked the figure down to $10 million, but this failed to appease all-out opponents of the program.

Next on the House agenda is another major test of the power of the conservative coalition in the 90th Congress—a showdown on the elementary and secondary school aid bill.

Labor, educators and civil rights groups are backing the Administration's efforts to prevent the scrapping of the highly-successful, two-year-old school aid program.

The Republican leadership is lined up behind a bill by Rep. Albert H. Quie (R-Minn.) which would substitute handouts of federal funds to states, with few controls over where and how the money is to be spent.

The present program earmarks federal money for specific purposes, mostly to improve the educational opportunities of children from poor families. Part of the funds are designed to help all poor children, whether they attend public or parochial schools, through textbooks, community educational centers and special public school classes available to all groups.

Civil Rights Issue

The Quie "states' rights" approach is being backed by a number of southern congressmen who see it as a way around federal school desegregation guidelines. Some in the Dixie bloc are bargaining with both sides, looking for civil rights concessions.

An "urgent memo" by the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights warns that a series of amendments expected to be offered on the House floor "are meant to halt school desegregation by hacking away at Title VI of the Civil Rights Act, the section that prohibits discrimination in federally-assisted programs."

Two Republican members of the House Education & Labor Committee lined up with the Administration on the education bill, declaring that school aid "should not be subject to partisan politics."

Rep. Alphonzo Bell (R-Calif.) and Rep. Ogden R. Reid (R-N.Y.) said the Quie substitute bill doesn't put federal money where it is most needed—"in our poor rural areas in the South and our large urban centers in the North."

Senate Approves Plan For Public TV Network

The Senate took a big first step to launch a nationwide educational television and radio network, supported in part by government funds but free of government control.

It passed by a one-sided voice vote an Administration bill establishing a non-profit Corporation for Public Broadcasting that would draw up plans for high quality programming and recommend a long-range financing plan. The bill authorizes $9 million in "seed money" for the corporation and an additional $10.5 million in grants for construction of educational television and radio facilities over the next year.

The AFL-CIO had strongly supported the bill in Senate testimony, declaring that Americans should be able to see and hear programs "that are selling nothing but their own content; programs that can experiment, that can innovate, without fear that one bad guess will cause an angry sponsor to put them off the air."

Nine of the 15 directors of the new corporation would be named by the President and confirmed by the Senate. These nine would then name the other six. The Senate added an amendment requiring that at least three of the 15 directors be associated with educational television or radio stations.

The legislation, which still requires House approval, was termed "historic" by Sen. John O. Pastore (D-R.I.), its floor manager.

The chief attack on the measure came from Sen. Strom Thurmond (R-S.C.), who charged that a government-aided educational network could be used to influence legislation. "Anyone who truly loves liberty must oppose this bill," he declared.

Thurmond's warnings found little support among his colleagues, however. Democrats and Republicans joined in speaking for the bill. Sen. Hugh Scott (R-Pa.) told the Senate the legislation is needed because much of commercial television fare "ranges from the mediocre to the moronic. Its god is Mammon."

Barbados Joins ILO As 119th Nation

Geneva—Membership in the Intl. Labor Organization was raised to 119 nations when Barbados, which joined the United Nations in December, formally accepted the ILO's obligations.

SEVENTIETH ANNIVERSARY celebration of the Jewish Daily Forward, labor-oriented Yiddish newspaper, brought many admirers to New York's Philharmonic Hall for plaudits and a concert. Speakers included (left to right) Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the Clothing Workers; Arthur J. Goldberg, U.S. representative to the UN and former secretary of labor, shown with Mrs. Goldberg, and Honorary Pres. David Dubinsky of the Ladies' Garment Workers.

Ordman Renamed As NLRB Counsel

Pres. Johnson has reappointed Arnold Ordman as general counsel of the National Labor Relations Board following expiration of his term, May 14, the White House announced. The appointment is subject to Senate confirmation.

Ordman is a career NLRB employe with 21 years of service in the general counsel's office, as a trial examiner, chief counsel to board Chairman Frank W. McCulloch, and general counsel since 1963.

Full Funding Sought For Foreign Aid

Intl. Development and the AFL-CIO have been among the most successful parts of the foreign aid program, Biemiller said, urging the committee to direct AID to allocate "a larger share of its technical assistance funds for labor projects."

He cited specifically the accomplishments of the American Institute for Free Labor Development and the African-American Labor Center.

The African-American center, established by the AFL-CIO in 1965, is helping workers in 13 nations, he noted. Its projects include job training and education for workers, medical clinics, cooperatives and housing.

The AIFLD program in Latin America has provided educational courses in trade unionism for thousands of workers—from evening classes to advanced graduate levels. Its social projects have ranged from workers' banks to housing developments to rural community service centers.

Biemiller said the AFL-CIO strongly supports long-term authorization for foreign aid programs and backs "at least" the two-year funding requested by the President.

He expressed labor's support for the Administration's proposal to establish a National Advisory Committee on Self Help, with representation from all segments of the public, including labor.

Overall, Biemiller said, "the Administration's foreign aid proposals appear very sound" and American unions "are ready to do our part in the aid program."

Labor Joins Tribute To Jewish Forward

New York—Leaders of apparel trade unions joined Arthur J. Goldberg, U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, and Avraham Harman, Israeli ambassador to the United States, in saluting the Jewish Daily Forward on its 70th anniversary.

The labor-oriented Yiddish daily celebrated the occasion with a meeting and concert in Philharmonic Hall. It also published a special edition in which scores of labor organizations expressed their good wishes and their sense of fraternity with the paper.

Addressing the overflow gathering, in addition to Goldberg and Harman, were Honorary Pres. David Dubinsky and Pres. Louis Stulberg, of the Ladies' Garment Workers; Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the Clothing Workers, and Pres. Alex Rose of the Hat Workers.

Other speakers included Dr. S. Silverberg, president of the Forward Association, publishers of the paper; Pres. Israel Breslau of the Workmen's Circle, a fraternal organization of Jewish labor, and Joseph Mlotek, secretary of the anniversary committee. Adolph Held, manager of the Forward, was chairman of the event.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany sent a message hailing the Forward for "70 years of service to America's social progress." On behalf of more than 14 million members of AFL-CIO unions, he wished the paper "all the best in continuing your meaningful service to the advancement of human freedom and social justice."

From its first day on the newsstands, Meany noted, the Forward had "voiced the hopes and aspirations of more Americans by choice than any other daily" in the land. He said the paper has been a "tireless champion of trade unionism" as the most effective instrument for the "protection of those who need protection most" and the promotion of the greatest good for the greatest number.

Goldberg was introduced by Dubinsky as a true son of labor, one who served the labor movement, achieved eminence in it and articulated its ideals and high aspirations.

Justice Stressed

Goldberg expressed his regard for the Forward and his sense of identification with the causes and the readers it has served over the years. In a reference to his post as head of the U.S. delegation to the UN, he declared that the greatest threat to world peace is not the warlike machinations of one sovereign nation or another, but "those ancient foes of all mankind: corruption, injustice, poverty, degradation, lack of dignity."

"If we are to have peace, we must have just societies; if we do not have just societies, we will not have world peace," he said.

Harman, speaking in Yiddish, which he said he learned as a foreign tongue in Jerusalem, pointed out to the audience that the Forward's anniversary celebration occurred on the eve of the 19th anniversary of the proclamation of Israel's sovereignty as a nation. One event might not have occurred without the other, he remarked.

A highlight of the celebration was a concert featuring Isaac Perlman, Israeli violin virtuoso; Jan Peerce, Metropolitan Opera tenor; Sidor Belarsky, baritone, and Miriam Kressyn, soprano. To climax the program, the soloists joined the massed choruses of the Workmen's Circle for the "Partisan Hymn," sung by Jewish underground fighters in uprisings against the Nazis.

Greek Suppression Of Unions Charged

Geneva—The military dictatorship in Greece was charged with violation of trade union rights in a complaint filed with the Intl. Labor Organization by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

The ICFTU accused the perpetrators of the coup with topping a list of banned organizations with the trade unions and with summarily arresting more than 6,000 individuals, including a number of union officials and members. Strikes have been outlawed.

The labor body earlier had asked the Organization for Economic Cooperation & Development, the Council of Europe and the European Economic Community to suspend relations with Greece until democracy is fully restored and political prisoners have been freed.

Labor Hits Strike Bar In Rail Bill

By Eugene A. Kelly

The AFL-CIO is "wholly opposed" to government coercion of railroad workers in the interests of management, two Federation witnesses told the Senate Labor subcommittee and the House Commerce Committee at separate hearings on an Administration bill prohibiting a strike by 137,000 shopcraft workers before Jan. 1, 1969.

Reiterating the objection of AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and the Executive Council that the President's legislative proposal could terminate in compulsory arbitration, Legislative Dir. Andrew Biemiller said the Johnson plan, calling for mediation, collective bargaining and more hearings before a special board "does not disguise or sugarcoat the fact that the rail unions are forbidden to strike" and, if no agreement is reached, the board will hand down a legally binding settlement.

"If that isn't compulsory arbitration we don't know what the words mean," said Biemiller, who was accompanied by Thomas E. Harris, associate general counsel for the AFL-CIO.

With compulsion thus "hovering on the horizon," Biemiller testified, "there is little reason to think that the carriers will engage in any real collective bargaining in the meanwhile." Once the special board makes a "determination" there will be "not even a pretense of bargaining by the carriers," he predicted.

The Senate hearings ended after

EVERY SEAT in New York's Madison Square Garden was filled and thousands of union members overflowed into the streets at a rally protesting a harsh new state law barring public employe strikes and imposing punitive fines of up to $10,000 for each day of a strike. The protest was sponsored by the Transport Workers, the Teachers, and the State, County & Municipal Employes. (Story, Page 8.)

For 900,000 Workers:

Wage Settlements Average 5% in '67

Wage increases negotiated by unions during the first quarter of 1967 averaged 5 percent for more than 900,000 workers—a substantially higher increase for three times more workers than in the comparable quarter of 1966, the Dept. of Labor's Bureau of Labor Statistics reported.

The BLS study gave the value of wage increases as 14.5 cents an hour for the first year of contracts negotiated during the period. The comparable figure was 10 cents an hour or 3.7 percent a year ago.

The latest BLS report on major wage developments deals only with contract settlements negotiated by unions for workers in units of 1,000 or more. It shows:

- A median wage and fringe benefit increase of 4.9 percent a year, compared with 4.5 percent in 1966, using actual timing of changes over the full term of the contracts.
- A median first-year wage increase of 5 percent, compared with the 4.8 percent increase negotiated in 1966.
- Wage increases during the entire life of the contract averaged 5 percent a year, compared with 3 percent during 1966.

In manufacturing industries, first-year wage increases averaged 5.8 percent and life-of-the-contract wage hikes 4.1 percent, primarily because some apparel settlements emphasized first-year increases, the study showed.

In nonmanufacturing fields, wage hikes averaged 5 percent for the first contract year and 14.5 cents an hour as the median figure.

Unions Take Lead Role In New Training Plans

Unions will take a leading role in two large-scale training programs to provide schooling and new job skills for both employed and unemployed workers.

In one program, 1,600 members of the Steelworkers will receive adult basic education at mills of seven cooperating companies. The other program is designed to give schooling and job training to 3,000 largely unemployed persons under a program supervised by the AFL-CIO Appalachian Council in 11 states.

Labor Sec. H. Willard Wirtz and Health, Education & Welfare Sec. John W. Gardner announced the programs, which will be financed by grants totaling about $2.5 million in federal training funds.

More than 7,700 AFL-CIO local unions in the Appalachian states will work with employers to find job opportunities for disadvantaged persons under the training program financed by a $1.5 million grant.

The council, established by the Appalachia Conference in 1964, is organizing a staff of 18 job-developer coordinators with headquarters in Charleston, W. Va. The staff will canvass the 11-state area for recruits.

About 500 trainees each will be sought in Ohio and Pennsylvania; 350 in Alabama; 300 each

GOP Plan Beaten But Bill Weakened

By David L. Perlman

An amendment-riddled federal aid to education bill passed the House, 294-122, and school aid supporters looked to the Senate to patch up some of the holes.

Administration forces, aided by some GOP votes, beat back the principal attack on the bill. This was an amendment by Rep. Albert H. Quie (R-Minn.) which would have abolished direct federal aid to school districts for programs to upgrade the education of children from low-income families. Instead, federal money would have been handed over to the states with little control over how and where it should be spent.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany wrote all House members before the vote that "the Quie amendment endangers the entire concept of federal aid to education as worked out —after 20 years of effort—in the landmark Elementary & Secondary Education Act of 1965."

The Quie amendment was easily beaten on a 197-168 teller vote. But that was almost the only victory for supporters of the Administration bill.

A series of amendments sponsored by Rep. Edith Green (D-Ore.) applied the Quie "states' rights" approach to other sections of the school aid package.

The House adopted her "mini-Quie" amendment turning over the entire program of developing new teaching techniques—and carrying 15 percent of the federal school aid funds—to the states.

This amendment was adopted, 181-124, despite protests such as that of Rep. Wayne Hays (D-Ohio), who said: "We have federal aid to education because the states haven't done the job. Now you want to

Million Get Living Cost Pay Boost

More than one million workers in the auto and farm equipment industries will receive cost-of-living wage increases of about 2 cents an hour as a result of a three-tenths of 1 percent increase in the consumer price index for April.

The Labor Dept. announced the index had reached 115.3 percent of the 1957-59 average as services continued to move upward cancelling out a drop in food prices. For April, the index was 2.5 percent higher than a year ago.

The department issued also a report showing that real weekly earnings of workers with three dependents on non-farm payrolls were below the level of April 1966 although actual dollar earnings were up slightly last month. The report has been expanded to cover 44 million workers as compared with earlier measurements of about 14 million.

In April 1967 a typical worker with three dependents had after-

ICFTU Summons UN To Keep Mideast Peace

The Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions called on the United Nations to "assume its full responsibility in carrying out its peace-keeping functions" in the Middle East.

The free world labor organization emphasized that a solution of Arab-Israeli relations "requires guarantees for the independence and inviolability of the territory of Middle Eastern nations."

As an immediate step the ICFTU appealed to all governments "to withdraw their armed forces from confrontation positions."

The ICFTU statement on the Middle East crisis came as the Intl. Transportworkers Federation had under consideration a worldwide boycott of loading and operating ships carrying cargo for Egyptian or Syrian ports.

The boycott approach was sounded in the U.S. by the National Maritime Union and the Intl. Longshoremen's Association which pledged action if Egypt attempted to implement its threat to prevent ships headed for the Israeli port of Elath from using the Gulf of Aqaba. This gulf, said NMU Pres. Joseph Curran, is in international waters and free maritime workers cannot tolerate Nasser's threat to block free passage.

The AFL-CIO Maritime Trades Dept. meanwhile wired Pres. Johnson, who has forcefully opposed the Egyptian blockade, "its full support and cooperation in your quest

Six-Site Rally Spurs '67 Campaign For Stronger Social Security Law

Minneapolis—A citywide rally for improved social security benefits was not only on the move here May 20—most of the time it was virtually at a gallop.

That is literally as well as figuratively correct. Because the rally was held at six—not one, but six different sites, all at the same time.

Reason for the multi-site location was two-fold:

- A meeting place large enough and conveniently located for a large gathering simply was not available.
- Most of the senior citizens, who constituted the bulk of the attendance at all the rally sites, preferred locations near their homes.

But the principal speakers who came here for the rally solved the problem neatly. Each managed to appear at three different rally sites within the space of two hours, with the aid of experienced car drivers and split-second timing.

Dividing the speaking assignments were Bert Seidman, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security, and Thomas Parrott, assistant to the director of the Social Security Administration.

Rep. Donald Fraser (D-Minn.), who is a sponsor of social security legislation, also was able to appear at three of the rally locations, and an administrative assistant staged audio-visual presentations at the other three locations.

Seidman and other speakers emphasized the importance of demonstrating strong public support in order to enact meaningful increases in social security benefits during the current session of congress.

"What is going to be done in Congress will depend to a large extent on how we feel about it back home, and what we do about expressing the way we feel," Seidman declared.

"Our voices must be heard."

Those attending the rallies, co-sponsored by the Minnesota state AFL-CIO and the Community Services Committee of the Minneapolis AFL-CIO Central Labor Council, also were informed of what Pres. Johnson's proposals for a 20 percent increase in social security benefits would mean in terms of dollars and cents each month to retired individuals.

$76 Minimum

For example, they were told the 20 percent average increase proposed would mean an actual increase of 59 percent more a month for those now receiving the lowest benefits. It would raise the present minimum payment of $44 for an individual to $76, and the current income of couples now receiving only $66 a month would go to $105.

Another important point emphasized repeatedly by the various speakers was the fact that improved social security benefits are important to Americans of all ages—not just those 65 or over. Cited as an example was the fact that 25 percent of those now drawing benefits are not on retirement, but are widows, orphans and the disabled.

"The so-called poverty level of $1,500 a year for a single person and $1,900 annually for a couple is really a sub-poverty line," Seidman declared. He said in 1965 some five million senior citizens were living "below the sub-poverty line."

Plate Printers Cite Job Cuts In Automation

New York—The Plate Printers, Die Stampers & Engravers will activate local organizing committees to overcome a membership decline caused by automated processes in the bank note industry, delegates to the biennial convention decided here.

Wages and working conditions continue to improve but the time has come to increase membership by a vigorous campaign in commercial shops of the industry, delegates from 12 locals in the United States and Canada decided. Local committees will do the work with the help of the international officers and the aid of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Organization when possible, it was agreed.

Officers Re-Elected

The convention re-elected Pres. Constantine Trochanis and Sec.-Treas. Walter J. Smith of the New York local, and First Vice Pres. Ben Mazza of New Jersey. Keith Carley of Ottawa, Ont., was elected vice president for Canada.

Trochanis reported substantial wage increases won by bargaining committees since the last convention.

Smith said automated processes continue to boost production while eliminating jobs. Delegates from the Washington, D.C. local reported that the federal Bureau of Engraving and Printing produces the same volume of work with 156 men that it formerly did in 1952 with 600. The difference is due to automation, they said.

Delegates selected Ottawa as the 1969 convention city.

Rubber Union to Picket Tire Companies' Stores

Akron, O.—The Rubber Workers are moving their picket lines from the factories to the stores.

URW Pres. Peter Bommarito said union members will walk in front of company stores and dealers where products made by Firestone, Uniroyal and B. F. Goodrich are sold. The URW has been on strike against the three companies since Apr. 20.

Bommarito said the pickets will carry signs informing prospective customers that the union is on strike against the rubber companies seeking better wages and working conditions, and asking them not to buy.

The picketing was to start in Detroit, site of major Uniroyal operations, and Pottstown, Pa., where Firestone has a plant.

Bommarito has accused the companies of "sitting on their hands' at the bargaining tables.

AFL-CIO Tells Congress:

Terms of Rail Bill Spell Compulsion

Biemiller and Harris answered questions of Labor subcommittee members. Chairman Ralph Yarborough (D-Tex.) set May 30 as the final date for submitting amendments or statements.

The House Commerce committee may hear more witnesses on the Johnson proposal to head off a strike, now set for June 19, of the mechanics who keep rail shops and equipment running—members of the Railway Carmen, Machinists, Sheet Metal Workers, Boilermakers & Blacksmiths, Firemen & Oilers and the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

The shopcraft unions have been trying since May 17, 1966, to get better wages and working conditions, including an additional raise to bring highly skilled workers to the level of those doing similar work outside the rail shops. The unions set two strike deadlines when negotiations bogged down and the machinery of the Railway Labor Act provided no settlement.

Both deadlines were extended by Congress and, when both labor and management voted not to accept the recommendations of a special Presidential panel, the Administration asked Congress for legislation providing another special board to mediate, with a strike prohibited before Jan. 1, 1969.

Other Opponents

For the unions, spokesmen spelled out labor's reasons for opposing "mediation to finality," as the Johnson proposal has been called by Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz and others.

Lester Schoene, counsel for the Railway Labor Executives Association, representing 22 unions and the AFL-CIO Railway Employes' Dept., told the House committee that government seizure of the railroads while negotiations continue would represent a more even-handed approach than penalizing the unions alone.

IAM Vice Pres. Joseph W. Ramsey, speaking for the shopcrafts, said the Administration bill would "rob railroad employes of their right to strike" but "imposes no penalty of any kind on the corporations which have refused our requests for better pay and conditions."

RLEA Chairman George E. Leighty, president of the rail telegraphers' union, sent a detailed explanation to Congress of the union plan to "transport all rail shipments essential to our nation's military effort, and the public health, in the event of a strike." Administration spokesmen said the plan is "unworkable."

Three members of the House committee have proposed a plan adding federal seizure of the railroads to the Johnson formula. Representatives John E. Moss (D-Calif.), John D. Dingell (D-Mich.) and Brock Adams (D-Wash.) would provide that, if the two sides fail to agree on contract terms after 90 days, the President could seize rail properties while putting special panel terms and a no-strike injunction into effect.

In questioning Biemiller after his House testimony, none of the committee members indicated outright support of the Administration proposal.

"There is no doubt in anyone's mind here that this is anything other than compulsory arbitration," declared Rep. Samuel L. Devine (R-Ohio). "Probably many members on both sides of the aisle feel that nothing will come out of this committee and if Congress got out of this matter, some settlement might come."

Committee Chairman Harley O. Staggers (D-W.Va.) agreed, saying, "I'm convinced that by sitting down both parties can settle this dispute. There has not been collective bargaining in good faith and until there is I don't know what this committee can achieve with a one-shot solution. The Railway Labor Act has worked and there is no use to throw it out."

Biemiller told the Yarborough committee that the AFL-CIO believes the Administration arbitration plan is "one-sided and unworkable." As long as compulsory arbitration seems possible, he said, the employers will not bargain with the unions in any real sense. He continued:

"We urge that Congress reject this one-sided proposal, so destructive of collective bargaining, and authorize the government to seize the railroads. And we ask for real, not token seizure."

Rail operating profits should be impounded, Biemiller advised, and any compensation paid should take into account that, but for seizure, the railroads would not have been operating.

"We are confident that if the carriers were faced with legislation which would be unpalatable to them too, there would be real bargaining and a quick settlement," he testified.

Questionnaire Seeks Labor Education Data

Unions have been asked to report their labor education activities in a questionnaire now being circulated as part of a national survey by the National Institute of Labor Education, financed by a grant from the U.S. Office of Education.

The survey is the first attempt to collect full information on union educational activity, according to Lawrence Rogin, study director for NILE. Partial surveys of the past were incomplete and the information is out of date, Rogin said.

Dir. Walter G. Davis of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education said he hopes all federation affiliates will cooperate by returning completed questionnaires promptly. He pointed out that an increasing number of unions have started educational programs while others have expanded or changed their emphasis.

Information on the education activities of affiliated unions will, Davis said, increase the effectiveness of his department by providing needed information and correlating it with the work of universities.

The questionnaires by NILE seek information on union programs aimed at improving the knowledge or skills of union members, or at helping them function more effectively in civic, economic and cultural fields, Rogin said, adding: "The survey does not include training in job skills such as apprenticeship or the upgrading of skilled workers."

Each union, state central body and major local central body will be asked to fill in a questionnaire adapted to its activities.

42,000 Win Pay Hike In Ladies Coat Pact

New York—A new three-year contract providing substantial wage and fringe benefits for 42,000 workers in the women's coat and suit industry has been ratified by the Ladies' Garment Workers. It is designed, negotiators said, to keep good workers in the industry and attract new workers.

Shop chairmen from 16 ILGWU locals in the East voted unanimously to approve the agreement which boosts wages 15 percent in two annual steps. It also provides Columbus Day as an eighth paid holiday and improves health and welfare benefits, including a new allowance of $15 a day for families with small children confined in a hospital. Higher premium pay is provided for all piece workers.

The first pay hike of 10 percent becomes effective June 5, and the second of 5 percent will be paid a year later, Henoch Mendelsund, general manager of the New York Cloak Joint Board, told shop chairmen and executive board members at a ratification meeting.

Both Mendelsund and ILGWU Pres. Louis Stulberg urged approval of the settlement offer. Mendelsund said it would "lift up cloak-and-suit labor" and bring standards closer to the mainstream of workers in U.S. manufacturing industries.

Two new provisions are aimed at keeping skilled workers in the industry and attracting others, the union said.

One is a special annual payment of 2 percent of a worker's yearly earnings for persons employed three years or more in the same shop.

The other establishes a new labor-management council which will carry on a continuous study of the industry's problems during the life of the agreement.

Mendelsund said the new council will deal with such matters as modernization of plant and industry operations; the promotion of the coat-and-suit industry in cooperation with New York City and other government agencies; upgrading of workers' skills, and recruitment of new workers.

The agreement is with employer members of the New York Coat & Suit Association, the Children's Coat Association and the American Coat & Suit Manufacturer's Association in this area, upstate New York, New Jersey, Connecticut and the Philadelphia area.

Unions Score Failure On Merchant Marine

The government's failure to develop a policy for revitalizing the U.S. merchant marine came under strong fire from two AFL-CIO Executive Council members at a day-long seminar held here by the federation's Maritime Trades Dept.

The two union leaders—Paul Hall, president of the Seafarers and head of the 5.5-million-member MTD, and Hunter P. Wharton, president of the Operating Engineers — called for complete independence for the Maritime Administration and a "build-American" ship construction program as key elements in closing what the MTD called "the maritime gap."

Hall said it was a "disgrace" that the Administration had yet to come up with an "acceptable" maritime program, and said this failure to act was a "paradox" in view of the President's Maritime Day proclamation which emphasized that the merchant marine is vital to the nation's economy and its crucial national defense effort.

He promised that the department will "keep up the steam" behind its bipartisan drive on Capitol Hill to hammer out a maritime program that would lift the U.S. out of its present sixth rank in terms of shipping and its position as 14th among 15 major powers in terms of shipbuilding.

Wharton told the several hundred labor, management and government officials at the conference that the U.S. is sending its men to war in Viet Nam in World War II ships that are far from safe.

"We send our men to meet and counter naked aggression in the rusty remains of the hastily built fleet we acquired at enormous expense to meet a similar aggression more than 20 years ago," the Operating Engineers president declared. He added:

"What we must have is a new, more vigorous, future-oriented program for the revitalization of our merchant fleet. Certainly the Administration has proposed nothing like this to Congress, in spite of the fact that large segments of the industry — both management and labor — have urged action to reverse the present decline of our merchant fleet."

Massachusetts Gov. John A. Volpe, one of the key speakers at the MTD seminar, said that, over the years, the U.S. has vacillated between "building up the merchant marine when war threatens and almost completely neglecting it during peacetime."

The governor sharply challenged Administration proposals to build some U.S.-flag merchant vessels in foreign yards. He warned that, under such a situation, the U.S. would be "in serious trouble in the event of a major crisis" because essential domestic shipbuilding facilities would have been lost under a build-abroad program.

HUGH E. MULLIGAN is the new president of the Heat and Frost Insulators & Asbestos Workers Union succeeding C. W. Sickles, who has retired. Mulligan, vice president of the union for 35 years and a long-time business agent of Local 17 in Chicago, was elected by the union's general executive board. Sickles was named president emeritus.

in Maryland and West Virginia; 200 each in Kentucky, Tennessee and Virginia; and 150 each in Georgia, North Carolina and South Carolina.

Chairman Miles C. Stanley of the AFL-CIO Appalachian Council will serve the project as fiscal control officer under the direction of an administrator to be selected from among council officers. Stanley is president of the West Virginia AFL-CIO and formerly served as assistant to Federation Pres. George Meany.

Wirtz said the year-long training program will seek to provide job skills to the disadvantaged — the older worker, the long-term unemployed, the undereducated, the draft rejectees, and the soon-to-be-released inmate of a penal institution.

Half of the trainees will be welfare recipients and members of the Job Corps and the Neighborhood Youth Corps.

The program "seeks to help persons hampered by the most severe unemployment problems," Wirtz explained. "It seeks to give give them a fresh start in life."

The program will give from four to 26 weeks of job training per enrollee. Training costs will be not more than $25 a week per person, with both on-the-job and in-school training to be provided.

The Labor Dept. has earmarked $150,000 for schooling costs and an additional $110,000 for subsistence allowances for trainees in class.

The education and on-the-job training portions of the project will be administered by the Office of Vocational Education of the Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare, and by the Bureau of Apprenticeship and Training in the Labor Dept.

The program for upgrading USWA members involves plants in Chicago and Baltimore, where seven of the 10 cooperating steel firms have facilities—Inland Steel, National Steel, Republic Steel, Youngstown Sheet & Tube & U.S. Steel, in Chicago; the Armco Co., East Baltimore, Md., and Bethlehem Steel Corp., Sparrows Point, Md.

The program, involving about $1 million in federal training funds, grew out of the joint study provided for in the 1965 contract settlement between the union and the companies.

HEW Under Sec. Wilbur J. Cohen and Dr. Cleo W. Blackburn, executive director of the Board for Fundamental Education, which will conduct the training, signed the 14-month pilot training agreement. USWA Pres. I. W. Abel and R. Conrad Cooper, representing the steel firms, agreed to the terms.

By late summer, several hundred workers will be attending classes in the mills to improve their communications and mathematics skills and prepare themselves for better jobs. Each worker will receive up to six hours of classroom instruction a week for a total of at least 150 hours.

The program, if successful, will be extended to other steel plants and other industries, Cohen said. The students will be selected by joint committees in each plant.

Hoffmann Gets Steelworkers Political Post

Pittsburgh—Pres. I. W. Abel of the Steelworkers announced the appointment of Frank N. Hoffmann as the union's political action director as part of a staff reorganization aimed at "broadening the political action base and activities" of the USWA.

"Hoffmann has served ably for many years as legislative director," Abel said. "We are asking him to assume a new post so that his talent may be applied to the urgent task of political action" because it is "vital to the best interests of the membership and the public."

In other changes, Washington Legislative Rep. Harold Edwards was assigned to Tulsa, Okla., as a political action representative under Hoffmann, and Ray Warwick of the public relations staff to Birmingham, Ala., where he will continue to serve as southern regional editor of Steel Labor, the union's newspaper.

John J. Sheehan, veteran USWA legislative representative in Washington, will succeed Hoffmann as legislative director. Legislative Representatives Joseph McDonald and Mello Fish will continue in their same positions under Sheehan.

Meyer Bernstein will continue in the Washington office as international affairs director, and James C. O'Brien as executive secretary of the union's Senior Citizens Committee, Abel said.

Earlier it was announced that Frank Fernbach, who had been AFL-CIO assistant research director, will serve in the USWA Washington office as Abel's assistant for special projects.

Equity Asks Color-Blind Casting Policy

New York—Actors' Equity has called on all producers and casting directors to end "rank discrimination" against Negro actors and to comply with the anti-bias provisions of union contracts.

The union's council unanimously adopted a strongly worded statement reiterating its demands for "equal opportunity in the theatre" and pinpointing the discrimination as stemming from refusal to consider Negro actors for roles not specifically identified as Negro characters in the script.

The Equity statement asserted that producers and casting directors "have no difficulty whatsoever when it comes to the casting of such an actor as Jeff Chandler as an American Indian or Jeanne Crain as a Negro girl in the movie 'Pinky', or Lenore Ulric as the Negro woman in 'Lulu Belle'."

But Negro and other minority group members' employment is limited to "parts so designated," the union said.

The council declared that it "cannot agree with the thinking that the problem is mainly one for the playwright. Because the manuscript does not designate the character as 'Negro' or 'Chinese' does not mean that actors of these backgrounds cannot be considered."

The union conceded that "where race, color or nationality is thematically important to the play, this fact must be considered in casting."

Noting that its anti-discrimination clauses have existed for five years or more and that a standing committee of the union—the Ethnic Minorities Committee — has been working on the problem, the council said it was sending copies of the statement to all producers and casting directors.

"Basically," the statement said, "we are asking for fair consideration of all actors and that certain segments of our membership not be discriminated against in the employment of those under the jurisdiction of Actors' Equity Association."

Real Earnings Slip from '66 As Prices Rise

tax earnings of $89.15 a week compared with $87.53 in April 1966. In real purchasing terms, however, he had $77.32 this April compared to 77.80 a year before.

Arthur M. Ross, commissioner of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, said the overall trend in consumer prices this year was "more moderate" than during 1966. In January he had forecast a rise of about 2.5 percent for 1967 compared to 3.3 percent last year.

Medical Costs Up

Medical care services in April were up five-tenths of one percent and had zoomed 9.3 percent above the April 1966 level. Clothing, home furnishings and furniture also rose while prices for food, new cars and appliances dropped slightly. Ross said that nearly two-thirds of the increase in the overall index has been the result of higher service charges.

He said that preliminary figures for the May wholesale price index showed increases coming in contrast to a drop in such prices in April. He anticipated a rise in farm products and foods in the wholesale area.

The Naysayers

AT THE BEGINNING of the 90th Congress House Republican leaders proclaimed that with their increased strength in the House they would offer "constructive alternatives" to Democratic proposals and forego the negative and obstructionist role of simply defeating Administration programs.

This new policy was put to the test in the House for the first time on further appropriations for the model cities and rent supplement programs. With a few honorable exceptions the Republicans voted "nay." There were no "constructive alternatives."

Elsewhere in this issue of the News are the rollcall votes on these basic issues of national programs for rebuilding the cities and helping low-income groups obtain better housing.

On the vote to expand in a very limited form the rent supplements program, only 12 Republicans went on record for the new funds. There were 163 Republicans and 69 Democrats, mostly from the South, in favor of scuttling the program.

On the modest expansion of the model cities program, 35 Republicans voted to save the legislation in its sharply reduced form. There were 141 Republican votes to kill it, combined with 52 Democratic votes—again mostly from the South.

AT THE SAME TIME that House Republicans voted overwhelmingly to gut the first federal program that promises a comprehensive attack on urban problems, the GOP National Committee is energetically involved in a campaign to build the party's strength in the big cities where its vote has been traditionally weak.

House Republican Leader Gerald Ford, who proclaimed the new Republican era of "constructive alternatives" at the beginning of the session and recently announced that the GOP would no longer join the Southern Dixiecrats in coalition against Administration programs, found himself in alliance with the Dixiecrats on killing off the model cities and rent supplement programs.

Ford had declared with great firmness that the GOP was more interested in winning new House seats in the South and elsewhere in the 1968 elections than a "few legislative victories" now. But at the first testing the coalition voted against rent supplements and came within a few votes of destroying the model cities program.

AS TO THE WHY and wherefore of the GOP opposition to the rent supplement program, the background is even stranger. As Tom Wicker of the New York Times pointed out, there is already in effect a "rent certificates" program devised by Republican Rep. William Widnall of New Jersey.

The Republican rent certificates, Wicker notes, enable poor families living in rehabilitated housing to have part of their rent paid by the government. The Democratic rent supplements would have paid part of the cost of privately built new housing to enable private landlords to charge lower rents for the poor.

Asks Wicker: "Which of these more nearly encourages private enterprise and which more directly subsidizes poor people themselves?"

It is fairly obvious that the House GOP leadership was not interested in the answer to the housing problem or the plight of the cities, but in establishing their plain and simple opposition to Administration programs—an approach geared to voting "no" rather than searching for viable alternatives.

'National Solutions' Needed:

Tax-Sharing Proposal Assailed As Threat to Federal Principle

The following is excerpted from the remarks of Andrew J. Biemiller, director, AFL-CIO Dept. of Legislation, at a debate during the annual meeting of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce on proposals for returning federally raised revenues to the states.

STATE AND LOCAL GOVERNMENTS need more money. They need more money than they are now raising through their own tax systems. Some of them need more money than they could reasonably be expected to raise on their own, even if they adopted rational tax structures—as very few of them have done.

Also, in normal times, the federal tax system, based upon the graduated income tax, tends to build up surpluses. Therefore, in normal times, additional funds could be made available to help state and local governments to meet their needs. Unfortunately, these are not normal times; but I believe this discussion is timely even though implementation is not.

We will stipulate, therefore, as to the financial needs of the state and local governments, and as to the normal ability of the federal tax system to meet those needs.

The basic question, then, becomes one of method.

The federal government already spends substantial sums on grants-in-aid to states and cities. In some states these grants amount to over 25 percent of all the tax revenue raised within the state, by local governments and by the state itself.

These many federal programs, each with different standards, desperately need to be coordinated.

The question is: Do you believe the United States is indeed "one nation indivisible"—or do you believe it is a conglomeration of 50 states, joined in an uneasy alliance?

The question was asked in 1787, by the 13 states which then functioned under the Articles of Confederation; it was answered by the Constitution, which made those states a nation. The question was asked again in 1860, and it was answered at Appomattox.

Those answers are even more valid now than they were then. The overwhelming majority of the problems facing America today are national problems. It is easy to use air pollution as an example: should you choke to death on Staten Island, N.Y., because New Jersey doesn't care what happens to those fumes borne eastward by the prevailing winds?

But people also are mobile. An inferior education in Mississippi may blight a budding career in Ohio. Transportation problems in New York affect New Jersey and Connecticut. The list is endless.

There is the appeal to let the states have the money to spend on whatever projects they choose, at the pace they choose, and in the order of priority they choose. We say—without apology—that national problems demand national solutions.

These solutions will not be found by leaving them to the states. Would you really trust the state of Alabama to operate a desegregated school system, or Ronald Reagan to save the redwoods?

But there are many other aspects. States could use unconditional grants to build industrial parks, in order to lure industry from other states. As the current bulletin of the Chase Manhattan Bank points out—and that's hardly a trade union source—states might use the grants to reduce their own taxes, thus destroying the purpose of the grants.

Beyond this is the fact that the most pressing needs, on all fronts, are in the urban areas. State legislatures may have changed in some respects, but not in their historic hostility to their cities.

PROPONENTS SAY that the worst of these abuses can be avoided. How? Only by attaching strings to the "no strings attached" concept. The result would be a new set of federal standards, but one so broad that enforcement would be impossible. This, we suspect, is the basic purpose.

In short, the tax-sharing proposition is a form of anarchy which no national corporation would tolerate, and one which strikes at the very principle of federalism.

There is another, far more equitable way to meet the acknowledged needs of the states. It is the tax credit plan—the original Heller plan. It would provide that a given proportion of a graduated state income tax—40 percent is one figure that has been mentioned—can be charged off by taxpayers as a direct credit against the federal income tax. To quote Chase Manhattan again: "Without question the most important advantage of a tax credit system is that it places the responsibility for taxing and spending at the same level of government."

Exactly. And in our view, exactly right.

Morgan Says:

Senate Drug Hearings Reveal Price Gouge on Prescriptions

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p.m., EDT.)

ON THE WAY in from La Guardia airport to Manhattan after a flight from Washington, I drew a loquacious cab driver, his conversation lubricated by success. Some time ago he bought 15 shares of stock at a little above 50. Recently he was glancing at the market page of the paper and noticed his investment was over 90. He called his wife at the next break between fares, told her to have their broker sell. The transaction was sealed and the cabbie reported he had made about $400 on the deal which he put in his savings account. But just a couple of days ago, he related, he noticed the stock was down to 82. He was understandably pleased with his own timing. I asked him what the company was and he mentioned a firm that manufactures drugs and pharmaceuticals. When I suggested that there might be some connection between the drug stock's temporary softness and the current Senate subcommittee investigation of dual drug prices, the cab driver readily agreed.

Morgan

"My son-in-law," he said, "is studying to be a pharmacist at Fordham and working part-time in his father's drugstore and what he tells us about prices is enough to make your head swim. Why my wife herself had to pay five bucks a while back for 35 pills her doctor had prescribed. When she had the prescription refilled she went to another drugstore and saved two bucks. Finally my son-in-law got her the stuff under, what do you call it, the generic name and the price was $1.05."

INDISPENSABLE as hackmen and barbers are to peripatetic correspondents, it is obvious that neither can pose as experts on such highly complex matters as the manufacture and marketing of prescription drugs.

What makes the conversation with the cabbie relevant is the fact that his experience is supported by detailed testimony now being put into the public record by Sen. Gaylord Nelson (D-Wis.), chairman of the small business subcommittee on monopoly.

William Haddad, who formerly served the Peace Corps and the anti-poverty program, told the opening of a fresh round of hearings that some municipal purchasing agents pay as much as 40 times more for medicine than New York City pays. He suggested an FBI investigation might be necessary to answer the question: why? He strongly indicated unusual relationships must exist between some city purchasing agents and drug firm representatives.

Haddad, once a newsman and trained investigator himself, now heads a nonprofit outfit in New York City called the Citizens Committee for Metropolitan Affairs.

While Haddad was testifying, PMA, the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association, distributed handouts to the press tables in the committee room questioning his "scientific competence." Haddad doesn't pretend to be a scientist but he once contributed valuable research material to the late Sen. Kefauver's investigations of policies and profits in the drug industry, and the PMA may have been reacting, unscientifically but understandably, to that.

The industry itself has yet to be heard in this new committee inquiry and no decisive judgments can be fairly made until the manufacturers' case is presented. They will, nevertheless, have a great many questions to answer, a number of practices to explain.

According to figures researched by the monopoly committee staff, the American buying public spent $4.6 billion on drugs in 1965. Almost 74 per cent of that—$3.4 billion—went for prescription drugs. The headache Congress is now grappling with is the enormous spread between the price of drugs by brand name and by their chemical or generic name.

The Washington Post's Morton Mintz documented some of these staggering price differences. He reported, as one example, that a small pharmaceutical firm, cleared to bid for government contracts, sold reserpine, the generic name of a drug used to lower high blood pressure, for $1.25 per thousand tablets. But a big firm, CIBA, wholesales the same thing as "Serpasil" for $23.50—19 times higher. CIBA's explanation: cost of research.

Mintz is a crusading journalist who has written a book about the drug industry, soon to be reissued in paperback under the title "By Prescription Only." Also Dr. Richard Burack of Harvard Medical School has just published "The Handbook of Prescription Drugs" as a reliable guide to savings at the prescription counter.

What the public needs and what Senator Nelson's committee hopes to provide is corrective research into such practices. Americans may not be a nation of hypochondriacs but these developments plainly indicate we still have a lot to learn about how to take our medicine.

Public Employe Rights:

Civil Service Political Curbs Termed Outmoded, Repressive

AN AFL-CIO spokesman urged greater freedom for government employes to be active in partisan politics.

The broad bans of the Hatch Act may have been necessary decades ago, but today they are outmoded, misunderstood and misinterpreted, declared Thomas E. Harris, associate general counsel of the AFL-CIO.

"Surely the country is more politically mature than that now," he said, on Labor News Conference, a weekly network radio interview, Tuesdays at 7:35 p.m. EDT on the Mutual Broadcasting System.

"Nearly all federal employes and an ever-increasing number of state and local employes" are affected by the law, he said, and most of them want the right to be politically active "of their own choice and of their own volition."

Harris proposed three basic changes in the law and its administration:

1. Clearer definition of federal jobs whose incumbents influence policy and "should be continued under restrictions—at least with respect to running for federal political jobs;"

2. Give all other federal employes freedom to "be politically active—to be active in parties—even to run for federal office;"

3. Turn back to the states and municipalities the right to determine which of their employes should be restricted.

NOBODY QUESTIONS the desirability of prohibiting government employes from using their "official authority or influence for the purpose of trying to affect the results of an election" and protecting them from political pressures from their superiors, he declared.

But, Harris pointed out, the jobs of "the great bulk of federal employes" involve neither administration of policy nor "any sort of political discretion whatever." Further, he declared, "there are criminal statutes" that safeguard workers from political pressures, and "we certainly have no intention of altering or in any way weakening those."

Reporters questioning Harris were John Cramer, federal employe news columnist for the Washington Daily News and other newspapers, and Mike Causey, government employment reporter for the Washington Post.

Washington Window

IN EVERY SESSION of Congress scores of bills are thrown into the hopper designed to rewrite at least some part of the nation's laws affecting labor-management relations.

Aside from 1947—when the Taft-Hartley Act was passed—and 1959—when the Landrum-Griffin Act became law—few of these proposals get beyond the introduction stage.

Proposals that are not acted upon, however, should not be disregarded. They provide a meter, a measuring stick to determine the areas of greatest pressure for legislation, both pro-labor and anti-labor.

The National Labor Relations Board has just released a study of bills introduced in Congress between Jan. 7, 1959, and Aug. 25, 1965, to amend the National Labor Relations Act. Excluded are those proposals which eventually became part of the Landrum-Griffin package, passed in 1959.

During this period—approximately six and one-half years—there were a total of 272 measures introduced.

The largest number, 54, involved the construction industry and 43 were for situs picketing—to permit strikes at the site of construction projects with several employers when there is a labor dispute with any one of them.

The next largest number of bills were in the area of union security, 53. All but a handful of these called for repeal of Section 14(b) of Taft-Hartley, the provision which legalized state "right to work" laws. Some 26 such bills were introduced in 1965, alone.

THERE WERE several bills which called for a federal "right to work" law and states seeking union security must pass their own laws.

Rep. (now Senator) Robert Griffin (R-Mich.) had his own proposals for repealing Section 14(b). These would also prohibit use of dues for political purposes (including registration and get-out-the-vote) where there is a union shop.

Many introduced by traditionally anti-labor members of Congress called for membership votes before strikes. Among the authors of these measures were Goldwater, Sen. John Tower (R-Tex.), Sen. Carl Curtis (R-Neb.), Sen. Karl Mundt (R-S.D.), Rep. John Rhodes (R-Ariz.) and Rep. Robert Ashbrooke (R-Ohio).

Ten bills, alone, dealt with national emergency strikes during this period. Some would outlaw strikes in certain industries regardless of other factors. Curtis, for example, would simply eliminate industry-wide bargaining where so-called national emergency disputes have occurred.

Curtis, along with McClellan, Mundt and a few others, would permit the discharge of wildcat strikers. Another proposal would permit states to regulate strikes and boycotts.

Five members of Congress introduced separate measures to prohibit the use of professional strikebreakers in labor disputes affecting interstate commerce. The printing trades, particularly, have been engaged in a major campaign to pass such legislation on the state and local level.

The usual group of anti-labor congressmen have been seeking legislation to permit employers to go out of business. Behind this is the NLRB ruling in the infamous Darlington case that an employer may not shut down part of his operation if his purpose or the reasonably foreseeable effect is to "chill" unionism in his remaining plants.

Proposals affecting labor are still being introduced in the 90th Congress. Whereas there are a number of pro-labor bills—such as situs picketing and extending coverage of labor law to farm workers—the vast majority of measures are clearly anti-labor, reversing the pattern since 1959. Some three dozen such anti-labor measures have been introduced to date.

It is no accident that more of these bills are concerned with various forms of compulsory arbitration—particularly in amendments to the Railway Labor Act.

Key Votes on Rent Aid, Model Cities

There were two key House rollcall votes on an appropriations bill containing funds for the rent supplement and model cities programs.

Column I shows the 232-171 vote killing funds to expand the rent supplement program for low-income families. On labor's scoreboard, 163 Republicans and 69 Democrats cast wrong votes (W), while 159 Democrats and 12 Republicans voted right (R).

Column II is the 213-193 vote against eliminating all of the already reduced appropriations for the model cities program, except for token planning grants. Voting right (R) to save the program were 178 Democrats and 35 Republicans. Wrong votes (W) were cast by 141 Republicans and 52 Democrats.

Other symbols: PR—paired right; PW—paired wrong; A—absent and not paired. Numerals show districts; AL—at large.

Law Too Restrictive:

Hatch Act Revisions Proposed by Unions

Organized labor called for substantial overhaul and liberalization of the Hatch Act to assure all public employes—federal, state and local—their basic democratic rights to political activity.

The AFL-CIO and representatives of public workers unions at all governmental levels called for the modernization of the act in testimony before a special commission set up by the 89th Congress to determine whether the law needs rewriting.

Thomas E. Harris, AFL-CIO associate general counsel, told the Commission that portions of the Hatch Act restricting voluntary political activity of federal and many state and local employes are "too broad" as to workers covered by the law and the types of activity prohibited, adding that the provisions have been given "excessively broad interpretation," by the Civil Service Commission.

He stressed that "when we bar citizens from being politically active we strip them of their most basic democratic rights, and when we bar a large group of citizens from active participation in politics, as the Hatch Act does, we may weaken the whole fibre of our democratic system. This danger should be taken especially into account in view of the increasing number of state and local employes whose activities are financed in part by federal grants." (See story Page 5.)

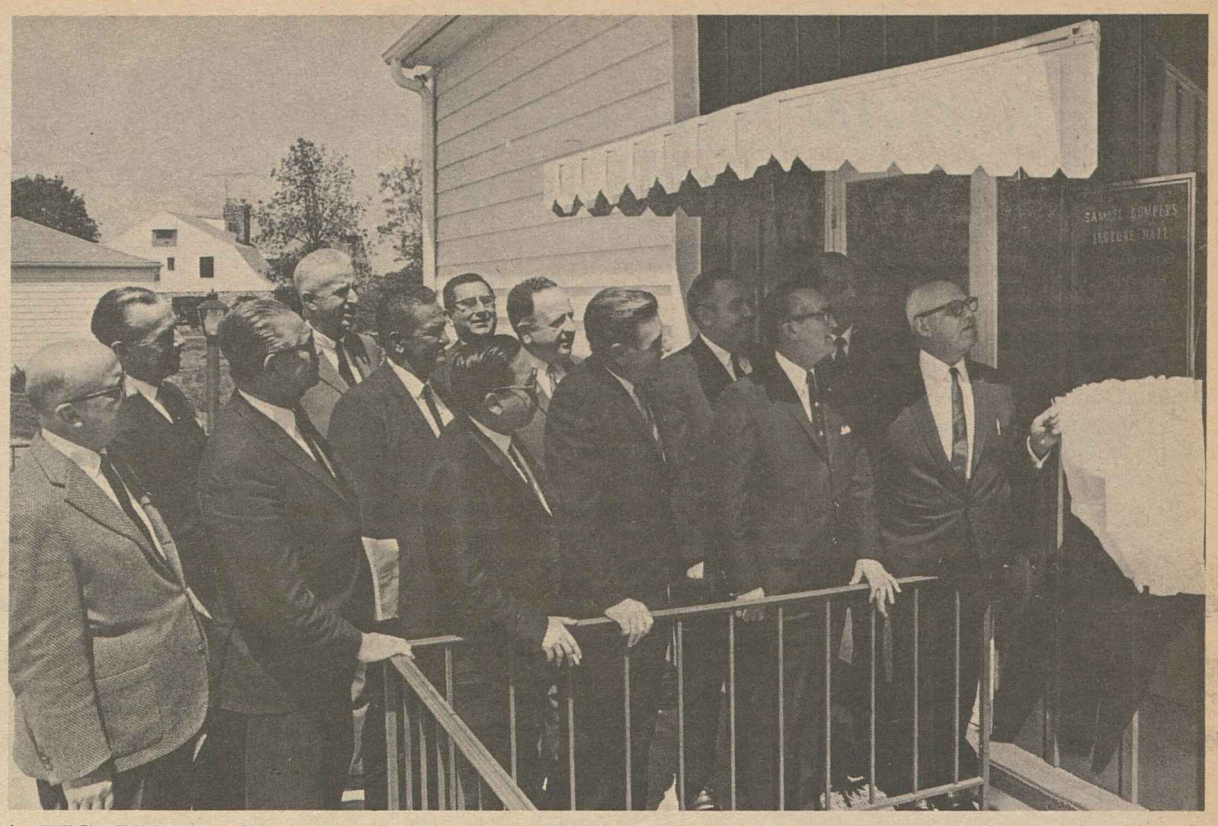
The Government Employes' Council, consisting of 34 AFL-CIO unions representing postal, classified and wage board employes in the federal service, declared that federal workers had the impression after living with the act for 25 years "that existing limitations on their political rights can best be observed by remaining completely apolitical."

The council called for the following changes in the act:

- Revision to emphasize the legitimate political participation available to federal workers.
- The right of a federal worker to be a candidate for federal, state or local office on a partisan or nonpartisan basis.
- Government employe unions should be free to engage in political matters during union meetings.
- Freedom for federal workers to take part in campaigns encouraging voters to register and vote.
- Elimination of the minimum penalty of a 30-day suspension for violation of the act.
- Continue existing protections against coercion in political matters or persuasion by superiors to make political contributions.
- Barring employes who seek elected office on a partisan or nonpartisan basis from using their federal positions to advance their candidacies.

The State, County and Municipal Employes union told the commission that the "second-class status of public employes in regard to proper exercise of their political rights must end."

The union, which represents about 350,000 state and local workers, declared that if the federal government takes the lead in eliminating restrictions on political activity "hundreds of thousands of state and local employes will benefit immediately, and hopefully state and local restrictions will be repealed or modified."



A HIGHLIGHT of the fifth anniversary celebration of the American Institute for Free Labor Development was dedication of Samuel Gompers Lecture Hall, newest building on its "campus" at Front Royal, Va. Above, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, who is also president of the AIFLD, unveils the dedication plaque. Looking on are other members of the AIFLD board.

Arizona AFL-CIO Votes Children's Camp Fund

Flagstaff, Ariz.—The Arizona AFL-CIO at its convention here voted to increase the per capita payments from 15 cents to 18 cents per month, with the boost earmarked for expansion of the organization's children's camp at Prescott.

The 270 delegates representing 71 local unions and 19 councils—many of whom have done volunteer work during the three years since the camp was started—voted to name it in memory of the late L. L. Dugan, a member of Operating Engineers Local 420, Phoenix. Dugan died last December while helping to get the camp ready for its fourth year.

The convention voted to sever the state body's relations with Northern Arizona University here, charging it with anti-union attitudes, and to discontinue the state labor school held there for the past few years. Pres. William D. Shafer announced that a new labor education program will be developed.

In a companion resolution, the delegates voted not to hold future state conventions in communities without unionized hotels.

Support was voted for striking members of the Typographical Union on Tucson newspapers and for printing trades unions on strike at the Kingsport, Tenn., Press. A collection was taken up for the Tucson strikers and another, for the AFL-CIO United Farm Workers Organizing Committee, after a description of organizing difficulties by Andy Imputan, aide to UFWOC Dir. Cesar Chavez.

The convention gave unanimous backing to Pres. Johnson's proposals for social security improvements and endorsed the AFL-CIO goal of a 50 percent increase in benefits.

Speakers included AFL-CIO Regional Dir. Daniel V. Flanagan and COPE Regional Dir. LaMar Gulbransen, both of San Francisco; State Industrial Commissioner John Ahearn; Regional Dir. Morris Skinner of the U.S. Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Apprenticeship & Training; Gov. Jack Williams (R) and Mayor Rolland Wheeler of Flagstaff.

Shafer, a member of Communications Workers Local 8519, was re-elected without opposition. Darwin Aycock of Stereotypers Local 15, Phoenix, succeeds Sec.-Treas. John Evans, who took a federal job.

Labor Educators Pick 1967 Intern

Madison, Wis.—Kyle Ogden of Los Angeles has been named winner of the 1967 labor intern scholarship of Workers Education Local 189, American Federation of Teachers. He is an organizer for Local 213-L of the Leather, Luggage & Handbag Workers, AFL-CIO.

Formerly a member of AFT Local 1021, Ogden will spend eight weeks studying labor education techniques at AFL-CIO headquarters and also at Wisconsin University's School for Workers, the University of California Center for Labor Research and Education, and with the Clothing Workers.

Water Fund Holdup Urged In Westlands

The AFL-CIO called on a Senate committee to deny funds for construction of an irrigation system in California until landowners comply with land and acreage regulations.

Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller wrote Sen. Carl Hayden (D.-Ariz.), chairman of the Senate Appropriations Subcommittee on Public Works, that labor had twice previously objected to funds for the Westlands Water District and that the situation has not changed, and in fact has worsened.

More than 75 percent of the land in the district, part of the Central Valley water delivery project, is held in acreage greater than allowed by the federal reclamation law, Biemiller wrote. The law, he noted, requires owners of more than 160 acres to agree to dispose of the excess acreage before any construction on the project is contracted for by the government.

At the beginning of the project, the AFL-CIO noted, 70 percent of the land exceeded the legal limit. Since then it has risen.

for peace in the Middle East conflict." MTD Pres. Paul Hall wired "we are convinced that freedom can be made secure not by appeasement but by a firm foreign policy."

The AFL-CIO Executive Council had warned in February of the "systematic intensification of Soviet intrigue in the Middle East during the past year, especially in Egypt and Syria," and noted the "repeated acts of aggression" by Syria against Israel.

The council had called on the U.S. government to "adopt a strong stand against such aggression," as the border warfare in Israel, and to "refuse all economic and technical assistance to those countries sponsoring a policy of encouraging border warfare and eliminating their neighbors."

The council statement pointed up also Egyptian gas bombing of villages on the Saudi-Yemen borders, the aggressive actions of Syria against Jordon and other acts in the Middle East that have threatened the peace.

Sixteenth Class Marks AIFLD's Fifth Year

The American Institute for Free Labor Development marked its fifth anniversary with commencement ceremonies for graduates of its 16th training course for trade union leaders.

Completing the AIFLD course were 21 unionists from 15 Caribbean countries and two U.S. citizens. All have since returned to the Caribbean area to conduct similar training programs for other unionists.

Guyanaian Ambassador Sir John Carter voiced his nation's appreciation to the AIFLD for its services to Guyana, including a 600-unit worker housing project now under construction in the capital city of Georgetown.

The knowledge and experience the trainees have gained, he said, will "undoubtedly promote the advance of trade unionism in their respective countries and contribute to their advancement in the economic and social fields."

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany urged the graduates to always "search for the best solutions" to the problems and challenges they face. Other answers may be "easier or more obvious," but in the long run, he cautioned, they may "prove more costly."

"Legislation to protect one individual or group from the adverse consequences of the exercise of a right by another individual or group" is the "first step to dictatorship," Meany warned. Strikes, for instance, he said, may inconvenience some, but "it is much better to bear that inconvenience than to destroy the right to strike."

Meany told the graduates that as trade unionists in new and growing countries, they have both opportunities and obligations to build strong, free and effective private institutions. Stressing the importance of that challenge, he declared, "if private institutions don't do their job," then governments will, and soon, government will be doing everything.

LBJ Message

Before presenting diplomas to the class, Meany read a letter of greetings and congratulations from Pres. Johnson to them and to the AIFLD. "I pledge my continued support," the President's letter said in part, to the "constructive economic and social change in Latin America" with which the Institute has identified itself.

Administrator William B. Gaud of the Agency for International Development told students that their studies have prepared them for three important tasks—"to endow the labor movements in your countries with new bargaining power, with new capacity for bargaining effectively in the interests of rank and file workers;" better performance flowing from the literacy training, vocational and other education and the role of "institution builders."

The elected class spokesman, George DePeana, coordinator of the Crichlow Labor Institute in Georgetown, Guyana, focused on the meaning of the training to the students.

At a dinner honoring the graduates, C. D. G. Pearson of the Canadian International Power Co. praised the work of the AIFLD in behalf of employes of his and other industries in Latin America.

Gift from Co-op

A hammock made at the Floresta (Brazil) Craft Cooperative on looms purchased with an AFL-CIO Impact Projects Program grant, was presented to Meany by AIFLD Administrator William C. Doherty, Jr., on behalf of the Federation of Rural Workers of Pernambuco, Brazil.

AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, president of the Communications Workers and AIFLD secretary-treasurer, who presided at the graduation exercises, closed the dinner by calling on the graduates to "remain humble" when they take up their work in their own countries. "Remember always, that your first obligation is not to yourself, but, as trade unionists, to your fellow man," Beirne said.

Vincent Sweeney, Steel Editor, Dies

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Vincent D. Sweeney, pioneer member of the Steelworkers and editor of Steel Labor for 25 years, died at 67 and was buried after requiem mass in St. Bernard's Church, Mt. Lebanon, Pa. He had been ill since retirement in 1961.

Sweeney graduated from Notre Dame University and served for 15 years as a newsman for the former Intl. News Service, the Pittsburgh Press and other papers. In 1936, John L. Lewis named him public relations director for what is now the USWA. At his death USWA Pres. I. W. Abel praised Sweeney as a pioneer "who helped organize and build our union."

Quie Plan Defeated:

Amendments Cut School Aid Scope

hand over the money to them."

The bill authorizes $3.5 billion in federal funds for the 1969 fiscal year, but the money would have to be appropriated in separate legislation. This year's budget request, for example, is far below the amount Congress authorized last year.

Other Green amendments adopted took away money allocated to the U.S. Office of Education for interstate activities and turned it over to the states and struck the Teachers Corps authorization from the bill. The fate of the Teacher Corps now depends on its inclusion in the college aid bill, currently being considered by a subcommittee headed by Mrs. Green.

A somewhat confused House adopted a Green amendment requiring that desegregation guidelines be applied equally in all states. At the start of the debate, it appeared that southerners were supporting the move as a means of getting rid of guidelines. But as the debate progressed, liberals pressed the argument that the effect would be to tighten desegregation standards throughout the nation and the voting blocs were thoroughly mixed.

A clear setback for civil rights supporters, however, was adoption of an amendment by Rep. L. H. Fountain (D-N.C.) preventing the government from holding up funds from segregated school districts until after an administrative hearing on the case. The House passed a similar provision last year but then accepted a Senate modification which allowed the government to hold up funds, but required that a hearing be held within 90 days.

The House did not complete its three-day debate on the bill until 1:40 a.m. on May 25. Democratic leaders sought an earlier adjournment to regroup their forces, but were outvoted and the acrimonious battle over amendments continued.

So battered was the bill that when the Republicans offered a final motion to send the legislation back to committee, Administration leaders momentarily considered going along with the proposal — especially since the bulk of the bill applied to the fiscal year starting July 1, 1968, and does not affect the coming year's program.

But the decision was made to send the bill along to the Senate and the recommittal motion was beaten, 236-180. On this vote, 134 Republicans and 46 Democrats voted to kill the bill and 190 Democrats and 46 Republicans voted to keep it alive.

Conferees Up Tax Credit Aid On Investment

House and Senate conferees agreed on an investment tax credit bill which gives a bigger windfall to business and industry than the Administration had sought. The House voted final approval and Senate ratification is expected.

The bill restores the 7 percent tax credit for outlays on new equipment and liberalizes tax allowances for depreciation of commercial and industrial buildings. The tax benefits had been suspended last fall as an anti-inflation move.

As approved by the conferees, the legislation carries retroactive provisions beyond the Administration request and will raise the original estimate of $1.1 billion in revenue loss to $1.7 billion.

The conferees also accepted the Senate-passed rider which suspends the presidential campaign financing law enacted last year to enable taxpayers to allocate $1 of their income tax to a fund to finance presidential election campaigns.

Unions Explore Future Of Performing Arts

America's performing and graphic arts can expect a brilliant future if organized labor's resources are properly coordinated with those of government, industry and the world of education. This is the opinion of speakers who addressed a "Labor and the Lively Arts" spring conference held here under the sponsorship of the New York City Central Labor Council.

Billed as a "happening," the conference drew experts from the arts, from government and private industry, and from the trade union movement who participated in three panel discussions. It also featured an art show and a display of sculpture and illustrative material involving several dozen international and local unions.

Principal speaker at the conference was Herman Kenin, president of the Musicians, who noted that organized labor is largely responsible for leisure enjoyed by working men and women. Its involvement in the arts is a natural outgrowth, he said.

"We seek less leisure time for the performer and better use of the leisure time now available to others in increasing measure as a result of improved working conditions," he said.

He pointed out that the labor movement's involvement in the arts is not new, citing the Ladies' Garment Workers production of the revue, Pins and Needles in the 1930's, and its support of orchestral and theatrical performances. He cited his own union's role in getting Congress to establish a Federal Council For The Arts, its efforts in stimulating the performance of live music at free concerts through its recording industry trust fund; its sponsorship of new young musicians under its Congress of Strings project; and its Chicago elementary school program.

In the panel on Labor and the Performing Arts, Actors Equity Association Pres. Frederick O'Neal cited increasing involvement of unions in the dramatic arts, and expressed the opinion that "there is no telling how much the American theater might expand providing organized labor makes good use of its influence and strength."

The conference, which was arranged mainly through the efforts of Bill Morrison, secretary-treasurer of Hotel & Restaurant Employes Local 60 and a playwright, drew close to 500 persons.

The day's proceedings were climaxed with a performance of Arthur Laurents' play "Invitation to a March," performed at the Equity Theater. In addition to Morrison, who was conference chairman, the "happening" was arranged by Carl Schlesinger, education director for Typographical Union Local 6, and Edward Sullivan, education director of IBEW Local 3.

25,000 Rally Against N.Y. Strike Curbs

New York — Twenty-five thousand New York City municipal employes jammed Madison Square Garden to capacity and overflowed into side streets on May 23 in protest against the law enacted by the state legislature which decrees "killer" penalties against unions in the public sector for strikes.

The rally was sponsored by District Council 37, State, County & Municipal Employes, Transport Workers Union, and Local 2, United Federation of Teachers, AFT. Featured speakers included the three international union presidents, Jerry Wurf of AFSCME, Matthew Guinan of TWU, and Charles Cogen of AFT, along with Paul Hall of the Seafarers, Raymond Corbett, president of the State AFL-CIO, and Bayard Rustin, director of the A. Philip Randolph Institute. The rally was chaired by Victor Gotbaum, executive director of District Council 37, AFSCME.

The cheering, stomping rally, one of the biggest labor meetings ever held in New York, featured a grand march around the arena, and a standing pledge "that we three unions, together representing a force of great power, pledge to stand together in defense of one another until this evil law and its promoters are left in the dust of history, while public employe unionism moves ahead to new triumphs in the advancement of the hundreds of thousands of employes whom we represent."

The rally crowd pledged also to strike "when sufficiently aggrieved," despite the law's prohibitions and penalties, and to "devote particular attention to our political-legislative activities never forgetting and never forgiving those legislators who foisted upon us the Rockefeller-Travia Act, and most particularly those whose names adorn this act." The references were to Gov. Nelson Rockefeller, original sponsor of the bill, and Assembly Speaker Anthony J. Travia, Brooklyn Democrat, who guided the bill through the Democratic-controlled Assembly.

A telegram of support from AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany declared: "Congratulations on the unity of three public service unions in defense of the job security and wage standards of your members, and in opposition to the law enacted by the New York State Legislature which would deprive you of basic rights, including the right to strike. Organized labor stands behind you in your fight."

Phoenix Crowds View Union-Industries Show

By Gervase N. Love

Phoenix, Ariz.—The AFL-CIO Union-Industries Show offers an outstanding example of an economic system that "eternally puzzles totalitarians of the left and the right," AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler declared at the show's opening ceremonies here.

"It is a demonstration," Schnitzler declared, "that labor and industry do seek—and in many instances have achieved—a working industrial democracy in their places of employment."

Arizonans from all over the state crowded steadily into the huge Veterans Memorial Coliseum during the six-day display. Many listened with eager interest to the trade union message as they eyed the work of union men and women.

Schnitzler pointed out that the show is a demonstration of what unions and many of their employers have long said.

"That is," he continued, "unions are people like yourselves, and all employes do not dislike unions or their employes. In fact, as the show here proves, together they have produced a quality of goods and a level of craftsmanship in a volume that is the marvel of the world."

He emphasized that the benefits of the wages and contracts unions negotiate extend beyond the workers directly involved.

"Union workers spend their earnings," he said. "They travel. Many come to Arizona on their vacation; many union workers move here when they retire on union-won pensions, and all union workers buy and own products made or grown in this state. It is the same story in every state. The wages of union workers provide in great measure the extra thrust of mass purchasing power that makes possible the goods you see during the show."

Assistant Sec. of Labor Thomas Donahue cut the ribbon to open the show. To enter, the first arrivals marched past a Marine Corps color guard and between rows of uniformed, flag-bearing Boy Scouts.

He brought greetings from Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz and from Pres. Johnson, who recalled that since the 1966 show in Baltimore, "employment has climbed by well over 1 million, average factory wages have increased and total national production has risen.

"This national vitality, which American labor and management has fashioned together," the President said, "is all reflected in your exhibition. It also symbolizes the common bond between labor and management which is helping us build a better America."

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, in a message read by Pres. Richard F. Walsh of the Union Label & Service Trades Dept. noted that each of the shows held over the past nearly 30 years "has succeeded in demonstrating the ever-improving quality of these products, the skills of the workers and the betterment of American life."

"The 1967 show again demonstrates that American industrial accomplishments are the greatest in the world," Meany said. "It also illustrates the unique reasons why: mutual understanding, teamwork and respect between free labor and free employers."

Dept. Sec. Joseph Lewis, the show director, announced that unions constituted 47 percent of the exhibitors and employers 47 percent, with the remaining 6 percent divided between government and social agencies.

The exhibits demonstrated that AFL-CIO members earn their livings in an amazing variety of ways and that at least some of the public is interested in every one.

Visitors watched in fascination as Val Hamer, 70-year-old member of Glass Bottle Blowers Local 118, Baltimore, Md., came out of retirement to demonstrate his skill for the 14th consecutive show. With him were two other Local 118 members, Edward Platter and William George.

At the Plasterers booth, Van Baker, Phoenix Local 394, painstakingly created accurately-colored, life-sized representations of the Kachina dolls associated with Arizona Indians.

States '67 Record: Better than Average

Labor Gains Outweigh Setbacks

By David L. Perlman

Most state legislatures have enacted at least part of labor's legislative program this year, including improvements in unemployment and workmen's compensation, higher state minimum wages, collective bargaining laws and further progress on civil rights.

Some of the biggest gains came in legislatures which for the first time are apportioned on a one man, one vote basis.

There were setbacks, too. But most of these represented the failure to pass labor-backed bills rather than the passage of anti-labor legislation.

Sessions Continue

Nearly half the legislatures are still in session, so the AFL-CIO News legislative survey is necessarily incomplete. But enough returns are in to add up to a better-than-average record. It won't be quite as good as 1965, when the nationwide Democratic election sweep coupled with reapportionment was reflected in widespread legislative accomplishments. But this year's record is better than had been anticipated after last November's election washed out many of the liberal beachheads.

Eight states adopted or improved minimum wage laws, but most fall short of matching the federal level. More than a dozen states boosted workmen's compensation and nearly as many raised unemployment benefits—although most increases were little more than cost-of-living adjustments. Collective bargaining and dues checkoff laws for public employes were enacted or improved in six states, but New York took a step backwards with a punitive no-strike law subjecting unions to fines of up to $10,000 a day.

Five states made some meaningful improvement in civil rights legislation, although open housing bills were usually heavily compromised.

Several states moved boldly ahead of Congress and enacted "truth-in-lending" and other labor-backed consumer bills, and legislation along these lines is pending in a number of legislatures still in session.

Only in New Mexico was "right-to-work" a threat, and it was soundly beaten there.

One man, one vote apportionment received a big share of credit

Labor Backs LBJ Policy On Aggression in Mideast

PETITIONS urging Congress to get out of the horse-and-buggy era by increasing social security benefits were delivered to the Capitol by delegates to the convention of the National Council of Senior Citizens after a parade up Pennsylvania Ave. behind this 1922 model Franklin automobile. Also in the parade was a horse-drawn surrey.

Meany Hits Soviets For Causing Crisis

American labor supports Pres. Johnson's efforts to use all diplomatic channels to ease the crisis in the Middle East, but emphasized that the situation cannot be solved through appeasing "Soviet aggression by proxy."

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany declared in a statement (Text on Page 6) that the trade union movement welcomes Pres. Johnson's declaration that the Egyptian blockade of the Gulf of Aqaba is "illegal and potentially disastrous to the cause of peace."

Meany voiced the AFL-CIO's support also of the President's "unequivocal reaffirmation" of the policy of Presidents Truman, Eisenhower and Kennedy that the U.S. "strongly opposes aggression" in the Middle East, by anyone in the area, in any form, overt or clandestine."

The primary cause of the crisis in the area. Meany asserted, is the Soviet Union which "has armed Nasser for aggression and led him to expel the UN peace-keeping force and to violate the freedom of the seas."

The AFL-CIO president emphasized that, aided and abetted by the U.S.S.R., "Nasser is frantically rallying all Arab countries for a war to destroy Israel" and that the Egyptian dictator has boasted that "the Soviet Union stands with us in this battle."

Freedom the Target

In the present crisis, Meany warned, "Israel is the first target of Soviet aggression by proxy (Nasser.)" But, he added, Israel is not the only or the last target. "The freedom and security of the entire free world are the real and final target of the Communist aggressors."

Meany's statement came as the UN Security Council continued its debate on the Middle East crisis

House Cuts Funds for Wage Law

The House followed the lead of its Appropriations Committee and approved without dissent a $13.1 billion bill to finance programs of the Labor Dept., the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare and several smaller agencies including the National Labor Relations Board.

Funds in the bill are above the amount appropriated last year, but $185 million below the amount sought by Pres. Johnson for the coming fiscal year. The budget requested by the Administration was in most areas less than the amount Congress had authorized to be spent.

The AFL-CIO had urged the Appropriations Committee to add more new wage-hour inspectors than the Administration had sought to enforce the new minimum wage law, with its greatly expanded coverage. Even if the full budget request were granted, the federation argued, only 3 percent of covered establishments could be visited by a wage-hour inspector as compared with 5 percent the previous year.

Petitions to Congress:

Seniors Spur Drive For Social Security

New determination by the nation's organized elders to win improved social security benefits was impressed upon Congress as the National Council of Senior Citizens held its annual convention in Washington.

More than 1,000 delegates representing 2 million members heard their cause urged by national leaders and then stood on historic Pennsylvania Avenue sidewalks and cheered as their directors rode a horse-drawn surrey and a 1922 Franklin auto to deliver petitions supporting their goals to the Capitol.

The petitions, containing hundreds of thousands of names, were presented by NCSC Pres. John W. Edelman to Chairman Wilbur D. Mills (D-Ark.) of the House Ways & Means Committee, which is expected to vote soon on social security improvements proposed by Pres. Johnson.

The convention also passed resolutions calling for:

- Elimination of cash payments from medicare beneficiaries and extension of coverage from the present 90 days to a full year.
- Regulations requiring doctors to send medicare bills directly to the government for payment.
- Establishment of regional maximum fee schedules as a step toward controlling rising medical care costs, and legislation requiring that drugs be prescribed by the less expensive generic name.
- Extension of medicaid to all the medically indigent.

Rail Hearings Nearing End In Congress

Congress headed toward a showdown vote on compulsory arbitration of the railroad shopcrafts dispute before a no-strike law expires June 19.

After three weeks of hearing testimony for and against the bill, committees prepared to debate and vote in executive session on recommendations to be made to the full Senate and House.

Pending in each body is a joint resolution embodying the Administration proposal to bar a strike by 137,000 union mechanics on nearly 200 U.S. railroads while another presidental panel—the third since

California Fair Housing Repealer Struck Down by Supreme Court

The U.S. Supreme Court has ruled that an amendment to the California constitution repealing fair housing laws amounted to racial discrimination by the state and violated the U.S. Constitution.

In a 5 to 4 decision the high court voided the amendment, Proposition 14, adopted in the 1964 general election by a 2 to 1 margin, on the grounds that the amendment "was intended to authorize and does authorize racial discrimination in the housing market."

This is in violation of the 14th Amendment of the U.S. Constitution, the court declared.

The amendment was presented to the voters of California in the form of an initiative petition vigorously supported by the state's real estate interests and designed to repeal two laws previously adopted by the state legislature banning discrimination in the sale or rental of housing.

Justice Byron White, for the majority, upheld the decision of the Supreme Court of California which had earlier voided the amendment and had found that the intent was to authorize private discrimination on housing. White was joined by Justices William J. Brennan, William O. Douglas and Abe Fortas and Chief Justice Earl Warren. In dissent were Justices John M. Harlan, Hugo L. Black, Tom C. Clark and Potter Stewart.

Proposition 14 played a major role in the 1964 elections in California and was vigorously opposed by labor and liberal groups. The appeal against Proposition 14 after it was made part of the state constitution came in two separate suits by Negroes who asserted that apartment house owners had barred them on racial grounds.

Seafarers Win Decisive Vote In ILWU Raid

San Francisco—The Seafarers won a resounding victory over the unaffiliated Intl. Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union in a National Labor Relations Board representation election among workers at a nearby sugar refining plant.

An ILWU raiding attempt was defeated when workers at the California & Hawaii Sugar Refinery in Crockett, about 40 miles from San Francisco, voted May 25 for continued representation by the SIU Sugar Workers' Union Local 1. The result was 659 votes for the SIU to 386 for the ILWU which was expelled from the former CIO in 1950 on findings that the union's policies followed the Communist Party line. There were three voided ballots and 27 votes for neither union.

The 1,250 workers at the California & Hawaii refining plant had been represented by the SIU Sugar Workers Union, which began negotiations with the company for a contract renewal this spring. When negotiations with the company reached an impasse in May, the ILWU, led by Harry Bridges, stepped into the picture and demanded the NLRB representation election. The ILWU already represented about 185 warehousemen in the plant.

SIU West Coast Rep. Frank Drozak said "the decisive defeat of the ILWU raiding attempt should serve as a lesson to Bridges that such anti-labor tactics are completely objectionable and will not be tolerated by American trade union members."

Drozak said that the SIU Sugar Workers local had called in the company to meet immediately to discuss a new contract.

PAINTING by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany titled Springtime in the Alps was among exhibits of the work of union members at a spring conference, Labor and the Lively Arts, sponsored by the New York City Central Labor Council at Riverside Museum. The display also featured sculpture and decorative pieces and illustrative material created by members of several dozen international and local unions.

Married Stewardesses Win Job Protection

New York—American Airlines has offered to rehire 75 stewardesses dismissed last year because they married, but announced it will file a suit challenging the arbitrator's decision that sparked its offer.

The decision, by Arbiter Peter Seitz, was hailed by the Transport Workers as a victory in the long battle of AFL-CIO unions to eliminate restrictions by air line managements against women workers.

Seitz ruled, in the case of Mrs. Nancy Wheelock Mayfield of TWU Local 1550, that American cannot automatically lay off every stewardess after marriage, but must make decisions on a person-by-person basis as to whether marriage has adversely affected work performance.

Mrs. Mayfield was dropped from the payroll May 1, 1966, six months after her marriage to John Mayfield, California resident. TWU filed a grievance and carried the case to arbitration. Seitz directed American to reinstate her with full back pay, provided she works at least 75 days, with no loss of seniority rights.

A spokesman for the carrier said it will carry out the arbitrator's ruling but will challenge his right to "rewrite the terms" of an agreement signed Oct. 1, 1965, and revised this year. Seitz's ruling was an interpretation of the revised clause.

Mrs. Mayfield, 25, said she will return to work and hopes to get the Los Angeles-Washington run, which would take her away from home only two nights a week.

Age Test Due

Her next worry, she told the New York Times, is what to do when she becomes 32, the mandatory retirement age for American Airlines stewardesses. The TWU said the union will keep trying to change that rule too.

Arbitration boards in two other airline cases reached contrary decisions. One board headed by Arbitrator Peter Kelliher ruled that Allegheny Airlines' policy of dropping married stewardesses is unreasonable. At United Air Lines, a board headed by Mark L. Kahn upheld the company's dismissal of a married stewardess. Both women were members of an Air Line Pilots' affiliate, and both boards referred to pending stewardess cases before the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

In Washington, the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia ordered the EEOC to hold a new hearing and compile a new record before setting a policy determination on the rights of stewardesses under the sex discrimination provisions of the Civil Rights Act.

Labor Assails Reagan On Naming of Beeson

Sacramento, Calif.—California labor has voiced sharp protest against the appointment by Gov. Ronald Reagan (R) of a management man to the state's top labor post.

West Coast newspapers announced the discovery in mid-May of Reagan's month-old appointment of Albert C. Beeson, San Jose management consultant and former member of the National Labor Relations Board during the Eisenhower Administration, as head of the state's Dept. of Industrial Relations. The nomination went to the State Senate Apr. 12 and has not yet been confirmed.

"This is the first time" in 40 years that any governor, Democrat or Republican, has "put a management man in to head this department," said Sec.-Treas. Thomas L. Pitts of the California AFL-CIO. "It is very sad, very bad."

Executive Sec. Sigmund Arywitz of the Los Angeles County AFL-CIO said labor "would have been surprised" if Reagan had "deviated from his established pattern of bad appointments." He added:

"We wish Mr. Reagan would remember that he is governor of all the people and that the function of the Dept. of Industrial Relations is to help foster and protect the interests of the working people of California."

Other management men had previously been named by Reagan, who once served as president of the Screen Actors' Guild, to such posts as those of state labor commissioner and state farm labor commissioner.

The Beeson appointment was to the "last key job where labor thought there might still be a chance that Reagan would place someone at least impartial in this vital post," as the Los Angeles Citizen put it. The Citizen is published by AFL-CIO unions in the Los Angeles area.

Management Consultant

Beeson, a Republican, lives in Menlo Park and is vice president of Case & Co., management consultants. When Pres. Eisenhower named him as a member of the NLRB in 1954, the Senate confirmed him, 45-42, after stormy debate.

Labor vigorously opposed his confirmation on the ground that he was a strong partisan of management. Democratic senators called him "a company man" who could not make an objective decision free of pro-employer bias.

Beeson served about a year as an NLRB member but resigned because of illness in the family.

Talks Stepped Up In Rubber Walkout

Akron—Negotiations between the Rubber Workers and the Big Five rubber companies took new directions here this week as both sides stepped up efforts to resolve the two-month strike.

First new development was a company-side decision to switch to industry-wide bargaining, to put its top negotiators together at one table opposite URW Pres. Peter Bommarito and other top negotiators for the union. Previously bargaining had been on a company-by-company basis.

The URW has sharply attacked the industry's mutual aid strike pact under which companies not struck —Goodyear and General in this case—are required to give financial help to the struck firms—Firestone, Uniroyal and Goodrich.

Charges Filed

The union has charged the companies with taking their alliance to the bargaining table thus tieing the hands of individual negotiators.

On June 1, the URW filed unfair practice charges with the National Labor Relations Board, accusing the firms of engaging in a conspiracy to thwart bargaining through the mutual aid pact.

The URW has been on strike since Apr. 20 against Firestone, Uniroyal and Goodrich with members remaining on the job at the other two firms as bargaining continues. The union is seeking an economic program it describes as "logical, reasonable and attainable."

In the second major development, pensions and all other matters that were not scheduled for negotiations until fall have been put on the table for possible inclusion in any settlement reached in the present round of talks, which started in mid-March.

Pension improvements have been a major objective in the URW since the last round of negotiations in which the settlement provided retirement benefits of $3.25 per month for each year of service. The auto industry settlement set the basic pension benefit the same year at $4.25 per month for each year of service. Historically, the big rubber firms have insisted on contract benefits paralleling those in auto.

The triple strikes have entered their seventh week and now match in man-days the 1959 strikes against the same three companies.

The URW's $6.5 million strike fund is nearly exhausted, the union reported, with 51,000 strikers drawing weekly $25 benefit checks.

Token picket lines have been maintained for the most part, but on May 31 strikers at the Akron Goodrich plant and Firestone plants in Akron, Des Moines, Ia., and Decatur and Bloomington, Ill., staged large demonstrations. Firestone obtained court orders to limit the pickets, but it was late the next day before the gates were open in Akron. The Goodrich demonstration lasted only a few hours.

Steelworkers Give Red Cross $10,000

The American Red Cross announced that it has received $10,000 from the Steelworkers for the relief of tornado victims in Illinois and Michigan.

The Red Cross reported that, since the tornadoes struck Apr. 21, it has aided nearly 10,000 persons in the two states and that Red Cross crews are still at work.

According to Red Cross statistics, 397 homes were destroyed and 1,114 homes damaged in Illinois. Some 211 mobile homes also were lost and 22 suffered heavy damage. Victims included 1,845 families, with 53 persons killed and 1,093 injured.

In Michigan, 1,101 families were affected by the tornadic winds and 26 homes were destroyed.

ILG Settlements Extend 15% Pay Hike Pattern

New York—Three-year wage increases totaling 15 percent and improved fringe benefits were negotiated by three locals of the Ladies' Garment Workers in contract renewals covering 27,000 production workers in more than 500 Greater New York shops.

The raise was the largest ever negotiated in the history of Blouse, Skirt & Sportswear Local 23-25 of the ILG, Manager Shelley Appleton said. Ratified by representatives of 17,000 union members, it will serve also as a guideline for contracts covering an additional 25,000 workers in New Jersey and Pennsylvania shops, according to Appleton.

The agreement went into effect June 1 for Local 23-25 members. It provides for wage boosts of 7 percent in 1967, an additional 5 percent next Feb. 5 and 3 percent more on June 2, 1969.

Other improvements include an eighth paid holiday and higher employer payments into the health and welfare funds—10 percent instead of 9.5 percent.

Identical general wage increases were negotiated with employers of 10,000 workers by ILGWU Local 105, representing sportswear and outerwear makers, and Local 10, representing cutters. Minimum increases of 16 to 25 percent over the three-year contract term also were negotiated for operators, pressers, finishers, shipping clerks and other shopworkers, along with an eighth paid holiday and a wage reopening tied to specified increases in the cost of living.

The new agreements parallel the 15 percent settlements recently reached by the union and employers of 42,000 workers in the women's coat and suit industry in New York, New Jersey, Connecticut and the Philadelphia area.

Frank P. Converse, IUOE Leader, Dies

Cleveland, O.—Funeral services were held here June 2 for Frank P. Converse, vice president of the Operating Engineers and business manager since 1939 of state-wide IUOE Local 18. Converse, a former IUOE secretary-treasurer, died here at 81 after a brief illness.

Converse joined the union in 1913. He was elected president of the Cleveland local in 1917 and an IUOE vice president in 1942. He led the move to merge six local unions of portable and hoisting engineers into one state-wide local, which now has more than 13,000 members. The local has been on strike since May 3 against the Ohio Contractors Association, whose members hold $800 million in state highway contracts.

Hearings Near Wind-Up:

Rail Unions Renew Attack on Strike Ban

the wage dispute started more than a year ago—tries to mediate a settlement and, if that fails, mandates terms until Jan. 1, 1969.

AFL-CIO and rail union witnesses opposed the plan as "compulsory arbitration" directed against labor by government coercion. Management and Administration witnesses supported the President's proposal.

A Senate Labor subcommittee ended hearings on the legislation after a closing round of union charges that management has failed to bargain in good faith with the crafts—the Railway Carmen, Machinists, Sheet Metal Workers, Boilermakers & Blacksmiths, the Firemen and Oilers and the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

Labor witnesses agreed that government seizure of the roads, and government operation while negotiations continue, would be preferable to forced arbitration. The latter would penalize only the shopcraft union members, they asserted, while "real, not token seizure" would put pressure on both sides to settle.

The House Commerce Committee said it hopes to wrap up hearings soon after testimony by Defense Sec. Robert S. McNamara, possibly on June 6.

Strike Enjoined

Meanwhile there were these other rail developments:

● The President blocked a strike by 19.000 members of the unaffiliated Conductors & Brakemen, at least until Aug. 1, by naming an emergency board headed by Msgr. George G. Higgins, director of the National Catholic Welfare Conference. Other members of the board, which will begin public hearings June 5, are Rolf Valtin of Washington and Lloyd H. Bailer, New York arbiter.

● The Locomotive Engineers, unaffiliated, approved a management offer of a 6 percent general wage increase for 40,000 members, retroactive to Aug 12, 1966 and effective until July 1968. The union said it also won an additional increase for nearly 20,000 members who work without a fireman in the cab; three weeks' paid vacation after 10 years of service, and a $2,000 paid-up life insurance policy on retirement.

● A presidential emergency board spelled out proposals for ending a contract dispute between the Railroad Trainmen and the Long Island Rail Road. It recommended comparability in setting area wage rates for members of two shopcraft unions on the road.

In the shopcrafts dispute, a member of the House Labor Committee, Rep. John Moss (D-Calif.) charged that a meeting of Transportation Sec. Alan Boyd and other government officials to explore methods of assuring vital shipments if a strike were permitted "showed no evidence" of good faith effort. Instead, Moss declared, it was "contemptuous of the Congress."

He had asked for a discussion of the unions' offer to keep essential traffic moving in the event of a strike. Boyd called the proposal "impractical" after meeting with union representatives.

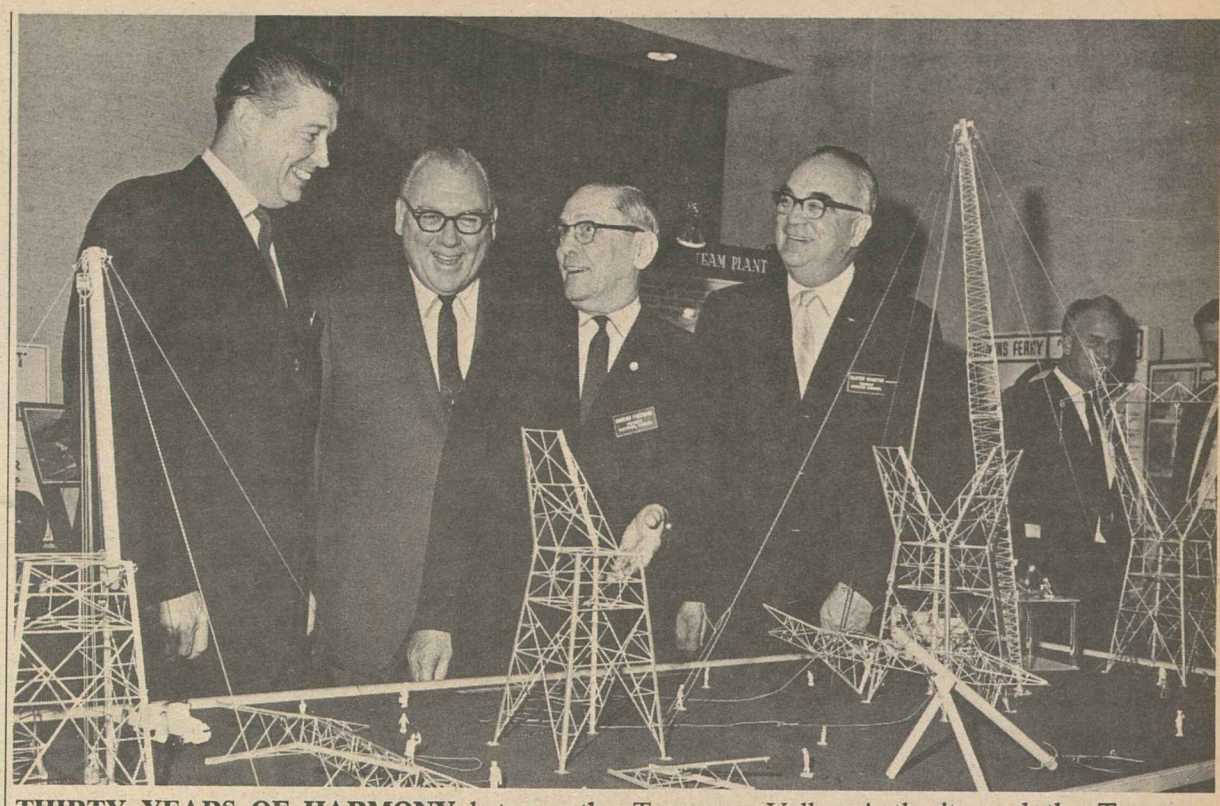
BRT Pres. Charles Luna and Pres. H. E. Gilbert of the Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen were final witnesses before the House subcommittee. They said a forced arbitration law would be just as destructive of collective bargaining as the 1963 law permitting the railroads to lay off train crews.

Rail management, they said, had used the 1963 legislation to avoid negotiations in violation of the intent of Congress.

Luna warned that history might repeat itself under a compulsory arbitration law for the shopcrafts, which he said have been trying since May 1966 to induce true bargaining by management. Wage rates have fallen far below those in comparable industries, the crafts assert.

Gilbert said of the 1963 law that "what Congress intended in every instance did not happen." The board established under the law "devised its own original solution" for the dispute—not the solution developed by labor and management in bargaining.

He said his union, which lost more than 12,000 members through management layoffs, has had to spend $650,000 in legal battling "involving problems arising from the public law" or the award. Nearly 8,000 other firemen, and additional members of four other operating unions, were terminated or transferred, he testified.



THIRTY YEARS OF HARMONY between the Tennessee Valley Authority and the Tennessee Valley AFL-CIO were observed in Chattanooga at the central body's annual meeting, which was attended by many international union officials. Looking over models of transmission towers and their parts are, from left, Pres. John H. Lyons, Jr., of the Iron Workers; Pres. S. Frank Raftery of the Painters; Pres. Gordon M. Freeman of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and Pres. Hunter P. Wharton of the Operating Engineers.

6 Unions Urge CAB Outlaw Air Strike Pact

Six unions of airline employes announced they will jointly urge the Civil Aeronautics Board to outlaw a strike insurance agreement between major U.S. airlines.

The unions are the Air Line Pilots, Air Line Dispatchers, Flight Engineers, Machinists, Railway Clerks and Transport Workers.

They reported that four lines—Eastern, Northwest, Trans World and United—received $44 million from the strike insurance fund when they lost business to the other lines during a 43-day strike of mechanics last year.

The unions charge the plan encouraged the carriers to force a strike, delayed good-faith bargaining and violated laws aimed at preserving industrial peace. Thus it became a strikebreaking device, they declared in a statement calling on the CAB not to renew a temporary three-year agreement expiring July 10.

Five lines were struck by the IAM last summer but one—National—did not participate in the plan. The non-struck lines made payments on a percentage basis figured on increased income.

TVA, Unions Mark 30 Years of Harmony

Chattanooga, Tenn.—Three decades of harmony between the Tennessee Valley Authority and the Tennessee Valley AFL-CIO have produced a "yardstick" of labor relations for the entire power industry, Pres. Gordon M. Freeman of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers declared here.

Freeman returned to his former home to speak at a banquet highlighting the central labor body's annual valley-wide conference, which marked 30 years of successful collective bargaining. The two-day session drew nearly 750 representatives of labor and management from all the TVA states and included a number of high-ranking union officials.

Success Hailed

"The success of this yardstick merits its support," Freeman said in hailing the years of cooperative labor-management relations.

Dir. William E. Simkin of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service praised the bargaining relationship as "a living monument deserving of careful study and emulation by other governmental agencies and unions representing government employes."

In other parts of the country, he said, relations between federal agencies and unions of their employes are at about the stage that industry passed through in the late 1930s and early 1940s. Agreements, he warned, should be studied with "great care" by union and government officials who are new at bargaining with each other.

Chairman A. J. Wagner of the TVA board of directors renewed "my personal commitment" to the labor relations program and paid tribute to the TVA's first board for "the wisdom and foresight that made possible this partnership between union and management which has flourished and grown."

He also gave a brief review of the TVA's growth and outlined plans for future moves.

Other speakers included Pres. John McConnell of the University of New Hampshire and Dr. John Dunlop of the Harvard University Dept. of Economics. Presiding at various sessions were Pres. C. C. Hobbs of the valley AFL-CIO and John E. Massey, TVA personnel director; L. J. Van Mol, TVA general manager, and Don McBride, a TVA director.

Union officials present included Pres. Thomas J. Murphy of the Bricklayers; Pres. John H. Lyons, Jr., of the Iron Workers; Pres. Hunter P. Wharton of the Operating Engineers; Pres. S. Frank Raftery of the Painters and Pres. Matthew Lynch of the Tennessee AFL-CIO.

Also, Vice Pres. Maywood Boggs of the Boilermakers; IBEW Vice Pres. W. D. Petty; Vice Pres. John Walsh of the Iron Workers; Vice Pres. G. K. Fritts of the Painters and Treas. Peter Terzick of the Carpenters.

Steel Union Wins Pact At Big Machine Plant

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Steelworkers have won recognition and a first contract from the Mesta Machine Co., last remaining major unorganized steel mill and equipment manufacturing plant in the Pittsburgh area. The West Homestead firm has 2,000 production and maintenance employes.

Mesta Pres. John D. Iversen and USWA Vice Pres. Joseph P. Molony said in a joint statement that recognition followed a card check against the company payroll showing that a substantial majority of eligible employes had signed USWA authorization cards. Neutral arbitrator B. Meredith Reid, Pittsburgh attorney, verified the count, the announcement said.

The contract calls for application of the terms in the union's basic steel agreement; wage and benefit improvements next Aug. 7, in line with those to be negotiated with other major firms; a full union shop; grievance machinery, a severance pay fund and a study by a joint union-management committee of job classifications, job descriptions and seniority provisions.

It was agreed that the contract term may run to May 27, 1970, or 90 days after termination of the next U.S. Steel agreement, whichever is later.

USWA District Dir. Paul Normile, who headed the organizing drive at Mesta, said the USWA had tried since 1937 to organize the plant. Management always put into effect the pension, savings, vacation and supplemental unemployment benefits won by the union from other big firms, he recalled.

Two other unions, the Pattern Makers and the Plant Guards (unaffiliated), represent separate groups of Mesta workers at West Homestead. The Machinists have bargaining rights for Mesta's New Castle, Pa., workers.

Medicare Leaflets Aid Record-Keeping

The Social Security Administration has made available at its local offices new pamphlets to help medicare beneficiaries in paying and keeping records of their medical expenses.

One pamphlet describes methods of payment and another explains how the first $50 of medical insurance expenses the beneficiary pays each calendar year is determined.

AFL-CIO Social Security Dir. Bert Seidman points out that though the payment pamphlet tells about the two ways of paying a bill—assignment and direct billing—only the former assures beneficiaries of 80 percent reimbursement. The reason, he said, is that the doctor using this method accepts the "reasonable and customary" fee set by the SSA, whereas under direct billing he may charge more and the beneficiary must pay the difference.

Rochester ACWA Gives Headquarters to City

Rochester, N. Y.—The Clothing Workers have donated their headquarters building to the city, which will occupy it for a poverty program or recreation center after the ACWA Joint Board moves to a new building in late summer. The union has occupied the three-story structure since 1919.

A city councilman and a daily newspaper recently suggested that the city buy the building. After the gift was announced, the newspaper said "the generosity of the Clothing Workers is greatly appreciated."

Trainees Win State-County Staff Posts

Eleven rank-and-file members of the State, County & Municipal Employes have received staff assignments around the country following an intensive three months of staff training.

The students were subjected to both class work and field experience in a unique staff training program. They studied economics, politics, collective bargaining, urban problems, civil rights and many more subjects. The program was directed by Mrs. Betty Miller.

At the graduation ceremonies, AFSCME Pres. Jerry Wurf said the students came "from the basic roots of our union" and he joined Mrs. Miller in praising their "high level of motivation."

Walter G. Davis, director of education for the AFL-CIO, said the students had completed "one of the most comprehensive staff training programs" and that it will "strengthen the whole trade union movement."

Farm Worker Union Breakthrough Called 'Most Hopeful Trend of Year'

The "most hopeful trend of the year" was the unionization of farm workers in California and Texas, the National Sharecroppers Fund said in its 1966 report on the condition of farm workers and small farmers.

In spite of the establishment of a minimum wage of $1 an hour, farm wages "lagged so far behind general American standards that farm workers across the country undertook protest marches, union organization and strikes, with first dramatic gains appearing in California," said the report, citing contracts won by the AFL-CIO United Farm Workers Organizing Committee with Schenley Industries and the DiGiorgio Corp.

The report was prepared by Executive Sec. Fay Bennett of the fund, which for 30 years has pioneered in improving substandard farm conditions. Dr. Frank F. Graham is fund chairman and Pres. A. Philip Randolph of the Sleeping Car Porters is vice chairman.

Outside California, the NSF reported, the "most important current organizing efforts is at La Casita farms" near Rio Grande City, Tex. The UFWOC won its first recognition agreement from a major grower in May and continued picketing of La Casita despite "wholesale" arrests of pickets by Texas Rangers. Farm workers have no legally protected right to organize.

A dramatic feature of 1966 organizing attempts, the report pointed out, was the march on state capitals by farm workers seeking the rights already shared by other workers. But none of the gains of the UFWOC workers were shared by small farmers, whose numbers continued to drop, "particularly under forced evictions in southern states," the report related.

The NSF gave this summary:

- More than 3 million persons did some work on farms for cash wages in 1965, the latest year for which full information was available. Of these, 1.3 million "casual" workers averaged only 9 days of work and $66 in wages; another 1.9 million were noncasuals who worked an average of 137 days and earned $1,045 for the year.
- Lack of family housing remains acute. An eight-county survey in California farm country showed that 80 percent of farm worker housing violated minimum standards of health, safety and sanitation. This is a nationwide problem.
- In fiscal 1966, the Labor Dept. found 1,725 farms violated child labor laws, and 5,487 children were discovered working during school hours. Legal protection for children is inadequate.
- Farm workers lose more days due to sickness — an average 7.5 days a year — than workers in all other occupations (average 6 days). More than two out of 10 farm workers have chronic health problems that limit their activities, compared to about one out of 10 for all occupations.
- In 1965, agriculture again ranked as the third most hazardous industry in the U.S., following mining and construction.

The fund reported that the number of farm residents in the U.S. dropped from 15.6 million in 1960 to 11.6 million — a rate of decline put at 4 percent for whites and 10 percent for Negro farm people. Most of all, "people leave to escape the poverty that is still more prevalent in the South than anywhere else" in the nation, it said.

Job Move to Suburbs Strands Poor in Cities

The new jobs in growing metropolitan areas have been moving out of the central city to the suburbs while those most in need of jobs are left stranded in the city.

This is the primary cause of the failure to match available workers with available jobs, according to an article in the May issue of the Labor Dept.'s Monthly Labor Review.

"The Decentralization of Jobs," an article by economist Dorothy K. Newman, analyzed data on the value of building permits issued and found new factory and commercial buildings concentrating in the ring of metropolitan areas rather than in the central city.

"The trend to place new structures in the suburbs—particularly those devoted to factories and trade and, to a smaller extent, to schools and hospitals—is especially marked in the North, where central cities tend to be old and the flight of population to the suburbs has been going on for many years," she points out.

Miss Newman notes that getting to a suburban job puts a greater burden on central city residents than is experienced by the suburbanite commuting to the city. Public transport to the suburbs, she notes, "is usually expensive, often circuitous or simply not available."

"According to estimates by the Traffic Commission of New York City," the article says, "it would cost a worker in Harlem $40 a month to commute by public transportation to work in an aircraft plant in Farmingdale (Long Island), in a parts plant in Yonkers or Portchester (Westchester), or in a basic chemical plant on Staten Island. The public transportation cost for a Bedford-Stuyvesant resident to work in the same places would be nearly $50 a month."

A great many of the new jobs in the suburbs are paratechnical, subprofessional, clerical, sales or semiskilled in plants, stores, warehouses and hospitals, Miss Newman wrote, adding:

"These are the kinds of jobs for which the unemployed and underemployed in cities could be hired directly or trained by employers or the government with little effort or expense.

"But these jobs are not accessible or always open to unemployed or underemployed city dwellers, many of whom are Negroes. This significantly limits the contribution expanding job opportunities in the ring could make toward overcoming the competitive disadvantage and unused skill potential of those living in the city."

Miss Newman said the substantial outmigration of facilities precedes and also reflects the huge increase of business and employment in the ring areas, where population growth is greatest also.

Wage-Hour Budget Cut:

On-Job Training Added to G.I. Bill

Instead the committee cut back the request for 175 new inspectors and provided funds for only 150.

While House Republicans let the Labor-HEW money bill go through without trying to make further cuts, the GOP leadership took advantage of Democratic absenteeism May 31 to put through what was billed as a 5 percent cut in the budget for the State, Justice and Commerce Departments — excluding only the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

The Appropriations Committee had already chopped the budget request by nearly 7 percent, however, and the debate on the GOP motion found congressmen from both parties confused as to whether the 5 percent budget cut amendment would have any meaning. At any rate it carried on a 171-156 rollcall.

GI Bill Liberalized

The Senate passed a liberalized GI Bill of Rights including a new provision—strongly urged by the AFL-CIO—permitting veterans to receive educational allowances while enrolled in full-time apprenticeship and on-the-job training. A similar bill was passed by the House and the measure now goes to a conference committee.

Apprentices and trainees would be entitled to a maximum monthly payment of $80 for a single person, $95 for a veteran with one dependent and $115 for two or more dependents. The allowance would go down as earnings rose under the training program.

This would be accomplished through a formula setting a ceiling of $450 a month on the combination of the trainee's wages and the educational assistance allowance.

For veterans attending colleges and other educational institutions, the legislation provides a substantial boost in benefits over present law.

The basic allowance for a single veteran is raised from $100 to $130 a month; for a vet with one dependent from $125 to $150, and for two dependents from $150 to $175. The new legislation would also add $10 a month for each dependent over two.

The bill also allows 1.5 months educational benefits for each month of service, instead of the present one month, up to a 36-month maximum. It permits veterans to receive allowances while completing high school without having the time charged against further college training.

Restoration of the investment tax credit—long delayed by the Senate battle over suspension of the presidential campaign financing law—was finally enacted as the Senate joined the House in approving a conference report.

House and Senate conferees had before them conflicting versions of draft extension legislation. The Senate bill leaves the President with broad authority to put into effect many of his proposed reforms, including a form of lottery selection. The House reserved the right to veto any presidential order substantially changing the present system of selection.

Tile Industry Job Losses Laid to Imports

Japan's virtual assumption of the ceramic tile market in the United States has cost American workers 4,000 jobs and $20 million a year in wages, Vice Pres. Enoch Rust of the Glass & Ceramic Workers and Pres. Paul Pelfrey of the Brick & Clay Workers testified at hearings before the U.S. Tariff Commission.

The two union officers said that imports from Japan account for more than 60 percent of the ceramic mosaic floor tile market and about 20 percent of the wall tile market.

With industry spokesmen, they maintained that Japanese manufacturers achieved their position through a "whole catalogue" of unfair practices including price fixing, allocation of markets and dumping in which exporters, trading houses and U.S. importers also are involved.

Award Winners Named By Hillman Foundation

New York—Sidney Hillman Foundation awards for outstanding work in the publishing and television fields during 1966 were presented to six winners here.

The awards, given annually by the foundation in memory of the late first president of the Clothing Workers, were presented at a luncheon by Jacob S. Potofsky, president of the union and the foundation. With each went a check for $500. Recipients were:

William C. Jersey, film producer, for the motion picture "A Time for Burning," a documentary about an Omaha pastor forced to give up his pastorate over a civil rights issue. The film was commissioned by Lutheran Film Associates and shown on the National Educational Television network.

Joseph P. Lyford, journalism professor at the University of California, Berkeley, for his book The Airtight Cage—a study of an urban slum published by Harper & Row.

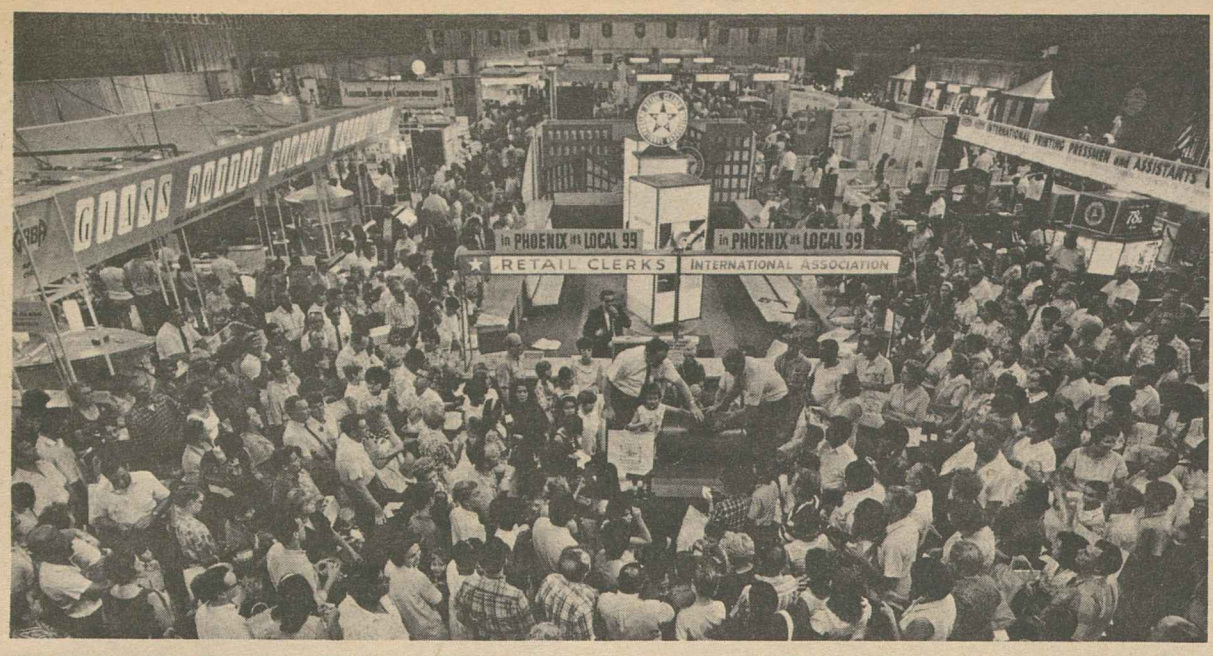
Richard Harris, reporter on the staff of the New Yorker magazine, for a four-part series on medicare—a history of the enactment of medicare legislation and the American Medical Association's sustained opposition.

Douglas S. Walker, city editor of the Dayton, O., Daily News, and Robert A. Keveney, copy editor for the same paper, for a series of Daily News stories titled "I Joined the Far Right." The series gave an "inside" view of the Ku Klux Klan, the John Birch Society and similar groups. Each man joined one of the groups.

Harrison E. Salisbury, an assistant managing editor of the New York Times, special award for his reporting from Viet Nam.

The awards have been given annually since 1959 to "perpetuate Hillman's high ideals of service to the community and promote his broad-ranging interests and concerns."

Judges this year were Alan Barth, editorial writer for the Washington Post; Edward P. Morgan, ABC radio commentator on programs sponsored by the AFL-CIO, and Ralph McGill, columnist and publisher of the Atlanta, Ga., Constitution.



THOUSANDS OF SHOPPING BAGS were given away by the Retail Clerks during the AFL-CIO Union-Industries Show in Phoenix, Ariz., but the big moment came for many of the spectators when a final-day drawing was held for a color television set. A visiting child picked the winner.

INTENSE as any other artist creating a masterpiece is Pres. Thomas Wake of San Francisco Local 24 as he decorates a cake at the American Bakery & Confectionery Workers' booth.

The Southwest Gets a Union Label

MEMBERS of the Barbers from all parts of the country spruced up both adults and children like Wilma Robertson, adopted daughter of Intl. Rep. Wilma Robertson of the Clothing Workers.

COTTON CANDY given away at the ABC booth was particularly welcomed by the children, many of whom arrived in their school buses. More than 204,000 visitors attended the six-day show.

A WASHINGTON PRESS 95 years old was put into service by the Printing Pressmen to turn out copies of patriotic documents like the Declaration of Independence and the Bill of Rights.

ARTISTIC BENT of younger generation was given free play at the Painters' booth, where kids swirled paints into a well and produced abstract designs on paper they could carry home to parents.

SPECTACULAR WAR DANCES were performed at a luncheon prior to the show's opening by boys from St. John's Indian Mission school, near Phoenix. The luncheon also heard speeches by Donahue and Schnitzler and messages from Pres. Johnson and AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany.

Crisis in the Middle East— Threat to World Peace

AMERICAN LABOR is deeply disturbed by the grave threat to world peace in the Middle East.

Soviet machinations over the past year are the primary cause of the dangerous deterioration of the situation in this pivotal area. Instead of striving for an Arab-Israeli understanding, the Soviet government has armed Nasser for aggression and led him to expel the UN peace-keeping force and to violate the freedom of the seas which is indispensable to world peace. On the very day (May 22) that Moscow notified Turkey that 10 Soviet warships were to sail from the Black Sea through the Dardanelles and into the Mediterranean, the Egyptian dictator announced his closing of the Gulf of Aqaba to Israeli shipping.

Aided and abetted by the U.S.S.R., Nasser is frantically rallying all Arab countries for a war to destroy Israel. He has boasted before the Egyptian National Assembly that "the Soviet Union stands with us in this battle." We have here the voice of Nasser, but the hand of Brezhnev.

Realizing the gravity of the situation and the urgency of free world preparations to meet the crisis, American labor welcomes Pres. Johnson's timely declaration that:

"The United States considers the gulf to be an international waterway and feels that a blockade of Israeli shipping is illegal and potentially disastrous to the cause of peace."

We support the President's unequivocal reaffirmation of the policy pursued by his predecessors, Presidents Truman, Eisenhower and Kennedy, that "The United States strongly opposes aggression by anyone in the area, in any form, overt or clandestine."

American labor favors the President's policy of utilizing all diplomatic channels, inclusive of the UN, and seeking combined efforts by the maritime powers to secure a just settlement of the present crisis in the Middle East. However, the Soviet government and its Communist bloc would make a fatal error to assume that our country's exhaustive diplomatic efforts for a just peace mean that the United States would, in the process, become exhausted and appease aggression by accepting actions which Pres. Johnson has appropriately branded "illegal and potentially disastrous to the cause of peace."

Were Nasser and his masters permitted to succeed in their aggression, not only Israel but a number of other Middle Eastern countries—Arab lands—would also lose their national independence under the guise of so-called Arab national unity. Then the U.S.S.R. would finally succeed in its drive to take over the entire Red Sea-Arabian Peninsula-Persian Gulf Region and to deny the free world access to its energy resources. Such a conquest would be the springboard from which the Soviet rulers could move to take over the mineral resources of South-Central Africa.

In the present critical situation, Israel is the first target of Soviet aggression by proxy (Nasser). Clearly Israel is not the only or last target of this aggression. The freedom and security of our country, of the entire free world, are the real and final target of the Communist aggressors.

President on Politics:

Increasing Cost of Campaigns Threaten Democratic Process

The following is excerpted from Pres. Johnson's message to Congress on "The Political Process in America." These excerpts set out the background for the President's recommendations on financing political campaigns.

DEMOCRACY RESTS on the voice of the people. Whatever blunts the clear expression of that voice is a threat to democratic government.

In this century one phenomenon in particular poses such a threat—the soaring costs of political campaigns.

Historically, candidates for public office in this country have always relied upon private contributions to finance their campaigns.

But in the past few decades, technology—which has changed so much of our national life—has modified the nature of political campaigning as well. Radio, television, and the airplane have brought sweeping new dimensions and costs to the concept of political candidacy.

In many ways these changes have worked to the decided advantage of the American people. They have served to bring the candidates and the issues before virtually every voting citizen. They have contributed immeasurably to the political education of the nation.

In another way, however, they have worked to the opposite effect by increasing the costs of campaigning to spectacular proportions. Costs of such magnitude can have serious consequences for our democracy:

- More and more, men and women of limited means may refrain from running for public office. Private wealth increasingly becomes an artificial and unrealistic arbiter of qualifications, and the source of public leadership is thus narrowed.
- Increases in the size of individual contributions create uneasiness in the minds of the public. Actually, the exercise of undue influence occurs infrequently. Nonetheless the circumstances in which a candidate is obligated to rely on sizable contributions easily creates the impression that influence is at work. This impression—however unfounded it might be—is itself intolerable, for it erodes public confidence in the democratic order.
- The necessity of acquiring substantial funds to finance campaigns diverts a candidate's attention from his public obligations and detracts from his energetic exposition of the issues.
- The growing importance of large contributions serves to deter the search for small ones, and thus effectively narrows the base of financial support. This is exactly the opposite of what a democratic society should strive to achieve.

It is extremely difficult to devise a program which completely eliminates these undesirable consequences without inhibiting robust campaigning and the freedom of every American fully to participate in the elective process.

I believe that our ultimate goal should be to finance the total expense for this vital function of our democracy with public funds, and to prohibit the use or acceptance of money from private sources.

We have virtually no experience upon which to base such a program. Its risks and uncertainties are formidable. I believe, however, that we are ready to make a beginning. We should proceed with all prudent speed to enact those parts of such a program which appear to be feasible at this time.

The election of a President is the highest expression of the free choice of the American people. It is the most visible level of politics—and also the most expensive.

For their free choice to be exercised wisely, the people must be fully informed about the opposing candidates and issues. To achieve this, candidates and parties must have the funds to bring their platforms and programs to the people.

IN RECOGNITION of this problem, the Congress last year enacted the Presidential Election Campaign Fund Act. By so doing, it adopted the central concept that some form of public financing of presidential campaigns would serve the public interest.

I did not submit or recommend this legislation. It was the creation and the product of the Congress in 1966. As you will recall, it was added as an amendment to other essential legislation. When I signed that act into law last November, I observed that "it breaks new ground in the financing of presidential election campaigns" and that the "new law is only a beginning." It was my belief then, as it is now, that the complex issues involved in this new concept required extensive discussion and penetrating analysis.

Over the past six weeks, we have heard men of deep principle and firm conviction engage in a spirited and searching debate on the law. While there were honest and vigorous disagreements, they were voiced by those who share a common faith in the free ideals which are the bedrock of our democracy.

Morgan Says:

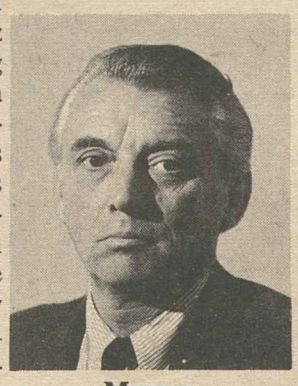
Great Diplomatic Skill Needed To Ease Crisis in Middle East

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p.m., EDT.)

THE TINY but growing port of Elath is as vital to the tiny but developing nation of Israel as water to a duck.

Without it much of the country's swimming economy would sink. The hemorrhage of Arab hatred blocks the great trade artery of the Suez Canal to Israeli shipping and for more than a decade Col. Nasser's government in Cairo has been blacklisting ships flying any flag with cargoes for or from Israel in their holds. Before the combined strike by Israel, France and Britain in 1956 to "liberate" the canal from Egyptian hands was aborted, Nasser had maintained a blockade of the Gulf of Aqaba, a narrow finger pointing northward from the Red Sea, between the Sinai Peninsula and Saudi Arabia. Purpose: to bottle up Elath and deny Israel any access to the sea east of Suez.



Morgan

But when U.S. and UN intervention stopped the Suez campaign inches short of success against Nasser, the Aqaba gulf was uncorked and an international garrison, part of the United Nations "peace-keeping" force, was installed in a blockhouse at the mouth of the gulf to see that it stayed open.

Egyptian troops have now returned to the blockhouse. Nasser boasted he was putting the cork back in the bottle. If he does he will put in with it enough political nitroglycerine to blow the uneasy peace in the Middle East to smithereens.

In its decade of development now suddenly menaced, Elath grew from what looked roughly like a CARE package parachute-dropped on a pebbly beach to a city of 13,000. When I was there four years ago, it had already begun the admirable impertinence of calling itself a seaside resort though summer temperatures reach 120 degrees.

Now it really is a tourist attraction. The pinkish-brown columns of King Solomon's copper mines are nearby. The brave vegetation includes the cloudy green tamarisk and the flat-topped acacia tree. Wood from the latter was used to make the Ark of the Covenant, the box in which the Ten Commandments were kept. Moses is said to have discovered the springs at Yot Vata, 26 miles inland, whence Elath today gets much of its water.

But Elath's maximal importance is as a commercial port. Israeli copper, salt and phosphates for fertilizer—in total 20 percent of Israel's exports—are shipped to foreign markets from it. Into it, mostly by tanker from Iran, come 90 percent of Israel's oil requirements. The petroleum is then pumped 300 miles through the Negev desert, past Beersheba, the fertile Mediterranean coastal plain and Tel Aviv, up to the refineries at Haifa.

If Elath were actually blockaded the oil from Iran would have to travel more than 12,000 miles around the Cape of Good Hope, up the Atlantic, past Gibraltar into the Mediterranean and finally to Haifa. This is four times the distance from Abadan, Iran's oil port, to Elath.

THERE IS no doubt that Israel has been a progressive thorn in the side of the Arab world since the country was invented under the enthusiastic sponsorship of Pres. Truman a generation ago. The most fiery and irresponsible Arab leaders still talk of exterminating it. This cannot be done without a major war in the Middle East which nobody, perhaps least of all the people of the Arab states, can afford.

But now the worst threat of a war in the 11 years since Suez rises. In contrast to Nasser's loud and boastful bellicosity, Israel is saying with quiet but grim candor that if he actually tries to blockade Elath it will be an act of war, justifying measures of self-defense by the Israeli government under Article 51 of the United Nations charter.

The United States is inescapably identified with Israel in this stand. In an address to the American people on Feb. 20, 1957, Pres. Eisenhower declared "the Gulf (of Aqaba) constitutes international waters and no nation has the right to prevent free and innocent passage in the Gulf."

He added that if Egypt should violate the armistice agreement or other international obligations (including the guarantee of free and open transit through the Suez Canal without discrimination), "then this should be dealt with firmly by the society of nations."

The tragic and contemptible fact is that Egypt has not been dealt with firmly by anybody, least of all the U.S., and the result has been no serious challenge to Nasser's barring Suez to Israeli shipping or blacklisting ships trading with Israel.

So now a war threatens over a port above the Red Sea about the size of a yacht club. The UN has been rendered almost—but not quite—impotent as a stabilizing agent, thanks not only to the disruptive intransigence of the Soviet Union but past equivocal positions of the U.S.

There still seems to be time to bring everybody to his senses. The time must be used with the greatest diplomatic skill possible. One unwanted war at a time is already one more than enough.

Doherty Hails Growth:

60,000 Trained by AIFLD In Five Years of Program

IN JUST FIVE YEARS, the American Institute for Free Labor Development has become the "largest institution for adult and worker education in the Western Hemisphere," its administrator reported in a network radio interview.

William C. Doherty, Jr., said that more than 60,000 workers have attended AIFLD-sponsored education and training programs in 20 Latin American countries, designed to help them build their own free and democratic trade union movements. Doherty appeared on the AFL-CIO-produced public affairs program, Labor News Conference, broadcast Tuesdays at 7:35 p.m. EDT on the Mutual Radio Network.

Some 500 top students have gone on to the Institute's intensified three-month advanced teacher training center at Front Royal, Va., he said, for schooling in the techniques of modern adult education, the functions of democratic institutions, labor history, collective bargaining, labor legislation and social security.

Doherty said the course prepares them to return as teachers to their own countries to help their fellow workers learn "what a trade union can do to make the community a better place to live."

THE AIFLD is also active in other areas of social development, Doherty said, citing complete housing programs in nine counties and calling the AIFLD the "largest builder of worker-sponsored low-cost housing in Latin America."

Doherty noted that the AIFLD was founded in 1962 "as labor's response to Pres. Kennedy's call for a great 'Alliance for Progress' in Latin America. We were able to convince both the American business community and the United States government to join with us" in helping Latin American unions become "stronger and more viable institutions that would lead to better working conditions, better wages, and social development for the workers," he said.

Reporters questioning Doherty were Virginia Prewitt, columnist for the Washington Daily News and the North American Newspaper Alliance, and Neil Gilbride, labor correspondent for the Associated Press.

Washington Window

By Press Associates, Inc.

FOR MORE THAN HALF a century the United States has been trying to keep its corporations from growing bigger and bigger, from dominating their markets and destroying all competition, from the gouging of the public that inevitably follows monopoly.

We are now in the midst of a merger boom that has lasted more than 12 years and is still going on. Latest statistics from the Federal Trade Commission show what has been going on.

In 1950, the five largest corporations in the United States controlled 9.6 percent of total U.S. manufacturing assets. Today they control at least 11.8 percent.

In 1950 the 20 largest corporations controlled 20.7 percent of manufacturing assets. Today the figure is more than 24.6 percent.

In 1950 the 100 largest corporations controlled 38.6 percent of manufacturing assets. Today the figure is 45.4 percent.

And in 1950 the 200 largest corporations controlled 46.7 percent. Today the figure is more than 55.4 percent.

There was a time when these giant concentrations of power were confined to a few corporations which sought to destroy competition within their own branch of an industry. Then came vertical integration which saw, and still sees, the growth of monopolistic power over an entire industry from the production of raw materials through the manufacture of products to the financing of the sale of those products.

Today corporations, surfeited with profits, are buying into utterly unrelated industries either as tax gimmicks or as ways to control new markets and produce an endless circle of profits.

Most Americans find the story of corporate mergers and anti-trust activities exceeding boring. Yet, as Sen. Philip A. Hart (D-Mich) recently told the Washington Legislative Institute of the Rubber Workers:

"When you strip away the legal and economic gobbledygook anti-trust is usually—and so dully—cloaked in, we find we're talking about one thing: money in your pockets."

HART has good credentials for his statement. He is chairman of the Subcommittee on Anti-Trust & Monopoly of the Senate Judiciary Committee. He has been holding hearings on relatively obscure aspects of the lack of competition in the American economy and so has been a whole lot closer to obvious pocketbook monopoly cases than if he were dealing with U.S. Steel or General Motors.

- His committee has unearthed and condemned the practice of some doctors to sell prescription items such as drugs and eyeglasses for their own benefit.
- It has unearthed an international cartel that boosted the price of quinine, a drug used to treat heart irregularity, by 500 percent.
- It has reported on the anti-trust aspects of the funeral industry where it found "too many big funeral bills" due to price fixing.
- It has been told that in one month the five largest television advertisers used 20 percent of prime time network television, thus choking off much competition.
- It is now in the first phase of investigating credit life insurance involving kickbacks on that insurance you have to buy when you make a loan.

And it has many more such probes on its docket.

These are not necessarily in the billion dollar anti-trust class. Nevertheless they come close to home for millions of Americans who are the daily victims of the lack of competition.

Hart in his URW speech sounded somewhat discouraged. After citing many examples of how the public has been gouged through lack of competition, he said: "Now you may understand why the chairman of the anti-trust subcommittee is growing increasingly skeptical that anyone is really playing competition today."

He recommended that "competition watching should become the national pastime of consumers." It could be as much fun as football and a great deal more profitable for consumers.

FOUNDED just five years ago, the American Institute for Free Labor Development is now the largest institution for adult and worker education in the Western Hemisphere, AIFLD Administrator William C. Doherty, Jr. (center), told reporters Neil Gilbride of the Associated Press and Virginia Prewitt of the North American Newspaper Alliance on Labor News Conference. The AFL-CIO produced public affairs program is heard weekly on the Mutual Radio Network.

How to Buy:

A Long, Hot, Expensive Summer Is Forecast for the Consumer

By Sidney Margolius

THE FINANCIAL weather forecast is for a long, hot, expensive summer. With the wage-earner's real buying power already about $1.50 a week below a year ago, we're entering a period of seasonally rising prices, especially for meat.

A funny thing happened on the way to the market. During the past winter of dropping farm prices, retail food prices barely budged. If store prices remained up while farm prices fell, now that farm prices are rising again you can expect store prices to move up steadily from now until September.

There is no doubt that food processors and distributors have diverted the recent drops in farm prices to themselves instead of passing them on to consumers. In just one year, the share of your food dollar that goes to bring your food from farm to retail counter has risen from 59 cents to 62. The farmer's share has fallen to 38 cents.

Compared with a year ago, farm prices went down about 6.5 percent but wholesale prices less than 3 percent and retail prices less than 1. The National Cattlemen's Association is organizing a cutback in beef production in an effort to bolster their own falling prices. This will hurt moderate-income families but not the processors and retailers, who simply will pass along the higher prices.

Clothing stores also are boosting their prices more than necessary. The Bureau of Labor Statistics reports that in the past year retail apparel prices have gone up 4.1 percent compared with a 1.7 percent increase at wholesale. This means that the dollar increases have jumped even more than the percentage increase. An increase at wholesale of 60 cents on a suit that retails for $60 has become an increase of $2.50 in the price you pay.

The higher prices, however, have created more opportunities to buy at reduced prices at sales. Retailers are being forced to offer more specials and bigger clearances because of the slowdown in consumer buying. The annual clearances of men's summer suits and shirts begin in late June. Women's dresses also go on sale this month. This year's models of TV sets are reduced in price for clearance. Late this month also look for cut-price specials on refrigerators.

This is a good month to look for a buy in refrigerators, even though two of the largest manufacturers have announced increases.

But retailers are heavily stocked, and are finding it especially hard to sell the big and expensive side-by-side refrigerator-freezers and color refrigerators.

As far as the color models go, consumers have shown more sense than manufacturers and magazine editors who have tried to plug "color in the kitchen." Obviously color appliances, unless a neutral shade, create problems if you want to paint your kitchen a different color, or move, or bring in other appliances of a different shade.

MEANWHILE VALUES in ordinary white refrigerators are good. All-frostless 13-14 cubic foot refrigerator-freezers are available for $250 to $300. Models with bottom-mounted freezer give more freezer space, and the difference in price between these and the less-expensive top-mounted models is narrowed. But be careful about letting yourself be traded up to deluxe models of the same freezer.

Values in electric and gas ranges are relatively good, too. Modern ranges in 30-inch size with 24-25 inch ovens are available for under $200 currently. Always compare oven size in different models. This is as important as the overall size. Of two 30-inch models, one may provide only a 22-inch oven, the other 24 or 25 inches.

Don't overpay for additional features on ranges unless you really expect to use them. The same 30-inch range with 25-inch oven may sell for as little as $150 in the standard model, and gradually be stepped up to as much as $260 with such features as automatic cooktop unit, automatic oven control, infinite heat controls, fluorescent work light, and so on.

A Supreme Court decision involving the National Bellas Hess mail-order company in Missouri establishes that mail-order houses need not collect local sales taxes on sales to buyers in other states. The decision can provide some savings for residents of areas with large sales taxes, such as 4 or 5 percent. But the order does not affect the big mail-order firms like Sears and Ward who also have stores and catalog offices in the sales-tax states. They still must collect sales taxes.

Editorial Finds Unionists 'Up Front Among Doers'

Morgantown, W. Va.—Union members are "up front among the doers" when a worthwhile civic activity is under way, the Morgantown Dominion News observed in a recent editorial.

"The only time labor appears in most newspapers is when there is a strike or if some of their leaders are carted off to jail," the editorial said. "But the labor movement has a great story to tell, especially in West Virginia."

The writer cited attendance at a leadership training conference "with strong emphasis on responsibility" within the commuity which was sponsored by the State AFL-CIO and the Institute for Labor Studies at the Appalachian Center of West Virginia University.

"Union officials and rank-and-file members spent several days studying how they could best serve their neighbors," the editorial continued.

"Our state labor federation is doing quite a lot. It is involved in Job Corps training and recruitment, vocational training, financing of civic projects to attract industry and to assist the poor in many communities. One very seldom reads about all this positive action by the representatives of our working men.

"But attend an education board meeting or the United Fund or the YMCA and a host of other civic groups. Right up front among the doers (not the talkers) will be the men of labor."

Some Pay Nothing:

Millionaires Aided By Tax Loopholes

THERE WERE 482 individuals who made $1 million or more in 1964—and 19 of these did not pay a cent of income tax.

In 1963, 20 millionaires of a total of 371 got off tax free.

This year, about 24 will have figured a way to avoid paying income tax for 1966.

Their secret is taking advantage of loopholes in U.S. tax laws—loopholes that exist only when you make lots of money.

Out of 65.4 million tax returns filed with the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) in 1964, 95.7 percent were for adjusted gross incomes of $15,000 or less.

About half of all returns, 33 million, were for incomes of $5,000 or less.

People who earn their living solely from wages and salaries are the victims of loopholes in the law.

How does a big money earner go about escaping taxes?

Here is a case of a person whose 1965 adjusted gross income was $2 million and who paid no taxes:

"Unlimited charitable deductions" is the key.

To qualify, the millionaire's charitable contributions, plus his income tax, had to exceed 90 percent of his taxable income for eight out of the preceding 10 years.

Most taxpayers, even if they itemize their deductions on the "long form," can deduct only up to 20 percent of their net taxable income as contributions to charity.

ONCE THE MILLIONAIRE qualified under the "unlimited charitable deductions" loophole, he started giving money away.

Total contributions by him totaled $1.9 million and he also paid $50,000 in state income tax. In other words, he paid out all $2 million of his income, and had nothing left to tax.

But his $2 million adjusted gross income did not include interest on state and municipal bonds, for example, and he has plenty of them.

Nor does it include write-offs for drilling and developmental costs in the gas and oil industry, nor one-half of capital gains.

He has thousands of dollars of income from all of these sources—and more—that he doesn't have to include in his $2 million adjusted figure.

Tax laws are so complex that just listing the exemptions takes the Treasury Dept. 1,000 pages.

Some congressmen have been battling unsuccessfully for years to close the tax loopholes.

Until the holes are closed you can take cheer in the fact that nothing keeps you from taking advantage of some of the same breaks in the future providing you make a million.

From Soup to Nonsense:

Books on How to Save Money Can Only Be Called Depressing

By Jane Goodsell

A LOT OF BOOKS have been written on how to save money, and most of them are just plain depressing. They are filled with dismal, pinchpenny recommendations — how to make rubber bands at home out of old galoshes and recipes for lamb necks, pork heart and beef liver.

They pose distressing questions such as "Can you really afford a car?" and "Is your house too expensive for you?" and then proceed to prove, step by wretched step, that you certainly can't and it most assuredly is.

Although you probably consider yourself a fairly thrifty individual (after all, you do save string, and you don't send things to the cleaners without first trying to remove the gravy spots yourself), you are certain to end up convinced that you are a reckless spendthrift who throws money around like a drunken you-know-what.

And even if you follow the advice contained in those books, where are you? To begin with, you're at home because you can't possibly afford to go anywhere. And it certainly isn't very pleasant at home because you're keeping the thermostat set at 63 degrees to save fuel. What's more, you're fatter from eating so much low-cost starch.

But the real point is: are you richer? And the answer is no. Or anyway, not very much. Clearly, pinching pennies is a miserable way to save money.

There is, however, a simply marvelous—and marvelously simple—way to save money, and I can't understand why nobody else has thought of it. If you'll lean a little closer, I'll whisper it into your ear: The Best Way to Save Money is to be Very, Very Rich.

IF YOU ARE really rich, you can lose at the races and dine at places that call hamburger "Chopped Tenderloin de Boeuf en Brochette" and still save money. Simple when you come to think of it, isn't it?

What's that? What are you mumbling about? You want to know how you get to be very, very rich? For heaven's sake, must I do all your thinking for you? Can't you figure out anything for yourself?

Actually, there are dozens of ways to get rich. You could write a best-seller, win the Irish Sweepstakes, discover oil in your backyard, make a killing in the stock market, compose a Top Ten tune, persuade J. Paul Getty to adopt you. Or say, why don't you invent something?

Key Rollcall on Aid to Education Bill

Title III of the Elementary & Secondary Education Act authorizes federal funds for bold experimentation in new ways to reach and teach children who need more help than the ordinary classroom routine can provide. It carries 15 percent of the total federal aid money, and the special services developed are available to children attending both public and private schools.

A labor-opposed amendment by Rep. Edith Green (D-Ore.) removes federal supervision of this program and turns the money over to the states as a block grant. The Green amendment passed on a 230-185 rollcall.

Wrong votes (W) for the amendment were cast by 154 Republicans and 76 Democrats. Voting right (R) were 159 Democrats and 26 Republicans. Other symbols: PR—paired right; PW—paired wrong; A—absent and not paired. Numerals show districts; AL—at large.

REVOLUTIONS in cybernation, weaponry and civil rights will transform the lives of this year's college graduates, Pres. Miles C. Stanley of the West Virginia AFL-CIO declared in the commencement address at West Virginia State College, Charleston. Fair Sharing of Productivity Gains Called Vital to Nation's Well-Being

A fairer distribution of the gains flowing from rapid economic growth is essential to the nation's well-being, AFL-CIO Economist Irving Beller writes in the May issue of the American Federationist.

Charging flatly that "workers have been shortchanged" by maldistribution of the higher income growing out of increased productivity over the past few years, Beller declares the sharing of productivity gains "must be equitable, it must give priority to social needs and it must not block continued economic growth."

"As a matter of equity," he adds, "all groups are entitled to share the benefits of rising productivity. No one group can claim all the credit for the steady increases in productivity the nation has enjoyed, and no one group is, therefore, entitled to all the benefits which flow from such increases."

Beller acknowledges that business investment in machines and management skill are among the factors contributing to rising productivity, but "American labor's willingness to accept change and to spend time and money in developing new skills are also basic factors."

The "most powerful single source" might be, he says, "society in general." He cites the "enormous contribution" of public agencies at all levels in "the accumulation and transmission of knowledge, the support of research and development, the construction of roads, airports, hospitals and other public facilities, the maintenance of law and order, the elimination of trade barriers. . . ."

Special Obligation

As a matter of social justice, he observes, the country cannot overlook the fact that nearly 50 million people live in poverty or on its edges, and that the Negro "has been shut out and denied basic rights."

"This imposes a special obligation upon the nation—an obligation to devote a major portion of its productivity gains to the correction of such injustices as quickly as it possibly can," he says.

If wages fail to rise high enough while profits, dividends and other forms of income increase disproportionately, Beller states, consumer demand for goods and services will lag.

"Wealth will become concentrated in the hands of those who tend to save much of their income or invest it," he continues. "The result, inevitably, will be a further widening in the gap between the ability to produce and the ability to consume.

"In the 1930s, America had an unforgettable demonstration of what happens when business retains the lion's share of the benefits of increasing productivity. . .

"This year the nation has received another reminder of the dangers of imbalanced income flows. Fueled by a fantastic growth in profits, business investment in plant and equipment soared to a level which could not possibly be sustained. The splurge in investment brought vast amounts of new productive capacity into being at the very time that the growth of consumer purchasing power was slowing down. As a result of these and other factors, the longest peacetime expansion in the nation's history reached a virtual standstill in the first quarter."

Beller, a member of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research staff, says that the implications for public and private policy are clear:

"The government must help close the gap between actual and potential production by increasing expenditures for the nation's most urgent needs.

"Measures to stimulate profits and investment which have received so much emphasis in the past are only likely to widen the gap. . . .

"Balanced economic expansion, equity, justice—and higher productivity as well—call for greater public investment in the training, education, health and other needs of people. This investment is needed particularly for poor people whose development has suffered because of past under-investment in human resources.

"They call for greater expenditures to make the cities more pleasant and more efficient places in which to live and work. They call for the creation of jobs for millions of unskilled workers in badly needed public service employment; for higher minimum wages; for improved welfare programs and for many other kinds of action which only governments can undertake. . . ."

The proper distribution of the increasing gains will depend to an even greater extent on the private sector, Beller says.

If its decisions are based on a "rigid and unrealistic" formula tieing wage increases to productivity rises, the distribution is likely to be "neither equitable nor economically sound," he adds. They must be based instead, he states, on a "flexible application" of the principles underlying the relationship between wages, prices, profits and productivity.

ILPA, Unions Donate Tapes By Sandburg

Detroit—A comprehensive collection of tape recordings by Carl Sandburg, including both public appearances and private conversations, has been presented to the labor archives of Wayne State University by the Intl. Labor Press Association and four unions.

The collection includes 160 boxed tapes and two leather-bound volumes of transcripts. The tapes had been made over many years by Leo Orso of Silver Spring, Md., a friend of Sandburg.

When ILPA learned that Orso wanted to place the collection in an appropriate institution, it secured the agreement of the four unions to share the cost with ILPA itself. The cooperating unions are the Auto Workers, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Meat Cutters and Steelworkers.

At a ceremony in the Wayne library, Dr. Winfred Harbison, university vice president, accepted the collection from Kenneth Fiester, ILPA secretary-treasurer. Representing their unions were Emil Mazey, UAW secretary-treasurer; J. W. Johnson, IBEW vice president; Ray Dickow, managing editor of the Butcher Workman, and Ray W. Pasnick, editor of Steel Labor. The latter two are also ILPA vice presidents.

Music College Grants Recognition to Teachers

New York—Trustees of the New York College of Music voted to recognize the United Federation of College Teachers, Local 1460 of the AFL-CIO Teachers, as bargaining agent for the faculty.

The college provides music and general education courses leading to the baccalaureate degree, and trains many teachers for the public school system. Faculty members include noted musicians.

Bias Against Workers Charged:

Bill to Curb Rights Of Debtors Scored

Wage-earners who get over their heads in debt should continue to have the same legal rights as corporations that find themselves in a financial bind, the AFL-CIO maintained at a congressional hearing.

Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller testified in opposition to a bill which would prevent an individual from going into bankruptcy unless he can prove that he had no possibility of ever paying his debts out of future earnings.

At present both individuals and businesses have the same legal rights. They can go into bankruptcy, turning over virtually all their assets to creditors to wipe the slate clean, or they can enter into a voluntary procedure with the courts for consolidation and future payment of the debts.

Biemiller told a House Judiciary subcommittee that labor's objection to the legislation is threefold:

- "The bill, contrary to the principles of our bankruptcy laws, precludes an honest debtor from a discharge of the burdens of his debt.
- "The bill discriminates against a wage earner, denying him privileges which are left available to all other debtors, including corporations.
- "The bill does not cure the economic evil of supereasy credit, the dominant cause of wage earner bankruptcy, but encourages easier credit still by placing another collection weapon in the hands of the already too heavily armed creditor."

Biemiller said the "gross discrimination" in the bill is evidenced by the more generous treatment given "to the fictitious corporation, the proprietor, the partner, the farmer, the professional man." It would be a step back to the era of the debtors prison, he warned.

The procedure for court consolidation and financial supervision of debts to avoid bankruptcy should be kept voluntary, the AFL-CIO urged.

What Congress should do to cut down on bankruptcy, the federation's statement said, is to enact a truth-in-lending law and limit garnishments of wages so that merchants would think twice before luring low-income families into expensive purchases carrying high credit charges.

Biemiller noted that a 1963 survey found that the typical bankrupt was a person earning between $4,000 and $6,000 a year. Such a person, he declared, should have the same opportunity as other groups in society for "a fresh start in life."

He said the bill, "far from ameliorating the problem of overextension of credit, will contribute to further abuse."

Labor Papers Urged To Broaden Coverage

San Diego—Labor publications have a commitment to be "liberal disturbers of the peace," delegates to the California Labor Press Association's third annual convention were told.

Coverage should be expanded, leaders of the academic and trade union worlds said, to hit on every vital area of concern of the membership. And, they said, the publications must upgrade themselves into effective educational tools and conscience prods in legislative and human rights matters.

The labor press in California has a particularly difficult task, because of the Ronald Reagan administration's "nihilistic outlook on life and the working man," said Sigmund Arywitz, secretary of the Los Angeles County AFL-CIO and a former labor editor himself.

"Your task is to tell the truth about what's going on in Sacramento and to tell it in each issue," he told the editors.

Wider Scope Urged

Arywitz was joined by Fred Schmidt of the UCLA Industrial Relations Dept. in urging editors to go beyond traditional local union news and "seek out the bigger issues."

A panel of newsmen discussed methods of spreading labor's story through metropolitan newspapers and television outlets. The panel included Dick Meister of the San Francisco Chronicle, Dan Swinton of the Los Angeles Herald-Examiner, Harry Bernstein of the Los Angeles Times, Vincent Dunne of the San Diego Tribune and NBC Los Angeles News Dir. Bill Brown.

Other speakers at the three-day convention included Daniel G. Aldrich, chancellor of the University of California at Irvine; Ray Davidson, president of the Intl. Labor Press Association; R. R. Richardson, secretary of the San Diego AFL-CIO; Henry Santiestevan, editor of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. magazine, Agenda, and Bill Johnson, UCLA journalism professor and former reporter and editor for Time-Life.

Don Harris, editor of the Los Angeles Citizen, was re-elected to his second term as secretary-treasurer, as were most members of the executive board.

The convention also unanimously approved a resolution assailing proposed postal rate increases as "shocking" because they would "very likely make it impossible for a number of California labor publications to continue to publish." Stressing that the organization is "not flatly opposed to any increase," the resolution urges Congress to "avoid imposing this disproportionate, unjust and discriminatory rate increase on non-profit second class mail."

ACWA Staffer Wins Fulbright Scholarship

Connie Kopelov, associate education director of the Clothing Workers, has been awarded a senior Fulbright scholarship by the State Dept.'s Bureau of Educational & Cultural Affairs.

Miss Kopelov will spend the 1967-68 academic year studying labor education in England, where she will be attached to the University of Sheffield. Her research will include study of the degree of worker participation in politics and of the techniques used in educating British workers on major social issues.

States '67 Record: Better than Average

Labor Gains Outweigh Losses In Legislative Actions to Date

for major gains in New Jersey, Hawaii and Vermont.

New Jersey is one of a minority of states whose legislature meets annually instead of every two years. The current legislature, rounding out two years in office, was the first controlled by the Democrats in 52 years, and the State AFL-CIO reports that it enacted "more legislation beneficial to the wage earners of New Jersey than had been passed in the previous 52 years."

The 1967 accomplishments included keying unemployment benefits to a percentage of the state average wage, resulting in an immediate boost in the maximum from $50 to $62 a week, and extension of benefits to strikers after six weeks. First session accomplishments had included the state's first wage-hour law, a ban on lie detector tests in employment and dues checkoff for public employes.

Hawaii's reapportionment shifted Senate control to cities where AFL-CIO unions are strong and helped produce "the most productive session in history," the state federation reported. Land reform ending feudal control by a handful of families and pioneering consumer legislation were among the accomplishments.

As always, the search for new revenues resulted in tax policy battles in many legislatures. While a number of states raised sales taxes—generally opposed by labor as "regressive" taxation— several additional states shifted to at least a partially progressive income tax or to higher corporate taxes.

In the context of goals and needs, the legislative achievements in most states fall far short. But in terms of past patterns, 1967 ranks as a better than average year. There were fewer states than usual whose comments echoed the report from the Utah State AFL-CIO: "Thank God they have adjourned and have gone home!"

These were more than matched by reactions such as that of the West Virginia federation. After the last election, its prediction had been: "Outlook for labor and liberal legislation appears dim." But at the session's end, the comment was "one of the best ever."

Here is a state-by-state summary of major legislative actions to date:

ALASKA—A slow-paced first session for Alaska's Republican-controlled legislature enacted a labor-opposed "autonomy" law requiring all unions having 100 members or more in Alaska to have at least one local in the state. On the plus side, House has passed a truth-in-lending bill and the governor has set up and staffed a consumer protection division. The Senate defeated a House-passed resolution calling for a constitutional convention to enact the Dirksen Amendment upsetting one man, one vote apportionment.

ARKANSAS—Passed by the Democratic legislature and signed by the Republican governor was a bill authorizing union dues checkoff for state employes. Other gains included laws exempting the first $25 of wages from garnishment, extending voting hours, publicizing requests of insurance companies for rate increases, and covering newsboys under a modified form of workmen's compensation. Just before adjournment, the House approved, 87-2, a minimum wage bill starting at $1 and rising to $1.20 but the Senate refused to suspend its rules to take it up. On the minus side of the ledger, the legislature totally disqualified persons who quit their jobs from unemployment benefits unless they have had at least 30 days of intervening work.

COLORADO — Workmen's compensation weekly benefits were raised $5.25 to new maximum of $54.25. New community college and vocational education system was established. Most labor bills, good and bad alike, died in committee.

HAWAII—Helped by reapportionment, Hawaii legislature was "most productive in history for AFL-CIO sponsored legislation," State AFL-CIO reports. Accomplishments included land reform, giving thousands of people who lease their homesites from the island's big estates the right to buy the land. Consumer protection enacted includes a law preventing an employer from firing a worker because his wages are garnisheed, a "truth in advertising law" requiring merchants who advertise "no down payment" or "low monthly payments" to specify in the same ad—whether newspaper, radio or TV—the total cost of the item being sold and the amount of interest charges.

Hawaii also became the first state to establish an office of "ombudsman," modeled after the system in Scandinavian nations, to hear and act on complaints against government by private citizens.

Workmen's compensation was amended to give equal benefits to alien dependents when a worker is killed in an industrial accident. Previously citizen dependents could receive $35,000 in death benefits; aliens only $10,000. A code of ethics was enacted for both elected and appointed state officials, two safety laws were passed, and strong curbs were put on wiretapping and other forms of eavesdropping. The use of police dogs was prohibited at any picket line or public assembly.

IDAHO—Workmen's compensation benefits raised $5 to $12 a week, indemnities for specific disabilities raised $7 a week. Consumers aided by repeal of 10-cents-a-pound tax on oleomargarine. Compromise raises state minimum wage to $1.15 an hour on Feb. 1, 1968 and $1.25 a year later. Ban on sex job discrimination enacted. Pensions no longer counted in computing unemployment benefits.

INDIANA — Minimum wage goes from $1 to $1.15 next January, and to $1.25 on July 1, 1968. Uniform hours of work limitations set for boys and girls of 16 and 17. Top weekly benefits under workmen's compensation and occupation diseases act raised from $45 to $51. Unemployment insurance ceiling, including maximum dependency benefits, raised from $43 to $52.

IOWA—Fair housing law enacted. Democratic Senate and Republican House deadlocked on most controversal legislation.

KANSAS — Labor-supported medicaid bill enacted. State income tax cut by lowering tax rate on first $2,000 of income from 2.5 to 2 percent. Workmen's compensation improved, with maximum weekly benefits rising from $42 to $49.

MARYLAND — Reapportionment brought a freshman majority in both houses and passage of a number of labor-backed bills. A package of workmen's compensation improvements was enacted, including higher benefit levels. Unemployment insurance was liberalized by allowing a worker drawing a pension to receive full unemployment benefits if he had intervening employment and was then laid off. The state minimum wage floor was raised from $1 to $1.15 and will go to $1.30 on June 1, 1968. A limited open housing bill was passed, applying to apartment houses and new homes built after June 1. Opponents seek to rescind the law by petitioning it to referendum.

The legislature also broadened the state's public accommodations law and repealed an ancient anti-miscegenation law. A labor-supported bill requiring payment of prevailing wages by the Maryland Port Authority was passed. A compromise graduated income tax was described by the State AFL-CIO as "a step in the right direction."

MINNESOTA—Modest boost in unemployment benefit ceiling from $47 to $50 a week passed in regular session. Qualifications tightened to require 18 instead of 17 weeks of work in base period. Special session of legislature boosted workmen's compensation maximum from $45 to $60.

MISSOURI—Collective bargaining law enacted covering employes of state, county and city governments. It had strong labor backing.

MONTANA—Workmen's compensation benefits raised from $2 to $4 a week, with top for worker with four or more children going from $56 to $60. Improvements made in other phases of workmen's compensation. Unemployment compensation legislation blocked.

NEBRASKA — State's first minimum wage law enacted, setting $1-an-hour floor for some 20,000 workers not covered by federal law. Unemployment benefits raised from $40 to $44 maximum; workmen's compensation from $42 to $45.

NEVADA — Unemployment compensation top raised $2 a week to $43 for a single worker to $63 with maximum dependent allowance. Workmen's compensation injury schedule and death benefits raised 50 percent and occupational disease coverage broadened. Labor-supported air pollution control bill and labor-opposed sales tax increase passed.

NEW JERSEY — "The major portion of labor's legislative program" was enacted during the past two years, when reapportionment gave Democrats control of both houses of the legislature for the first time in 52 years. The 1967 session accomplishments included an unemployment compensation law setting maximum benefits at 50 percent of the state average wage—an immediate jump from a $50 to a $62 ceiling. Benefits will also be paid after the sixth week of a strike.

Other 1967 improvements include authorization for union dues checkoff for public employes, and penalties against employers who violate agreements to make payments into welfare funds.

NEW MEXICO—Workmen's compensation top raised $5 to $45 a week; unemployment compensation ceiling increased $4 to $40. State minimum wage raised in three steps—July 1, 1967, Feb. 1, 1968 and Feb. 1, 1969. Service employes go from present 80-cent minimum to $1, $1.15 and $1.30. The same schedule applies to agricultural workers, who are being covered for the first time. Other workers go from the present 90-cent minimum to $1.25, $1.40 and $1.60 in the final step.

NEW YORK—State AFL-CIO reports the legislature "substituted one unworkable law for another" by replacing the unenforceable Condon-Wadlin Act automatically firing public employes who strike with a new law fining unions up to $10,000 for each day of a strike and requiring a no-strike pledge of any union bargaining for public employes.

The legislature passed a labor-supported bill barring the use of so-called lie detectors in employment, but Gov. Nelson Rockefeller vetoed it. Two consumer bills were enacted. One prohibits the addition of attorney fees when an installment sales contract is handed over to a lawyer for collection. The other seeks to end the racket of using help wanted advertisements to lure persons into buying machines or materials required for "work at home" jobs.

OKLAHOMA — Unemployment compensation ceiling raised from $32 to $38. Qualifying earnings slightly increased.

SOUTH DAKOTA—Heavily-compromised unemployment compensation bill raises benefit ceiling from $36 to $39 and extends duration from 24 to 26 weeks. Some improvements in workmen's compensation but most labor bills died.

TENNESSEE — Unemployment benefit ceiling up from $38 to $42 and qualifications eased. Human development commission established. Labor-backed bill limiting garnishment of wages enacted.

TEXAS—Unemployment compensation raised from $37 to $45 maximum and from $10 to $15 minimum. Occupational safety bill enacted. All levels of government barred from discrimination in employment. Cities permitted, but not required, to set up checkoff system for union dues. Despite a massive campaign by labor and church groups, legislature failed to act on a minimum wage law. Labor-supported bill allowing bus drivers to retain bargaining rights and benefits when cities take over private lines was narrowly defeated.

UTAH—A "very poor legislature . . . thankfully has adjourned," the State AFL-CIO reports. One small gain: workmen's compensation and occupational disease benefit maximums raised $2 to $44 for single worker, $62 with dependent wife and four or more children.

VERMONT—A reapportioned legislature raised the state's minimum wage from $1.25 to $1.40, passed a fair housing law, raised workmen's compensation benefits from $41 to $52 this year and $54 in 1968, with children's allowances boosted from $2.50 to $3.50 per child. Coverage extended to include farm workers and firms with three or more employes, down from the previous five.

State labor relations law enacted, with a little NLRB. City employes are given the right to collective bargaining. Labor-supported tax reform enacted, with added exemption for low-income groups and heavier taxes on top income brackets. Package of consumer protection laws includes disclosure of true interest rates on all installment buying. Education spending increased. Vermont has a Republican legislature and a Democratic governor.

WASHINGTON — State minimum wage raised in two steps from $1.25 to $1.60 by Jan. 1, 1968. A meaningful package of consumer protection laws was enacted, in cluding annual interest rate disclosure on installment sales and an interest ceiling, a 24-hour "cooling-off" period on sales contracts signed in the home, and stronger supervision of insurance companies.

A "landmark" collective bargaining law for public employes was enacted. The legislature passed a compromise open housing law and extended the state's "little Davis-Bacon Act" to apply to maintenance service contracts for public buildings. A dissappointment was failure to improve unemployment compensation.

WEST VIRGINIA—Legislative session was described as "one of the best ever." Unemployment compensation was put on a percentage of average earnings, and even though it was pegged at only 40 percent, the immediate effect was to raise the $35 maximum to $43. Workmen's compensation benefits were boosted from $42 to $47 maximum and from $20 to $22 minimum. A strengthened civil rights bill was passed.

A "tough" strip mining law was enacted and fines up to $1,000 a day were authorized for firms guilty of violating anti-pollution regulations. Motorists were protected against arbitrary cancellation of car insurance and tax reform shifted burden from wage-earners.

WYOMING — Labor "had to work very hard . . . for small gains" which included: a three-step minimum wage increase from $1 to $1.30 by Jan. 1, 1969; a prevailing wage bill covering public construction; a $3 increase in workmen's compensation top benefits, and eligibility for unemployment benefits for persons recovered after a period on workmen's compensation. A "right-to-work" repealer passed the House but died in Senate committee.

7 More Unions Qualify For Affiliation Awards

Seven more national and international unions qualified in 1966 for the AFL-CIO award given when 80 percent of their local unions have affiliated with their appropriate State AFL-CIO central bodies.

The number of unions with 80 percent affiliation or better now stands at 19, Stanton E. Smith, coordinator of state and city central bodies, said in a report to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany.

The following newly qualified unions will receive plaques for their affiliation record at the December convention of the AFL-CIO in Miami Beach:

American Bakery & Confectionery Workers; Broadcast Employes & Technicians; Glass & Ceramic Workers; Glass Bottle Blowers; Laundry & Dry Cleaning Union; Plate Printers, Die Stampers & Engravers; Retail Clerks.

Farm Bureau Extols 'Joys' of Child Labor

Despite the efforts of labor and church groups, the Texas legislature failed to pass a state minimum wage law. It listened instead to opponents such as the Farm Bureau witness who testified:

"Children come to work on my farm to till the soil, breathe the fresh air, pull their shoes off and feel the earth between their toes.

"If this (minimum wage) bill passes, all this will have to stop."

Treasury Financing Urged:

LBJ Proposes Plan On Campaign Costs

Public financing of the major costs of presidential campaigns has been proposed by Pres. Johnson, with Congress appropriating funds and the comptroller general disbursing and auditing the monies.

In a special message to Congress, the President proposed also major changes in existing campaign financing and election laws and urged a study of better ways to finance elections below the presidential level.

The Senate Finance Committee is scheduled to hold hearings on the President's proposals. The committee currently has been instructed by the Senate to draw up an elections reform bill, including financing, as a replacement for the act adopted last year but suspended during the current session.

That act, sponsored by Sen. Russell B. Long (D-La.), would have allowed taxpayers to check off on their income tax forms a $1 contribution to help finance presidential campaigns.

No Formula Set

The plan submitted by the President would allow Congress in each presidential year to appropriate a fund to pay for major elements of the campaign. There would be no formula to govern the size of the fund. The amount would be calculated in consultation with an advisory board to the Controller General.

The federal fund would be divided evenly between the major parties. Minor parties—those polling between 5 and 25 percent of the vote—would be reimbursed on the basis of a per-vote expenditure of the major parties.

The federal money could be spent only to "bring the issues before the public." This would include radio and television, newspaper and magazine advertising, preparation and distribution of literature and travel costs. Other expenses—staff salaries, telephones, administration, etc., would have to be raised through private contributions.

No primary or convention expenditures could be charged to the federal funds by any candidate or party and only official party nominees could benefit from the assistance.

In addition to financing presidential elections, the President proposed the following changes:

- Restrictions on political contributions, with no individual, family or organization permitted to give more than $5,000 to any candidate.
- Fuller disclosure of all contributions to and expenditures by any candidate for federal office but removal of "totally unrealistic and inadequate" ceilings on campaign expenditures.
- Stricter regulation of lobbying and contributions by federal contractors.
- Action to make citizens who move just before a presidential election eligible to vote for President in a new state if they establish residence there before Sept. 1.

HELP FOR THE ELDERLY should not be diverted by the war in Viet Nam or any other source of international tension, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (speaking) told the convention of the National Council of Senior Citizens in Washington. Seated next to the Massachusetts Democrat is NCSC Pres. John W. Edelman, retired legislative representative of the Textile Workers Union of America.

Senior Citizens Spur Campaign For Stronger Social Security

- A stepped-up employment program for the elderly poor.
- Establishment of a federal consumer council to publicize the facts on price changes.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.), addressing the delegates, said world crises in Viet Nam or elsewhere must not be allowed to become an excuse for denying the elderly poor a share in the prosperity they helped create.

Higher Benefits Backed

He expressed support for higher monthly benefits to the retired and for medicare improvements that include reduction or elimination of the $40 hospitalization payment, the $50 down payment on doctor bills, and the required payment of a fifth of the remainder; payment for drugs administered outside a hospital or other health institution, and payment for eye glasses, hearing aids, dental needs and wheel chairs.

Kennedy also declared that medicare must be amended to cover chronic illnesses and that the quality of nursing home care must be improved. In addition, he called on Congress to set up a senior service corps to provide jobs for the elderly who want to work, and urged greater efforts by the Office of Economic Opportunity to meet the needs of the elderly poor.

"The U.S. has focused its attention and resources on meeting the needs of senior citizens more than at any time past," the senator said, "but we have not yet done enough. . . . There are still hungry people who cannot buy the food they need, sick people who cannot afford the health care and medication they need, people whose homes are unsafe and unsanitary and people who are forced to live out the twilight of their lives in boredom, frustration and pain."

Sec. of Health, Education & Welfare John W. Gardner told the convention that the President's proposed social security improvements cannot be postponed.

"We like to think we've broken the ancient and universal link between age and poverty, but we haven't," Gardner observed.

"Social security was designed to be our first line of defense against poverty. That line has become shockingly thin. For too many it is virtually invisible. . . . Half our older people have incomes below or near the poverty line—close to 10 million—despite social security."

He pointed out that the 20 percent overall social security increase Johnson recommended to Congress would give retirees a raise nearly five times greater than the largest previous boost. Both the AFL-CIO and the NCSC have endorsed the hike as a step toward a benefit level 50 percent above the present.

'Good Old Days' Deplored

"Some people like to talk about the 'good old days' when every family took care of its own," Gardner said. "In the 'good old days' we could close our eyes to uncomfortable facts. Today we are beginning to see older people as people and we don't believe they are somehow less eligible for the good things of life or less able to participate in the life around them simply because they have had a certain number of birthdays. . . ."

A warning that some groups that fought medicare as it was being inched through Congress now see it as a "bonanza" was sounded by Nelson Cruikshank, retired director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security.

"We must be on the alert," he added, "or we may see a great many new hospitals and health facilities financed under medicare with not enough left in the medicare fund to provide treatment for those medicare was intended to benefit."

Cruikshank attacked the medicare provision giving doctors the choice of billing patients directly or processing bills through the payment agency. In many communities, he added, "just about all" doctors bill directly, giving medicare patients no choice. He predicted that if most doctors continue the practice, Congress will find some other method of processing claims.

Social security benefits have been kept down because of failure of the tax rate to keep pace with the rise in personal income, Cruikshank charged.

"Keeping down this coverage was a well-planned scheme put over by the conservatives in Congress back in the 1930s," he recalled. "If the conservatives had permitted a reasonable broadening of the social security tax base in the early days of the system, there would be enough now to pay for a substantial benefit increase."

Other speakers included Assistant Sec. Don Hummel of the Dept. of Housing & Urban Development and two department aides, Sydney Spector and Moses J. Gozonsky; NCSC Exec. Dir. William R. Hutton, and other NCSC officials.

Awards of Merit were presented by the council to the Auto Workers, Machinists and Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers in the international union division and to Pres. George W. Apperson of Washington Div. 689, Amalgamated Transit Union, in the local union division.

Also honored were Rep. John Dingel (D-Mich.); State Sen. Samuel Harmon (Mass.); Richard Harris, author of "A Sacred Trust," and Thomas Vinciguerra, reporter for the Fort Lauderdale, Fla., News, for a series of articles that led to a change in the method of buying drugs for welfare recipients that saved the state $150,000 a month.

Labor Backs Johnson On Mideast Aggression

and free world governments were consulting on the best methods of meeting the Soviet-mounted challenge.

In his statement, the federation president declared that "American labor favors the President's policy of utilizing all diplomatic channels, inclusive of the UN, and seeking combined efforts by the maritime powers to secure a just settlement of the present crisis in the Middle East." He continued:

"However, the Soviet government and its Communist bloc would make a fatal error to assume that our country's exhaustive diplomatic efforts for a just peace means that the United States would, in the process, become exhausted and appease aggression by accepting such actions which Pres. Johnson has appropriately branded 'illegal and potentially disastrous to the cause of peace.' "

If Nasser and the Soviets were to succeed in their aggression, Meany warned, other Middle East countries would lose their national independence and the USSR would succeed in its drive to take over the Red Sea-Arabian Peninsula-Persian Gulf region and to deny the free world access to its energy resources.

Earlier, the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions had called on the UN to "assume its full responsibility in carrying out its peace-keeping functions" in the Middle East.

A number of AFL-CIO maritime unions have proposed a worldwide boycott of Egyptian shipping if Nasser attempts to implement his threat to prevent ships headed for the Israeli port of Elath from using the Gulf of Aqaba.

Akron, O.—W. Edward Fielder, first labor staff representative to the Summit County United Fund, died at his home here after a heart attack. Fielder was a member of Rubber Workers Local 5 who retired in 1965 after 21 years of community service work. His wife and two children survive.

Meany Pledges Labor's Aid To Insure Israel's Survival

CONTINGENT OF SEAFARERS is shown marching in New York City parade which was planned as an observance of Israel's 19th anniversary but was turned into an expression of solidarity with that country. An estimated 50,000 marchers, representing all segments of the community, participated in the march up Riverside Drive.

Condemns Nasser As Soviet Puppet

By Eugene A. Kelly

American labor will stand "side by side with our trade union friends" in Israel and help them through the crisis of war with their Arab neighbors led by a "new bully on the international scene"—a "puppet of Moscow," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany declared.

Labor "never has hesitated to raise its voice against tyranny and dictatorship," Meany reminded 300 delegates to the third national legislative conference of the Meat Cutters, held in Washington. He spoke only a few hours after war erupted in the Middle East.

"I don't know what the legal commitments are," he told the delegates, "but we have a moral obligation here in the United States to see to it that Israel as a nation has the right to live."

Recalling that Israel was founded in 1948 by David Ben-Gurion and other trade union leaders, Meany said labor has a "tremendous interest" in the young state whose government for 19 years was headed by the two chief officers of Histadrut, the Israeli labor federation.

"Now we have another bully on the international scene, following Hitler and Mussolini and Stalin and Khrushchev—Mr. Nasser, who in my book is a puppet of Soviet Russia, of Moscow," he declared.

"A few days ago he was going to do a lot of things, but today I don't know how well he is doing."

Bound by Hate

The Arab coalition headed by Nasser consists of Egypt and some other states "that joined in Nasser's little caper" without much unity except on one subject—war against Israel, the AFL-CIO president observed.

"To think that a nation, a leader, has the guiding principle that Nasser proclaims," he remarked. "And what is that principle?

"Is it a more productive economy? Is it better health, higher educational standard? No—none of these things.

"It is the extermination of a neighbor country—and that's the word they use—extermination."

Nasser and his allies have "embarked on an experiment" based on the claim that Israel is the aggressor, Meany said.

Israel's enemies, he said have made speeches for many years urging the extermination of the Jewish state, but "because of a speech made in April" considered threatening by Syria, the Nasser forces went into action "without

Joblessness Edges Up To 3.8%

By Robert B. Cooney

The nation's jobless rate edged up to 3.8 percent in May as a sluggish economy slowed employment growth, the Labor Dept. has reported.

Although the unemployment rate rose by one-tenth of 1 percent in both April and May, it remains within the range of 3.5 to 3.9 percent that prevailed for the past year.

Arthur M. Ross, commissioner of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, characterized the direction of economic movement so far this year as "essentially horizontal."

The Labor Dept. report showed that the slowdown in the demand for labor in recent months also apparently discouraged seasonal or temporary workers, mainly women, from seeking jobs.

Ross explained that just as a reduction in hours serves as a

Next Move Up to House:

Senate Passes Rail Strike Ban, Rejects Profit Freeze Proposal

By David L. Perlman

The Senate voted to prevent rail shopcraft workers from striking for higher wages and to compel them to submit to compulsory arbitration if a final mediation effort fails to bring a settlement.

It passed the labor-opposed compulsory arbitration bill, 70-15. Earlier it turned down, by a 59-23 vote, an amendment by Sen. Ralph W. Yarborough (D-Tex.) which sought to limit the profits rail management would make because of the no-strike law. Other amendments to make the compulsory arbitration legislation less one-sided were similarly defeated.

The next move is up to the House, where the Commerce Committee completed hearings and began closed door consideration of the Administration's compulsory arbitration bill—and of less drastic alternatives.

Before the Senate vote, the AFL-CIO reiterated its strong opposition to compulsory arbitration and urged senators to support the Yarborough amendment as "essential" to bringing a degree of equity to the legislation.

AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller wrote senators:

"The labor movement is opposed to compulsory arbitration in this and other labor disputes. We do not believe that workers should be made to work upon terms to which they have not agreed for the private profit and benefit of their employers."

Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.) was the floor leader for the Administration bill, which provides for a 90-day period of mediation under the guidance of a new special board to be named by the President. If no agreement were reached, the board could dictate the terms of settlement—to be binding until Dec. 31, 1968. Two previous mediation boards have failed to bring an agreement and Congress previously imposed a 45-day strike ban, which expires June 19.

State Protective Laws Urged for Both Sexes

State laws providing protections for women workers not only should be retained but their safeguards should be extended to men, AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller declared in a statement filed with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

The commission had invited comment on amendments and additions to its proposed "Guidelines on Discrimination Because of Sex." Biemiller's statement dealt primarily with the question of the effect of federal equal employment opportunity legislation on state protective enactments.

He also called on the commission to maintain its decision to make no determination where an employer claims he cannot grant equal opportunity without violating state laws, but to advise the parties of their right to take the dispute to the courts.

"Historically," Biemiller said, "the state labor legislation initially enacted for the benefit of women has served not only as a direct protection for women, but also as a means of abating abuses for men."

He said it has increased the acceptability of standards for all workers and helped unions improve working conditions in the face of unfair competition on the part of

IUE Upheld On Multi-union GE Committee

A National Labor Relations Board examiner has ruled that General Electric Co. engaged in unfair labor practices when it refused to bargain with a union committee including representatives of other unions.

The finding by Trial Examiner David London came in a case growing out of the coordinated bargaining efforts of 11 AFL-CIO unions with GE which resulted in important gains in new contracts.

Prior to the settlement, however, GE had refused to meet with the

Bakery Local To Help Train Sixty Jobless

New York—Thirty bakeries and Local 102 of the American Bakery & Confectionery Workers will cooperate in a U.S. Labor Dept. project to give on-the-job training to 60 unemployed persons and help meet a "critical" shortage of bakers in the New York area, the department's Bureau of Apprenticeship & Training announced.

The federal government will grant $144,892 for the 52-week training course including 40 weeks on the job and 12 weeks in classrooms for supplemental instruction. Local 102 will recruit the trainees through the New York State Employment Service and place them in participating bakeries.

Trainees who complete the course successfully will be hired as apprentice bakers for three years of further training at union wages and eventual journeyman rates of some $10,000 a year. Those in training will be paid $1.87 an hour for the first 20 weeks, then up to $2.25 by the end of the pre-apprentice period.

Bakery operators will be paid nearly $53,000 to help offset their training costs. Manpower Development & Training Act funds will help defray living expenses while trainees are attending class for 12 weeks. Nearly $35,000 has been earmarked for the subsistence cost and another $57,000 has been allocated to the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare for school costs, according to Regional Dir. Frank Neher of the bureau.

Labor Cost Factor Down In Price of New Homes

The labor cost factor in the price of a new home has diminished sharply over two decades as a result of increasing productivity and improved techniques of building trades workers, Pres. M. A. Hutcheson of the Carpenters noted in an article in the June issue of the international union magazine, The Carpenter.

Hutcheson cites congressional testimony by Pres. Leon Weiner of the National Association of Home Builders that the labor element in the sales price of a new home dropped from 29 to 18 percent between 1944 and 1964. Meantime, Weiner's testimony added, land costs rose from 13 to 26 percent of the sales price and other factors—sales costs, equipment, financing, profit and services—increased from 13 to 19 percent of the price tag.

The testimony, Hutcheson writes, disproves again "a couple of badly shop-worn myths" about the housing industry—one that it is "hidebound, lacking in progressiveness and dedicated to retaining obsolete methods," the other that high hourly wage rates contribute to the high cost of housing.

Traditional methods of carpentry, of measure-cut-fit-nail, have been largely modified in an effort to keep pace with the nation's needs," he says. "We have not fought improved technologies. We have, however, insisted that carpenters share in the improved technology and increased productivity."

Examiner Scores GE On Bargaining Refusal

IUE bargaining committee which included seven representatives of other unions. The NLRB general counsel filed charges against GE for refusal to bargain and secured a federal court injunction compelling the company to recognize the committee. Final disposition of the injunction is still pending.

Pres. Paul Jennings of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers said the decision "confirms IUE's contention that union and management each have the right to select their own bargaining committees and to consult with anyone in the performance of their responsibilities."

He expressed hope that "GE will accept this decision, and, in the future, bargain without having to be ordered by the courts to the bargaining table."

The examiner's findings tossed out a number of GE defenses to the charges. He held that:

- The company had proposed to begin negotiations on May 4, 1966, and could not claim that negotiations were not to start until August of that year as an argument that formal negotiations were not involved.
- There was never any "conspiracy, agreement, express or implied" among the 11 unions that none would sign with the company unless all signed. There was, the examiner said, "a mere tacit understanding that before any of them varied or abandoned any of the agreed 'national goals,' they would inform and consult with each other."
- The company unequivocally refused to bargain with the IUE committee on the sole ground of the "mere presence" of the seven representatives of other unions on the committee.
- The company had within its power "the right and opportunity to apply the acid test as to the IUE's intentions. All it need have done on May 4, 1966, was to engage in discussions to determine whether the enlarged bargaining committee really sought to represent employes outside of IUE's bargaining unit. Not only did it fail to do so, it did not even deign to ask . . . for what purposes the 'outsiders' were appearing."

Sole Reason

The examiner concluded after a lengthy examination of the record in the case that the company's refusal to bargain was based on "one circumstance alone"—the presence as members of the IUE committee of persons who normally served as representatives of other unions.

He noted that "the effect of allowing an employer to control or determine who should negotiate for the union" would destroy the right of employes to choose their own representatives for bargaining. It would "require the union to bargain with the company concerning the membership of that committee, a purely internal matter" unrelated to the basic subjects on which either party is required to bargain.

Unemployment Rate Edges Up to 3.8%

"cushion" when the economy is easing up, labor force growth slows down and provides a "cushion" when the demand for labor eases.

"The labor force was stretched thin last year," he said. "It has now destretched" and its growth is about "on trend" with longterm projections, he added.

While unemployment declined by 200,000 in line with seasonal expectations between April and May —to a total of 2.5 million—the employment advance was less than usual.

In actual terms, non-farm payroll employment gained by 386,000 to a total 65.4 million. But this pickup was 44,000 less than expected.

Causes Cited

"The slowness of the employment pickup in May resulted from several causes," the Labor Dept. report said, adding: "Since inventories are still out of line with retail sales, manufacturing employment was off 80,000 on a seasonally adjusted basis and showed a small decline in actual terms.

"Employment in retail trade has remained virtually unchanged in the last four months, in contrast with the rise throughout 1966. The persistence of wet and wintery weather over much of the country held down the usual increase in the number of agricultural and construction jobs."

The report pointed out that a restudy of seasonal factors for retail trade in the spring period wiped out much of the 187,000 job rise reported for that industry in the April report.

The report also noted how closely labor force changes followed the employment changes. While the civilian labor force rose by some 800,000 since January, the normal seasonal expectation called for a rise of 1.7 million. The seasonally adjusted decline amounted to 500,000 adult women, about 200,000 adult men and 200,000 teenagers.

"These figures probably represent the failure of seasonal workers to enter the labor force thus far in 1967, more than an actual withdrawal of year-round workers," the report said.

Women Workers

It also noted that the labor force increase for adult women in the second half of 1966 was about 600,000 above the long-term trend of growth.

"Some pause in the expansion of the female labor force was highly likely after this experience," the report added.

Even so, the jobless rate for full-time workers rose from 3.1 percent, seasonally adjusted, in the first quarter of 1967 to 3.5 percent in May. And, the report added, the jobless rates in construction and manufacturing have risen. The rate for construction workers in May was 7.8 percent and, for factory workers, 3.9 percent.

The slowdown also affected certain disadvantaged groups adversely. The jobless rate for teenagers rose to 13.1 percent from April's 11.6 percent. The rate for Negroes rose to 7.8 percent from 7.3 percent in April. The rate for unskilled laborers went up to 8.4 percent from April's 7.4 percent.

Other unemployment rates continued low, however, 1.9 percent for married men—the breadwinner group—and 3.3 percent for white workers.

The job picture within industries showed an increase of 108,000 in construction, some 103,000 less than expected because of bad weather and strike activity, the report said. The declines in manufacturing were widespread and small, except for a 47,000 drop in rubber because of strikes.

Votes Compulsory Arbitration:

Senate Imposes Ban On Shopcraft Strike

tee that held hearings on the legislation, told the Senate he could not support the compulsory arbitration bill because it was "a measure aimed at the heart of labor and loaded in favor of management."

He lost a narrow 6-5 vote in his subcommittee on his proposal to impound the railroad industry's profits pending determination by the courts of the windfall management received because workers could not strike. The final version of his amendment, offered on the Senate floor, would have limited the maximum profit seizure to 10 percent of a railroad's net profits.

Another attempt to equalize the treatment of labor and management in the dispute was made by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.), who proposed a 90-day period of seizure by the government while mediation continued. The mediation board would be empowered to take away the railroad's profits during that period or to deny the unions retroactivity if it found that either party had not bargained in good faith.

In testimony on the bills, rail management endorsed compulsory arbitration and said it should be permanently written into the Railway Labor Act.

Union negotiators have accused rail management of refusing to engage in good faith, give-and-take bargaining. The motive, the unions charged, was to force congressionally-imposed compulsory arbitration.

Despite strong White House pressure to speed the bill, House Commerce Committee Chairman Harley O. Staggers (D-W.Va.) has expressed strong distaste for the compulsory arbitration feature of the legislation.

Directly involved in the dispute are the Machinists, Boilermakers, Sheet Metal Workers, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Railway Carmen, and Firemen & Oilers, all bargaining through the AFL-CIO Railway Employes' Dept.

Other railroad unions, both operating and non-operating, joined the shopcrafts in fighting the compulsory arbitration formula.

15 Senators Firm Against Rail Bill

These 15 senators, all Democrats, voted against final passage of the railroad compulsory arbitration bill:

Birch Bayh (Ind.), Frank Church (Ida.), Fred R. Harris (Okla.), Warren G. Magnuson (Wash.), Eugene J. McCarthy (Minn.), Gale W. McGee (Wyo.), George McGovern (S. D.), Thomas J. McIntyre (N. H.), Lee Metcalf (Mont.), Walter F. Mondale (Minn.), Joseph M. Montoya (N. M.), Gaylord Nelson (Wis.), William Proxmire (Wis.), Stuart Symington (Mo.), and Ralph W. Yarborough (D-Tex.).

Not present but paired against passage were Republicans George D. Aiken (Vt.), Edward W. Brooke (Mass.) and John G. Tower (Tex.).

Senate Rollcall Vote on Railroad Profits Freeze

Before passing the compulsory arbitration bill, the Senate rejected an amendment by Sen. Ralph Yarborough (D-Tex.) that would have prevented the railroads from profiting by the strike ban. The AFL-CIO strongly supported the amendment, which was defeated 59-23.

Union Studies Package:

New Rubber Offer Made by Big Five

Akron—The Big Five rubber companies have made a new offer to the Rubber Workers, their first since Apr. 14, seven days before the URW struck Firestone, B. F. Goodrich and Uniroyal plants across the country.

URW negotiators estimated the value of the new offer at 60 cents an hour for the three-year term. It would give tire plant employes 38 cents an hour in raises—16 cents the first year, 11 cents the second and 11 the third. Non-tire employes would get 13, 9 and 9 cents.

Also included in the companies' proposal are pension and insurance improvements valued at 22 cents an hour.

Bargaining Limited

The present round of negotiations had been limited to wages, holidays, vacations and working conditions with a new pension and insurance agreement to be negotiated by Sept. 15.

The union would have had to give the companies a reopening notice by next month and there was wide membership support for including all matters in the present round of talks rather than face a possible second strike in the fall.

In their new offer the companies proposed to raise pension benefits to $5.25 a month for each year of service, up $2 from the present level, but it was uncertain whether anything had been allowed for rubber workers who are already retired.

URW officials pointed out that the new proposal is only 3.5 cents an hour better in the first two years than the previous offer the companies made before the strikes started.

There has been no word from the bargaining tables on what the companies offered to do in the way of supplemental unemployment benefits.

One of the URW bargaining goals is a Full Employment Earnings Program, based on SUB, that would give laid-off workers 92.5 per cent of their regular wages.

All URW negotiators said the new offer was inadequate and some valued it at even less than 60 cents. Management, meanwhile, said it was a record high offer and listed its value at 73.5 cents an hour.

The companies made the offer to each union negotiating team separately, first to Firestone, Goodyear and Uniroyal, then to Goodrich and finally to General on successive days. URW members at Goodyear and General plants have been working on a day to day basis since their contracts expired, Goodyear's on Apr. 20 and General's May 15.

A plan had been worked out previously for the companies to present their new offer at a mass meeting of negotiators for the five companies and representatives of each of the union committees in Pittsburgh. The idea was scrapped when Goodrich union negotiators refused to agree to such a meeting, saying they were opposed to any talks on a three-year contract.

URW members, in large groups, picketed Goodrich plant gates in Akron June 5 keeping out all salaried personnel. Company Pres. Ward Keener sat in his car at the picket line all day.

CONSUMER SHOW staged by the New York State Union Label & Service Trades Dept. at the Roosevelt Raceway, Westbury, L. I., was opened by Miss Union Maid, whose clowning as she cut the ribbon brought smiles from her court of beauty queens. The three-day exhibit, held with the cooperation of union employers and government agencies, attracted 115,000 visitors.

32,000 IBEW Members Walk Out In Union's First Strike at RCA

Nine plants of the Radio Corp. of America were struck June 5 as locals of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers representing 32,000 workers rejected a wage offer the union called "too little and too late." It was the first IBEW strike against RCA since contract relations began 30 years ago.

No agreement seemed likely either for 20,000 additional RCA workers represented by 13 locals of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers. The IUE warned management it was in a "danger corridor" that might lead to a walkout at any time, but no later than June 17.

IBEW negotiators were preparing to return for a membership vote when management raised its previous "final" offer to provide wage boosts of 4 percent the first year, 3 percent in each of the next two years, with no cost-of-living escalator.

The offer came after the previous three-year contract expired. But the union said it lacked either a satisfactory wage hike with a living-cost escalator or better hospitalization allowances for room and board. When management rejected reopening of the contract on wages after a year or any form of living-cost escalator, the IBEW locals voted to walk out.

"The company had a very nice year in 1966 and profits in 1967 are even better," said negotiator Lawson Wimberly, assistant to IBEW Pres. Gordon M. Freeman. "RCA workers are understandably worried about living costs that keep eating away their wages."

The net gain for IBEW members at RCA during the three-year period ending June 1 was 1.3 percent out of successively yearly wage increases of 2.5 percent. Rising living costs ate up the remainder, Wimberly said.

The IBEW's 86-member negotiating committee had reached substantial agreement with RCA management on wage rates and local working conditions, but the national agreement could not be settled. It involves a general wage increase, insurance, vacations and similar issues.

IBEW's RCA locations include Bloomington, Indianapolis and Marion, Ind.; Findlay, O.; Meadowlands and Lancaster, Pa.; Rockaway, N.J.; W. Palm Beach, Fla., and Hollywood, Calif. Its members produce electronic data processing equipment, phonograph records, television tubes, and other radio, TV and phonographic equipment.

The IUE wants better wages and economic terms in a contract reopening that gives it the right to strike after 60 days. Its locals are at Camden, Moorestown and Somerville, N.J.; Mountain Top and Scranton, Pa.; Lewiston, Me.; Cincinnati, O.; Memphis, Tenn.; Burbank, Los Angeles and Van Nuys, Calif.; Plymouth, Mich.

Backpay Order Stands Against 'Runaway' Firm

The Supreme Court let stand a lower court ruling that a "runaway" employer must give backpay to the workers he left behind, but in the absence of a representation election need not bargain at his new location with the union.

In a 2-1 decision last Jan. 11, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia had directed the National Labor Relations Board to devise a new remedy for the unfair labor practices committed by the Garwin Corp. The firm had a contract with Ladies' Garment Workers Local 57 in New York but moved out and set up a non-union operation under the business name of S'Agaro, Inc., in the Miami, Fla., area.

The appeals court ruled that the NLRB was justified in ordering Garwin-S'Agaro to make up their employes' pay losses but not in ordering management to recognize the union at its Miami plant for one year before an election petition could be filed.

The majority view of Appellate Judges Walter M. Bastian and Warren E. Burger said:

"It is . . . not our function or responsibility to fashion remedies for the board and even our review of remedies is narrow. Our concern over the remedy here . . . is that it deprives employes of a basic right of free choice on the theory that this is the best way—or at least a permissible way—to deprive the employer of the fruits" of his forbidden conduct.

Judge Carl McGowan voted to enforce the board's order in toto. None of the Florida employes, he wrote, "are before us complaining" that they have been deprived of their freedom of choice.

The ruling went to the Supreme Court when the NLRB, instead of reopening the case to fashion another remedy against Garwin, filed a petition for review. So did the employer, who said the board's order was too broad, and the union, which called it too narrow because it did not order Garwin to reopen the New York plant and rehire the deserted employes.

In another decision, the high court reversed a ruling by the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Denver that the U.S. District Court in Colorado did not have jurisdiction to hear a damage suit filed by the Denver & Rio Grande Western Railroad Co. against the Railroad Trainmen.

Justice Byron White said for the majority that the intent of Congress seems to be that a union may be sued wherever it does business, not just in the state where it is headquartered. Joining him were Chief Justice Earl Warren and Justices Tom C. Clark, John M. Harlan, William J. Brennan, Jr., and Potter Stewart.

Justices Hugo L. Black, William O. Douglas and Abe Fortas dissented, saying the intent of Congress is not clear.

Retiree Center Gets Study Grant

Philadelphia — The benefits received by elderly members of the Clothing Workers from the industry's retirement center here will be evaluated in a three-year study aided by the U.S. Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare.

The first year of the survey will be financed by a $52,629 grant from the HEW's Administration on Aging.

Administrators of the Charles Weinstein Geriatric Center of the Sidney Hillman Medical Center have noted that about a third of the 3,000 eligible retirees use its services regularly, the same number use them occasionally, and the remainder not at all.

Building Service Pact Ends New York Strike

New York—Hot water is running again, first-story-high mounds of garbage have been cleared away and tenants no longer are having to struggle up stairways here in what is sometimes called "Fun City."

The reason is that 15,000 apartment building service employes have scored a breakthrough on wages after an eight-day strike that split the city's real estate owners apart and left pockets of landlord resistance that may keep them permanently divided.

The workers, members of Building Service Employes Local 32B, won an $18 a week wage increase spread over three years in negotiations with the Realty Advisory Board on Labor Relations, the industry's major employer group.

Half of the apartment building owners represented by the RAB signed the master agreement while the other half balked, as did many owners of buildings governed by separate contracts. When State Board of Mediation efforts failed to resolve this impasse after a week's postponement of a strike, the union called out some 7,500 of its members in buildings whose owners had not signed up.

It was the first serious building service stoppage in 20 years, and New York City's apartment building tenants came to re-learn the hardships of washing with cold water, walking upstairs and disposing of their own garbage.

Local Pres. Thomas Shortman, a vice president of the BSEIU, said the dispute was not between the landlords and the union, but "between the landlords and the city over rent control."

"All we were interested in seeing," he said, "was that our members got the wage increases to which they were entitled."

Some landlords didn't think the city's formula for absorbing higher labor costs was liberal enough. They massed around City Hall, petitioned the mayor to dispense "justice," and broke City Hall windows to strengthen their arguments. But Mayor John V. Lindsay threatened possible rent reductions in cases where landlords failed to go along with the union settlement.

Law Amended

Pressed by the mayor, the New York City Council finally amended the 23-year-old rent control law so that building owners could increase rents by as much as 15 percent in cases where no such increases had been instituted since 1953. But some landlords balked even at this, and two dissident groups threatened to resist the council's action.

Shortman served notice that Local 32B would re-strike every building whose owner refused to go along with the wage increase provided for in the settlement.

Apartment building tenants joined their building service workers in celebrating the victory, and in some buildings collections were taken up for wages lost by employes during the stoppage.

For Free Men Everywhere

ISRAEL'S unswerving commitment to democratic freedom and its ability to muster the strength to defend that commitment is the key to current developments in the Middle East.

An important element in the building of Israel as a bastion of democratic freedom has been the country's free trade union movement—Histadrut.

Founded several decades before Israel became a nation, Histadrut provided many of the fundamental organizations, the know-how and the manpower that resulted in the birth of a new country in 1948.

Now its members are fighting for the third time to defend their nation's freedom, to repel the aggression made possible by the Soviet Union's arming and encouragement of Egypt. Histadrut, with most of its own members mobilized, is charged with the task of caring for the dependents, young and old. It has placed its health organization, its welfare and educational services on an emergency footing.

THE AMERICAN labor movement has had a long and cordial relationship with Histadrut. It has supported the Israeli federation's many programs to build a democratic society in Israel and Histadrut's assistance to newly emerging nations.

The Afro-Asian Institute created by Histadrut to help train leaders of free trade unions in the new nations has made an important international contribution. It has been assisted from its beginnings by the AFL-CIO and its affiliated unions.

Now Histadrut is involved in the fight for free men everywhere against totalitarian-sponsored aggression, battling for the very existence of the nation which it helped create.

In its hour of crisis it needs the aid and support of the American labor movement, assistance that AFL-CIO unions have given to free trade unions and democratic nations throughout the world in their times of need.

At every turn of the struggle against totalitarian dictatorship, of efforts to infiltrate and subvert democratic institutions and free trade union movements, the American trade union movement has provided meaningful aid and assistance.

THE PRESENT confrontation in the Middle East is but a continuation of a 20-year-old struggle by the forces of freedom and democracy—the forces truly dedicated to peace—to defeat totalitarian aggression in whatever form it takes.

In that struggle the free world trade union movement, organized into the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, has played a leading role. Histadrut is one of the members of the ICFTU. Now, in its time of struggle, it needs help.

American unions have come to the side of all ICFTU affiliates in the battle for peace and freedom, for bread and social justice. Now is the time to rally support for the Israeli labor movement.

Educator Hits Plan:

Soaring College Tuition Seen If Tax Credit Scheme Prevails

The following comments on the tuition tax credit proposal are excerpted from the views of Pres. H. Edwin Young of the University of Maine, and were inserted in the Congressional Record by Sen. Edmund S. Muskie (D-Me.).

AS I DISCUSS tax credits and higher education, I want to convey some of my concern and some of the goals that I want to see satisfied as educators continue to evolve the American system of higher education.

First, I'm a strong believer in a pluralistic higher education system. America must continue to have both publicly and privately controlled colleges and universities; there is a need for some institutions of traditional excellence, to which only students of great promise are admitted, and there must be other institutions, in which students who have not demonstrated high achievement will have a chance.

Efforts must also be continued to bring an increasing percentage of the children of low-income families into schools until people are convinced that family economic status is not an important determinant of college attendance.

The American system should encourage scholarships for students who demonstrate high promise, but there must also be opportunities for students who are poor, whose backgrounds did not make them good competitors.

Because of increasing numbers of students, competition for faculty (often a by-product of numbers), alternative opportunities, and improved quality of instruction, costs continue to rise.

There has been the suggestion of a scheme of tax credits that would allow people buying tuition to deduct a part of the cost of that tuition from their federal taxes. Another way of saying it is to say that if one's income were large enough he could appropriate from the United States Treasury part of the cost of tuition.

Approximately $1 billion a year would either be pocketed by those who qualified, or transferred by higher tuition rates to the colleges, or used in some combination of these ways. If tuition rates are not raised, it is hard to see how colleges would benefit from this plan.

If the tuitions rise, one can foresee the result that students whose families do not pay enough taxes will find the economic barriers to college raised. To say that such people all get scholarships is certainly not true. In fact the good scholarships do not go to the lowest economic groups.

I foresee another result of the tax credit plan for education. Publicly controlled schools in which tuition is kept low by legislative appropriation would undoubtedly be under great pressure to take advantage of the tax credit by raising tuition and thus creating a further barrier to students whose parents have low incomes.

I view the raising of tuition in the public colleges and universities as a very serious matter, for I believe that low tuition is the best possible form of scholarship. Low tuition requires so little administration, so few invidious comparisons, so little concern about family status, advantage, or disadvantages, that in a way it helps to make up for the nature of some scholarship competition.

MY NEGATIVE APPROACH to the tax credit idea does not solve the problem of the school that does not have access to legislative appropriations. Increasingly, ways have been found to help institutions with research support, facilities, equipment, and so forth. More recently, assistance to students has allowed private schools to raise their fees rather substantially. In the period 1956-57 to 1964-65, tuition and required fees at private institutions of higher education rose from 28 percent to 37 percent of the per capita disposable income, which was rising from $1,743 to $2,268—a rise from $495 to $831.

Loans under the National Defense Student Loan Program have been important aids to students, and now there are grants, work-study programs, and interest-free loans. It has been estimated that families who could benefit most from the tax credit proposal can benefit more from the loan program. These families can benefit, and so can the student who cannot get benefits himself, or through his family, under the tax credit program.

It seems to me that the recent enactments of the Congress in the form of student aids are more beneficial to students and to the schools than the tax credit scheme, and educators ought to be glad to forget a scheme that as a national fiscal policy seems unwise and unfair, a scheme that could set precedents for the distortion of the American tax system.

The scheme has a very dubious relationship to the American principle of ability to pay. It provides for a method of bypassing the appropriating authority of Congress and yet may in the long run cause Congress to look closely at the way in which privately controlled institutions of higher education set their fees.

Morgan Says:

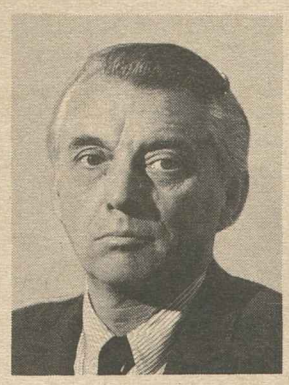
Civil War Area, New England Hit by Arrogance of Utilities

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p.m., EDT, until June 16.)

BOSTON—Residents of the District of Columbia and the Potomac River basin recently woke up to the news in the Washington Post of an impending invasion.

Now the nation's capital is constantly being invaded by everybody from the senior class to the Chamber of Commerce and the Daughters of the American Revolution. So nobody panicked. But perhaps somebody should.



Morgan

For this invasion, planned in secret, will march 150 miles through an historic Civil War battle area from a place called Hatfield's Ferry, Pa., down to points near Washington, swerving into West Virginia and back to a terminal in Frederick County, Md.

A powerful privately-owned utility company called Potomac Edison has not had to fire a shot, so far, to press its plans for a huge high tension line into the area.

Indeed it is marching, so to speak, under the protection of the Stars and Stripes, thanks to foresighted lobbying years ago which gained it authority to extend its lines almost anywhere it wanted to without having to get permission from anybody. In this case, as the Post revealed, it didn't even have the good grace to consult with local authorities.

Belatedly, Interior Sec. Stewart Udall and some members of Congress are marshalling defenses in attempts to make the monopoly responsible to somebody, though the outcome of the battle from the public point of view is dubious. This arrogance of power, if Sen. Fulbright will permit the phrase, is familiar to residents of New England —or at least to readers of the Boston Globe which, in the spring of 1966, ran a series of nine articles by Richard J. Connolly exposing the fact that New England's electricity rates are substantially higher than in any other region in the continental United States.

Connolly recently received the Thomas L. Stokes Award and a $500 check for his crusading journalism, judged, for the year 1966, to be in the best tradition of the late Tom Stokes, a soft-spoken Southerner who gained national fame as a syndicated columnist by digging into the neglected field of conservation and natural resources and how they were being exploited at public expense.

The most penetrating irony of Connolly's expose was the fact that whereas New Englanders paid nearly 50 cents more on a 100 kilowatt-hour electric bill than the national average, the cost need not have been so high. Indeed it might have been lower than the national average except for a kind of conspiracy of the private utility lobbies against public power projects. The flight of industry from this region, which was the first industrial heartland of America, is usually blamed on high labor costs versus cheap labor in the South. Unions can be selfish and short-sighted and they undoubtedly have been.

But it takes two to tangle over profit-sharing in our kind of economy and too little has been said about the selfish short-sightedness of industry.

New England has, or had, a promising potential for hydroelectric power in its river systems which its manufacturers proceeded to pollute but not otherwise utilize to any concerted degree. As a matter of fact they preferred coal for energy.

But most of the coal to get here from the Virginias has to travel more than 600 miles by rail and water. There is a testimony to American industrial efficiency!

True, private utilities pay taxes and in Massachusetts they pay more than the rest of the region. True, all taxpayers help pay for a federal project like TVA or Grand Coulee, not just the residents of the Tennessee Valley or the Pacific Northwest.

BUT WHAT the private monopolies leave out of their arguments is the fact that public power helps develop new and needed sources of energy—which private utilities don't have the capital to invest in—and public power helps make electricity proportionately cheaper—which the private companies then try to take the credit for in extravagant ads denouncing public power and writing off the cost of such campaigns as tax-deductible business expense.

This, of course, shows up indirectly on their consumers' bills.

The New England companies legitimately emphasize they are investing $1.5 billion in 11 new plants. But as they expand and improve service how much attention are they paying to such increasingly urgent issues as conservation and pollution control?

In a nutshell, the difficulty is that the privately-held utilities are basically more committed to servicing their stockholders with dividends than in performing a public service at more reasonable rates. This is the well-documented thrust of a recent book, "Overcharge," by Montana's Sen. Lee Metcalf (D) and Vic Reinemer.

The plight of the consumer is by no means hopeless. But how much more encouraging it would be if, taking a cue from the Boston Globe, every newspaper in the country—and every radio and TV station for that matter—examined the utilities in their communities and exposed the arrogance of the power companies if and when found.

Goldfinger Declares:

Hike in Social Security Benefits Would Spur Sluggish Economy

THE ADMINISTRATION'S proposed social security improvements are not only essential to the well-being of the beneficiaries but are needed to stimulate the sluggish national economy, labor's top economist declared.

Nathaniel Goldfinger, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research, said that while there is no recession at this point, there are "weak spots" in the private economy, particularly in consumer spending. As a result, the January-March quarter showed a "slight decline" in the economy—"the first time that we have failed to make a general advance across-the-board since early 1961," he noted.

The 20 percent social security increase "would add high-multiplier, high-velocity dollars to the economy . . . and give it a lift," Goldfinger declared. His statements came during the network radio interview, Labor News Conference, aired Tuesdays at 7:35 p.m. EDT on the Mutual Broadcasting System.

Goldfinger noted that there are "at least slightly hopeful signs" in the overall economic picture. "The residential construction industry, thrown into a depression by the tightest money and highest interest rates in 40 years, has begun to move up," he said. "The Administration, fortunately, has put some additional money into the housing mortgage market."

THIS IS "on the plus side, in terms of encouraging the expansion of production and employment," he said. But to sustain the improvement, "what we need, and what the AFL-CIO has urged on the Federal Reserve System, is a continuing easing of money policy and a continuing easing of interest rates."

"Any return to tight money now would be disastrous," Goldfinger warned.

Reporters questioning him on the AFL-CIO produced public affairs program were Hobart Rowen, business and financial editor of the Washington Post, and Frank Swoboda, Washington correspondent for United Intl.

By Press Associates, Inc.

WHEN THE GROWING industrial complexes of this country began to get bigger and bigger, Congress passed the Interstate Commerce Act in 1887.

This act, and all others that later created the independent regulatory agencies of the federal government, stated that the board or commission of the agency shall regulate the industry involved in such a manner as to safeguard the public interest.

These agencies, then, are directed to protect the public in such areas as the airways, power, food and drugs, trade, stocks and bonds, labor law and transportation.

In recent years the agencies, it appears, have operated with far more dedication to their original purposes than they have at other times in history.

This stands in contrast to the latter days of the Eisenhower Administration when the independent agencies had fallen prey to the very industries they were supposed to regulate.

Here are a few items worth recalling:

● Presidential Assistant Sherman Adams intervened with the Federal Trade Commission and the Securities Exchange Commission at a time when they had enforcement proceedings against Adams' friend, Bernard Goldfine.

The FTC overruled a staff attorney who "vigorously" recommended criminal prosecution of Goldfine. Later it was disclosed that Goldfine had paid $3,000 in hotel bills for Adams, had given him a vicuna coat and had "loaned" him a $2,400 oriental rug. This led to Adams' resignation and criminal prosecution of Goldfine.

● A member of the Federal Communications Commission, Richard A. (Richie) Mack, accepted $2,650 in "loans" from an attorney who had repeatedly urged him to give "every consideration" to the application of a National Airlines subsidiary seeking a television channel in Miami. Mack voted for National, then could produce no record of repayment of the loans.

● John C. Doerfer, chairman of the FCC, relaxed in Florida on a yacht belonging to broadcaster George B. Storer, who had a case pending before the commission at the time.

● Chairman James R. Durfee of the Civil Aeronautics Board and another board member were treated to transportation and expenses to an exclusive spa in North Carolina by two airlines under CAB jurisdiction.

THESE REMINDERS of things past recall the time when the regulatory agencies frequently became captives of the very industries they should have been regulating. But today they are criticized and may be penalized because they are zealously seeking to protect the public interest.

Drug manufacturers have long contended, for example, that the Food & Drug Administration has gone too far in enforcing its programs in the public interest. Recently the U.S. Supreme Court handed down a ruling saying that drug producers may challenge FDA regulations in court without first complying with them and without risking civil or criminal action by the government.

Attorneys for the FDA and the FTC have expressed concern that this decision could open the door to wholesale challenges of regulations and undermine the designated roles of the regulatory agencies.

Now, from Republican Senate Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen, comes a new attack. He has introduced a bill that could tie the hands of such agencies as FDA, FTC and the SEC. Dirksen proposes, in effect, that the party against whom the complaint is issued be "given an equal opportunity to publicize his comments at the same time and in the same document in which the agency publicity was issued."

For all practical purposes this would either negate or confuse the whole role of the agency in getting the facts before the public. And the ability of these agencies to protect the public will be seriously undermined.

THE ADMINISTRATION'S proposed social security improvements would be a boost to the sluggish national economy as well as the well-being of the beneficiaries, AFL-CIO Research Dir. Nathaniel Goldfinger (center) told Frank Swoboda (left) of United Press Intl. and Hobart Rowen of the Washington Post on Labor News Conference. The AFL-CIO public affairs program is heard weekly on Mutual radio.

New England Labor Honors Thompson

Boston, Mass.—Hugh Thompson, AFL-CIO regional director in New England since the merger and a veteran of nearly 35 years of union activity, is retiring July 1.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has announced the appointment of his assistant, Franklin J. Murphy, as his successor.

The New England labor movement and government officials at the national, state and local levels joined in tribute to Thompson at a testimonial dinner attended by more than 600 persons.

Speakers who wished him well included Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.); Gov. John A. Volpe, former Governors Foster Furcolo and Endicott Peabody, Judge Francis X. Morrissey and AFL-CIO Organization Dir. William L. Kircher.

Pres. Salvatore Camelio of the Massachusetts AFL-CIO, the dinner committee chairman, presented Thompson with a plaque; Sub-Regional Dir. Alfred Olerio of the Auto Workers gave him a gift from UAW Regional Directors Charles Kerrigan and Martin Gerber, and Murphy, who served as toastmaster, presented him with a purse.

Thompson was born June 3, 1902, in Lurgan, County Armagh, Ireland. He came to this country in 1924, found work in the auto industry, and started to organize employes at the Murray Body Corp. plant in Detroit on June 17, 1933. The next day he was fired, but he had enough cards to establish AFL Federal Labor Union 18276, one of the forerunners of the UAW.

That same year he was appointed an AFL organizer but in 1936, when the UAW joined the CIO, he became a CIO organizer assigned to the auto industry. In 1937 he was appointed CIO regional director in Western New York, with Buffalo as headquarters, and 16 years later was moved to Boston, continuing as AFL-CIO regional director after the merger.

Murphy, who is 54, is a native of Lawrence and a member of Lawrence Bartenders Local 90. He has been president of his local, a special organizer for the Hotel & Restaurant Employes, an international representative for the Textile Workers Union of America, and joined the AFL staff in New England in 1948. He continued as a staff representative at the time of the merger, and in July 1957 was named assistant regional director.

OEO Expands Training Of Appalachia Unionists

A second leadership training program aimed at instructing some 1,200 union leaders in the techniques of building community support for action and economic development programs throughout Appalachia has been approved by the Office of Economic Opportunity.

It will be financed by an OEO grant of $166,438 to West Virginia University. The AFL-CIO Appalachian Council will have the responsibility for screening and choosing candidates, and for the operating decisions and program development.

The original grant financed in-depth training for several hundred union leaders who in their own communities became involved in anti-poverty projects such as the Neighborhood Youth Corps and multi-purpose Neighborhood Centers in rural areas.

Under the new program about 20 weekend seminars will be held at central locations. Each will serve some 60 union leaders from the 11 Appalachian area states.

Materials developed in the first project will be used in a curriculum that will include such subjects as labor's role in the war on poverty, the nature of the poverty problem, utilizing state and federal programs in fighting need, organizing for community action, techniques of leadership, etc. General presentations will be followed by discussions in smaller groups.

Those selected, after their training, will be expected to join or start community action efforts and to stage local one-day conferences in which they would serve as coordinators.

Dr. Frederick A. Zeller has been appointed project director. His chief aides will be Associate Dir. Robert Miller, in charge of program design and evaluation, and Assistant Dir. Robert Winn, in charge of field services.

NLRB Shifts Liability Rule Of New Owner

Scrapping a rule used since 1954, the National Labor Relations Board decided that a company that purchases another firm knowing that it has violated the labor laws can be required to remedy the unfair labor practices.

The board reversed a trial examiner's ruling and ordered the United States Pipe & Foundry Co., Miami, Fla., to rehire four employes unlawfully fired by the Perma Vinyl Corp. for being active in the Ladies' Garment Workers.

U.S. Pipe, which bought Perma Vinyl while the unfair practice charges were pending, was ordered to reinstate the workers within five days of the time they apply for rehire. If it does not, a backpay obligation will start to run against them. No other backpay is involved.

For a dozen years the NLRB has applied the Symns Grocer Co. rule to similar cases. The rule was that "no provision of the act authorizes the board to impose the responsibility for remedying unfair labor practices on persons who did not engage therein."

But the Supreme Court, in the case of John Wiley & Sons, Inc., commented that the "rightful prerogative of owners . . . be balanced by some protection to the employes from a sudden change in the employment relationship."

In its decision applying that guideline the NLRB wrote: "Especially in need of help . . . are the employe victims of unfair labor practices who, because of their unlawful discharge, are now without meaningful remedy when title to the employing business . . . changes."

Al Clem Chosen For IUOE Board

Business Mgr. Al Clem of San Francisco Local 3 has been elected to the executive board of the Operating Engineers, Pres. Hunter P. Wharton announced.

Clem was selected by the board at a meeting in Washington to fill the vacancy created by the recent death of Frank P. Converse of Cleveland.

An IUOE member since 1934, Clem became a business representative in Oakland, Calif., in 1957, financial secretary of the local the following year and business manager in 1960. He also has served simultaneously as president of the Alameda County Building Trades Council and the Contra Costa Building Trades Council.

Upset House Vote:

GOP Blocks Rise In U.S. Debt Ceiling

House Republicans dealt the Administration a politically embarrassing defeat on a housekeeping bill providing a permanent increase in the national debt ceiling.

The GOP, waving the banner of "economy in government," held Republican ranks solid and enlisted some conservative southern Democratic votes and a few northern Democratic "doves" protesting Viet Nam spending.

The result was a stunning 210-197 defeat and one of the rare occasions in which House Ways & Means Committee Chairman Wilbur D. Mills (D-Ark.) lost a floor vote.

Debt limit bills are customarily used by Republicans as a forum for speeches accusing the Administration of spending the nation into bankruptcy. Eventually the artificially low debt ceiling is raised—"temporarily"—because the government needs the borrowing authority to pay its bills.

The setback, nevertheless, was damaging to the Democratic leadership and gave new impetus to GOP budget-cutting efforts.

In the day-after post-mortem, Republican leaders said they would agree to a three-month extension of the present "temporary" debt limit beyond its June 30 expiration date. But they would insist, they said, on heavy budget cuts on non-defense spending.

This was the first time a debt limit bill had ever been defeated on the House floor. Speaker John W. McCormack (D-Mass.) pointed out at a news conference that during the Eisenhower Administration a majority of Democrats supported every debt limit increase requested by Pres. Eisenhower—even though the party had the votes to embarrass a Republican president. The GOP action, he declared, "was not consistent with responsibility."

The Administration had sought to avoid the frequent necessity to renew short-term increases in the debt limit by raising the ceiling from the present "permanent" level of $285 billion. The "temporary" ceiling is $336 billion and the bill would have moved the permanent limit to $365 billion.

In another area, the Senate voted to take a first step toward protecting consumers against unsafe household products and appliances.

It approved a bill by Sen. Warren G. Magnuson (D-Wash.) to establish a National Commission of Product Safety to make a two-year study of product hazards and come up with recommendations.

The bill, which had AFL-CIO endorsement, passed by voice vote without opposition. It now moves to the House.

Study Role

The seven-member commission, to be named by the President, would investigate categories of products that contain potential hazards to health or safety but would not issue a "black list" of brands or models. It would make recommendations covering any needed federal or state legislation or enforcement of existing regulatory authority.

Speaking for the bill, Magnuson told the Senate that the U.S. Public Health Service estimates 125,000 injuries a year from faulty heating devices; 100,000 injuries each from stoves, power mowers and washing machines; 40,000 from glass doors and 30,000 from faulty electrical extension cords and wall sockets.

"Hardly a day passes in which some new, startling product hazard is not brought to light," he said. "A few weeks ago, General Electric disclosed that 9,000 color television sets had been designed in such a way as to provide inadequate shielding for X-ray emissions. . . . Last week, in Paterson, N. J., a woman died of a serious bone marrow disease which was traced to a heavy concentration of new adhesive material in a roll of cloth she used to make a dress."

Meany Named to Panel In Drive Against Slums

Pres. Johnson has appointed AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany to an 18-member committee of labor leaders, industrialists, bankers and specialists in urban affairs charged with determining how private resources can best be mobilized in a drive to wipe out city slums.

"No domestic task facing this nation is more demanding or more urgent than reclaiming the corroded core of the American city," the President said in announcing the appointments.

"A substantial part of that task is the rebuilding of the slums—with their 7 million dilapidated dwellings—which shame the nation and its cities. . .

"We must find the incentives which will stimulate business and labor to apply the most modern techniques, production systems, work practices and economies of scale to the problem of the city slum."

The committee will explore "this complex problem" in every aspect, Johnson said, and "recommend those incentives and the private institutional machinery which it believes will best accomplish the task." He continued:

"The committee's challenge, in short, is to find the way to harness the productive power of America—which has proved it can master space and create unmatched abundance in the marketplace—to the most pressing unfilled need of our society.

"That need is to provide the necessities of a decent home and healthy surroundings for every poor American family now imprisoned in the squalor of the slum."

The committee is headed by Pres. Edgar F. Kaiser of Kaiser Industries, Inc. Other labor representatives are AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Joseph D. Keenan, secretary of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, and Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the Auto Workers. Additional members include Whitney M. Young, executive director of the Urban League.

Blueprint for Cities

Johnson told Congress in his message on urban and rural poverty, delivered Mar. 14, that he would create the committee. In announcing the appointments, he recalled that a "major instrument of progress" is already available—the Model Cities program enacted last year. The committee's work can be a step forward, he added, in fulfilling the "high purpose" of the legislation—"to develop the blueprint for the future of the American city."

Strikers Beaten:

Texas Rangers Used Against Farm Union

Rio Grande City, Tex.—Texas Rangers, a tall-booted police force with cowboy hats and low slung pistols, are being used by growers to block the unionization of field hands, the AFL-CIO United Farm Workers Organizing Committee charged.

The activities of the Rangers on behalf of Starr County farm owners have drawn investigations from the Texas Advisory Committee to the U.S. Civil Rights Commission, the Federal Bureau of Investigation and four members of the Texas Senate.

Many Protests

They also have evoked numerous protests from labor, church and Mexican-American organizations to Gov. John Connally, who has direct control of the force under Texas law. A left-over from the days of the lawless frontier when their motto was "one riot one ranger," the Texas Rangers have a history of repressing minority groups, especially the Mexican-Americans.

In Rio Grande City, the Rangers have done nothing to dispel the image. To the 80 regular and special sheriff deputies in the county have been added 15 Rangers. Pickets on the farms have numbered from 60 to 75.

On June 1, UFWOC spokesmen charged, four Texas Rangers—two of them wielding shotguns—kicked down a door at a house rented by the union for volunteers and assaulted two union members, Magdaleno Dimas and Benito Rodriguez.

Dr. Ramiro Casso, requested by the union to visit Dimas at the jail before bail could be arranged, said that until he saw Dimas and Rodriguez they had not been taken to a physician. A practical nurse had bandaged their wounds and stitched a cut on Dimas' head after the arrest, Dr. Casso said.

UFWOC Vice Pres. Gilbert Padilla and AFL-CIO Rep. David T. Lopez said the incident was another in a long series of arbitrary actions which Padilla has called police state tactics. Rangers have conducted mass arrests, have escorted strikebreakers onto the fields and even have lectured strikers about the advisability of going back to work in the fields "before the melons rot."

The union is seeking bargaining rights for about 3,000 workers in the large farms in the county, most of which operate year round with a variety of crops.

One grower, Virgilio Guerra who employs about 50 workers, has agreed to recognize the union and is negotiating. Guerra told union representatives that after he signed a recognition agreement he received threatening telephone calls and was cut off from his usual financing sources and supply of materials.

ELECTRIC KITCHEN worth $5,000—plus $500 in accessories—given away by the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers at the Union-Industries Show in Phoenix, Ariz., was won by William Taylor of Phoenix, a Marine home on emergency leave from Viet Nam, and his bride of a year. Presenting the complete outfit to Mr. and Mrs. Taylor are Mel Boyle (left), assistant to IBEW Sec. Joseph D. Keenan, and IBEW Vice Pres. Arthur Edwards.

Grain Millers' Delegates Back LBJ on Viet Nam

Minneapolis, Minn.—The Johnson Administration's course in Viet Nam was unanimously endorsed by delegates to the 10th constitutional convention of the Grain Millers who followed their vote with a solid round of applause for the President and his policies in Southeast Asia.

The 345 delegates from 183 locals also gave their approval to policy positions taken by the AFL-CIO Executive Council on national legislation.

They called for repeal of Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act, enactment of a $2 per hour minimum wage with double-time for overtime, higher social security benefits and reduction in the retirement age to 62 for men, national health insurance with universal coverage and broad benefits, and elimination of restraints against on-site picketing.

The convention in addition urged the AFL-CIO Executive Council to continue its efforts to win a ban on the awarding of government contracts to employers found guilty of persistent willful violations of National Labor Relations Act.

Support was voted for the railroad unions in their continuing disputes with the carriers, and for the striking printing trades unions at the Kingsport (Tenn.) Press.

AFL-CIO Sec. Treas. William F. Schnitzler, in an address to the delegates, urged all unions to educate new and younger members in the past accomplishments of organized labor.

Schnitzler touched particularly on legislation that was pushed through Congress largely because of now-forgotten efforts by unions. He cited enactments ranging from the Fair Labor Standards Act to medicare as examples.

In another speech, Sec. Peter M. McGavin of the AFL-CIO Maritime Trades Dept. contrasted the decline of the U.S. merchant fleet with the spectacular growth of Soviet Russia's.

The U.S. has more than tripled its export-import trade in the last few years, McGavin continued, but only 7.6 percent of the total is carried in U.S.-registered ships. Ships flying the Russian flag, he added, carry 70 percent of that country's international trade.

Pres. Roy O. Welborn, Exec. Vice Pres. Lawrence Swanson and Sec.-Treas. Harold A. Schneider were re-elected unanimously. Also re-elected were the 10 vice presidents.

ILO Calls on Greek Dictatorship To Guarantee Trade Union Rights

Geneva—The Intl. Labor Organization has called on the military dictatorship that has seized power in Greece to guarantee trade union freedoms and human rights.

The ILO's 48-member Governing Body recalled in a pointed message to the Greek junta the "fundamental principles" for which the United Nations specialized agency has always stood.

These include, the message said, the right of workers to organize unions of their own choice and to strike in defense of their interests without government interference.

Trade unionists arrested for political offenses or ordinary crimes must be "judged promptly by an impartial and independent judicial authority," the ILO stressed.

The Governing Body, or executive council of worker, government and employer delegates, acted promptly following a preliminary examination of complaints filed against the Greek dictatorship by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions and other groups.

Final action on the complaints over the flouting of civil liberties and the rights of workers was delayed pending explanations from the junta requested by the ILO's Freedom of Association Committee.

But the new dictatorship's public pronouncements and Greek press reports of its moves against trade unions were considered sufficiently grave for the ILO to put its position on record immediately.

In another development, the Franco government offered to permit the ILO to send an investigating team to determine the "true labor and trade union situation" in Spain.

500 Complaints Filed

The invitation was announced as the Freedom of Association Committee continued to press Spain for detailed replies to the latest of the more than 500 complaints filed against the Franco government by the ICFTU, Spanish exiled trade unions and other groups.

ILO Dir. Gen. David A. Morse was instructed to arrange an on-the-spot study by a group of "impartial and objective persons possessing the highest qualification and familiar with labor matters."

Details of the investigation are to be submitted to the Governing Body at its November meeting.

Jean Moeri, veteran Swiss leader of the worker delegates, warned that they would not agree to the mission unless they were satisfied it would be able to make the broadest possible examination with complete freedom. Moeri also said that the workers would insist that Morse and the Governing Body alone name the members of the investigating team.

Two other conditions the workers laid down were that there be no censorship of the team's findings and that everyone giving testimony be fully guaranteed against all reprisals.

The executive council approved Morse's nomination as principal deputy director general of Clarence W. Jenks, a 58-year-old Briton who has been with the ILO since 1931.

Rudolph Faupl of the Machinists, the U.S. worker delegate, attended the short session of the executive committee, which serves each year as a prelude to the June conference of the 119-nation ILO. Faupl will head the American labor delegation to the three-week conference. Other members are Presidents I. W. Abel of the Steelworkers, William E. Fredenberger of the Firemen & Oilers, Matthew Guinan of the Transport Workers and Ralph Reiser of the Glass & Ceramic Workers.

Also, Vice Pres. W. Vernie Reed of the Laborers, Business Rep. David McSweeney of IAM District 38, Edward J. Hickey, Jr., Washington attorney for several railroad unions, and AFL-CIO Social Security Dir. Bert Seidman.

Garnet Patterson Dies, Rubber Union Counsel

Navarre, O.—Garnet L. Patterson, for 25 years general counsel for the Rubber Workers and one of the country's outstanding labor lawyers, died in Massillon City Hospital after a heart attack in his home here.

Patterson was graduated from Cleveland Law School and in 1929 opened a law office in Akron.

He joined the National Labor Relations Board staff in 1935, was named an Akron Municipal Court judge in 1936, ran unsuccessfully as the Democratic candidate for mayor in 1937 and then rejoined the NLRB, holding posts in Seattle, Washington and Chicago before resigning in 1942 to become URW counsel.

Surviving are the widow, Mrs. Thelma Patterson, a son, two daughters and five grandchildren.

non-union firms who underpay and overwork their employes.

"We have a major concern that benefits available to women under state labor laws be retained and that they be extended to men to the maximum extent possible," Biemiller declared.

He pointed out that the EEOC in rulings has extended to men some types of legislative or other benefits applying only to women, such as minimum wages, overtime pay and rest periods. It also has had to deal with legislation that protects women by prohibiting certain work, he said, citing California enactments that prompted the EEOC's "hands off" policy.

"Where an existing law serves a valid protective purpose but is in a form not readily appropriate for direct extension to men," he said, "our position is that such a law, benefiting significant portions of the female work force, should not be invalidated because of adverse effects on particular individuals or groups bringing charges of denial of 'equal employment opportunity'.

"Those concerned both for the maintenance of labor standards and for equalizing employment conditions for both sexes have favored an evolutionary approach," he noted, "namely, through new legislation restructured to provide protection for both sexes."

Biemiller expressed labor's conviction that if the EEOC fostered a general destruction of existing state labor laws, it would deprive women of "much needed protection in the lowest paid and least organized segments of the work force."

Protection Still Needed

He knocked down arguments that 1966 amendments to the Fair Labor Standards Act eliminated the need for protective state laws for women.

At least 3 million women are not covered by the act and an additional 3.2 million have only incomplete or delayed protection, leaving them with wages below the statutory minimum, he said.

In addition, he went on, the time-and-a-half overtime penalty no longer serves as a strong protection against long work days or weeks because its effect as a restraint has been diluted by the growth of fringe benefits, which do not have to be paid for on a premium basis.

"We believe that the EEOC, with other government agencies, has a responsibility to avoid action leading to undermining of labor standards whether they apply to both sexes or to women only," Biemiller concluded.

Hotel Retirees Give Award to Sullivan

New York—The Pensioners Society of the New York Hotel & Motel Trades Council presented its 1967 Distinguished Citizen Award to Pres. David Sullivan of the Building Service Employes at its annual observance of Senior Citizens Month.

The award is given each year for outstanding service to community and nation. Speakers at the presentation included Pres. Harry Van Arsdale, Jr., of the New York City AFL-CIO; Pres. Jay Rubin of the Hotel & Motel Trades Council; James C. O'Brien, assistant to the president of the National Council of Senior Citizens, and AFL-CIO Regional Dir. Michael Mann.

any regard for history, but only for power."

"I say we have an interest in the preservation of the state of Israel as a democracy in a part of the world where democracy is largely unknown," he declared, citing Israel's multiple-party political system and its elections.

"Did anyone ever elect Nasser?" he asked. "He elected himself, with the aid of his goons."

Americans have a stake in preserving democracy in every part of the world, Meany said, adding: "To whatever extent American labor can make its influence felt, we will try to drive home that idea."

Wherever a free society is threatened, such a threat is a menace to all free men, Meany told the conference.

Compromise Rejected

He repeated his belief that "you can't get anywhere by compromising with dictators" and "I don't believe that trading with the Soviet Union is in the interests of America," or that "we should help those who are shooting down our boys in Southeast Asia."

Meany expressed "the greatest admiration" for Pres. Johnson and the enormity of his job burden.

"Surely labor," he said, "will do everything it can to lighten that burden. But under no circumstances will we abandon our principles, under which we have done so much for so many over many long years."

Expressing appreciation for the willingness of union members to help push labor's legislative program, the federation president reported that "by and large, our unions have more members, their contracts are better," and "we're doing quite well."

He noted that labor had one "bitter disappointment" in the failure to win repeal of Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act, which permits states to outlaw union shop agreements between consenting employers and unions. Nevertheless, he observed, the "over-all legislative picture certainly is not a bad picture."

"Under the Johnson and Kennedy administrations and in the 88th and 89th Congresses we made great strides," he said. "We failed to remove 14(b) from the statute books, not because we couldn't get the votes but because we couldn't get the votes counted" because of a filibuster by a Republican leader—Sen. Everett McKinley Dirksen.

He ticked off the legislative gains enacted with the support of labor—two Civil Rights acts, federal aid to education, medical care for the elderly, wage-hour law improvements — all laws benefiting everybody," not just union members.

He congratulated the Meat Cutters on making a better social security program a major legislative objective, along with other important parts of labor's program.

Referring to new attacks on the labor movement, Meany noted two sets of amendments have over the years diluted the right to organize and bargain without employer interference as set forth in the Wagner Act.

"Now," he said, "we are hearing agitation for legislation that would destroy collective bargaining" by imposing a strike ban and compulsory arbitration on 135,000 railroad shopworkers.

If an employe comes to the bargaining table without the right to withhold his services, "then that is the end of free collective bargaining," said Meany, "and the beginning of the end of democracy in our society."

He asked: "Why should an employer bargain in good faith with his employes if he knows that Congress or some goverment agency is going to compel the employes" to accept terms they do not want?

"I congratulate you on your effort to let Congress know we don't believe in compulsory arbitration" which, he declared, is implicit in the Administration proposal to prevent shopcraft workers from striking before Jan. 1, 1969.

The two-day conference also heard talks by Vice Pres. Hubert Humphrey and Pres. T. J. Lloyd and Sec.-Treas. Patrick E. Gorman of the union.

Emergency Drive Opens for Histadrut

Unity House, Pa. — The American Trade Union Council for Histadrut, Israel's trade union movement, launched a drive at a conference here for $1 million for the Israel Histadrut Emergency Fund to help the labor federation maintain health, educational and welfare services during Israel's emergency.

The meeting instructed the officers to canvass all U.S. trade union bodies for the needed funds and appealed to all friends of Histadrut to contribute as generously as possible.

LABOR never has hesitated to raise its voice against tyranny and dictatorship, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany tells national legislative conference of the Meat Cutters. And in the current Israel-Arab crisis, U.S. labor will stand "side by side with our trade union friends" against "a Moscow puppet," Meany disclosed.

Marshall Plan Concept Urged for New Nations

The free world labor movement, on the 20th anniversary of the Marshall Plan, was summoned by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany to join in "a new program of economic cooperation, again based on a genuine partnership, between developed countries and the newly-emerging nations."

Meany's plea came as the U.S. and Western Europe observed the passing of two decades since the late George C. Marshall, serving as secretary of state following a brilliant military career, outlined his program for reviving the economy of war-ravaged Europe in a speech at Harvard University on June 5, 1947.

Meany, citing the "gigantic initiative" of the Marshall Plan with its stress on "self-help, mutual assistance among European countries and American aid," called for "an equally gigantic initiative to fulfill the aspirations of the people of all nations . . . for peace, self-government, freedom and a better life."

He recalled that in adopting the plan, Congress proclaimed U.S. policy to be "to assist and strengthen principles of individual liberty, free institutions and genuine independence."

"The task confronting the developed countries today is even more formidable and more challenging than the great problem of European recovery after the second world war," he continued. "The task is to build a better life and a better world."

The new program like the old must be based on self-help, mutual cooperation and dedication to individual liberty, free institutions and genuine independence, he declared.

"To mobilize the people and their governments in the realization of such a program is the major responsibility of trade unions," he continued. "We realize that the defense against political enslavement is impossible without sustained progress in economic development and human well-being.

"It is for the trade unions to provide leadership in a program which not only assures effective defense against military aggression by Communist forces but also to build a defense against internal aggression by these forces whose most disruptive weapon is human poverty and privation.

"The future of human welfare, of human freedom and the future of peace is in the hands of those who work."

Pres. Johnson also called on the free world to show the "energy, imagination and courage" of the Marshall Plan to build the underdeveloped two-thirds of the world.

The Marshall Plan lasted four years and cost the U.S. slightly more than $13 billion instead of the estimated $25 billion that had been anticipated.

In three years, industrial production in the cooperating nations was 49 percent higher than prewar levels, farm production had increased about 20 percent and the Communist threat to all practical purposes had been ended.

Uranium Mine Safety Pressed by AFL-CIO

Human life and health must be given priority over the dollar cost of lowering the radiation level of uranium mines, the AFL-CIO told a joint congressional committee.

Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller reiterated labor's strong support of the radiation safety standards imposed by Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz under the Walsh-Healey Act for mines supplying uranium to the government.

Biemiller asked that the same standards be adopted by other government regulatory agencies. He told the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy that the AFL-CIO testimony also represented the views of the federation's Metal Trades Dept.

Industry witnesses and some congressmen have challenged as unworkable and "impossible to enforce" the decision of Wirtz to set a limit of .3 of a "working level," the unit used to measure radiation. Where the radiation emissions in a uranium mine exceed that level, special ventilation techniques and respirators would be needed to reduce the concentration.

Wirtz acted last month after the inter-agency Federal Radiation Council had failed to agree on a standard. The secretary of labor said the limit he set under Walsh-Healey authority would ensure that uranium miners would run no greater risk of developing cancer than workers in other industries.

Long Fight Recalled

Biemiller reminded the committee that the AFL-CIO for many years had pressed for strong radiation safety standards and that reaction by the federal government "has been tragically slow and irresolute."

He said excessive radiation exposure has already "resulted in 98 known deaths from lung cancer" among uranium miners and "projections indicate there may well be from 50 to nearly 1,500 fatalities" from that source among the 10,000 persons who have worked in underground uranium mines over the years.

"No worker should be compelled to pay for a job with his health or his life," Biemiller declared.

He noted that within a few years, purchases of uranium concentrates by the Atomic Energy Commission will be completed and production will be shifted to civilian needs, with safety regulatory authority assumed by the Dept. of the Interior.

The "strongest possible standards" should be established now, he urged. While some degree of phasing may be desirable for a timetable to meet the new requirements, the criteria must be health rather than cost, he declared.

Israel's Defense of Freedom Hailed By 4,000 at New York Labor Rally

New York—Organized labor will exert every effort to convince all Americans that defense of Israel means defense of democracy. This was the consensus of 4,000 unionists, including officers of top labor organizations here, at a rally held in support of the Middle East republic.

Theme of the rally, sponsored by the New York City Central Labor Council, was "Save peace in the Middle East by strengthening a free and democratic Israel."

Carrying posters bearing slogans in support of Israel, United Nations action and restoration of the Gulf of Aqaba's status as an international waterway, cheering unionists unanimously adopted a resolution calling on organized labor throughout the nation to mobilize its strength to help preserve Israel as a bastion of freedom.

They also cheered a statement on the Middle East crisis issued by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany emphasizing that the situation cannot be met by appeasing "Soviet aggression by proxy."

Leaders of top national unions spoke out sharply in condemnation of the Arab action against Israel. Pres. A. Philip Randolph of the Sleeping Car Porters, calling Israel "our sister republic," asserted that its "brave and gallant people . . . deserve the support of all those who believe in freedom and democracy all over the world."

Pres. Max Greenberg of the Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Union declared: "If anything emerges from this meeting, it will be that we must say to all the world that where a big Hitler didn't succeed, a little one won't either." He asked that the rally stand unanimous in urging the U.S. to keep its commitment to Israel.

"What we need is an affirmation of our determination to make sure Israel shall live," he said, "and we shall not be found wanting in moral or financial support."

Vice Pres. Charles Zimmerman of the Ladies' Garment Workers, representing ILGWU Pres. Louis Stulberg, held that the UN should act "if it is a true force for peace."

Pres. David Sullivan of the Building Service Employes said: "This is not a Jewish fight, but a fight for all those who believe in freedom and democracy."

Pres. Harry Van Arsdale, Jr., president of the Central Labor Council, who presided at the rally, called Israel "a symbol of inspiration" and said, "We are going to try to undertake to see that our country stands with Israel in this hour of crisis."

Building Trades Push for Site Picketing

4,200 Call For Action In Congress

More than 4,200 union building tradesmen asked their home state congressmen and senators to pass the on-site picketing bill and support a broad-ranging legislative program "to benefit all America"

Delegates to the 12th legislative conference of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. were told that the reports they bring back from two days of visits to Capitol Hill will help shape labor's legislative strategy.

"We are not here with hat in hand," BCTD Pres. C. J. Haggerty told the opening session of the four-day conference. The department's 18 affiliated unions, he said, "have over 8,400 local unions in over 600 cities throughout the 50 states, with over 3.5 million members."

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, keynoting the conference, told the delegates not to be discouraged by the opposition of the National Association of Manufacturers and similar groups to the site picketing bill.

The NAM, Meany pointed out, has consistently opposed every law that has been passed to help the worker or his family and its opposition "is a pretty good omen for success."

Landmark Gains Cited

He stressed labor's contribution to the legislative accomplishments of recent years, including medicare, expansion of the minimum wage and federal aid to education. Each of these landmark laws, Meany declared, have been "good for everybody in America, not just for our people."

He asked the delegates also, in their visits to congressmen, to voice labor's united opposition to compulsory arbitration of the railroad shopcrafts dispute.

It affects the heart of the trade union movement, he said, because "there is no free collective bargaining unless you can come to the bargaining table with the right to quit work."

Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz, who followed Meany as a speaker, told the delegates that he doesn't defend the Administration's railroad bill "in terms of principle" although he backs the bill "in terms of necessity."

Wirtz said he is "100 percent" for the on-site picketing bill and the other portions of the BCTD legislative program.

The secretary of labor spoke out strongly against the "totally unfair . . . pointing of a finger on the

House Votes 90-Day Bar To Rail Shopcrafts Strike

FROM EVERY SECTION of the United States building tradesmen came to Washington to press for passage of the on-site picketing bill and a broad-ranging legislative program "to build America." More than 4,200 delegates took part in the four-day legislative conference.

Drops Plan To Compel New Pact

By David L. Perlman

The House voted to bar a railroad shopcrafts strike for an additional 90 days of mediation effort, but turned down a Senate-passed provision that would have imposed compulsory arbitration if mediation failed.

The legislation now goes to a House-Senate conference committee and union leaders gave a voluntary pledge that they would not strike while the bill was in conference.

House action came after two days of debate centering on the compulsory arbitration feature of the Administration bill, which AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany had warned would strike at the "heart of the trade union movement" by destroying "the right to free collective bargaining."

Elimination of compulsory arbitration came on a non-record 189-105 vote which tentatively wrote into the bill an amendment sponsored by Rep. Claude Pepper (D-Fla.).

In view of the big majority for the Pepper amendment, Administration leaders did not insist on a rollcall and the amended bill was then quickly passed by a voice vote.

Earlier, the House had defeated other attempts to make the legislation less one-sided, including a labor-backed amendment by Rep. Brock Adams (D-Wash.) providing

LBJ Praises Labor's Role In Crises

Pres. Johnson said America's union members have been "a source of strength and comfort" to him in every crisis the nation has faced.

He came to the legislative conference of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. to express his gratitude.

It was at a similar conference two years ago that "the very first" message of support from any organization came to him as the nation grappled with "grim and difficult situations in the Dominican Republic and in Viet Nam," Johnson said. "And I have never forgotten that."

The President's speech was also aimed beyond the trade union audi-

Challenge Denied:

States Ruled Subject To U.S. Wage Floor

Baltimore—Federal wage-hour standards for state employes of public schools, hospitals and bus lines are a valid extension of the government's powers, a special three-judge federal court here has ruled.

The special judicial panel, however, while refusing an injunction sought by Maryland and 25 other states to prevent enforcement of the 1966 amendments to the Wage-Hour Law, delayed actual enforcement pending an anticipated appeal to the Supreme Court.

The judges filed three separate opinions. Two upheld the validity of the extended minimum wage coverage, although one of these questioned the constitutionality of the overtime provisions. The third judge upheld the position of the states.

The 1966 amendments among other things extended the act to cover state employes at schools, hospitals and other facilities with a $1-an-hour wage floor as of Feb. 1, 1967, moving up to $1.60 in 1971. The states charged that this put the federal government in the position of telling state legislatures what they must appropriate out of tax levies to meet wage laws set by the U.S.

Circuit Judge Harrison L. Winter and Chief Judge Rosel C. Thomsen agreed that the minimum wage amendments were a valid extension of the government's power under the commerce clause. Winter held that arguments of impairment of state sovereignty "are largely irrelevant," and that the financial impact of the new law on the states "is an argument that should be addressed to Congress not to the courts."

Thomsen held that the power of the federal government to regulate

4-Year Draft Extension Given Senate Approval

The Senate voted final approval to a restrictive four-year extension of the draft law, despite charges that it would apply a double standard to youngsters based on their family income and occupational goals.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.) sought to defeat a House-Senate conference report and substitute a one-year draft extension, setting the stage for a more thorough congressional consideration of the nation's manpower needs next year.

The motion lost, 72-23.

As finally enacted, the bill freezes the present policy of educational deferments for college students and bars the President from putting into effect a random "lottery" system of determining who should be called into service.

The AFL-CIO had opposed blanket educational deferments as "clearly discriminating against sons of low income families."

Kennedy also expressed another labor objection when he told the Senate that the same treatment should be provided for apprentices

Court Upholds Fines For Crossing Lines

A union has the right to fine members who cross a picket line and work during a strike voted by a majority of the members, the U.S. Supreme Court has ruled.

In a 5 to 4 decision, the court overturned a lower tribunal's ruling and held that fines against members who refuse to abide by a decision of the union to strike did not violate the National Labor Relations Act.

The majority, led by Justice William J. Brennan, Jr., and including Chief Justice Earl Warren and Justices Tom C. Clark, Abe Fortas and Byron R. White, held that the fines were not an unfair labor practice and did not coerce employes.

Brennan said that while the Landrum-Griffin Act made it unlawful for a union to fine or discipline a member "for exercising any right to which he is entitled," Congress didn't intend to prevent a union from fining a member who crosses a picket line.

"National labor policy," he wrote, "has been built on the premise that by acting through a labor organization freely chosen by the majority, employes have the most effective means of bargaining. The policy therefore extinguishes the individual employe's power to order his own relations with his employer."

Brennan continued that "integral to this federal labor policy has been the power in the chosen union to protect against erosion of its status under that policy through reasonable discipline of members who violate rules and regulations governing membership."

Six from Union Families Receive Presidential Scholars' Medallions

The nation's 1967 Presidential Scholars—the outstanding graduates of secondary schools—were urged by Pres. Johnson to become "leaders of action" as well as "leaders of thought." Johnson addressed the youths at a White House ceremony at which he presented them with special medallions in recognition of their scholastic accomplishments.

The scholars—two from each state, Puerto Rico, the District of Columbia and U.S. schools in other countries—include six children of AFL-CIO members; in two cases both parents are members of affiliates.

The President pointed out to the young people that their generation will have to help determine if "we live or die, whether we have peace or war."

"I do not believe that young citizens have a monopoly on brains," he said. "Nor do I believe they have a monopoly on virtue. But I know they have the greatest share of energy and enthusiasm in America. I have seen it in Viet Nam—much to my sorrow, I see it there every day.

"I plead with you to get involved. I hope that on your next visit to Washington you plan to stay for a long, long time—even under a change of administration, if that should come about."

Johnson and his daughter, Lynda, received the graduates and their parents in the absence of Mrs. Johnson, who had gone to Austin, Tex., to await the arrival of her first grandchild.

Guests at Supper

The scholars also were guests at a buffet supper they shared with recruiters for the Teacher Corps and the Peace Corps.

The medallion winners both of whose parents are union members are John E. Clark of New Orleans and Ray A. Hammond of Philadelphia.

The former's father, Peter W. Clark, Sr., is a high school teacher and his mother, Mrs. Mary Katherine Clark, is an elementary school teacher, and both are members of Teachers Local 527.

Young Clark was graduated first in his class of 154 and hopes to become a psychologist. He has won summer scholarships to the University of Minnesota High School, Phillips Andover Academy, the Stockbridge School and Princeton University.

Hammond is the son of Raymond Hammond, a member of Postal Clerks Local 89, and Mrs. Eva Hammond, of Teachers Local 113. He was graduated eighth in a class of 500 members and wants to become a surgeon.

A student whose brilliance was demonstrated in the humanities as well as in science and mathematics, he played violin in the high school orchestra and has been an active civil rights worker.

The other scholars from trade union families are:

Louise M. Pescetta, Oakland, Calif., daughter of Francesco B. Pescetta, a member of Sheet Metal Workers Local 216 since 1940. She led her high school class of 600 members and expects to become a linguist. She is the fourth Presidential Scholar from a family in which the father is a member of the Sheet Metal Workers.

Edward L. Whitfield, Little Rock, Ark., whose father, Robert E. Whitfield, belongs to Post Office Mail Handlers Local 108. The boy was graduated sixth in a class of 624 at Little Rock Central High School. He has had an outstanding record both as a student and a school leader, and would like to be a college mathematics teacher.

Howard D. Spence, Decatur, Ill., son of T. P. Spence, a member of Allied Industrial Workers Local 728. Young Spence was characterized by his high school counselor as one of the outstanding students he has known in 18 years of experience. He has been active in church work, helped organize a math club and was a student librarian. He plans to study liberal arts in college.

Martha J. Huard, Waterville, Me., daughter of Leslie J. Huard of Letter Carriers Branch 515. She has worked as a babysitter, a mathematics tutor, a waitress and a housekeeper in addition to taking part in a wide range of extracurricular activities and leading her high school graduating class of 51 members. She wants to be either an archaeologist or a biochemist.

The scholars were guests at a reception at George Washington University at which they met Dir. Walter G. Davis of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education.

They also were guests, with their parents, at a luncheon given by the Teachers over which the union's Washington representative, Carl Megel, presided.

CONGRATULATIONS of the President are conveyed personally to Martha J. Huard of Waterville, Me., one of more than 100 graduating high school students from all parts of the country who were honored at special White House ceremonies at this year's Presidential Scholars. Miss Huard's father, Leslie J. Huard, is a member of Letter Carriers Branch 515.

New Proposals Exchanged:

Bargaining Step-Up Marks Rubber Strike

Akron—Proposals and counter proposals marked a determined effort by the Rubber Workers and Big Five rubber companies to achieve a settlement as the URW strikes against three of the firms—Firestone, B. F. Goodrich and Uniroyal—went into their ninth week.

This year's negotiations have been in progress since mid-March. Both sides recently agreed to put pensions and insurance on the table at this time, rather than wait a month until negotiations on those matters were scheduled to begin.

The three struck companies and Goodyear made a proposal for a three-year contract with raises totaling 38 cents an hour for tire plant employes and 31 cents for non-tire employes. But the URW rejected the offer as inadequate.

General Tire's latest offer, covering 3,300 employes at plants in Akron and Waco, Tex., is for 40 cents an hour in raises in three years and a pension offer that union sources said will buy more than the 22 cents offered by the other four companies. The other four offered to raise pension benefits to $5.25 a month for each year of service. Present rate is $3.25.

Breaking their policy of silence, the companies sent letters to all employes outlining their proposals. They said they had also offered 10 cents an hour differential for skilled tradesmen, $1.50 a month for each year of service added to pensions of current retirees, and improved life and health insurance.

Supplemental Unemployment Benefits, which the union seeks to raise to 92.5 percent of regular wages for laid-off employes, would be increased from the present 65 percent level to 75 percent by four of the companies, according to the letters. Duration would be 26 weeks. Short work weeks would be paid at 75 percent of average straight time earnings. General offered to raise SUB benefits to 80 percent.

URW Pres. Peter Bommarito accused management of employing a "new math" in explaining the offers. He charged all union economic proposals have been inflated by the companies through the use of the first time of a "roll up" or add-on valuation.

For example, Bommarito said, if the company offered 20 cents an hour it would mean only 18 cents to the worker. He said the companies add the other two cents as a labor cost to them to cover such things as overtime premium pay.

5% Offer Stalled

The union said it had received at least one commitment for an offer of a true 5 percent, without the "roll up" but it has not been formally forthcoming.

The URW has valued the four companies' offers at 60 cents an hour and the General Tire offer at 63 or 64 cents. Its counter-proposals would cost the companies 75 to 80 cents an hour over a three-year contract, the union said.

Bommarito said there also are problems involving working conditions that must be resolved before any settlement can be reached. He cited particularly the Uniroyal "bogey"—a stipulation that a worker must produce at a specified rate of efficiency in order to be paid the maximum regular rate for his job.

Article XXI Sanctions Applied to Rail Firemen

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has notified all affiliates that the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen has been found to be in non-compliance with the decision of an impartial umpire under the AFL-CIO's internal disputes procedures and is therefore subject to sanctions under the federation's constitution.

The finding was reached by a subcommittee of the AFL-CIO Executive Council consisting of Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler and Vice Presidents David Sullivan and Hunter P. Wharton.

The findings, Meany said, followed the refusal of the union to "withdraw its petition before the National Labor Relations Board as complained of by the United Steelworkers of America, involving the Kennecott Copper Corp., Utah Copper Division."

In his notification to affiliates, Meany said the union, effective June 6, 1967, would be subject to the following provisions of Sec. 15 of Art. XXI of the AFL-CIO Constitution:

"1. The non-complying affiliate shall not be entitled to file any complaint or appear in a complaining capacity in any proceeding under this article until such non-compliance is remedied or excused as provided in Sec. 16;

"2. The federation shall, upon request, supply every appropriate assistance and aid to any organization resisting the action determined to be in violation of this article;

"3. The federation shall appropriately publicize the fact that the affiliate is not in compliance with the constitution;

"4. No affiliate shall support or render assistance to the action determined to be in violation of this article."

Meany notified affiliates also that another council subcommittee, consisting of Schnitzler and Vice Pres. Paul Hall, has found the Switchmen's Union of North America to be in non-compliance with a determination of an impartial umpire.

The finding of the subcommittee followed the refusal of the union to withdraw its petition filed with the National Mediation Board as complained of by the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen on the Southern Pacific Co. Lines.

The Switchmen's union had previously been found in non-compliance and is already subject to sanctions under the constitution.

Other unions currently remaining in non-compliance with impartial umpires' decisions include the Intl. Typographical Union, Air Line Pilots Association, National Maritime Union, Journeymen Stonecutters of North America.

Canadian Steelworker Wins Parliament Seat

Sudbury, Ont.—Alderman Melville (Bud) Germa, a member of Steelworkers Local 6500 and a 30-year employe of the Intl. Nickel Co., was elected to Parliament on the New Democratic Party slate in one of five by-election contests.

The Liberals won the other four elections, all in safe Quebec areas. The results left the Liberals with 131 of the 265 seats in the House of Commons and raised the NDP total to 22.

Rail Strike Call Held Up:

House-Senate Bills Go to Conference

for government seizure of the railroads and impounding of profits until a settlement is negotiated. The amendment was beaten, 198-111.

A number of Republicans joined with liberal Democrats in opposing compulsory arbitration, but several GOP conservatives said they were supporting the 90-day postponement only in the hope that Congress would enact permanent legislation to deal with collective bargaining failures in essential industries.

Despite heavy White House pressure, the Administration bill needed almost solid support of GOP members of the House Commerce Committee to reach the floor. Committee Democrats voted 13-6 against it but Republican members backed it 12-1.

Committee Chairman Harley O. Staggers (D-W.Va.) denounced the Administration bill as the debate got under way, declaring it was "completely one-sided" and applied pressure "only to the unions."

He warned the railroad industry that it can't expect to continue for long under private ownership "when free men are compelled to work for wages and under conditions that are unacceptable to them."

Before the House vote, the AFL-CIO reiterated in a letter to all congressmen that the labor movement is "absolutely opposed" to compulsory arbitration.

Free Bargaining at Stake

Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller stressed that "to impose a settlement pattern on parties to a labor contract is to eliminate the free process of collective bargaining." He said seizure legislation "would at least impose an equal burden on both parties which will in turn re-establish an effective bargaining relationship."

Staggers said he had a letter from the rail union leaders assuring him that there would be no strike while an amended bill was in conference. The unions have the legal right to strike on June 19.

Rep. John D. Dingell (D-Mich.) noted that a recent settlement on the Long Island Rail Road, where management could not look to Congress to prevent a strike, brought a considerably higher pay settlement than management or any mediation board has proposed in the national shopcrafts dispute.

Administration leaders, having rejected outright as "unworkable" the rail unions' offer to move all military and other essential shipments in the event of a strike, cited the need to keep supplies moving to Viet Nam and the Middle East crisis in an effort to beat down opposition to compulsory arbitration.

The White House released letters from Defense Sec. Robert S. McNamara and Sec. of State Dean Rusk warning that a rail strike would be a disaster.

Crux of the dispute is the shopcrafts claim that skilled workers in the railroad industry are paid wages far below craft rates in other industries.

Gap Recognized

Two mediation boards in effect upheld the argument that a big gap exists, but recommended increases the six unions considered inadequate as a first step towards closing the gap. The latest proposal, turned down by the unions, provided three steps of 5 cents an hour at six months intervals in addition to a 6 percent general increase over an 18-month contract period.

Congress twice passed temporary "no-strike" legislation in the hope that direct bargaining would resolve the differences. But the unions have charged that railroad management has refused to make any new offer, confident that Congress would bar the workers from striking.

The House bill provides for appointment of a new mediation panel to seek a solution to the dispute. It differs from the Senate bill chiefly in not making the recommendations of the panel binding after 90 days.

Directly involved in the dispute are the Machinists, Boilermakers, Sheet Metal Workers, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Railway Carmen and Firemen & Oilers.

The AFL-CIO declared the threat of compulsory arbitration a danger to the entire labor movement and Meany said in a speech to the building trades legislative conference before the vote:

"In the final analysis it affects every trade union. It affects the very, very heart, the body and soul of the trade union movement, because the heart of this movement is the right to free collective bargaining. And there is no free collective bargaining unless you can come to the bargaining table with the right to quit work."

Marshall First Negro Named to High Court

Solicitor Gen. Thurgood Marshall, great-grandson of a slave, son of a Pullman porter and the country's most noted Negro lawyer, has been named an associate justice of the Supreme Court by Pres. Johnson.

If the Senate confirms him—and the signs are that it will although some Southerners may balk—he will be the first Negro to serve in the high court. He is expected to strengthen the court's liberal element.

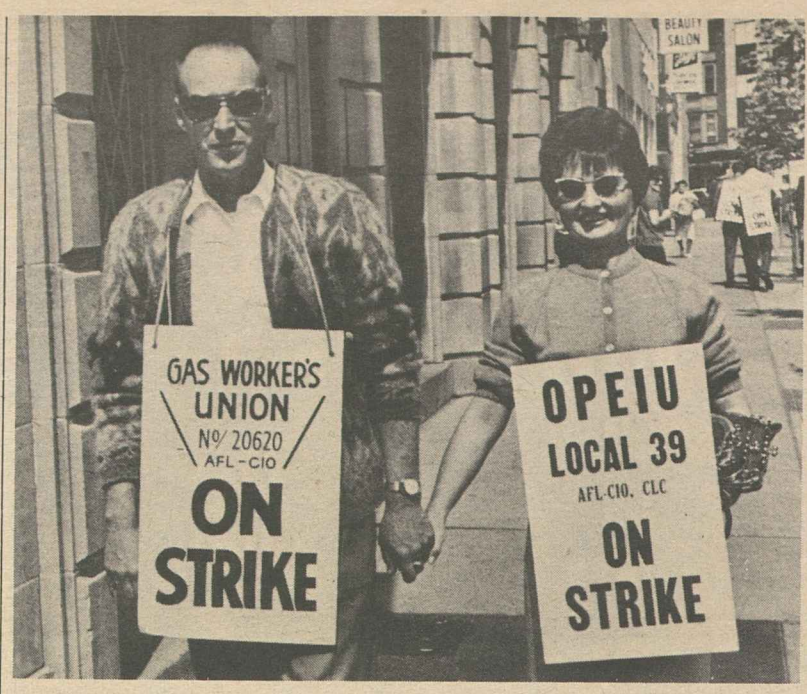
The President named Marshall to succeed Justice Tom C. Clark, who retired because of the appointment of his son, Ramsey, as attorney-general. The younger Clark was one of many who had recommended Marshall's appointment, declaring he would bring to the Supreme Court "a wealth of legal experience rarely equalled" in its history.

Marshall gained fame as the counsel for America's Negroes in their fight for equality. He was involved in scores of court actions that ended with discriminatory laws struck down, among them the case that led to the outlawing of school segregation by the Supreme Court in 1954.

The appointment was hailed by Negro leaders, by Chief Justice Earl Warren and by many members of Congress who cited Marshall's record as counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, as a federal judge and as solicitor general.

In announcing the appointment, the President said Marshall "has already earned his place in history, but I think it will be greatly enhanced by his service on the court."

"He is best qualified by training and by very valuable service to the country," Johnson added. "I believe it is the right thing to do, the right time to do it, the right man and the right place."



FAMILY-STYLE PICKETING by this husband-wife team was one feature of a two-union strike at the Madison (Wis.) Gas & Electric Co. Clarence Young, a production worker, belongs to directly-chartered Gas Workers Union No. 20620; Mrs. Young, an office worker, is a member of Office & Professional Employes Local 39. The strike was settled with the aid of state conciliators and Prof. Nathan Feinsinger of the University of Wisconsin.

Cooperative L.A. Drive Adds 100,000 Members

Los Angeles—What began as an experimental organizing effort in the metropolitan area here four years ago has added 100,000 members to AFL-CIO union rolls.

William L. Gilbert, director of the Los Angeles-Orange Counties Organizing Committee, credited the success to a "high degree of inter-union cooperation and the maintenance of unity among our affiliated unions for the purpose of organizing the unorganized."

Sustained gains in the private sector of industry coupled with "steady efforts to channeling increasingly restless public employes into bona fide unions" gave the campaign impetus, Gilbert reported to the organizing group's advisory board.

The Los Angeles-Orange Counties program was created by the AFL-CIO Executive Council in 1963 on a pilot basis. The program since has triggered more than 1,000 National Labor Relations Board elections and voluntary recognitions.

Nearly 98 percent of the elections have been conducted with only one AFL-CIO union on the ballot, Gilbert reported.

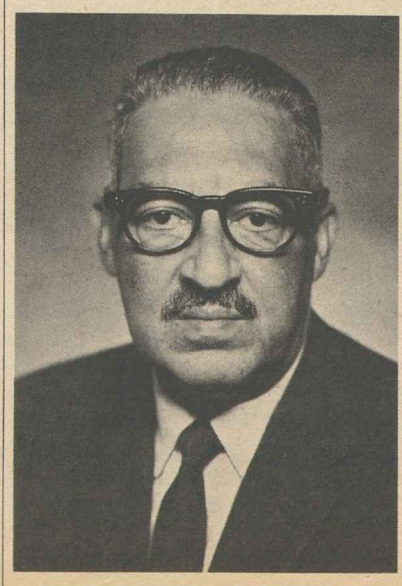
"Our reward has been a majority of campaigns won in an area which has been for so long a notorious anti-union stronghold," he said. "We feel this carries out our original intent."

Breakthroughs in the largely-unorganized electronics industry have been a feature of the four-year effort. Machinists won at Scientific Data Systems, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers was victorious at ITT-General Controls and the Auto Workers and Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers scored notable wins.

One of the big prizes was a Steelworkers election victory at Harvey Aluminum Co., which had resisted organization for 15 years.

Other major firms that have yielded to the cooperative organizing drive in this once-storied open shop area include the Los Angeles Times, Babcock Electronics, the Dixie Cup division of American Can, Fruehauf Corp. and Cedars of Lebanon Hospital.

Gilbert's report noted that organizing activities have been significantly affected by the influx of young people into the Los Angeles-Orange Counties labor market, the steady climb of living costs and the emergence of a new militancy among white collar workers.



THURGOOD MARSHALL

The case grew out of strikes involving the Auto Workers at Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing Co., Milwaukee, Wis., in 1959 and 1962. Members who crossed picket lines were found by union trial boards to have engaged in "conduct unbecoming a union member" and were fined $20 to $100.

Allis-Chalmers filed charges with the National Labor Relation Board saying that attempts to collect the fines constituted coercion of the employes. The board rejected the charges but a lower federal court found the union guilty of coercion. This decision was overturned by the Supreme Court.

In another case involving unions, the Supreme Court ruled that an emloyer can be required to pay striking workers vacation benefits if he grants the benefits to non-strikers. The NLRB had ruled that Great Dane Trailers, Inc., of Savannah, Ga., had discriminated against members of the Boilermakers who had gone on strike.

An appeals court overturned the board on the grounds that the company's action had not been motivated by discrimination against strikers. The high court reversed the decision on a 7 to 2 vote.

Warren, for the majority, wrote that the company had in fact discriminated against the strikers and that if any employer's discriminatory conduct is "inherently destructive of important employe rights," proof of anti-union bias is not needed.

The court upheld 5-4 the contempt convictions of eight civil rights leaders stemming from demonstrations in Birmingham, Ala., in 1963. The majority held that the leaders could not bypass orderly judicial review of an injunction forbidding the demonstration before disobeying it. The evidence, said the majority, showed they expected to go to jail.

A dissent by Brennan, Warren, Douglas and Fortas declared that the court had loosed "a devastatingly destructive weapon for the infringement of freedoms zealously safeguarded not so much for the benefit of any given group as for the benefit of all of us.

The decision, said the dissenters, arms state courts "with the power to punish as 'contempts' what they otherwise could not punish at all." Convictions for contempt of court orders which "invalidly abridge First Amendment freedoms must be condemned equally with convictions for violations of statutes which do the same thing."

In other decisions the court:

- Held unconstitutional a New York State law providing for court-approved electronic eavesdropping. The 6 to 3 decision held that it violated the Fourth Amendment to the Constitution.
- Invalidated state laws prohibiting marriages between Negroes and whites. The 9 to 0 decision knocked out a Virginia statute. Fifteen other states have similar laws.

Mexican Labor Moves to Help Farm Union

Mexico City—Fraternal cooperation by the Mexican trade union movement with the farm workers' strike and organizing efforts in the Rio Grande area of Texas was pledged to the maximum possible extent at a meeting here.

Fidel Velazquez, general secretary of the Mexican Confederation of Workers (CTM), met with AFL-CIO Organizing Dir. William L. Kircher; Raul Valdivia, assistant general secretary of the Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers (ORIT), and David T. Lopez of the AFL-CIO organizing staff on assignment in Texas.

The Mexican labor movement has endeavored to help the AFL-CIO United Farm Workers Organizing Committee discourage Mexican nationals from crossing the border to work in struck fields. Kircher stressed that the goal is not to bar the entry of Mexican workers, but to educate both Mexican and American workers to the benefits possible through union organization and collective bargaining.

ORIT plans to convene a meeting of the Joint U.S.-Mexico Trade Union Committee this summer to seek to work out details of a cooperative farm worker program between the trade union movements of the two nations.

CLC Membership Rolls Reach New Record

Ottawa, Ont. — The Canadian Labor Congress has a record membership of 1,450,000, Sec.-Treas. Donald MacDonald reported at a meeting of the executive council here.

The figure, MacDonald said, "reflects an unprecedented interest in union organization among people in all types of work." More than 1 million of the members belong to international unions, he said, and more than 350,000 are in Quebec—some 60 percent of the province's total union membership.

Crafts, Urban League Join in Apprentice Plan

Baltimore—The Baltimore Building & Construction Trades Council will work in cooperation with the Urban League here in a federally funded program to recruit minority youth into building trades apprenticeship programs.

The project, which was initiated by the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, will get underway immediately with the Urban League recruiting the youth from disadvantaged sectors of the community.

The Labor Dept. has granted the league a $46,000 Manpower Development & Training Act contract to carry out the program, called LEAP, for Labor Education Advancement Program. It is expected to recruit about 300 youths and place at least 30 in accredited courses.

At signing ceremonies in Washington, Assistant Sec. of Labor Stanley H. Ruttenberg told the parties that the objective of the Labor Dept. is "to try to work out in as many communities as we can, jointly, cooperatively, with the building trades unions and minority group organizations, programs to bring minority group members into apprenticeship training."

He noted that his department was engaged in several projects in East St. Louis, Detroit, Atlanta and Philadelphia.

AFL-CIO Civil Rights Dir. Don Slaiman and Executive Dir. Whitney Young of the National Urban League, both praised the program. Slaiman said it will help to bring the boys through the doors, once the doors are opened, "and if they're not fully prepared to compete, it prepares them."

Young asserted that "the various parties are certainly sincere in wanting to bring about a change with real bodies, not just words."

The project will include classes of from 25 to 75 youths, depending upon the number of apprenticeship openings at any given time. The youths will participate in mock interviews to prepare for actual screening sessions by apprenticeship committees. Funds are also being set aside for tutoring.

Guido Iozzi, president of the Baltimore Building & Construction Trades Council, said the program will be run by a joint committee of three representatives from the building trades union and three from the Urban League. He will serve as chairman.

LEAP was organized under the joint sponsorship of the National Urban League and the AFL-CIO through a grant from the Ford Foundation to help motivate and prepare Negro youth for participation in apprenticeships.

All federal and local agencies in the Baltimore area will be utilized in the program, the Labor Dept. announced.

Court Denies State Bid to Bar Pay Floor

functions of the states is not "absolute and unqualified." But he noted that the extension of the wage-hour act imposes a slight burden on the states and would not "unduly" interfere with their sovereign functions.

Overtime provisions of the act, he said, constituted a more serious question and should be decided on a case-by-case basis.

Judge Edward S. Northrup concluded that there was a clear conflict between the federal law and the ability of the states to levy taxes and provide essential services and held the wage-hour amendments to state employes an illegal extension of federal powers.

Maryland first sought the injunction to bar wage increases as of Feb. 1, 1967. Under the initial order issued by the court, records of wages and overtime must be kept in case the final decision is against the states.

The AFL-CIO and the State, County & Municipal Workers filed briefs with the special panel asking that the Maryland suit be thrown out and citing the right of the federal government and Congress to act in this area under the commerce clause of the Constitution.

ILPA Fights Sharp Hike In Postage

The Intl. Labor Press Association has asked Congress not to impose an "unbearable" 60 percent increase in postage rates on most union publications.

ILPA Sec.-Treas. Kenneth Fiester told a House subcommittee on postal rates that labor is willing to pay its "fair share" of the rate increases needed to reduce the Post Office Dept.'s operating deficit.

But he stressed that the hike for labor publications should not be greater than the general increase of 20 percent sought in the Administration bill.

The section of the bill that would hit hard at union publications would raise the piece rate, used by more than 62 percent of ILPA-affiliated papers, from the present one-eighth of a cent a copy to one-fifth of a cent.

Added income to the government would be minimal, Fiester pointed out, but the higher cost to the publications affected "would be a severe burden to all and a catastrophe to many."

Union newspapers play an important part in the collective bargaining process and by providing information to members are "a basic tool in the trade union arsenal of democracy," Fiester declared.

Fiester said the ILPA does not object to a proposed sliding scale increase in postage based on advertising content, even though some labor papers carry ads.

The larger union magazines, carrying the most pages, would have the smallest percentage increase because they pay postage by the pound, Fiester noted. The union publications that would be hardest hit are those "that are thinnest in size and, for the most part, thinnest in pocketbook as well."

Baseball Manager Agrees: R-T-W Is 'Bush League'

Phoenix, Ariz.—Arizona's "right-to-work" law may be keeping Phoenix a bush league city.

The suggestion didn't come from a union leader. It was made by the general manager of the Phoenix Giants baseball club, Rosy Ryan.

The sports editor of the Arizona Republic tried to find out why San Diego is being talked about for big league status while Phoenix is generally passed over.

"We're a right to work state," Ryan commented, "and in such situations you usually find the public doesn't have as much to spend on entertainment as it does in states where labor is strong."

Organizing Fund Extended:

Insurance Workers Up Membership 15%

Cleveland—The Insurance Workers voted to continue applying part of the union's defense fund to organizing activities on the heels of an intensive, two-year organizing effort that has boosted membership by 15 percent.

Delegates to IWIU's fifth constitutional convention approved the extension of special financial arrangements under which only 30 cents of the monthly per capita—instead of 50 cents—goes into the negotiating and defense fund. The extra revenue goes to the general fund, where it has been earmarked for organizing.

The special financial arrangement was first put into effect in 1963 on the basis of a referendum and was extended two years ago after a second vote of the membership.

The plan was approved after delegates heard Pres. William A. Gillen report that the union had expanded its membership from 21,000 in 1965 to around 24,000 at present. This, he said, marked the "first significant growth" in membership strength in years.

Almost all of the growth since 1965 has taken place among agents of Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., scene of a long legal wrangle over the question of appropriate units for bargaining within the industry. Metropolitan capitulated last year and agreed to the more liberal definition of unit size handed down by the National Labor Relations Board.

Climax of 30-Year Struggle

Gillen described the progress at Metropolitan as "the successful climax of nearly 30 years of struggle to organize employes of the nation's most powerful firm." He added that IWIU now is "racing to complete total organization of Metropolitan's district agents."

He predicted substantial organizing progress at other companies in the next few years, and said the drive would be confined primarily to companies where the union already has representation rights for some agents.

Gillen also indicated the union was considering possible organization of home office clerical employes in many of the leading insurance firms. Such a major effort, he said, would be beyond IWIU's resources, and would call for "massive help" from the rest of the labor movement.

For the first time since creation of IWIU through merger of the former AFL and CIO insurance unions in 1959, the union's top officers were re-elected without opposition. Chosen by acclamation for another two-year term, besides Gillen, were Sec.-Treas. Charles G. Heisel and Vice Presidents Arthur H. Higginson, Robert J. Nicholson, Joseph Pollack, Robert L. Ponsi and Nicholas M. Rongione.

The convention voted $1,000-a-year salary increases for the officers, but turned down a proposal to extend their terms of office from two to four years. The suggestion had originally been made at the 1965 convention and had been scheduled to become effective this year. The plan had been approved, in the meantime, by the executive board, but when it came before this year's convention for implementation, it fell far short of the necessary two-thirds majority.

The union's successful organizing effort dominated the four-day convention, affecting even the IWIU report on COPE contributions. The two were linked together by Gillen, who told delegates that labor's political efforts were indirectly responsible for the union's election victories.

For 17 years, he noted, organizing in the insurance field was "frustrated" by NLRB restrictions on the proper size of bargaining units. This pattern changed, he went on, after the late Pres. Kennedy altered the complexion of the labor board through his appointments.

"I believe that it is fair to say that if John Fitzgerald Kennedy had not been elected as a result of COPE support," the IWIU president said, "we would still be trying to organize Metropolitan agents . . . and with little success."

Senate Unit Clears Truth-in-Lending Bill

A compromise truth-in-lending bill won the unanimous endorsement of a nine-man Senate Banking subcommittee. It was the first breakthrough in a six-year, labor-backed campaign for legislation to protect the consumer against deception when he borrows money or buys on the installment plan.

Amendments made by the subcommittee considerably limited the impact of the bill, sponsored by Subcommittee Chairman William Proxmire (D-Wis.). In past years, similar legislation was introduced by former Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D-Ill.).

Money lenders, including banks and loan companies, would be required to furnish the annual interest rate on the loan—in approximate terms based on interest tables—along with the dollar amount of the interest cost. To avoid technical conflict with some state laws, lenders would be permitted until 1972 to express the interest charge on a dollars-per-hundred rate instead of in percentage terms.

The same requirement would apply to large-scale credit purchases, such as automobiles and most major appliances. However the subcommittee exempted credit transactions in which the interest comes to less than $10 a year and most revolving credit charge accounts, provided that 60 percent of the bill is paid within one year.

The original Proxmire bill required compulsory life insurance included with a loan or credit transaction to be listed as a finance charge. The amended version merely requires inclusion of the commission the lender or seller gets from the insurance company.

Other amendments modified provisions which various groups of retailers or bankers had opposed. The full Banking Committee will act on the bill after a hearing June 20 on the revolving credit provision of the legislation.

Both supporters of a stronger bill and opponents are likely to seek amendments to the legislation when it reaches the Senate floor.

Sheet Metal Union Wins McQuay Unit

Faribault, Minn. — The Sheet Metal Workers won bargaining rights for 295 employes of the McQuay Corp., ousting a 13-year-old unaffiliated union in a National Labor Relations Board election. The vote was Sheet Metal 144, Faribo Independent Union 117.

Film Unions Take Care of Their Own

THE TRADITIONAL GENEROSITY of the entertainment world is nowhere better evidenced than in the movie industry, which long ago adopted as its slogan, "We take care of our own," and really put it to work.

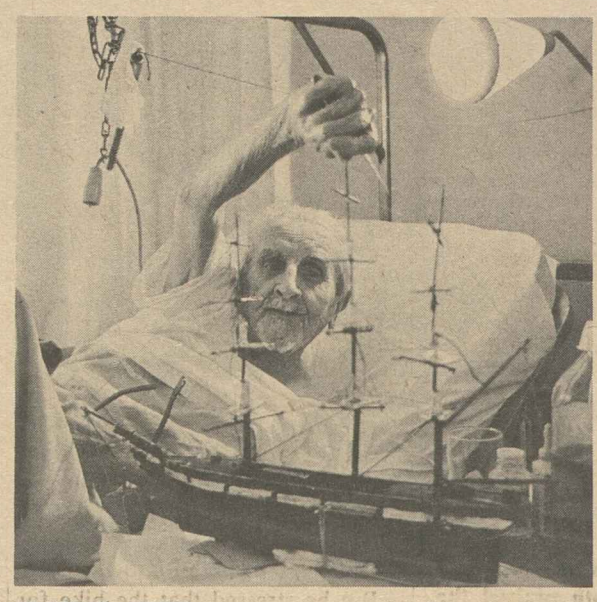
One facet of its concern—just one—is the Motion Picture Country House & Hospital, located on 54 oak and citrus covered acres in the Woodland Hills section of the West San Fernando Valley near Hollywood. It was started in 1948 by the Motion Picture Relief Fund, Inc., which is supported by the members of about 30 unions ranging from the Theatrical Stage Employes to the Screen Actors Guild and a score of professional bodies in the industry.

The Country House is a haven for the great names and the unknowns, the stars and the blue collar workers and the clerks and all, who in their declining years have fallen on hard times. The 140-bed hospital is a haven of another sort—a refuge where the industry's ailing are nursed back to health.

The entrance requirements are simple—for the Country House, 20 years in the industry, reasonable good health, financial need, age 55 for women and 60 for men; for the hospital, at least five consecutive years of employment in the industry with minimum earnings of $1,000 in four of the five years.

The relief fund finances the Country House, the hospital and the other services it offers with more than $2.3 million a year raised by voluntary contributions of one-half of 1 percent to 2 percent of earnings of members of the unions and professional organizations. Now the fund is engaged in a 15-year campaign for $40 million headed by Gregory Peck, an SAG member, to meet the demands it anticipates in an industry where the average age is 54. The union-backed relief fund dates back to the hard times—for entertainers—of World War I.

Some of the legendary names of film history have been inscribed on the rolls of Country House residents. Glamorous figures from the past who now live there include House Peters, Betty Blythe, Dorothy Devore, Jean (Babe) London, Mary Broderick, Si Jenks, Dot Farley and Ethel Smallwood.



MODEL SHIP construction is the favorite hobby of George Dunderdale, a set designer who is a patient in the Motion Picture Hospital supported by the industrywide relief fund.

CENTENARIAN Frank Vandermace, member of the Stage Hands at Universal from 1911 to 1938, was 100 last Feb. 3. Walking with him is Betty Gelman, Country House social service director.

STAGE IN BACKGROUND of the Country House dining room is often put to use by motion picture notables who give up their leisure to entertain retirees and ambulatory hospital patients. The meals are outstanding in quality and each is a highlight in the residents' daily lives.

A COUPLE OF OLDTIMERS look over the new theater under construction on the Country House acreage—Harry Oliver (left), retired art director, and Robert Palmer, retired Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer cameraman.

THE PAVILION cares for convalescents. The relief fund, supported by donations from members of 50 unions and professional bodies, now seeks $40 million in a 15-year drive headed by Gregory Peck of the Screen Actors Guild.

Hope in the Middle East

THE STUNNING Israeli military victory in the Middle East has demonstrated that a modern democratic nation, intensely dedicated to freedom, can overcome the numerical and weapons superiority of reactionary forces based on a feudal-style dictatorship.

The defeat of Nasser's aggression in the Middle East has opened vast possibilities for democratic growth in the area if the free nations of the world do not yield to Soviet pressure in behalf of Nasser and if they will provide the necessary aid and assistance.

Israel needs the assistance of the free world to maintain its modern economy, which has felt the impact of full mobilization and warfare. The Arab nations need generous assistance to help pull themselves out from under the oppressive poverty and the continuing threat of Communist subversion and to bring their people into the 20th Century and a decent standard of living.

This is the moment for a new surge of democratic growth and the advancement of the well-being of all peoples in the Middle East.

A Blow to the Heart

"THERE IS NO free collective bargaining unless you can come to the bargaining table with the right to quit work."

These words by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany sum up the real threat of legislation adopted by the Senate in the railroad shopcraft dispute.

The Senate bill in Meany's words, is "a compulsory anti-strike bill, compulsory work legislation" no matter how its objective is clouded with phrases such as "mediation to finality."

The Senate bill means that 130,000 rail shopcraft workers would be compelled to work until Jan. 1, 1969, without the right to strike, if the dispute is not settled. The House refused to go along with this part of the Senate measure, but instead extended the existing no-strike period for 90 days.

"In the final analysis (the Senate rail bill) affects every trade union," Meany points out. "It affects the very heart, the body and soul of the trade union movement because the heart of this movement is the right to free collective bargaining."

Thurgood Marshall

IT IS A MARK of our time, perhaps, to note that Pres. Johnson's appointment of Thurgood Marshall to the U.S. Supreme Court was based first and foremost on his qualifications, training and service to the country.

This is essentially the only basis for appointment to high office. The color of a man's skin, his religious faith, his national origins are of passing interest but should never be more than that.

Thurgood Marshall's contributions to the practice and teaching of law, his outstanding record on the federal bench and as solicitor general all point to a fine new justice on the nation's highest tribunal.

Yarborough Hits Double Standard:

Rail Plan 'Binds Down' Labor, Gives Free Rein to Carriers

The following is excerpted from the speech of Sen. Ralph Yarborough (D-Tex.) on the floor of the Senate in support of his labor-backed amendment to seize 10 percent of railroad profits while the Administration's "compulsory arbitration" plan was in effect.

AS PRESENTLY WORDED, Senate Joint Resolution 81 limits the right of the employes to strike, but does nothing to limit management in its quest for greater profits at the expense of its workers. The excuse for this double standard is often heard as the war in Viet Nam.

Mr. President, I stand second to no man in my desire to insure the proper supplying of our boys, no matter how they got there. The vote on this joint resolution will not be a vote for or against the war in Viet Nam. That is a smokescreen that gets around the real issue.

I agree that it would not be in the national interest to have a cessation of railroad operations. However, if the national interest is to supersede labor's right to strike, should not the national interest also impose some burden upon railroad management?

During the course of our hearings on this legislation, reference was often made to the situation which prevailed during the Second World War. However, it was not until the last day of the hearings that it was brought out that during World War II, while there was a no strike, no lockout agreement, there also were excess profits taxes and price stabilization.

Have we heard of any proposal for price stabilization here, any effort to say the railroads cannot change their rates? Have we had any proposal for excess profits legislation to take some of the profits out of war? Have we heard any proposal that management will share some of the cost and the burdens of this situation? No; it binds down only labor, and says to management, "Make all you can."

Our amendment would not stop the roads from running. We would merely say that some little burden shall be placed on management, so that there will be some incentive to settle this dispute. . . .

Why do we ask labor to give up its right to strike, but not ask for anything in return from management? I do not have the answer, but I do not think this type of unequal treatment is proper.

I think, since both sides have failed to show an outstanding willingness to bargain in this dispute, both should bear the burden of that cost. Both should bear the burden of this legislation. At present they both do not; only the railroad workers do.

My amendment proposes a fiscal seizure in a very limited sense, which I believe more fairly treats all the parties to this dispute.

I presented to the committee what I thought was a fair amendment. It provided for fiscal seizure, not of all the moneys, but of profits only. It provided that the companies would pay all operating expenses, and all fixed charges, including taxes and interest.

The profits would be held by the Comptroller General, who would decide what was a fair profit. The amendment would merely assign the profits. It would not stop a company president's salary, even if he were earning $150,000 a year. It would not stop the payment of operating expenses. Only what were determined to be the net profits would be seized.

Some members of the subcommittee felt that that was too much to seize. They said that only 10 percent of the profits should be seized. So the amendment which I have at the desk provides for a seizure of only 10 percent of the profits.

That is merely a token seizure compared with requiring the workers to be forced to work for two years, with no chance to ask for a redress of grievances or for loss of pay. My amendment would merely require the railroads to set aside, for the duration of the dispute, 10 percent of what they said were their profits. That 10 percent would be placed in the control of the Comptroller General.

This is merely a token, to show that there is some semblance of consideration for labor in this body. I do not see how any senator could propose to do any less than that.

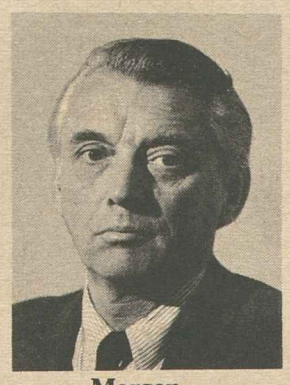
Morgan Says:

Gap Between Ideas and Action Impeding National Progress

By Edward P. Morgan

THE MEETING will please come to order. The first item of business is the question of how much longer we can afford the American Way of Life.

Winston Churchill, as we all remember so well, once observed with more wisdom than cynicism that a democracy is the worst possible form of government — except all the others. It is time to take the implications of that remark more seriously. More than ever before in our history, we seem to be balanced perilously on a pinnacle which might be called the Matterhorn of Dilemma, totally surrounded by gaps. There is the credibility gap, the communications gap, the education gap, the prejudice gap that surpasses understanding and plunging down there below us, unexplored much though it has been there all the time and is being dug deeper all the time by the erosion of neglect and irresponsibility, yawns the immobility gap.



Morgan

The distance between idea and action, between need and fulfillment, between proposal and performance, this is the greatest and most perilous chasm of all. We may topple right into it and carry all the bricks and basic institutions of the open society along with us if we don't bridge it with something more durable than the tenuous, swaying lifeline of a breeches buoy.

Look at the record: a fundamental fault in American life today is the unfairness and inefficiency of the draft. It mitigates against the poor and it allows many other young men of the middle and so-called upper classes to succeed in the business of avoiding the draft without really trying.

The selective service act expires on June 30th. In anticipation of the need of its radically revised extension, Pres. Johnson recruited some of the best and most responsible brains in the nation for a study commission headed by a brilliant lawyer and civilized citizen, Burke Marshall, former assistant attorney general, to come up with new legislation. The commission did. Its suggestions were not perfect but they vastly improved on the present antique procedures. An astonishing and little known fact is that an informal study group of 14 Harvard scholars, "holding widely different views about foreign and military policy, and especially about the war in Viet Nam," produced three weeks ago a series of recommendations on their own on which they agreed unanimously and which impressively supported the major proposals of Pres. Johnson's commission. They urged higher pay for the military, abolition of special deferment for students and teachers and a lottery to determine who should serve "when not all serve."

Congress probably never even heard of the Harvard report but what did Congress do with the LBJ-endorsed Burke Marshall report? Almost nothing. There were some minor improvements incorporated in the new bill but as the New York Times observed, "the revisions in the military draft agreed upon by Senate-House conferees scarcely reflect the kind of mature deliberation America's young men were entitled to expect in a measure so crucial to their futures."

LAST SPRING another presidential commission released the most thorough study ever made in this country on the problem of crime. Last week a Harvard professor who served on that commission told me it was his considered judgment that few if any of the commission's recommended reforms would be adopted outside of the realm of crime-detecting and crime-preventing gadgetry. As for one of the most urgent aspects of the problem—police-community relations—he saw it improving at a snail's pace. He added that in this area the police just don't understand what they are up against psychologically in terms of the needs and attitudes of minority groups.

In 1965, the White House pushed through Congress what has come to be known as the Ladybird beautification act, in honor of the First Lady's interest in conserving what beauty of the land is left between billboards and after the wanton exploitation of natural resources. But now that two-year act, instead of being renewed, has been gutted. The Administration itself has yielded unbeautifully to the selfish pressures of the billboard lobby as applied through short-sighted members of Congress, responding, as advertised, to the special interests of some constituents.

When is the gap between proposals and performance going to be narrowed? One of the most explosively crucial areas of delay involves racial strife. It is the most urgent domestic issue in the United States. Tougher police measures are being prepared to contain riots but so little is being done to attack the root problem of the Negroes' second class citizenship that it is laughable—except that there is nothing funny about it.

Israel has just won a lightning war. Reports from Tel Aviv and Jerusalem describe the Israelis acting under stress like a self-sacrificing family. There is, of course, the danger of strident nationalism rising in the wage of victory. But in an emergency, performance matched requirements.

With all its power and riches, the United States is in an emergency of non- or half-performance. Making it a federal crime to desecrate the flag is hardly worthy response. In fact Congress is guilty of a kind of criminal neglect when it doodles with such unnecessary legislation—every state in the union has its own laws protecting the flag—and avoids coming to grips with more serious facts of life which need attention.

Less for Profits:

Bigger Cut of Productivity Gain Sought to Meet Social Needs

MORE OF THE GAINS of rising productivity should be applied to meeting national social needs instead of higher corporate profits, an AFL-CIO spokesman said.

Irving Beller, economist in the federation's Dept. of Research, said "the kind of boom-time profits" of recent years are questionable, both "morally and economically." Noting that the national economy is moving steadily at high levels, he said high profits cannot be justified as a hedge against frequent periods of low profits or on the grounds of business risks.

The income from increased productivity should also be channeled into reduced consumer prices, better wages, job training, pollution control and other general public advancements, he said during the network radio interview, Labor News Conference, an AFL-CIO public affairs production heard Tuesdays at 7:35 p.m., EDT, on the Mutual Broadcasting System.

Business should be "willing to incur more of the costs of the new technology" that has boosted its productivity, he said, citing the public investment in education, research and development and improved health which has made "an enormous contribution to higher productivity." But, he noted there is too often a push for special tax inducements that can result in "windfalls" to investors for doing things they should be doing "as part of their obligation as businessmen."

BELLER SAID the productivity rate will continue to rise, particularly in low-productivity areas such as the service trades. He said more thought and planning should now be directed toward shorter working hours, "whether it would be through a reduction in daily hours or a deduction of the number of days worked per week."

"Assuming that we use our resources fully to meet our needs, then sometime in the future we are going to have to face up to this problem," he said.

Questioning Beller were Murray Seeger of Newsweek magazine and Sam Sharkey of the Newhouse Newspapers.

Washington Window

By Press Associates, Inc.

IF THERE is any industry in the United States that has shown itself incapable of moving with the times—from the development of safety programs to its relations with the traveling public or with its workers—it surely must be the railroad industry.

It has engaged in a running fight with the men and women who work for it, producing a bitter feud that has made labor-management relations in the industry an eternal battle. The American public should not be too surprised at what has been happening because the history of the industry is a shocking one.

In the 19th Century and well into the 20th, the railroad industry was notorious for its arrogance and venality. Lack of safety provisions, rate discrimination and corrupt financial manipulation marked it from top to bottom. The Interstate Commerce Commission, established in 1887, was the congressional answer, feeble though it was.

The story on this level is told simply in the names of laws that Congress found necessary to protect the public and railroad workers. The Safety Appliance Act of 1893; the Accident Reports Act of 1910; the Hours & Service Act of 1907 which forbade the employment of operating workers for more than 16 hours; the Ash Pan Act of 1908 for the safe cleaning of fire boxes, the acts of 1910 and, as late as 1920, requiring simple safety precautions.

Nor were the railroads any more responsible in their labor relations. Bloody railroad strikes marked the 1870's and the 1880's—a period that historians have called the "jungle" for railroad workers. Shoddy operating practices, shoddy equipment, shoddy and murderous bridges and trestles, were equally responsible with miserably low wages and hours that exploded the violent strikes of the period. Indeed, today's railroad unions were largely founded as death benefit associations to bury the victims of railroading rather than as labor unions in the modern sense.

As late as 1916 it took a congressional battle and the urgency of World War I days to compel the railroads to grant their workers the 8-hour day, although it was common in numerous other industries. Even then, when the United States entered the war in 1917, there was deep unrest on the roads as living costs shot up and railroad workers were held to low wages. So desperate was the situation that the federal government took over the roads and ran them.

During this period, wages were brought more in line with the rest of the country. Freed of "blacklists" and "yellow dog" contracts, the railroad unions made giant strides.

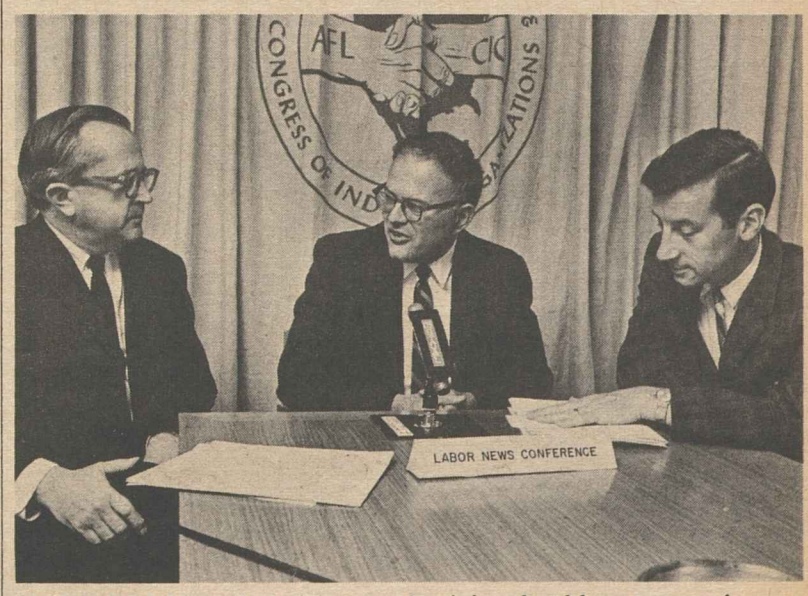
RAILROAD MANAGEMENT, which finally got back control of the roads after the war was over, never forgot—or forgave—the experience. It is at the heart of its opposition to any suggestion of federal "seizure" every time a major strike threatens federal intervention.

From World War I on, the story has been equally sorry. No sooner had management gotten control of the roads again than labor tensions resumed. The shopmen's strike of 1922 resulting from unilateral rules changes that hurt them deeply, was broken without mercy. The "Great Depression" saw a 10 percent wage cut.

World War II produced a 20-day period of government control that saw slight gains for railroad workers. But then came a time of railroad "seizures" that were "seizures" only in name. Management, in reserve officers uniforms, ran the roads, the corporations pocketed the profits and the men worked willy-nilly.

When the period was over railroad workers bluntly asked whether they had lost the right to strike. They are awaiting an answer.

Instead of seizures, we now have "mediation to finality" or as the unions and the AFL-CIO call it by its right name "compulsory arbitration." Seizure in the World War I sense of the term is not in the cards now. Yet, as the history of the past half century has clearly proved, it may be the only measure that can balance the scales between a management irresponsible both to the public and its workers for a century and union men whose right to use economic weapons in defense of their rights has been steadily whittled away.



MORE BENEFITS of rising productivity should go to meeting national social needs instead of higher profits, AFL-CIO Economist Irving Beller (center) said on Labor News Conference. Reporters Sam Sharkey (left) of the Newhouse Newspapers and Murray Seeger of Newsweek magazine questioned Beller on the AFL-CIO produced weekly interview on the Mutual Radio Network.

How to Buy:

Industry Renews Fight to Bar Curbs on Fabric Flammability

By Sidney Margolius

CONTINUING incidents of children and adults burned when clothes burst into flames have increased demands for stronger laws governing fabric flammability.

In one case a 10-year-old girl suffered severe burns when her nightgown caught fire in front of a heater. Betty Furness, the President's consumer assistant, told a recent credit union convention about a letter from a man who wrote: "My sister was burned to death in a fire. A simple fire from a pack of matches caused her housecoat to explode." A mother wrote to the White House consumer office that her little girl was badly scarred from burns she got when her housecoat "seemed to explode."

There are thousands of such incidents every year. The Agriculture Dept. has reported that of the 6,300 deaths in homes caused by fires in 1964, about 2,000 occurred when clothing caught fire.

Curtains, drapes, blankets, rugs and other household textiles are similar fire hazards. Thermal blankets are especially flammable.

The most dangerous fabrics, like the brushed rayon "torch sweaters" and kids' cowboy suits with highly-inflammable chaps, are banned from interstate commerce. "Torch sweaters" led to partial protection in 1954.

At that time the Federal Trade Commission urged Congress to also include blankets, spreads, draperies, stuffed toys, rugs and household textiles in general. But Congress, under pressure from the textile industry and especially the cotton industry, refused to.

The Administration now has asked Congress to strengthen the law by covering other clothing articles that tend to quickly burst into flames, and also household drapes, carpets, upholstery material and baby blankets.

A special irony is that material which cannot be made into a shirt because it does not pass the present test still can be sold as drapes or blankets.

Labor unions are supporting the proposed strengthening of the law. At a conference of safety experts, doctors and others a few months ago, the Trainmen's counsel, Arnold Elkind, urged recognition for the right of consumers to be clothed with fabrics which do not unreasonably expose them to the tortures of flame.

But a number of business associations again are opposing a stronger flammability law. The American Textile Manufacturers Institute has urged that a voluntary approach be tried to encourage industry cooperation. The retailers association has asked that if a law is passed, goods already in the stores be excluded from the regulations so they have a chance to sell them off.

The National Cotton Council has opposed any extension of the regulations to non-clothing items. But the Variety Stores Association does want household fabrics included.

GIVEN some public support, the proposed safeguards have a chance of enactment. Meanwhile you need to protect your family. It is noteworthy that a number of the reported incidents involve such garments as nightgowns, pajamas and housecoats which often have a napped or pile surface, like flannelette, or are quilted. The reports often use the word "exploded" to describe what happened.

Among upholstery fabrics, industry sources themselves indicate that foam-backed fabrics especially may need flame retarding. Long-napped fleecy blankets also are an extra hazard. Play costumes may be dangerous.

Unless cotton and rayon garments with a nappy or pile surface and many filmy curtains and drapes are flame-retarded they are always a hazard. Wool, silk, synthetic fibers in general (with the possible exception of acrylic) offer no flammability hazard.

You can have curtains and slipcovers flameproofed by your dry cleaner. Or you can flameproof these and any cotton or rayon (but not acetate) garments about which you may be in doubt, with this home method suggested by the Agriculture Dept.:

Dissolve three ounces of boric acid by making a paste with a small amount of water. Add this and seven ounces of borax to two quarts of hot water. Soak fabric in this solution. The finish has to be renewed after laundering.

For rayons and resin-treated cottons (wash and wear), use a solution of 12 ounces of diamonium phosphate in two quarts of water.

You also can treat fabrics by spraying or thoroughly sprinkling with these solutions before ironing. If the fabric resists wetting, add about a teaspoon of liquid detergent to each gallon.

New Book Outlines Problems:

Bargaining Health Grows in Complexity

THE GOALS of organized labor in health and welfare bargaining may have become well known to the public during World War II but "trade union interest in welfare goals started with the beginning of unionism itself."

It has been in recent years, though, that labor has reached a full confrontation with the complexities of the problems of adequate health and welfare protection.

Raymond Munts, economist and former head of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security, has authored a new book dealing with these problems and providing insight for not only the professional dealing with health insurance but the union member who should benefit from it.

The Munts study, "Bargaining for Health," has just been published by the University of Wisconsin Press. He is currently on the faculty of the university.

"More health care for more people seemed, in the late 1940s, to be a simple matter of removing the dollar sign from between the patient and the medical service he needed," writes Munts.

"That was the age of innocence, because the kind and extent of services needed raise a whole series of problems."

One of the reasons that negotiating health insurance is so complex, Munts believes, is because the "marketing of medical services lacks uniformity in quality or prices. The standards for good medicine, let alone its financing, are not readily recognizable to the consumer."

Munts details the early fight for health protection in the needle trades, among miners, auto and steelworkers which, he said, "helped raise the medical standard of living for the entire nation."

Now, he adds, "labor feels increasingly pressed by the problems on the supply side—inefficient use of facilities, shortage of good quality medical centers and inflated costs."

The author then poses this question: "How far can prepayment be extended without cost and quality controls over disbursements of medical care? If these controls provide the answer, what is labor's role in their establishment."

MUNTS RELATES the various ways in which unions prepare for bargaining and the costs and benefits of programs and administration. He provides welcomed understanding of some of the economics of the insurance business.

A major contribution is Munts' chapter on bargaining with doctors, particularly in the area of fees and quality of medicine.

"Organized labor," he writes, "and organized medicine have grappled for generations over a wide range of subjects. When the fights are about health legislation, they are well publicized. But what escapes public notice is the hand-to-hand combat in local communities over the organization and economics of medical practice."

He lists example after example of the rigid refusal of the medical profession to submit to any meaningful guidelines or controls in either fees for service or quality of service.

Concludes Munts:

"The union has to get in a position to use its economic strength, not only with the employer, but also with organized doctors and hospitals for reform in prevailing practice."

He points out that many unions, today, are moving to community health bargaining.

"So long as a union does not confuse its security needs with the medical needs of its members," says Munts, "it will find that the health interests of its members are best served in terms of the health resources of the entire community." (PAI)

From Soup to Nonsense:

Those Feathered So-and-Sos Can Drive a Bird-Watcher Mad

By Jane Goodsell

BEFORE I go any further, I'd best make it clear where I stand on birds. While I am a dues-paying member of the Audubon Society, I cannot honestly say that I consider our little feathered friends my friends. I think of them as birds.

In short, my attitude is that of any sane, well-balanced human being. I think birds have their rights just like anybody else, but I don't get terribly worked up about them. Anyway, that's how I usually feel.

I'm telling you this so you'll understand that I'm not against birds on principle. If I sound hysterical, it's not because I'm prejudiced but because I'm hysterical. Anyone who is roused at daybreak every morning is bound to be a bit edgy. Especially if she happens to be a lifelong Democrat, awakened by a shrill soprano repeating over and over, "Reagan for President! Yessiree, yessiree, yessiree!"

That deluded bird not only wakes me up, she wakes up the other birds, all of whom have messages to deliver. One down-in-the-mouth malcontent reiterates, "Dearie me, dearie me! Tsk, tsk, tsk, tsk, tsk!" while a peremptory executive type keeps rapping out orders to "Take a memo! Take a memo!"

At least that's what it sounds like to me, although my husband insists it's saying, "Get to the point! Get to the point!" Either way, that bird isn't getting any cooperation and it is clearly reaching the end of its patience.

WHICH GOES for me, too. It's not the noise that bothers me. I could tune out the hubbub if those birds would simply chirp, cheep, twitter or make incomprehensible bird sounds like "P'chee, p'chee! or "Witherspoon, Witherspoon!" I mean, I wouldn't feel compelled to listen.

But how can I roll over and go back to sleep when right outside my window, a poor befuddled creature asks over and over, "Whosoever am I? Whosoever am I?" Clearly, that bird is undergoing an identity crisis, and she needs psychiatric help.

I guess my least favorite of all, though, is the cruise director who asks over and over in a high falsetto, "Is everybody happy? Is everybody happy?"

No. Everybody isn't.

By HEW Task Force:

10-Point Plan Urged To Fight Pollution

Man in America must end his biological and chemical warfare against himself before it is too late to reverse the pollution of his environment, a federal task force has warned.

As a starter, the panel proposed a 10-point, $2.5 billion action program for a five-year fight on air and water pollution, waste disposal, urban noise, smells and overcrowding, and the growing use of new products that may add to the lengthening list of hazards.

The report and recommendations were filed by the Task Force on Environmental Health & Related Problems, of which Roy M. Linton, former staff director of the Senate Committee on Public Health, is chairman and Anne Draper, economist in the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research, is a member.

"At the two-thirds point of the 20th Century, man has discovered that he cannot act toward his surroundings with the abandon of a caveman," the report noted.

'Nature Has Rebelled'

"For generations it was assumed nature had the ability to absorb an increasing number and variety of environmental insults. And for a while it did. Now nature has rebelled."

The task force held that man needs protection not only from the rate and direction of pollution, but also from the aggregate of environmental health threats.

"An individually-acceptable amount of water pollution, added to a tolerable amount of air pollution, added to a bearable amount of noise and congestion can produce an unacceptable environment for health and well-being," the report said.

"It is entirely possible that the biological effects of these environmental hazards, some of which may reach man slowly and silently over decades or generations, will first begin to reveal themselves only after their impact has become irreversible."

The task force came to "one paramount conclusion: an effective, coordinated environmental health protection system is mandatory."

The panel, named by Sec. of Health, Education & Welfare John W. Gardner, was critical of him for relying on aides at lower policy levels in determining department goals. It also criticized the department for allegedly working at cross purposes in trying to deal with environmental health issues.

The recommendations were:

- Initiation by 1970 of plans to cut industrial air pollution by 95 percent in 75 interstate areas and to establish motor vehicle exhaust standards.
- Development by the same date of "meaningful" drinking water standards, including HEW testing, to provide approved drinking water for 100 percent of the population.
- Beginning by 1973 a grant-in-aid program for solid waste disposal by communities.
- Determining by next year the effects of population trends on anti-pollution goals.
- Determination by 1973 of tolerance levels for congestion, noise, smells and other related urban area problems.
- Establishment by 1970 of human safety levels for synthetics, trace metals and chemicals current in use and requiring U.S. approval for new materials for general use.
- Initiation by 1970 of a comprehensive program for identifying health and safety standards associated with consumer items.
- Extension of job-site health and safety standards to all places of employment by 1970.
- Development by 1970 of research and enforcement programs to protect the public and workers from radiation hazards.
- Institution by 1969 of uniform health standards U.S. agencies can use in administering programs involving state and local governments.

NEW YORK LOOKED LIKE THIS at 8:30 a.m. last Nov. 24, thanks to a temperature inversion that trapped air pollutants at ground level. Estimates are that 80 persons died because of the heavy smog.

Need to Solve Air Pollution Crisis Seen Enlisting Growing Support

The federal government, the states and the cities at long last are tentatively beginning to face up to the air pollution crisis, George Taylor writes hopefully in the current issue of the American Federationist.

"Uniform standards, equitably applied, would enable industries to become socially responsible and also to retain their positions in the marketplace," he notes. "This is what is provided for in the proposed Clean Air Act of 1967 now before Congress.

"Without such standards, industries would be enticed to relocate in a more lenient regulatory climate. . . .

"The battle lines are now being manned in the halls of Congress. But where the fight will be finally won or lost is in the cities, towns and villages of this nation, when the citizens have decided that they have had enough and, as Pres. Johnson has said, '. . . through their elected representatives, demand the right to air that they and their children can breathe without fear'."

Taylor, an economist in the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research, warns that air pollution is taking its toll of health every day in every city in the country. Most people are now aware of the problem and "seem to be adapting" to it, he says, adding that unfortunately it may take a major disaster to crystallize support for strong regulatory action.

He points out that the "superficial aspects" of the problem are "widely evident," but that the dangers are "far broader and more insidious" than stenches, corrosion, lack of visibility on roads and deposits of dirt.

"The long-term effects of air pollution begin to work on the human organs from the day of birth," he explains. "Increasing numbers of Americans are becoming afflicted with respiratory conditions—everything from the common cold to lung cancer—which are aggravated by polluted air.

"One of the fastest growing causes of death in the U.S. is emphysema, a progressive breakdown of air sacs in the lungs caused by chronic infection of the bronchial tubes. In 1962, over 12,000 persons died of emphysema. Each month, 1,000 or more workers are forced to retire prematurely because of this disease.

"Other diseases of the lungs and air passages which are worsened by breathing polluted air include bronchial asthma, chronic restrictive ventilatory disease and even the common cold.

"The death rate from lung cancer has been rising. Research points to a variety of causes. However, the incidence of cancer is twice as high in urban as in rural areas and appears to be related to population density as well. This is the basis for speculation that air pollution may be a contributing cause of lung cancer."

People do not die immediately from bad air, Taylor writes, though chronic pollution may affect their health adversely. But sometimes a smog disaster strikes when there is a prolonged temperature inversion and normally cool layers of upper air become warmer than the polluted ground air, trapping it in place. The death rate may jump sharply.

The major befoulers of the atmosphere, Taylor writes, are internal combustion engines, which account for about 60 percent of all air pollution; electric power plants that burn coal or oil, and industry, which contributes a constantly increasing variety of pollutants the effects of which are not yet known.

U.S. Role Broadened in 1963

He reviews the fight against air pollution, which really started before the turn of the last century as cities enacted smoke control ordinances. The federal government did not move until 1955 and was responsible for most of the basic research.

The Clean Air Act of 1963 broadened the scope of the federal program, authorized grants-in-aid to state and local control agencies and expanded the role of the U.S. Public Health Service. Further amendments bolstering the attack were enacted in 1965 and 1966. Federal appropriations have increased from $2 million in 1955 to $35 million in 1966, with $46 million authorized for fiscal 1967.

"The U.S. Public Health Service estimates that at least a four-fold expansion of programs is required to do a reasonably good job in terms of money and staff," Taylor writes.

"Moreover, there is a lack of definition of the full range of pollutants to be monitored and controlled. There is less than adequate support by local officials for a sustained all-out air cleanup effort. As with the states, regulations are too permissive, enforcement is weak or lacking and long-range planning is neglected."

The AFL-CIO has consistently supported stronger enforcement of clean air laws, he recalls, and has agreed with Pres. Johnson's proposal to establish federal air-shed commissions that may or may not cross state lines.

The Executive Council also has endorsed the President's proposal to authorize the establishment of quality criteria for all sources of pollution by the secretary of the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare, Taylor notes, and has urged research into the development of an economically feasible electric-powered auto.

AFM Strings Congress Expands to 2 Sections

New York—Richard Burgin, internationally-known concertmaster and professor of music at Florida State University, and Walter Ducloux, head of the Opera Dept. of the University of Southern California, will direct the ninth annual Congress of Strings sponsored by the Musicians, AFM Pres. Herman D. Kenin announced.

The congress this year for the first time is scheduled to be held in two sections because of a $60,000 grant from the Rockefeller Foundation. One for the East Coast will be held at the Saratoga Performing Arts Center, Saratoga Springs, N.Y., from July 2 to Aug 25, under Burgin; the other will be held at USC and will be directed by Ducloux, running from June 18 to Aug. 12.

Sixty string instrumentalists between the ages of 16 and 23 will receive advanced training at each center. In previous years, when one school was conducted, enrollment was limited to 100 students. There is no tuition charge, and the AFM provides transportation, housing and meals.

AFM Sec.-Treas. Stanley Ballard, the project director, noted that at least one Congress of Strings graduate is playing in nearly every major U.S. symphonic orchestra. Although the instrumental requirements of each of this year's centers must be considered, he said, students will be assigned as far as possible on a basis of geographical convenience.

The faculty at Saratoga Springs will include Ruth Posselt, concert artist; Concertmaster Leonard Posner, Dallas Symphony; John A. DiJanni, principal violist, Metropolitan Opera Orchestra; Theodore Salzman, formerly principal cellist with the Pittsburgh Symphony, and Warren Benfield of the Chicago Symphony.

Instructors at USC will include Concertmaster Hyman Goodman, Toronto Symphony; Concertmaster Henry Siegel, Seattle Symphony; Milton Thomas, solo violist, Festival Casals, Inc.; Joseph Schuster, soloist and formerly principal cellist, New York Philharmonic, and Gary Karr, Univerisity of Wisconsin.

Screen Actors Seek Stronger TV Pact

Hollywood, Calif.—The Screen Actors Guild has opened negotiations seeking major improvements in contract terms covering members in filmed television programs.

In proposals for a new agreement to replace the three-year pact expiring June 30, the Guild cites the television industry's continuing growth at a "remarkable" pace and its revenue increases—136 percent for the 10-year period ending in 1965 and 35 percent for the term covered by the expiring contract—1964 through 1966. The Guild wants actors to share that growth.

The major contract issues, SAG says, are rates, residual payments—foreign and domestic—length of the work day, overtime rates, pension and welfare funds and safety measures.

Minimum rates, the union points out, have not been increased for years and are "now obsolete by Guild standards." It proposes increasing the rate for TV film actors from $100 per day to $130, and the weekly "free lance" rate from $350 a week to $455.

The three-day contract, still common in TV, would be raised from $255 to $335. The rate for 13 episodes in a series guaranteed to run for half an hour will rise from $355 to $455 per episode, and on one-hour programs from $420 to $546 under the Guild's proposals.

On film reruns, the Guild wants payment for every repeat run of a TV film at a rate of at least 25 percent of the applicable total minimum. Calling for an end of the present payment limit of six reruns, the union said it sees no reason to "subsidize the sponsors' advertising campaigns by rendering free service."

The current formula for foreign film replays provides for a total payment of 25 percent of the applicable minimum in three steps. The Guild proposes to raise the first step from 15 percent to 25, the second from 5 percent to 15 and the third from 5 to 10 percent. The new formula would total 50 percent of minimum.

Other Major Proposals

Other major SAG proposals include:

- Abolition of the cumulative 44-hour week for free-lance players and establishment of an eight-hour day for all players, with overtime payable at time and a half for the ninth and 10th hours and at double time thereafter.
- An extensive program of employer-paid accident insurance to supplement the present "inadequate" workmen's compensation coverage.
- A more effective safety program and more adequate first aid facilities at studios and on location.
- A boost in the employer contribution for pension and welfare funds from the present 5 percent to 7.5 percent.

SAG's negotiating committee is headed by Pres. Charlton Heston. Talks are scheduled with the Association of Motion Picture & Television Producers, and the TV networks.

IAM District To Train 100 In Job Skills

Kansas City, Mo.—Five groups of 20 young men each will be trained as apprentice-entry machinists and tool and die makers by Machinists District 71 under a Labor Dept. on-the-job training contract.

The district will seek recruits from Neighborhood Youth Corps graduates who have high school diplomas or state certificates of equivalency.

They will be given 12 weeks of pre-apprenticeship classroom instruction coordinated by the IAM Joint Apprenticeship Committee and the State Vocational Educational Office, followed by 20 weeks of apprentice-entry on-the-job training in shops in the Kansas City area.

The Labor Dept. has made a grant of $59,276 in Manpower Development & Training Act funds to pay instructors and the cost of materials. The Dept of Health, Education & Welfare has earmarked $81,767 additional for the 12 weeks of vacational school.

Business Rep. William C. Seiger of District 71 said the program will help ease a shortage of all-round machinists and tool and die makers.

Social Security Benefit Level Up $1.7 Billion

Cash social security benefits totaling a record-breaking $20 billion were paid out to 22.8 million men, women and children during 1966, Social Security Commissioner Robert M. Ball reported.

The total was $1.7 billion higher than in 1965, and the number of recipients was 1.9 million more, he said. The benefit rolls, he added, passed the 23 million level early this year.

Ball said that about 17.6 million of those receiving benefits at the end of the year were 62 years or older and that an additional 1.7 million recipients were disabled workers under that age and their young dependents.

Despite the widespread belief that social security is "just for old people," Ball said, some 2.7 million surviving widows and their children received benefits in 1966 totaling about $2.2 billion—about $170 million in December alone.

He put a face value of about $730 billion on social security survivors insurance protection.

He also noted that under a 1965 amendment to the Social Security Act the child of a dead worker who was covered can collect benefits after age 18 up to 22 if he or she continues in school. As of the end of the year, he reported, 270,000 children were receiving such benefits at the rate of about $19.3 million a month.

109 Countries Represented:

ILO Leaders Urge Accent on Freedom

Geneva—The Intl. Labor Organization's 51st conference was reminded of its duty to "uphold the values of human freedom and dignity" when it met here as war raged in the Middle East.

This duty was recalled by Morio Aoki of Japan, chairman of the ILO's executive council, when he welcomed the nearly 1,200 worker, government and employer delegates of 109 countries present at the opening session.

"We have a special duty of responsibility at this grave juncture in world affairs," Aoki said. He urged the delegates to make certain that the three-week conference "circumscribes rather than extends the area of international tension."

A similar appeal was sounded by Getahoun Tesemma, Ethiopian minister of social affiairs, when he addressed the conference after his unanimous election as president.

The minister called on the delegates to avoid "all political considerations which have no direct bearing on the agenda."

Several Arab delegates made passing charges of Israeli "aggression" when the general discussion began two days later. But they were quickly called to order by the president with the suggestion that they observe the "spirit of the ceasefire" that had been decreed meanwhile by the United Nations.

Rudolph Faupl of the Machinists, leader of the U.S. labor delegation, was elected by the conference's worker delegates to their steering group. He was assigned to the key conference committees on resolutions and working arrangements. The eight members of the AFL-CIO advisory team also were assigned to major committees.

Pres. I. W. Abel of the Steelworkers is on the group drafting guidelines for handling workers grievances at the shop level.

Pres. Matthew Guinan of the Transport Workers is serving on the committee preparing improvements in the social security standards set by the ILO.

On the committee drafting international regulations on the maximum weight a worker can be asked to carry is David P. McSweeney of the IAM.

Pres. Ralph Reiser of the Glass & Ceramic Workers is on the committee exploring the problems of farmers who do not own the land they cultivate.

Vice Pres. W. Vernie Reed of the Laborers and Pres. William E. Fredenberger of the Firemen & Oilers are working together on the committee preparing recommendations on how the ILO can best assist the less advanced countries.

Legal expert Edward J. Hickey, Jr., is on the group that examines each year how ILO working and social standards are observed by the 119 member nations.

Bert Seidman, who now heads the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security after being its economic representative in Europe, will be working with Faupl in the resolutions committee.

Resolutions placed by the workers before the conference stress the problem of health protection.

One would have the ILO "give careful consideration" to occupational causes of cancer, while another would revise the list of diseases that can result from working conditions to include those that have come to light as the result of modern research.

Membership Gains Cited To Flint Glass Delegates

St. Louis—Steady organizing gains by the Flint Glass Workers have added 25 new plants in the past two years and built membership to a new high, Pres. George M. Parker told convention delegates here.

Parker's report to the union's 410 delegates noted that the current membership of 34,200 represents an increase of 1,000 members per year since 1962.

The convention, in one of its early actions, approved the election of two additional international representatives, for a total of 11, to assist locals in contract negotiations and press the union's organizing work.

Parker called for development of strong leadership at all levels of the union. He pointed out that the work force is changing, becoming "more youthful, more energetic, more aggressive and less patient than ever before."

"The young worker of today," he observed, "has few ties with labor's early struggles and long battle for proper recognition. Few understand the strong forces at work. They are there and they are troublesome, but on balance we believe their long-range result will be good."

He said that the disturbing and unsettled conditions will result in "a better America today instead of the day after tomorrow."

Of particular concern, he said, is the growing shortage of skilled glass workers in the "hand plants."

"If we are to avoid the importation of glass workers from abroad," Parker declared, "we must step up and improve upon existing learning and apprentice programs in our hand production plants."

He reported that since the 1965 convention the AFGWU had negotiated three-year contracts for the first time in its history, making gains in wages, pensions, insurance, vacation and holiday benefits.

The report of Sec.-Treas. Rufus K. Ritchie showed that total resources of the union on April 30 amounted to $2,022,102 in the general treasury and to $87,212 in the retirement account.

COLLEGE SCHOLARSHIP programs sponsored by unions were discussed at AFL-CIO headquarters by Research Dir. Nathaniel Goldfinger and Education Dir. Walter G. Davis with Mary Drew of the Educational Testing Service, Princeton, N. J. The service administers college board examinations and is used by a number of unions in their scholarship programs.

Double Standard Hit:

Draft Law Extension Approved by Senate

and others training for vocations.

"Both groups are learning to become productive citizens," he told the Senate. "But one group—the less privileged—has no protection from exposure to the draft."

The legislation, however, would not interfere with the President's authority to direct the induction of a younger age group first—a policy urged by a presidential study commission and by the AFL-CIO.

On another bill, however, Kennedy was successful in persuading the Senate to upset the recommendations of its Judiciary Committee and take a strong stand for immediate one man, one vote apportionment of congressional districts.

Postponement Defeated

He led a revolt against a weak House-passed bill that had been further watered down by the Senate committee. The legislation would have in effect postponed one man, one vote requirements for House districts until 1972.

The Senate voted by a 44-39 margin to limit the population spread between the largest and smallest congressional district in a state to 10 percent, effective in the 1968 elections.

As passed by the House, the 10 percent test would not apply until 1972. In the interim, states could have a spread of up to 30 percent in population of districts.

The Senate Judiciary Committee voted to raise the allowable spread in the next two elections to 35 percent.

Congressional action would not prevent courts from requiring stricter population standards, but supporters of the House bill hoped the courts would relax their one man, one vote mandates because of the congressional action.

The two bills now go to a House-Senate conference committee which will attempt to work out a compromise.

Allied with Kennedy in the move to reduce the spread recommended by the Judiciary Committee was Sen. Howard H. Baker, Jr. (R-Tenn.), who helped swing 12 GOP votes for the substitute bill.

The House had approved its 30 percent measure by a one-sided 289-63 vote. The Senate action marked one of the few times that body has changed a measure affecting only the House.

Still before the Senate as the AFL-CIO News went to press was the resolution to censure Sen. Thomas J. Dodd (D-Conn.) proposed by the Senate Ethics Committee. He is charged with having diverted political contributions to his personal use and having billed both the Senate and private groups for the same travel expenses.

The first round in a major battle over the future of the anti-poverty program got under way with the opening of House hearings.

GOP leaders have made dismemberment of the program a major issue and Administration Democrats will need support from liberal and moderate Republicans to keep the anti-poverty legislation from being gutted.

Youth Corps to Provide 350,000 Summer Jobs

The Neighborhood Youth Corps expects to find summer jobs for nearly 350,000 young people from disadvantaged families, Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz has announced.

The program is a major element in Pres. Johnson's Youth Opportunity Campaign, which is seeking to place as many as it can of the 13 million 16-to-21 year olds scheduled to hunt jobs.

The number of available jobs jumped by about 100,000 when Congress recently appropriated an additional $75 million for summer poverty programs and earmarked $47 million for the NYC. Earlier Wirtz had announced that about 250,000 jobs would be opened up.

Wirtz said that about 175,000 of the NYC jobs will go to high school students whose first contact with the organization was as in-school enrollees. More than 66,000 additional jobs are earmarked for dropouts who will continue work-training experience and who are being encouraged to return to their classes next fall.

The summer program is unlike the nine-month projects for youths attending school and those operated the year round for young people not in school, Wirtz said. Instead, he explained, it is a program of limited duration which aims at providing experience in the world of work, preferably outside a school.

It runs for 12 weeks and offers an average of 26 hours work a week, thus allowing time for normal teen-age summertime activities.

Stress will be placed this year, Wirtz said, on upgrading and offering supporting services which NYC personnel normally provide. He said experience has taught that more intensive remedial education, vocational guidance and counseling, and additional medical and dental advice are required if enrollees are to receive maximum benefits.

U.S. Pays 90% of Cost

The federal government bears about 90 percent of the cost of employing young men and women through the NYC. The summer program will cost an estimated $139 million. Most earnings of low-income families are spent promptly for essentials such as food, clothing and shelter, so local economies as well as the youths directly involved are benefitted by the program, Wirtz pointed out.

Much of the work the summer enrollees will do will involve the physical improvement of public properties, ranging from parks and recreational areas to streets and public buildings. All of it will be needed work which might not have been done because of shortages of manpower or money.

The program will extend into all 50 states plus Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, American Samoa and Guam. Mainland allotments range from 284 jobs in Idaho to 22,939 in New York State.

Molders' Staffer Joins Apprenticeship Bureau

Cleveland, O.—James E. White, former international representative of the Molders, has been appointed a field representative of the Labor Dept's Bureau of Apprenticeship & Training. His assignment includes development of voluntary apprenticeship and retraining programs in the building trades and on-the-job training programs under the Manpower Development & Training Act.

State-County Program to Train Nurses

New York—Some 300 nurses' aides in New York City hospitals will be trained as licensed practical nurses under a new labor-management program funded by the U.S. Dept. of Labor.

Designed to meet a shortage of skilled licensed nurses, the program was developed by State, County & Municipal Employes Local 420 of District Council 37 and approved by the city Dept. of Hospitals.

The training program is an experimental one requiring the cooperation of several other agencies including the New York City Board of Education and the Medical & Health Research Assn.

Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz announced that $1.8 million in Manpower Development & Training Act funds have been provided for the two-year project. It will serve, he said, as a model for other areas with a "critical need for personnel in the health services."

The city and the union have set up a joint committee to coordinate the selection, guidance and work scheduling of trainees. Representing the union in the planning are SCME Pres. Jerry Wurf, District Council Dir. Victor Gotbaum and Education Dir. Sumner Rosen.

Training will be arranged so that the nursing aides can continue to work part-time at their regular jobs. School Board instructors will give classroom and clinical training.

Many hospital jobs are "dead-end" jobs and nursing aides usually have limited promotional opportunities, the Labor Dept. said in a statement. An employe would have to leave her job to become a practical nurse through the average program, it noted.

It called the AFSCME-city program a "new approach to upgrading nurse's aides" that will open up job opportunities for others also.

Public Health Group Cites Louis Simon

New York — Clothing Workers Vice Pres. Louis Simon has received a 1967 merit award from the Public Health Association of New York City for "distinguished service to public health."

Simon, manager of the Amalgamated Laundry Workers Joint Board, was cited for establishing the Joint Board health center and for his 11-year campaign to get a day off for members at full pay to get a complete physical examination at the center.

Arkansas Labor Pushes Fight for Key Legislation

Hot Springs, Ark.—Delegates to the Arkansas State AFL-CIO convention instructed their officers to consider launching an initiative petition to put on the ballot labor's proposals for improvements in workmen's compensation and enactment of a state collective bargaining law.

The convention called also for passage of a state minimum wage law, legislation to enable Arkansas to participate in the federal medicaid program and a prevailing wage for construction workers.

Delegates adopted a strong civil rights resolution, declaring: "We in the labor movement must not retreat from our commitment to racial justice. It is a simple fact that those who would deny the Negro his civil rights would likewise deny us in the labor movement our goals of better wages, hours and working conditions."

Speakers included Gov. Winthrop Rockefeller (R), Under Sec. of Labor James J. Reynolds, Pres. Jerry Wurf of the State, County & Municipal Workers, Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey of the Auto Workers, Dir. Al Barkan of COPE and Dir. William L. Kircher of the Dept. of Organization.

A dramatic highlight to the convention came when one of the original nine students who braved hostile mobs to desegregate Little Rock's Central High School in 1957 spoke of his current work in a cooperative program preparing Negro and Puerto Rican youngsters for apprenticeship in New York building trades unions.

Ernest Green, the first Negro to graduate from Central High, went on to receive a graduate degree from Michigan State University and is currently director of the apprenticeship training program of the Workers Defense League and the A. Philip Randolph Institute.

He talked of the cooperative relationship with the New York Building Trades Council and the city's Central Labor Council, the help given by other unions in finding interim jobs for youngsters while they receive tutoring for apprenticeship tests, and the placement of more than 200 apprentices with skilled crafts.

If Negroes and unions "stand divided and separated," Green warned, "big business and big industry will triumph again in the South, while the white poor and black poor are left to fight against each other."

All officers of the State AFL-CIO, headed by Pres. J. Bill Becker and Sec.-Treas. E. J. Jacobs, were re-elected by acclamation.

A number of delegates journeyed to Little Rock to join the picket line of the Ladies' Garment Workers in an 8-month-long strike of 1,000 workers against the Ottenheimer dress manufacturing firm.

Dog Food Firm Scraps Right-Winger Dan Smoot

Radical right commentator Dan Smoot is running into rough going since the death of his dog food benefactor and radio-TV sponsor.

Smoot recently filed suit in Los Angeles against Lewis Food Co., claiming that the pet food firm cancelled his contract to sponsor weekly programs on 50 radio and 36 television stations.

Smoot was also cut down recently in a Dallas News editorial which suggested that his super-patriotism has a profit motive.

The right-winger's radio-TV cancellations came four months after the death of D. B. Lewis, president of Lewis Food and a long-time supporter of right wing causes. Lewis' widow, apparently unconvinced of Smoot's value or by his philosophies, was instrumental in his firing. Mrs. Yolanda Lewis has also challenged her husband's will which bequeathed Smoot $1 million to "further his work in publishing and broadcasting." Another $1 million was left to the John Birch Society.

The Dallas News in an editorial attacked hometowner Smoot's tirades against civil rights and raised the question of "whether a man is out to make a fast buck or to serve the country."

matter of racial discrimination at the building trades."

While the record is not unblemished, Wirtz noted, there has been recently "as complete, as honest, as sincere and as potentially effective a movement to meet this problem in the building trades as in any other American institution in the labor movement or outside it."

There have been "front page headlines" about charges of racial discrimination but virtually nothing about the many cooperative projects involving local building trades councils, civil rights groups and the government. Wirtz cited major programs in a dozen cities throughout the nation which have received little attention.

There remains much to be done, Wirtz said, but the problem "has been distorted out of all reasonable perspective."

Wirtz told the delegates that he personally opposes any draft deferments, but since college students are entitled to deferments the same policy should be applied to youngsters in apprenticeship and other job-training programs.

Delegates heard House Majority Leader Carl Albert (D-Okla.) promise to help move the on-site picketing bill towards passage. House Republican Leader Gerald R. Ford (R-Mich.) gave qualified support to the principle of the bill but endorsed restrictive amendments proposed by Rep. Charles E. Goodell (R-N.Y.).

Louis Sherman, BCTD general counsel, told the conference that efforts are under way to work out language that would resolve the differences. "If not, I suppose it will have to come to a floor fight."

AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller noted that "in contrast to last year," the site picketing bill has "the full backing of the chairman of the House Education & Labor Committee." In the last Congress, the bill died when then-chairman Adam C. Powell (D-N.Y.) refused to call it up on the House floor.

The present committee chairman, Rep. Carl D. Perkins (D-Ky.), reiterated his solid support of the bill as did other opening day conference speakers: Sen. Russell B. Long (D-La.), majority whip; Sen. Thomas H. Kuchel (R-Calif.), GOP whip and a sponsor of the bill; Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.) and Sen. Ralph W. Yarborough (D-Tex.).

Yarborough pledged that "the minute it passes the House," the Senate Labor subcommittee which he chairs "will give it priority and immediately schedule hearings." His subcommittee, Yarborough added, "is not a bottle-up committee; it is a pro-labor committee."

Other congressional speakers are scheduled at the windup report session.

PRES. JOHNSON came to the Building & Construction Trades Dept. legislative conference to express his thanks for labor's support in every crisis the nation has faced. Welcoming him is BCTD Pres. C. J. Haggerty.

ence to a world shaken by the Middle East conflict.

America "seeks no dominion," he stressed, but only the establishment of conditions permitting men to "live together in peace and harmony."

From the Bible, he quoted the Prophet Micah, "Every man under his vine and fig tree, and none shall make them afraid."

And to the American people, Johnson said, "the future is even more exciting than the past."

He spoke of the vast building programs—more than 80 percent constructed by union labor—which have changed the face of America, with new schools, hospitals, highways and housing.

But, the President also stressed: "Our schools must not only be newer, but must also be better. Our people must be trained for the jobs of the future, not the jobs of the past. Our elderly must have the wherewithal not only for subsistence, but for dignity. Americans of all racial and ethnic backgrounds must receive equality that other Americans have taken for granted for centuries."

Johnson acknowledged that as the nation strives to meet its problems, "there will be mistakes."

"Show me a man that never made a mistake," he challenged, "and I'll show you a man that never did anything."

Labor and its leadership, Johnson said, "always put your country first. . . . Free men everywhere ought to be thankful for the job of building that you have done for America and other free nations, and I, on behalf of all the American people, want you to know that we do appreciate what you have done."

Because of the support of "most of our fellow Americans," the President said, "the Dominican Republic flourishes under a free and democratically chosen government . . . We persevere militarily in Viet Nam, always hoping and working for a negotiated settlement that will bring peace."

He said America would be only "a hollow echo of itself if it exists in a world of chaos, and a world of tyranny, and a world of cruelty. And so we strive for a better world."

Simkin Cites Growth Of 'Preventive' Talks

The collective bargaining problems of today cannot all be resolved at the bargaining table once every two or three years, Dir. William E. Simkin of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service declared in his annual report to Congress.

"Some form of continuing dialogue is often required," Simkin observed.

"This is so even when the grievance procedure and grievance arbitration are reasonably effective during the intervening period. It is even more so when grievance procedure and grievance arrangements are inadequate."

The service's activity in helping unions and employers to create non-crisis problem-solving mechanisms, or "preventive" mediation, nearly doubled in fiscal 1966 over 1965, Simkin reported —922 against 494 cases.

It is becoming more evident, he said, that each effort in the field of "continuing dialogue" must be designed by labor and management to meet their specific needs.

"The service has never suggested," he added, "that any program developed as part of the preventive mediation concept is a panacea. We do believe that this aspect of collective bargaining is a developing and vital ingredient of the collective bargaining process and deserves service support."

Simkin pointed out to Congress that in the fiscal year ending last June 30, time lost due to strikes dropped from the previous year despite the increasing pressure of production for the war in Viet Nam. The lost time averaged 17 one-hundredths of 1 percent, compared with two-tenths of 1 percent in fiscal 1965.

Not a single dispute or strike had "actual serious effect" on production or delivery of arms and other materials for Viet Nam, he noted, although production is so widely dispersed by subcontracts that a dispute at a small or medium-sized plant "can be extremely critical to the war effort at any given moment."

"The fact that settlements are reached before irreparable harm has been done to the war effort is the highest tribute to labor and management at these establishments and does great credit to the institution of collective bargaining," he said.

All-Time High

"This overall record needs to be emphasized for proper perspective. It tends to be ignored at times of widespread pre-occupation with some particularly annoying dispute."

The service's disputes caseload, involving direct mediator assistance in joint meetings, reached an all-time high of 7,836 cases, he reported. Mediators closely followed another 11,348 cases which required only informal mediation and no joint conferences, he added.

The number of arbitration panels submitted in labor-management disputes rose to 6,255 during the year, or 15 percent more than in fiscal 1965. It is apparent, Simkin commented, that arbitration has "ever-increasing acceptability" for settling disputes during the life of a contract between an employer and a union.

Direct U.S. Financing Urged in Top Elections

The AFL-CIO supports a proposal to finance presidential election campaigns through direct appropriations by Congress, but opposes as "wholly indefensible" the alternative method of raising the money through tax deductions.

The federation gave its position on the various campaign financing bills now before the Senate Finance Committee in a letter from Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller to Sen. Russell B. Long (D-La.), committee chairman.

Of the four major subsidy plans that have been suggested, Biemiller said, direct appropriations by Congress would have three advantages —equitable distribution of the cost among all taxpayers, advance notice to prospective recipients of the amount they could receive, and easy, low-cost administration.

However, a tax credit of $10 or less would be "acceptable," he added, and a system of individual vouchers endorsed over to candidates and redeemable by the Treasury also has "substantial merit," though neither is viewed by the AFL-CIO as equal to direct appropriations.

The tax deduction proposal, on the other hand, "is weighted in favor of taxpayers in the higher income tax brackets," Biemiller charged. "It would be utterly unjust to make it cheaper for wealthy than for not-so-wealthy taxpayers to contribute."

On other aspects of campaign financing, the AFL-CIO letter:

- Endorsed Pres. Johnson's proposal on the allocation of the total campaign fund.
- Agreed in principle with the idea of extending public campaign funds to congressional candidates, but suggested that this be deferred until after some experience with the plan in presidential campaigns.
- Opposed extending public financing to primary campaigns of any sort.
- Welcomed the idea of making public funds available only from Sept. 1 on, to encourage shorter campaigns.
- Urged caution in raising present "outmoded" campaign expenditure ceilings, because of the "great difficulties involved in any enforcement of expenditure ceilings," and suggested more effective reporting of expenditures may be the best hope.

Texas Rights Unit Assails Rangers' Anti-Strike Use

Meany Asks Firm Stand On Rail Bill

The AFL-CIO urged the House to "stand firm" on its rejection of compulsory arbitration of the railroad shopcraft dispute and Federation Pres. George Meany warned that "all of American labor" is threatened by the Senate-passed bill.

Meany reiterated "with all the force I can command" labor's opposition to the compulsory arbitration bill which, he declared, "strikes at the heart of the trade union movement" and would be a "step towards the destruction of collective bargaining."

He spoke at the Seafarers convention in Washington as Senate and House conferees prepared to meet on conflicting versions of the railroad strike ban bill.

Both bills would bar a strike during 90 days of further mediation and fact-finding, but the Senate bill concludes with imposition of terms dictated by the mediation panel if the two sides can't agree.

Senate Majority Leader Mansfield told newsmen that he would like to see the Senate stick to its position and force the bill back to the House for a rollcall on compulsory arbitration. The House knocked out the compulsory arbitration feature on a non-record 189-105 vote and only a handful of congressmen —far fewer than the required 100 members—requested a rollcall on the issue.

House Bill 'Superior'

AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller, in a letter to all congressmen, termed the House-passed bill "superior" to the Senate version and urged the House to stand by it.

Meany told reporters after his speech to the Seafarers that under the House bill, "maybe somewhere along the line railroad management will get the idea to bargain. So far they haven't bargained."

Earlier he had told the SIU delegates that compulsory arbitration would destroy one of the chief distinctions between a free trade union movement and the totalitarian control of labor of Hitler Germany and Communist Russia.

He scoffed at the claim of Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.) that the Senate rail bill is comparable to the War Labor Board procedure during World War II. American labor voluntarily agreed not to strike during the war, Meany stressed.

The six rail shopcraft unions have been legally free to strike since June 19, when the last temporary strike ban imposed by Congress expired. They voluntarily agreed, however, to stay on the job while the legislation was being considered in conference.

Simkin Calls Session:

URW Widens Strike, Joint Mediation Set

Pittsburgh—Negotiators for the Rubber Workers and the Big Five rubber companies have moved into a full scale joint mediation session following extension of the URW strike to a fourth firm.

Dir. William E. Simkin of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service, who served 11 years as umpire in grievances between the URW and Goodyear, called the mediation meeting at the Penn-Sheraton Hotel here.

Top negotiators for the five companies—Goodyear, Firestone, Uniroyal, General Tire and B. F. Goodrich—were lined up on one side of the table, and the URW bargaining coordinators for each of the companies were on the other.

Previously, the union had been negotiating with Goodyear and Uniroyal at two different hotels in Cincinnati, with Goodrich in Columbus, and with Firestone and General Tire in Cleveland.

The URW has been on strike against Firestone, Uniroyal and Goodrich since Apr. 20 and struck June 14 at General Tire plants in Akron and Waco, Tex.—the only two plants involved in present negotiations. Goodyear employes are working on a day-to-day basis.

In calling the Pittsburgh meeting, Simkin said the "continuation of the dispute . . . [is] having an

Hits Harassment Of Farm Workers

San Antonio—The Texas Advisory Committee to the U.S. Civil Rights Commission charged that members and supporters of a farm workers union in the Rio Grande Valley have been denied their legal rights by Texas Rangers and other law enforcement officials.

The report, based on a subcommittee investigation of the activities of Texas Rangers in connection with the year-long strike by members of the United Farm Workers Organizing Committee, was issued at the opening session of a "Conference on Federal Programs and Mexican-Americans."

The report declared that testimony developed in hearings May 25 and 26 in Rio Grande City led to the conclusion that "members of the UFWOC and other citizens active in the organizing campaign have been denied their legal rights in Starr County."

The report specified these denials of rights:

- Physical and verbal abuse by Texas Rangers.
- Failure to bring promptly to trial members and union organizers against whom criminal charges have been alleged.
- Holding of union organizers for many hours before they were released on bond.
- Arrest of UFWOC members and organizers on the complaints of growers and packers without full investigation of the allegations in the complaints.
- Encouragement of farm workers by Rangers to cross picket lines.
- Intimidation by law enforcement officers of farm workers taking part in representation elections.
- Harassment by Rangers of UFWOC members, organizers, and a representative of the Migrant Ministry of the Texas Council of Churches which gave the appearance of their being in sympathy with the growers and packers rather than the impartiality expected of law enforcement officers.

The committee said it was recommending to the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights that the information be forwarded to the Dept. of Justice with a request for an immediate investigation of the situation.

It asked that if the Justice Dept. corroborates information secured by the Texas advisory group, immediate steps be taken "to secure injunctive relief in federal district court."

AFL-CIO Dir. of Organization William L. Kircher, meanwhile, took issue with the use of the Rangers in a conference with Texas Gov. John Connally, who under state law has supreme command of the special police force.

Accompanied by Texas AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Roy R. Evans, Kircher told the governor in a 2.5-hour interview that the Rangers are siding with management officials in the labor dispute and should be removed promptly.

The governor replied that the Baltimore Teachers Win Vote

Baltimore — The Baltimore Teachers Union whipped the numerically larger Public School Teachers Association for the exclusive right to represent 7,800 public school teachers here.

AFT Local 340 won by a tally of 3,664 to 3,330 for the local affiliate of the National Education Association, with 231 preferring neither. The NEA group, long dominant teacher spokesman here, had a 4-1 membership edge which vanished in the secret ballot vote conducted by the American Arbitration Assn.

AFT Pres. Charles Cogen sent a message calling the result a "great triumph" and offering further help when contract proposals are drafted and negotiations start next fall. He cited recent AFT victories in Washington, Philadelphia, Detroit and other major school districts where the union has defeated NEA units for representation rights.

The Baltimore union has been adding members and campaigning for an election for more than a year. It staged a two-day protest strike which ended May 12 when city leaders promised to change

$3 Billion Paid Out in Benefits During First Year of Medicare

The Social Security Administration will have paid out more than $3 billion dollars in medicare benefits by completion of the program's first year at the end of June, Social Security Commissioner Robert M. Ball reported.

However, 43 percent of the country's physicians still insist on billing their patients for services instead of taking assignments for direct payment by the government, he added.

The program paid a total of $2.4 billion for hospital care and services for more than 5 million admissions involving about 4 million patients, Ball said, and some $640 million for medical services, primarily those of physicians, under the voluntary medical insurance phase of the program.

"Older people have received from 5 to 20 percent more inpatient hospital services during this period," he said.

"The lives of some elderly people have been improved, and in many cases prolonged, because of this program. It is hard for me to measure the great improvement in the quality of life for an older person brought about by the removal of a cataract, the repair of a hernia, or other surgery or corrective therapy, but it is there and in a substantial amount, and it is attributable to medicare. . . .

"Because of this program many more elderly Americans have been able to get hospital care with the dignity that goes with the ability to pay. For many the choice of hospital has, for the first time, been broadened to include the best."

Ball pointed out that when a physician agrees to take an assignment for his fee, he agrees also to accept as full payment the "reasonable charge" determined by the dis-

Pennsylvania Kills Attack on 1 Man, 1 Vote

Harrisburg, Pa.—Sen. Everett McKinley Dirksen's drive to overturn one man, one vote standards by an amendment to the U.S. Constitution was smashed in Pennsylvania—with labor leading the fight.

The State Senate voted 43-0 to send back to committee a resolution that would have added Pennsylvania to the list of states petitioning for a constitutional convention to initiate the Dirksen Amendment.

The resolution had been on the calendar, awaiting a third reading and a vote on passage. In effect, the recommittal killed it.

BETTY FURNESS, Pres. Johnson's special assistant for consumer affairs, was introduced to an audience of labor editors by an old friend, Sidney Margolius, consumer columnist for many union newspapers. The occasion was an Intl. Labor Press Association luncheon in Washington.

Betty Furness Admits Bias for the Consumer

Betty Furness, the President's special assistant for consumer affairs, met editors and writers of union publications at a reception and luncheon sponsored by the Intl. Labor Press Association.

As an ice-breaker, it was a smashing success.

First came an introduction by an old friend, Sidney Margolius, whose consumer column is syndicated in the labor press. He introduced her as "a very liberal, very dedicated person." And she called him her "private encyclopedia" on consumer problems.

Miss Furness brought along some credentials of her own—membership cards in three AFL-CIO unions, backed up by time on the picket line as well as dues.

Would she be "prejudiced" in favor of business and advertising because of her past associations?

"I admit to prejudice," Miss Furness said. "I am prejudiced in favor of the consumer. I am prejudiced in favor of the woman or man in the market place who is bewildered and confused. And I hope to be able to make some of the consumer's decisions easier."

She was somewhat awed, she commented, to read a recent news story that the U.S. Chamber of Commerce has set up a 45-man committee as "its answer to Betty Furness."

Union Role Hailed

But she expressed confidence that the trade union movement would provide the backing for Pres. Johnson's consumer legislative program despite the CofC's opposition "because no group has fought harder or more successfully for consumer benefits than the labor people in this country."

And she plans to get out of her office as much as possible to "talk with the man in the factory, the homemaker in the store, and the teenager at the record shop."

Dirksen, the Republican leader of the U.S. Senate, claims 32 states have adopted similar resolutions—only two short of the number needed to summon a convention. While his claim has been challenged, the addition of Pennsylvania would have put Congress under heavy pressure to go along.

This is what Pennsylvania unions had to overcome in their fight against the Dirksen amendment resolution, the State AFL-CIO reports:

- At the start of the session, 23 of the 27 Republican state senators joined in co-sponsoring the resolution.
- Pennsylvania's Gov. Raymond P. Shafer, a Republican dealing with a Republican-controlled legislature, openly supported the resolution and actively lobbied for it.
- Dirksen sent telegrams to all GOP state senators urging them to pass the resolution and reportedly phoned key Republican county chairmen urging them to add their influence.

In response, the State AFL-CIO, affiliated unions and local central bodies spurred a massive protest and letters opposing the Dirksen Amendment poured in on the state capital. A number of original sponsors had second thoughts and withdrew their names. Finally, a GOP caucus decided the resolution was doomed to defeat and threw in the towel.

The victory was doubly sweet to labor since it was the State AFL-CIO which had initiated the first court challenge to the malapportioned legislature. The present legislature was elected from districts drawn up by the State Supreme Court after the legislature itself was unable to agree on a valid reapportionment bill.

Employes Want 'More,' Beirne Declares:

CWA Delegates Look Ahead To Bell Contract Reopening

By John M. Barry

Kansas City, Mo.—The Communications Workers served notice on the Bell Telephone System that the union will go to the bargaining table next March seeking "more than we got the last time."

CWA Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, addressing the union's 29th annual convention, stressed the need for "a very healthy improvement in wages over the last increase."

Bell System management, he said, must be aware that its 250,000 employes represented by CWA are "restive and uneasy because so many inequities remain."

"So, at this convention," Beirne declared, "we're saying to the industry, you'd better have a lot of change in that big pocketbook of yours, because the members of CWA are going to want more. And we say in advance: thank you."

Beirne's keynote address highlighted opening sessions of the convention, which drew some 2,500 delegates, alternates and guests. The CWA's 800 locals cover more than 420,000 workers in the communications industry. Later sessions were to include a major address by Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey and action on a score of policy resolutions and statements.

The delegates re-elected Beirne and Sec.-Treas. W. A. Smallwood by acclamation, along with Executive Vice Presidents J. M. Massey and Glenn Watts. The third executive vice president, George E. Gill, defeated Roger Speck of Atlanta, Ga., for a full two-year term. Gill was first elected by the executive board to fill the vacancy created by the retirement of John L. Crull.

Other Results

Also re-elected were Vice Presidents George M. Miller, District 1; W. K. Edwards, District 2; Walter Schaar, District 4; Arthur B. LeFevre, District 5; D. L. McCowen, District 6; D. K. Gordon, District 7; John C. Carroll, District 8, and Richard W. Hackler, District 9; and National Directors P. J. Morgan, Western Electric Installation; Frank J. Novotny, Western Electric Sales, and J. Curtis Fletcher, non-Bell.

Newly elected were Ben Porch as District 3 vice president, who defeated the incumbent, W. W. Brown, and Robert Minnery of Cincinnati, who was chosen national long lines director over the incumbent, Elaine T. Gleason.

Beirne reviewed the last round of negotiations with the Bell System, which produced a wage-fringe package totaling 22.4 cents an hour with a reopener on wages and other money items in March 1968. The bargaining year, he noted, was a difficult one covering nearly 10 months before every unit achieved a settlement based on the pattern set by the Western Electric installers.

The CWA president said the union's difficulties with Bell also were reflected in a "fantastic total" of more than 52,000 formal grievances filed during 1966. The fact that the union won nearly 32,000 of these, he observed, shows that they were not "idle complaints or exaggerated beefs."

Beirne charged that the "pile of grievances" reveals "serious weaknesses" in telephone company management.

"If they were doing their job right," he said, "we wouldn't have so many cases at the second stage level. . . . Is it slipshod management that produces so many grievances—or is it a deliberate effort to make life hard for CWA?"

He also assailed Bell management for its practice of monitoring the conversations of subscribers and operators. This practice, Beirne charged, is used not only as a quality control measure, but as a disciplinary device as well.

"I hope that the passage of tough legislation and new company policy will abolish this evil practice once and for all," he said.

The convention itself, in an early resolution, condemned "all forms of eavesdropping, wiretapping, and telephone monitoring." It endorsed pending federal legislation to outlaw such practices except in cases involving national security.

"And even this one exception," the resolution said, "must be very closely and zealously guarded."

In other resolutions, the delegates:

- Gave strong endorsement to the proposal for a non-profit public broadcasting corporation to set up a new non-commercial radio and television network.
- Reaffirmed support for such legislation as "truth-in-lending," stronger social security, pollution control, repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act's Section 14(b), and a federal minimum wage of $2 an hour.
- Renewed support of the concept of federated fund raising by voluntary community health and welfare agencies, and offered the union's services to help coordinate their efforts with those of public agencies.
- Called on the Senate to restore funds cut by the House from appropriations requests for aid to education and repeated the call for free, high-quality education through the doctorate level.
- Urged all levels of governmen to "re-assess their role not only in the control of crime, but in the prevention of crime," including the social conditions that lead to crime.

IBEW Strike Holds At Nine RCA Plants

Picket lines of 30,000 striking members of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers held steady at nine plants of the Radio Corp. of America in a contract dispute that started June 5.

As the AFL-CIO News went to press, 20,000 members of the Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers at 12 other RCA locations awaited the results of balloting on a tentative settlement reached earlier in the week. The outcome apparently depended on a re-vote at the largest IUE local union in the RCA chain—Camden, N.J., Local 103, with about 6,500 members.

IBEW members struck after rejecting the company's "final" offer as deficient in two areas—wages and allowances for hospital room and board in case of illness.

The impasses continued at a meeting of both sides called June 16 by the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service. Meetings were recessed, subject to the call of the mediator.

The strike was the first for IBEW-RCA employes in 30 years. It followed a "final" management offer of a 4 percent wage hike in the first year of a three-year contract, plus 3 percent in each of the next two years without any provision for cost-of-living rises.

Company representatives were called "adamant" in refusing to recognize that living costs have eaten up all but 1.3 percent of the 7.5 percent the IBEW won for its RCA members three years ago.

"We don't think the cost of living is going to stop going up," said Lawson Wimberly of the union negotiating committee, an assistant to IBEW Pres. Gordon M. Freeman. He said RCA workers in IBEW decided that the time has come to get protection in the form of an escalator tied to the Labor Dept.'s Consumer Price Index.

RCA plants where the IBEW is on strike are at Bloomington, Indianapolis and Marion, Ind.; West Palm Beach, Fla., Findlay, O.; Meadowlands and Lancaster, Pa.; Rockaway, N.J., and Hollywood, Calif. The plants produce radio, TV and phonographic equipment.

IUE members work on other civilian and defense products in plants in Camden, Moorestown and Somerville, N.J.; Mountain Top and Scranton, Pa.; Lewiston, Me.; Cincinnati, O.; Memphis, Tenn.; Plymouth, Mich., and Burbank, Los Angeles and Van Nuys, Calif.

Rights Panel Assails Rangers' Strike Use

Rangers were assigned to Starr County at the request of local officials to assist in upholding the law. Connally said he saw no reason to recall them at that time.

Shortly after Kircher left the governor's office, however, an aide to the governor reported that most of the Rangers, including the detachment commander, Capt. A. Y. Allee, had decided on their own that the situation no longer required their presence. The Ranger force in Starr County was reduced from 15, one-fourth of the total force, to 4.

Allee, a gruff veteran whose father and grandfather were Texas Rangers and whose, son, also a Ranger, joined him in Starr County, has evoked many of the union complaints. News photographers have charged that he threatened them to prevent their taking pictures during a mass arrest of pickets. The Texas Advisory Committee report said he had turned down an invitation to appear privately before its investigators to answer union complaints.

Shortly before meeting with the governor, Kircher flew to Mexico City with David T. Lopez, AFL-CIO representative in Texas who formerly was press officer for the Inter-American Regional Organization of workers (ORIT) at the Mexico City headquarters.

CTM, ORIT Consulted

They met with Gen. Sec. Fidel Velazquez of the Confederation of Mexican Workers (CTM) and Raul Valdivia, assistant general secretary of ORIT.

As a result of the meeting, Velazquez announced that he is sending a national representative to the border area adjoining Starr County with instructions to local union leaders to continue, and if possible increase, their joint efforts with Texas trade unionists to control the flow of Mexican strikebreakers to the Texas fields.

Valdivia said ORIT would suggest a meeting late in July of the Joint U.S.-Mexico Trade Union Committee. The meeting would bring together national representatives of the CTM and the AFL-CIO to discuss problems of organizing farm workers in Texas and to ratify and develop joint projects by international committees at the local level.

In Austin, State Senators Oscar Mauzy of Dallas, A. R. Schwartz of Galveston and Don Kennard of Fort Worth recommended that the Texas Rangers and local officials be instructed not to take sides in labor disputes and to use only such force as permitted by law. They also recommended that county and district attorneys be prohibited from prosecuting cases against union members when they are on retainers to companies involved in a labor dispute.

Also issued last week was a detailed report by the Social Action Dept. of the Texas Catholic Conference, urging support by the church of the organization of farm workers.

Protection Asked

The Catholic group recommended that "large corporate growers be urged to seriously consider joining voluntarily in the growing American awareness of the need to recognize the right of farm workers to organize," that a minimum wage be enacted for the state and that Congress extend NLRB coverage to farm workers.

Sen. Harrison Williams (D-N.J.), chairman of the Senate Subcommittee on Migratory Labor, has announced that the committee will hold hearings in Starr County June 28-30, and will receive testimony on pending legislation to extend federal labor law coverage to the farm workers.

The civil rights advisory committee also asked that the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights request proper federal authorities to re-examine the "regulations and policies which permit and encourage persons residing in Mexico to cross the border and engage in agricultural labor in the United States on a daily basis to the detriment of citizens or other persons permanently residing in the United States." The committee noted it had collected information "indicating that many Mexican nationals who possess alien-resident receipt cards (green cards) but who are living in Mexico, are being utilized as a source of labor on farms which are being picketed."

The conference at which the report was read featured workshops on various areas of concern to Mexican-Americans in which federal officials outlined programs that might be of assistance. Labor leaders, educators, clergymen, and Mexican-American leaders across Texas took part in the conference.

Henry Munoz Jr., equal opportunities director of the Texas AFL-CIO, is a member of the advisory committee.

COORDINATED bargaining committee representing 17 unions with contracts at the Anaconda Co.'s four Montana properties presented proposals for new agreements to company officials at a meeting in Butte. Arthur W. Stuart (standing), Steelworkers' researcher assigned to the committee, is spelling out the justification for the unions' claims—noting that Anaconda's net profits for the three years ended last December were more than $269 million, or double those of the previous triennium.

U.S. Employe Shop Steward Guide Issued

A good union begins with a good shop steward, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany writes in an introduction to a new pamphlet, "AFL-CIO Manual for Federal Employes," published to help local union stewards and officers do the best job for their members.

Meany recalls that the late Pres. Kennedy's executive order—the text of which is included—opened a new era in federal labor-management relations by giving the workers "a voice in the determination of their own working conditions."

"But much remains to be done," he adds. "Federal employes are still denied rights and procedures which are taken for granted in private enterprise—final and binding arbitration of grievances, an independent government 'labor board' to decide unfair labor practice charges, and effective machinery to break deadlocks in negotiations."

Union leadership also must be prepared to do its part, Meany declares, with a shop steward "who knows the contract, who knows how it should be administered, who knows how to handle grievances, who knows the importance of keeping the membership alert and informed."

Single copies of the pamphlet, AFL-CIO Publication No. 138, may be had free from the AFL-CIO Pamphlet Division, 815 Sixteenth St., N.W., Washington, D. C. 20006; in greater numbers, 20 cents per copy, $15 per 100.

17-Union Team Opens Anaconda Bargaining

Butte, Mont. — Labor history was made in this mining town when 96 local union and staff representatives from 17 different international unions, the Montana Metal and Building Trades Councils, and the Industrial Union Dept. met with officials of the Anaconda Company to negotiate new contracts.

While the negotiations covered only the contracts at the company's Montana operations in Great Falls, Anaconda, East Helena, and here in Butte, the bargaining committee consisted of representatives from every international union holding bargaining rights at all 25 operations of the Anaconda Co. and its subsidiaries—Anaconda American Brass Co., Anaconda Wire & Cable Co., and the International Smelting & Refining Co.

The bargaining team was developed as the result of the merger of the Steelworkers and the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers.

A conference in March in Salt Lake City hammered out the bargaining program for this year's negotiations with the major nonferrous companies. All unions representing workers in the Anaconda Co., American Smelting & Refining Co., Kennecott Copper Corp., Phelps Dodge Corp., and the other major companies, were invited to participate.

It was this effort to unify copper, lead and zinc workers in the U.S. and Canada which resulted in the Anaconda coordinated negotiating committee.

Major demands for the renewal of the Montana contracts, most of which expire on June 30, include substantial wage increases, wage equalization with pay scales comparable to those which prevail in other major non-ferrous companies, a cost-of-living escalator clause, pension benefits, increased health and welfare coverage, adequate job and income security, better vacations and holidays, and improved working conditions.

In addition to the Steelworkers, the Anaconda bargaining committee is made up of representatives from the Operating Engineers, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, Auto Workers, Sheet Metal Workers, Machinists, Ironworkers, Carpenters, Painters, Boilermakers, Molders, Pipefitters, Bricklayers, Plumbers, Blacksmiths, Teamsters, and the Montana Metal and Building Trades Councils.

unhealthy effect on the communities affected and the parties involved."

The chief federal mediator had been in Cleveland for two days last week. He conferred at that time with URW President Peter Bommarito and Firestone's chief negotiator, Joseph Cairns.

URW negotiators said that while the union has agreed to the five-day meeting, there will be no retreat from their proposal for a "true" 5 percent contract.

Talks Snarled

The union and companies have been stalled the last two weeks in a dispute over what the companies' latest offers really are worth.

The URW estimates them at 60 cents an hour for three years, including 38 cents in wages for tire plant employes. Workers at non-tire plants would get only 31 cents.

The remaining 22 cents would go for improvements in the pension program, hospitalization and other fringe benefits.

The companies claimed their offers would cost them 73.5 cents an hour. The difference, they said, is in the cost of some of the fringe benefits plus roll-up, an added-on percentage they said covers such hidden costs as overtime premium pay.

Union officials have indicated it would take an offer of 75 to 80 cents, using their figures, to bring a settlement and then only if several working condition problems are ironed out.

The strikes against Firestone, Uniroyal and Goodrich were 59 days old on June 18, making them the longest strikes in Big Five rubber history. The previous record was 58 days against Firestone in 1959. That same year Goodrich was struck for 55 days and Uniroyal for 22 days.

Baltimore Teachers Union Wins Sole Bargaining Rights for 7,800

city laws to permit a bargaining election. The ordinance was approved June 5, and June 16 was chosen for the voting.

To make the balloting easier, the AAA arranged for 36 buses, each with a ballot box and election official, to visit all 215 Baltimore schools according to a carefully-worked-out schedule. The ballots were taken to Herring Run Junior High School and mixed together to make it impossible for anyone to know how individual schools voted.

When a preliminary count showed no majority for either organization, Lewis Gill, the election director, began hearing protests on 177 challenged ballots. The final tally gave Local 340 a majority of the 7,277 valid votes cast.

The local is headed by Pres. Dennis Crosby and Executive Sec. Charles Laubheim. Richard Avnet led the union campaign committee. AFT Dir. of Organization James Mundy and others addressed a June 12 pre-election rally.

Crosby said contract proposals will be based on the expressed desires of teachers for improvements in wages and classroom conditions. Size of classes and adequacy of teaching aids will be given major attention when talks open with Supt. Laurence Paquin and other representatives of the Baltimore School Board, the union has announced.

Besides classroom teachers, the union represents psychologists, social workers, student counselors, department heads, home and demonstration teachers, hospital teachers and others.

Before union members walked out in May, the School Board turned down the union's request for an election on the basis of a ruling by the city solicitor that it would be illegal. The board changed its mind after consultation with City Council leaders and Mayor Theodore McKeldin (R).

In other AFT developments, announced at union headquarters in Chicago:

- End-of-semester strikes won contract settlements for 217 school employes in the Chicago suburbs of Maywood, Melrose Park and Broadview, and for 115 teachers at Gibraltar, Mich., a Detroit suburb.

- AFT members voted 16,790 to 11,540 in a national referendum to move the union headquarters from Cyrus McCormick's former "castle" in Chicago to the Continental Building, 1012 Fourteenth St. N.W., Washington, D. C., in mid-August.

Arlo Strohpaul Dies; AFL-CIO Staff Member

Grand Rapids, Mich. — AFL-CIO Staff Rep. Arlo Strohpaul died here two days before his 58th birthday following a long illness.

A member of Grand Rapids Division 836, Amalgamated Transit Union, he joined the staff of the former AFL in 1954 after seven terms as secretary of the Grand Rapids AFL, and remained on the AFL-CIO regional staff after the merger in 1955.

He is survived by his widow, Florence, and a daughter, Nola.

The Class of 1967

THE CLASS OF 1967 carries the great hope of the nation. It has been more richly endowed than any of its predecessors. It is more qualified to cope with the struggles and problems that the nation and the world face.

Yet in that class are those who received something less than the best education the country has to offer. They are the victims of inadequate school budgets, poorly trained teachers using outmoded techniques, inferior school plants short of equipment, books and the other tools of education.

There are also those who started with the class but didn't make it—the dropouts, the disadvantaged who couldn't keep up, the impoverished who were forced to substitute meager wages for hours in the classroom.

The Class of 1967, as it moves out into the world of work or higher education and takes its place among the voting citizenry of the nation, must ponder these problems and their solutions.

Equal opportunity for a decent education is basic to a democratic system. Where it falls short or does not exist the system itself is impaired. A great deal has been done in the past few years in the form of federal programs, but more is needed—especially more funds—to assure every youngster a chance to get the best education he is capable of absorbing.

Equal opportunity in education is part of the overall struggle to make equal rights for all a reality. This struggle the Class of 1967 must join if its years in the school system are to be meaningful.

It must join also in the never-ending war to eliminate poverty in the greatest and wealthiest nation in the world, to make a reality, available to all, their own years of learning and living in a prosperous and affluent society.

If the next generation is to be the possessor of a good education in an atmosphere of freedom and liberty, the Class of 1967 must dedicate itself also to protect that freedom and expand its horizons so that there will be finally a world at peace.

On The Right Track

THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES struck a blow for free collective bargaining when it removed from the Administration's bill on the rail shopcraft dispute the compulsory arbitration provision, described by its supporters as "mediation to finality."

The House-Senate conference committee called to compose the differences between the measures passed by the two chambers can strike another blow for free bargaining by quickly adopting the House bill.

The bill passed by the Senate would mean that 130,000 rail shopcraft workers would be compelled to work, without the right to strike, until Jan. 1, 1969, if the dispute is not settled. The House bill contains no such provision. It provides for a 90-day no-strike period to allow further mediation.

The unions, as a token of good faith, have voluntarily pledged not to strike—although they are legally entitled to walk off the job—until the conference committee completes its deliberations.

The choice before the conferees is clear: free collective bargaining, not compulsion, is the hallmark of a democratic society.

'Don't Forget Us'

Hits 'Totally Unfair' Attacks:

Wirtz Praises Building Trades For Earnest Drive on Job Bias

The following is excerpted from a speech by Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz before the 12th National Legislative Conference of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept.

THE PAST, and by the past I mean the past three or four years, has been characterized by the pointing of a finger on the matter of racial discrimination at the building trades which is totally unfair.

There is no question about two things: First, that there has been a differentiation on the basis of race as the product of history in the building trades, of most building trades, which is not characteristic of others.

The second truth, that there is today, there has been recently, as far as my fairest appraisal of it is concerned, as complete, as honest, as sincere and as potentially effective a movement to meet this problem in the building trades as in any other American institution in the labor movement or outside it.

Unfortunately, this may be a period in which every single case of there being no minority member in an apprenticeship program has been the subject of front page attention and headlines. And there has been no comparable attention to all of the things which have been done to meet that problem. I wish that there were some way of getting just not equal time but 10 percent time for the kind of thing that is going on.

I wish there could have been just a little attention when the leaders of the Building Trades Council of Baltimore sat down with the president of the National Urban League and the local Urban League to work out a program there for meeting this problem.

I wish there could be a little attention to the fact that the same thing is going on in Detroit, St. Louis, Philadelphia, Portland, Atlanta.

I wish there could be just a little attention to what the building trades have done with the government and with the civil rights groups here in the city of Washington so that you can stand today and say, with complete fairness, that the matter of the color of a boy's skin when he comes to an apprenticeship in Washington, D.C., doesn't make one single bit of difference. I say it that way.

I WOULD LIKE to call to your attention two recent reports on this subject. The facts are pretty thoroughly assembled. The first document to which I call your attention is the report of the New York City Commission on Human Rights of about two weeks ago, which as far as I am concerned represents zero contribution to the understanding of this problem because it deals with all of the stereotypes of five to 10 years ago, purports to be a study of what is being done about minority participation in apprenticeship programs in New York City.

It says almost nothing about what Pete Brennan and Harry Van Arsdale and their colleagues have done, and takes eight unions which had the hardest time and leaves out of account the unions which have moved rapidly ahead in this particular area and comes up with the kind of report which attracts front page headlines.

Then I would like you to know about a report entitled "Negro Participation in Apprenticeship Programs" which has been prepared by the Manpower Administration of the Dept. of Labor.

. . . We can get no newspaper attention to it at all because it is as fair-minded a document as I have ever seen. It criticizes you, it criticizes me, it points out the inadequacies in meeting the problems of discrimination. But it then goes to point out, very deliberately, and very carefully and in detail, the problem of bringing qualified minority group members to the apprenticeship program.

It says to you and says to us, you have some things left to do as far as eliminating discrimination is concerned.

But the problem here is central today, the problem is being sure that there are people of all races qualified for these programs and it concentrates on the problem of the disadvantaged.

I ask for your cooperation, your confidence now, and your understanding. I offer you our complete cooperation and confidence and our understanding of this situation.

Meany: 'We Are Very Proud'

The AFL-CIO "commercial" on the last Edward P. Morgan broadcast was given by Federation Pres. George Meany. Here is what he said:

Tonight marks the end of a long and happy association. Mr. Morgan is leaving this network to embark on a new venture—a large-scale experiment in educational broadcasting. It is an exciting challenge, and we can understand why he could not resist it.

For that reason, and for that reason only, Edward P. Morgan and the News will no longer be brought to you by the AFL-CIO.

I say this sadly, for we in the AFL-CIO are very proud of our long association with Mr. Morgan. We are proud of the many honors he has earned—and of the reflected glory that has been our share as his sponsor.

But we are proudest of all for having made Mr. Morgan available to you, his listeners, without strings or taboos—free to speak his mind, to give his views, not ours, without censorship of any kind at any time.

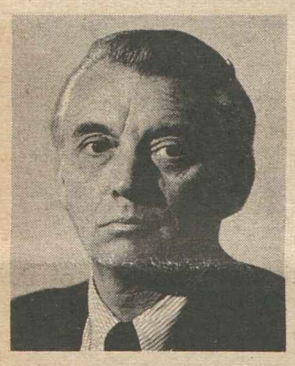
So tonight we come to the end of the 12½ rewarding years—rewarding, we believe, not just to the AFL-CIO, but to the cause of a better-informed America. This is a cause we know Mr. Morgan will continue to serve with the wisdom and the mature judgment we all admire.

He goes to his new assignment with our thanks for a job well done and with our warmest best wishes for the future.

Morgan: 'A Rare Experience'

By Edward P. Morgan

WELL, THE TIME HAS COME. A few urgent matters are on my mind. First I want to try to describe how it feels to be free. Not that I am being liberated tonight. I am afraid I can say, without fear of contradiction, that never in the history of broadcasting has a journalist been so free to speak his mind, to exercise his own editorial judgments, to make his own mistakes, as I have been in the 12½ years of this gorgeous assignment which ends, or at least is interrupted, with this broadcast.



Morgan

Never in all the 35 years I have plied the reporter's trade have I enjoyed such a rare experience. So this might be an occasion for personal celebration. But I am not jubilant. I will be everlastingly grateful to my sponsor, the AFL-CIO, for its patience and record longevity of sponsorship despite my repeated biting of the hand that helped feed me, by criticizing organized labor, its leaders and its policies, when I felt such criticism warranted.

I am grateful, too, for the tolerant flexibility of my employer, ABC News, which with unthreatening grace not only absorbed my public complaints here of the irresponsibility of broadcasting in general and, on occasion, ABC in particular, but which also absorbed threatening protests from affiliated stations, and others, about my broadcast comments.

So why don't I bubble like a just-opened bottle of champagne in personal triumph? Precisely because I feel so alone and disturbed out here in the rarefied atmosphere.

Don't kid yourself, Morgan. There are others who could have fulfilled this or similar assignments better than you. The painful point is they have not had the similar opportunity. I have detected, through these years, envious looks from respected colleagues and I am certain I have interpreted their glances correctly. They were not saying "Boy, what a Pulitzer-Prize-winning piece you did last night!" They were saying silently, "Boy, what we could do if we had the same unfettered freedom on our beats." This is a terrifying condition for the freest press in the world.

I am deeply concerned about the conditions and moods now rampant in this, my native land. Amid the most incredible riches and the most terrifying power any nation has ever accumulated in the history of man, we are plunged into divisive turmoil. Instead of trying to solve our problems we organize hate groups to blame the other fellow. Or we flee to the beaches of frantic leisure only to be sunburned by the guilt of our wanton negligence.

There is no miracle drug or magic ointment to cure or quiet this situation. But there is an instrument of devastating effectiveness which we have only superficially, often hypocritically, employed. It is called the power of the press.

There is enough wrong in this republic to merit a full-scale expose daily, if not every hour on the hour. But newspapers run prize contests to lure readers or keep the ones they have. Broadcasting is driving thoughtful citizens away in droves by fertilizing the wastelands of the airwaves with the manure of utter mediocrity.

Why? I think I know why. Nothing in life is free. But in our obeisance before the altar of profit and free enterprise we have let the lust for material things get the better of us. Nothing is so important as people. But instead of the sacred dignity of the individual human being, too many of us worship dividends and private property more.

It is not the policy of General Motors to kill or maim people. But that became its operating policy in order "to protect its investment", when instead of correcting flaws it knew its cars had, it set a gumshoe detective on the trail of Ralph Nader. And where were the Detroit reporters, incidentally, before Nader came along?

IT IS NOT the policy of the newspapers and broadcasting stations of Connecticut to suppress vital news. Yet where was the press of that state when the shocking revelations about Sen. Thomas Dodd were coming out? Has it occurred to an editor or broadcaster, in Connecticut or out, that the senator's tortured employes might not have passed the incriminating documents over the transom to Drew Pearson if they had believed the Connecticut press would have responded to any first friendly tips with the enterprising courage Pearson did? Where were the press and the rest of the power structure, including labor leaders, in the disgraced and bleeding city of Cincinnati before its black citizens exploded their frustration?

I go now to a Ford-Foundation-financed experiment in non-commercial broadcasting where I may execute the biggest pratfall in the history of journalism. That's my problem.

The nation's situation is not hopeless. It simply begs for responsible sustained attention. My most painful duty tonight is to take leave of a loyal, thoughtful listening audience. If I have been emboldened to speak out it is because I know I have not been talking to myself.

The honestly concerned citizens, right, left and center, are the nuclei, not of black power or white power but positive power, which can make representative government work. But their power has not been sufficiently turned on because the press has been too busy neuterizing the news to clear comfortable, non-controversial space for the full-page ad and the singing commercial.

This "thank you" note from Edward P. Morgan was engraved on a silver tray he presented to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany:

"To George Meany and the AFL-CIO, for doing what no other sponsor has ever done in the history of broadcasting—even though it should come naturally to every sponsor interested in free speech and freedom of the press: allowing a journalist to speak his critical mind; for that, thanks."

Washington Window

By Press Associates, Inc.

WITH ATTENTION riveted on the disadvantages faced by Negro Americans in all parts of our country, the nation has only recently become aware of the plight faced by Mexican Americans.

More than 5 million Mexican Americans represent the second largest minority group in the country. In the western and southwestern areas of our country, where they have their largest concentrations, they have felt the sting of discrimination almost as much as has the Negro.

Several years ago Mexican American groups, which had not been too vocal in presenting their problems in national forums, decided the time had come for them to turn to the federal government to protect their rights and to work with them to enhance opportunities.

Recently, four cabinet officers and Sargent Shriver, director of the Office of Economic Opportunity, made a report to the President in which they declared:

"The Mexican American was an American long before this land became the United States.

"He embodies traditions, language and culture which predated our own by hundreds of years.

"Yet, in many respects, the Mexican American has been a neglected American. He continues to face severe handicaps in language, jobs, education, health and housing opportunities.

"He has sought, but has often been denied, the dignity and fruit of well-paid labor. He has sought, but has often been denied, the proper tools of education for his children. He has sought — but has often been denied because of it — to maintain his own proud traditions in a free society where differences should be respected and cultural diversity encouraged."

OTHER AMERICANS, particularly those who live in the East and Middle West, have many misconceptions about Mexican Americans.

They believe, for example, that most Mexican Americans live in rural areas and seek to eke out a living from the soil or as migratory laborers.

In fact, proportionally more Mexican Americans live in cities than do all Americans as a group.

Almost 20 percent of all Mexican Americans, however, are migrant farm workers. Until recently, these have been the forgotten Americans.

There has been help coming in the anti-poverty program. The Office of Economic Opportunity has devoted some $41 million to aiding migrant workers this year and $25 million has been used in programs to help Mexican American migrants.

Since 1964 extensive programs have been set up through the Neighborhood Youth Corps and Job Corps Centers through OEO and the Dept. of Labor to assist young Mexican Americans.

The U.S. Office of Education has established a completely new unit which will concentrate on educational programs for Spanish-speaking children, and has appointed a group of distinguished laymen, mostly Mexican Americans, to an Advisory Council on Mexican American Education.

One of the more hopeful developments was undertaken by Pres. Johnson when he named a top-level inter-agency committee on Mexican American Affairs. Its chairman is Commissioner Vicente Ximenes of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. Its purposes are to:

- Assure that federal programs are reaching Mexican Americans and providing the assistance they need, and
- Seek out new programs that may be necessary to handle problems that are unique to the Mexican American community.

Probably the greatest power in the hands of the Mexican Americans has rarely, if ever been used. That is the ballot.

Public Aid Average Put At $13.50 a Week

WIDESPREAD misinformation, "some of it quite deliberate," hampers efforts to up-date lagging public assistance programs, Dir. Bert Seidman of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security said in a network radio interview.

"Most needy people don't get any public assistance at all," said Seidman, noting that only 22 percent of those at the poverty level are helped by assistance programs.

His statements were made on Labor News Conference, AFL-CIO produced public affairs program aired Tuesdays at 7:35 p.m., EDT, on the Mutual Broadcasting System.

HE NOTED that while the total cost of public aid has risen, proportionate costs have fallen far behind the growth of national income or gross national product. He said that public assistance payments average about $13.50 a week.

"So, it is wrong to say that public assistance costs have been mushrooming," Seidman said, "they haven't." In fact, public assistance is actually going to too few people, and "the payments themselves have been very, very inadequate, in terms of meeting human needs," he asserted.

Questioning Seidman were James Deakin, White House correspondent for the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, and Stanley Levey, labor reporter for the Scripps-Howard Newspapers.

NOT ALL of the 2,500 delegates to the legislative conference of the American Federation of Government Employes could crowd into this Senate hearing room where Pres. John F. Griner called for major reforms in the pay-setting mechanism for the government's blue collar workers. The overflow moved on to the offices of their home-state senators and congressmen to urge congressional action on the union's program, including a substantial pay hike for salaried employes and a strong labor relations law covering federal employes.

Public Employe Union Bargaining Here to Stay, Wurf Tells Mayors

Honolulu—Public employes and collective bargaining, having engaged in "sporadic flirtations" for decades, are now bound in a marriage that "will endure," Pres. Jerry Wurf of the State, County & Municipal Employes declared in a speech before the U.S. Conference of Mayors here.

"Collective bargaining is more than simply an additional holiday, or a pay increase, or an improved pension plan, or a grievance procedure," Wurf said.

"It is, of course, all of these, and their importance can hardly be over-estimated. But it is, in its most profound sense, a process.

"It is a process which transforms pleading to negotiation. It is a process which permits employes dignity as they participate in the formulation of their terms and conditions of employment. It is a process which embraces the democratic ideal and applies it concretely, specifically, effectively at the place of work."

Wurf asserted that the "traditional distinctions" between the public and private sectors of the economy have disappeared as public ownership spread and resulted in "overlapping functions, parallel efforts, incredibly complex relationships."

Most of the expansion in public employment, he continued, has been at the state and local levels.

"We are, therefore, considering one of the fastest growing sectors in our society," he added. "Most certainly we are considering the fastest growing sector in the American labor movement. More specifically, I am here as a representative of what has been termed, by others, the fastest growing union.

"I say this with considerable pride but without, I hope, boastfulness. On the contrary, it is offered with genuine gratitude. All that we are, we owe to you.

"You represent our best organizers, our most persuasive reason for existence, our defense against membership apathy and indifference, our perpetual prod to militancy, and our assurance of continued growth."

Some observers, Wurf said, have concluded that union membership has crested in industry and that labor, "hungry for per capita dues," has turned toward public workers.

"Whether or not this is true, the important thing is that it is irrelevant," he declared.

Organizing Success Cited

"Unions would be unable to sign up a single employe if he were satisfied, if his dignity were not offended, if he were treated with justice. What is important is not the motives of union officials in organizing public employes, but the astonishing rapidity and success of their efforts. Barren ground yields poor crops. But here, the ground was fertile beyond belief."

Wurf told the mayors that public employe strike prohibitions not only are ineffectual but "warp" the "vital process" of collective bargaining because they "create the very tensions, exacerbate the very situations, provoke the very strikes they were allegedly formulated to prevent."

"It is time we learned from experience and applied its rich lessons," he concluded. "The democracy of our political life deserves full extension into the labor relations of our public life. Public employes will not have it otherwise."

7 AFL-CIO Scholars Graduate with Honors

Seven winners of AFL-CIO Merit Scholarships were graduated from college this year with the same kinds of scholastic records that won them the awards as high school students.

Since the program was inaugurated in 1959, scholarships worth up to $6,000 have been presented to 54 outstanding high school graduates. The commitment of nearly $325,000, however, represents only a small part of organized labor's investment in higher education.

This year the AFL-CIO and its international union affiliates, central bodies and local unions are spending an estimated $1.5 million to help approximately 1,400 young men and women through college.

This year's graduates include one honorary AFL-CIO scholarship holder—John C. Riordan, Hazardville, Conn., who was graduated as a physics major from Massachusetts Institute of Technology and has been awarded a three-year National Defense Graduate Fellowship which will enable him to complete work for his doctor of philosophy degree at the University of California.

Dad a Postal Clerk

Riordan, son of Edward Riordan, a member of Postal Clerks Local 497-8, Springfield, Mass., accepted an AFL-CIO scholarship in 1963 but withdrew after receiving a more opulent award which included summer employment. However, he has kept in touch with the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education and is listed as an honorary merit scholar.

The other merit scholars graduated were:

Judy White Armstrong, Tulsa, Okla., who received her degree from the University of Tulsa after three years at the University of Oklahoma. The daughter of Neville E. White of Operating Engineers Local 948, she amassed an outstanding scholastic record and expects to teach college English. She is married to Thomas L. Armstrong.

Paul C. Jefferson, Chicago, was graduated from Harvard University with highest honors, was on the Dean's List for all four years and has received a Fulbright award for study next fall at the Sorbonne in Paris. His mother, Mrs. Helen C. Jefferson, is a member of Teachers Local 1.

William S. Jacobs, Decatur, Ga., was graduated as a Phi Beta Kappa member by Swarthmore College and has won a Keasbey Award, comparable to a Rhodes Scholarship, which will permit him to study for his master's degree at St. John's College, Cambridge University, England.

Craig A. Peterson, Mason City, Ia., received the degree of bachelor of science in aerospace engineering from Iowa State University, where he played the trumpet in school musical organizations and also in the Mason City and Clear Lake Municipal bands.

Renee Stern, New York City, was graduated from Barnard College. She is the daughter of the late Carl Stern, refugee from Hitler Germany who was a long-time member of Local 1790, Textile Workers Union of America.

Allen Blacker Thomson, Tucson, Ariz., who got his degree in nuclear physics from the University of Arizona, where he expects to work for a master's degree in mathematics. His late father, Captain Thomson, was a member of the Railroad Signalmen for 35 years.

At ILO Conference:

Swiss Union Leader Blasts Attack on U.S.

Geneva—Jean Moeri, veteran Swiss trade union leader, angrily denounced at the current Intl. Labor Organization conference a Communist-mounted campaign to villify the United States.

Moeri rose on a point of order to interrupt a Ukranian government delegate who was continuing the series of Soviet propaganda attacks on American policy.

"To attack the United States is fashionable nowadays," the respected Swiss worker delegate reminded the conference of 1,200 labor, government and employer spokesmen of 109 nations and their advisers.

"We hear," he continued with visible emotion, "that the Americans are responsible for all the evils which burden humanity. But nobody talks about the fine things the United States is doing."

Moeri, chairman of the conference's worker delegates, appealed to the president of the three-week session, Ethiopian Social Affairs Minister Getahun Tesemma, to silence the Communist propaganda.

The Communist and Arab delegates had played it soft during the initial stage of the conference when the United Nations was still seeking to assure an effective cease-fire between Israel and her Arab neighbors.

Tactics Shifted

But once all fighting had ended they increasingly injected into the general debate charges of American collusion with Israel and U.S. "aggression" in Viet Nam.

Rudolph Faupl, the U.S. worker delegate, strongly protested against the Communist refusal to abide by the rule that statements in the debate should be confined to the non-political problems of concern to workers.

"Obviously," Faupl told the conference, "this is not acceptable to a minority who represent what they call socialist countries. They come to this rostrum to spread propaganda and villify other member states."

The American government delegates, assistant secretary of labor George L-P Weaver and George P. Delaney, a special assistant to the secretary of state, also rose to denounce the Communist maneuvers, as did Edwin P. Neilan, the American employer representative.

Tesemma aroused the ire of the Communists when he ordered expunged from the conference's record an attack on the United States and Israel by a Bulgarian delegate who ignored calls to order.

The president denied the floor to a Cuban delegate because of his irresponsible attacks on other Latin American countries and what he called "Yankee imperialism."

First "Drastic" Action

It was the first time that the president took such drastic action to enforce the conference's rules. He acted after five Latin American government delegates had strongly objected to the insults the Cuban was hurling at their countries.

Meanwhile, in the conference resolutions committee Faupl called for the ILO, a specialized agency of the United Nations, to take action in favor of workers in the entertainment industry.

He stressed the "grave human problems arising from the unstable nature of industry" when he introduced a resolution asking for an examination of these at the "international level."

The American entertainment unions, Faupl assured, "are willing to work with all other groups dedicated to the improvement of working conditions" in their field.

Paul G. Hoffman, administrator of the United Nations Development Program, praised the ILO in a speech to the conference for what he termed the "unique place" it held "among the peace builders."

Noting that the ILO carries the "major load" in the developing of training facilities in the underprivileged countries, Hoffman said:

"You are in a key position in this global war on poverty because what you are striking at is poverty of opportunity. None of us should rest too easily until everyone on this globe has an opportunity for a life of decency and dignity."

Situs Picketing Victory Predicted by Haggerty

Building trades leaders are ready for a House vote on the on-site picketing bill. Their immediate concern is to get the bill to a vote.

Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. told the final session of the department's annual legislative conference: "I am satisfied the votes are there."

He said reports from the 4,200 delegates indicated that some House members, under heavy pressure by employers, would be happier if they didn't have to vote on the bill—but would support it in a showdown.

The legislation, to permit picketing at a multi-employer construction project, was a major goal of delegates to the four-day conference.

Rep. James G. O'Hara (D-Mich.) told the closing session that "such outfits as the National Right to Work Committee and the Farm Bureau" have been working side by side with contractors in lobbying against the site picketing bill.

They've been saying, O'Hara reported, that the legislation "would destroy the construction industry, destroy freedom, and indeed destroy America."

O'Hara commented that "these arguments are ridiculous" since the bill merely gives construction unions the same rights as workers in other industries. But, he warned, "We shouldn't underrate our opponents. . . . They have an awful lot of money to spend to defeat this bill and this is not a friendly Congress to legislate for the working man."

In a follow-up to the conference, the BCTD administrative committee met with top Labor Dept. officials in a joint effort to eliminate misunderstandings on apprenticeship programs and other issues.

During the conference, Pres. Peter T. Schoemann of the Plumbers & Pipe Fitters charged in a speech to 500 delegates from his union that "government agencies are using the racial issue to crack the whip on the building trades."

Earlier, Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz had described as "totally unfair" the "pointing of a finger on the matter of racial discrimination at the building trades."

For Radio, TV Stations:

'Fairness Doctrine' Upheld In Landmark Court Ruling

Radio and television stations must give individuals and organizations the free opportunity to reply when attacked, a federal appeals court has ruled in the first legal test of the Federal Communications Commission's "fairness doctrine."

The landmark decision upholds the constitutionality of the doctrine, which had been challenged by a Pennsylvania radio station.

In a 2-0 decision, the District of Columbia court rejected the station's contention that the doctrine was an unconstitutional delegation of Congress' legislative function and that it violated the first, fifth, ninth and tenth amendments to the constitution.

Judge Edward Allen Tamm overruled the station's claim that the doctrine interfered with its freedom of speech, saying that it is not prohibited from broadcasting any program which it thinks suitable. The latitude of a station's operation is limited only by its "discretion and good faith judgment," he declared.

The doctrine, rather than limiting the station's right of free speech, the judge said, "recognizes and enforces the free speech right of the victim of any personal attack made during the broadcast. Such an attack," he declared, "necessitates the petitioners' affording the maligned victim an opportunity to respond."

The doctrine also provides that time be given for recognized groups or individuals to present alternative views on controversial issues of public importance that a station has chosen to broadcast.

The judge reminded the station that "the American people own the broadcast frequencies." Through Congress, he said, "they have established a program of licensing the temporary use of allocated frequencies to broadcasters who meet the standards established by Congress."

The broadcasters, then, he declared, "acquire no ownership of assigned channels but are authorized to use them for the service of the public interest, convenience, or necessity."

WGCB AM-FM of Red Lion, Pa. had instituted the lawsuit as the outgrowth of a broadcast made in 1964 over its facilities by radical right preacher Billy James Hargis.

In the broadcast Hargis attacked Fred J. Cook, author of a book critical of Barry Goldwater. Cook asked the station for the opportunity to reply and was told he would have to pay for the time or sign a statement that he was unable to pay.

Cook refused and complained to the FCC, which ordered that free time be given without any demonstration of inability to pay. The station filed suit, the first direct test of the FCC's 18-year-old compilation of station directives.

In upholding the right of individuals and organizations to reply, without cost, to an attack, the court also rejected the argument that the FCC should determine the truth or falsity of charges made against an individual before ordering that answering time be given.

"The basic concept of free speech is unfettered by any requirement that it be expressed only by those with a 'right' viewpoint," Judge Tamm said.

"I find in the fairness doctrine," he concluded, "a vehicle completely legal in its origin which implements by the use of modern technology the 'free and general discussion of public matters (which) seems absolutely essential for an intelligent exercise of their rights as citizens.'"

The fairness doctrine has been used with increasing frequency in recent years by liberal, labor, church and consumer groups in reaction to station editorials and radical right broadcasters.

The results prior to the court decision had been uneven, though AFL-CIO organizations have successfully invoked the doctrine in response to broadcasts made by stations in Pennsylvania, Ohio, Mississippi, Virginia and Montana.

AN OLD FRIEND gave his picture to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany—Paul Carter Hawkins, Dillon, Mont., the national poster child of the Muscular Dystrophy Associations for an unprecedented third year. Meany urged AFL-CIO affiliates to support the group's drive for funds to prevent and treat "this dread disease."

Flint Glass Convention Revises Contract Policy

St. Louis—The mold-making department of the American Flint Glass Workers Union voted at the union's convention here to revise its policy on ratification of contracts.

The union's mold-making section, which represents about 4,500 mold makers and apprentices employed in the glass container and other segments of the glass industry, adopted a proposal providing for ratification of contracts by the membership of the local unions affected.

This is the first time that ratification by the membership has been a part of the constitution or by-laws of any division of the union, George M. Parker, union president, explained. "In the past all negotiating committees of the union have had full power to settle at the bargaining table," he said.

Parker, who was re-elected to the union's top post without opposition, said that the union's various contracts committees approved proposals calling for "substantial increases in all wages and in all areas of fringe benefits."

Parker pointed out that each of the union's 11 departments in its two divisions adopted contract proposals to suit individual situations.

In the union's major contested election, Virgil Ostendorf of Local 43, Alton, Ill., and Jack Smoogen of Local 1000, Corning, N. Y., were named international representatives. They defeated 22 other candidates for the two posts in secret balloting. Earlier in the convention, delegates voted to add two representatives, bringing the total staff to 11.

Officers re-elected without opposition were Parker, president; Albert Vottero, first vice president; Robert W. Newell, second vice president; Harold Gibbons, third vice president; R. K. Ritchie, secretary treasurer, and Ivan T. Uncapher, assistant secretary.

Delegates voted to hold their next convention, the union's 87th, in Chicago in June 1969.

Daniel Jordan Named TWUA General Counsel

New York—Daniel B. Jordan has been appointed general counsel of the Textile Workers Union of America, Pres. William Pollock announced.

Jordan has been TWUA assistant general counsel since 1964 and succeeds Irving Abramson, who resigned to devote full time as general counsel for the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers. Before becoming a lawyer, Jordan was an organizer for the Clothing Workers and the Ladies' Garment Workers.

Utility Union Delegates Hail Johnson Policies

San Francisco—The Utility Workers' 15th constitutional convention praised Pres. Johnson's domestic achievements and his "strong and courageous foreign policy that will ultimately bring about a just and lasting peace."

The convention pledged in a resolution "wholehearted support to [the President] and the objectives he has set forth for the betterment of all mankind." It supported also the Johnson policy of refusing unilaterally to end bombing of North Viet Nam military targets until the Communists indicate reciprocal de-escalation.

The Viet Nam resolution reaffirmed the AFL-CIO position of supporting the President's readiness for negotiations to end the war on an equitable basis.

The convention re-elected Pres. William J. Pachler and Vice Pres. William R. Munger. Leonard Knapp, formerly executive board member from Region 4, was named to succeed Sec.-Treas. Andrew J. McMahon who is retiring. No successor was named for retiring Vice Pres.-Organizational Director Harold J. Straub. His duties are to be divided among Pachler and others.

Succeeding Knapp on the executive board is Marshall Hicks, of Monroe, Mich. Other new board members are Valentine Murphy, of Boston, and Joseph Luciano, of New York. Board members re-elected were Michael Sampson, Reginald Brown, William Comer, Edward Shedlock and Harold Rigley.

The convention heard AFL-CIO Director of Organization William Kircher urge support to the United Farm Workers Organizing Committee. It responded by asking local unions to give all possible assistance to the farm workers, "the most exploited group in the American labor force." The executive board will donate financially to UFWOC, Pachler said.

A resolution aimed at protecting jobs and enhancing the creation of new jobs opposed proposals for importation of natural gas and electrical energy from Canada. The convention blamed "so-called conservationists" for proposing importation rather than enlargement of domestic production and transmission facilities.

The delegates also approved construction of thermonuclear power generating stations under Atomic Energy Commission safeguards.

All the union's locals were urged to launch COPE dollar drives early this year to aid in recouping in 1968 the losses of the 1966 congressional election.

Support for Pres. Johnson's call for further civil rights legislation, backing for the "one-man, one-vote" principle applied to local as well as wider government areas, and support for national health insurance were contained in other convention resolutions.

Reapportioned Legislature Enacts Bulk of Connecticut Labor Program

Hartford, Conn.—A reapportioned Connecticut Legislature—the second in 90 years with a Democratic majority in both houses—enacted most of labor's legislative program before adjourning this month.

So many bills long urged by the State AFL-CIO became law that union leaders are hard put to identify the highlights of the session. But the accomplishments include these:

- Major improvements in both unemployment and workmen's compensation laws.
- An increase in the state minimum wage from $1.25 to $1.40 this year and to $1.60 next year.
- A big consumer legislative package.
- A ban on the use of lie detectors in employment.
- Extension of collective bargaining rights to employes of hospitals, colleges and other non-profit institutions.
- Outlawing of the use of professional strikebreakers in a labor dispute.
- Legislative authorization for a community group health center sponsored by the Greater New Haven Central Labor Council.

The ceiling on unemployment benefits had been $50, plus a $5 allowance for each child up to 16, with the one-week waiting period customary in nearly all states.

Under the new law, the ceiling on basic benefits goes to $60 this year, to $70 next year, $76 in 1969 and to 60 percent of the state's average production wage thereafter. In addition the one week waiting period is abolished, making workers eligible for benefits from the first day of unemployment.

The dependents' allowance is broadened to include a dependent wife and children up to 18. The payroll tax paid by employers is applied to the first $3,600 of earnings instead of the first $3,000, and will go to $3,900 if the tax rate drops.

Injury Benefits

Workmen's compensation benefits—now 60 percent of wages up to a maximum of 55 percent of the state average—go to two-thirds of lost wages up to a ceiling of 60 percent of the average production wage, plus for the first time a $5 dependents' allowance for each child.

The consumer package includes:

- Truth-in-lending, applying to transactions between $100 and $25,000 other than real estate mortgages. Revolving credit is included. Interest charges must be stated both in dollars and cents and as a percentage rate.
- A one-day "cooling off period" in which persons who sign contracts at home under inducement by door-to-door salesmen can cancel the contract.
- Truth-in-packaging applying to intrastate commerce the standards set by the federal law. A separate bill requires retailers offering goods marked "—cents off" to show both the customary retail price and the sales price.
- Licensing of "debt poolers," other than attorneys or lending institutions, with a ceiling on fees that can be charged.
- A ban on discharge of a worker for having his pay garnisheed unless he has more than seven garnishments in a year. The amount of wages exempt from garnishment was raised from $50 to $65 a week.

Legislation authorizing a labor-sponsored community health center in New Haven was enacted over strong opposition from the Connecticut State Medical Society.

The comprehensive group health program to be undertaken by the Greater New Haven AFL-CIO is similar to cooperative prepaid group practice plans in other parts of the country. But the medical lobby went all-out to beat the legislation. Some modifications were made in the bill and it won final passage minutes before adjournment.

Compromise Wins:

House Unit Clears Teacher Corps Bill

A compromise bill extending the life of the Teacher Corps won 26-2 approval of the House Education and Labor Committee.

Last month, the House conservative coalition forced deletion of a Teacher Corps extension from the elementary and secondary school bill. This would have killed the program after June 30, when the present law expires.

The compromise bill would continue the program under which teams of experienced and novice teachers are trained to work in slum schools requesting their services. But it would shift most of the program from federal to state supervision. Teacher Corps volunteers would be recruited by local school officials and trained in universities in the area.

The strong bipartisan support for the "states' rights" compromise indicated that the legislation should pass the House, and possibly receive final congressional approval before the June 30 deadline.

It would continue the Teacher Corps for an additional three years, with a spending ceiling of $33 million in the year starting July 1, going up to $56 million the third year.

Education 'Package'

The extension is part of a $1.1 billion, three-year package of grants for recruitment and training of educational personnel.

For the second time in two weeks, the House battled over a bill raising the national debt ceiling, but this time Democratic ranks held reasonably firm and the measure was passed, 217-196.

On the first go-around on June 7, a bill to raise the ceiling from a temporary level of $336 billion to a permanent level of $365 billion was beaten, 211-197.

The new bill would bring the ceiling to $358 billion over two years.

Despite the modification, it was politics which determined the voting lineup. On the June 7 vote, 35 Democrats joined a solid bloc of Republicans to embarrass the Administration.

The new bill was passed June 21 with all Republicans voting against it. But Democratic ranks closed and only 20 of the party's conservative bloc bolted to vote with the Republicans.

Democrats and Republicans were able to join, however, in supporting an extension and expansion of the 1965 Older Americans Act, which established an Administration on Aging in the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare. It has provided grants to states for projects involving counselling, recreation, health services, training and adult education for persons over 65. The federal agency has also carried on research and provided technical assistance to state and local programs.

The bill extending the program and increasing its funding was passed on a 331-0 rollcall. It will enable states to finance about 250 additional community projects during the coming year in addition to continuing programs already started.

The House also passed a bill making it a federal crime to mutilate the American flag. It supplements laws already on the books in all 50 states.

While the House moved through its legislative program, the Senate was engrossed in debating the censure of Sen. Thomas J. Dodd (D-Conn.) on a report by a special Ethics Committee that he had improperly used funds from political testimonials for personal expenses and had billed both the Senate and private organizations for the same travel expenses.

"LONG AND HAPPY ASSOCIATION" was over when Edward P. Morgan ended his ABC radio broadcasts, sponsored by the AFL-CIO for more than 12 years, to join an experiment in educational broadcasting. AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany paid tribute to Morgan on his final broadcast, and at a luncheon presented him with a scroll marking the occasion. From left are AFL-CIO Vice Presidents Joseph A. Beirne and Joseph D. Keenan, Morgan, Meany, and AFL-CIO Vice Presidents Peter T. Schoemann, Hunter P. Wharton and Harry C. Bates. (Stories Page 5.)

AFL-CIO Hits Federal Wage Board Plan

The AFL-CIO reiterated its opposition to a proposed "central wage board" to set pay scales for the federal government's blue collar workers.

Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller told the Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee that the local area prevailing wage policy is sound and should be strengthened by giving unions a greater voice in all steps of the wage-setting procedure.

The goal, he said, should be to "approach collective bargaining practices in private industry as closely as possible."

Biemiller, who spoke also as chairman of a multi-union AFL-CIO committee on wage board procedures, opposed legislation introduced by Sen. Daniel B. Brewster (D.-Md.) to establish a Federal Departmental Wage Board designed to bring uniformity in pay-setting and job evaluation procedures among government agencies.

"It would destroy the system of local area wage board rate-setting," Biemiller warned, "and it would weaken and destroy meaningful participation of employe labor organizations in the wage-setting process."

He told the Senate panel that the AFL-CIO committee is currently working with the U.S. Civil Service Commission in an effort to eliminate local pay inequities in the wage board system "and we hope that we will have an opportunity to achieve our goals through this procedure."

bursing agency. Some physicians have refused to accept assignments from medicare patients under any circumstances, he said, even when the patient has to borrow to pay the physician before he can be reimbursed under the program.

About 57 percent of all physicians accept assignments "at least part of the time," Ball said, conceding there can be "a serious problem" for the patients of the remaining 43 percent. The picture varies in different parts of the country, he added, but is worst in Ohio, where 77 percent of all physicians bill the patient.

"We are studying whether there are ways in which the patient can be relieved of the hardship," he said, "without increasing inflationary pressures on the size of the physicians' fees."

Since extended care services for convalescents after an illness became available last Jan. 1, Ball reported, some 200,000 men and women have gone into nursing homes and 230,000 more received insured home health services.

Time Lag Cut

He also said that the time lag between billing and payment under the voluntary part of the program has been reduced in 51 of the 59 service areas to less than 21 days and in all but two — Maryland outside suburban Washington and Iowa — to less than 30 days. The rate is 35 days in the Maryland area and 50 days in Iowa.

"We hope that eventually all carriers will reach the processing time that 14 have already attained — that is, an average rate of 10 days or less," Ball said.

"It should be kept in mind that the volume of these bills was without precedent — some 25 million in a 12-month period and now running at the rate of 700,000 a week. It is not surprising that the carriers needed some time and experience to get on top of the load."

Ball said that at the end of the first year the administration of inpatient hospital benefits is "going well" with hospitals reimbursed on a "timely basis" and administrative problems "not substantial."

But in the area of out-patient benefits and to some extent in provisions governing diagnostic X-ray and laboratory procedures for inpatients, "we have the major source" of administrative problems.

Pres. Johnson, Ball added, has recommended major simplifications to Congress.

Ball stressed the upgrading of health care to the benefit of all Americans which he said was taking place as a result of the quality standards established by medicare. All but 2 to 3 percent of the nation's hospitals participate in the program and have accepted the standards, he said, as have more than 4,000 extended care facilities, 1,800 home health agencies and 2,450 independent laboratories.

"Another important way in which medicare has improved the quality of health care," Ball said, "is that in conformity with the Civil Rights Act . . . in many communities . . . minority group members for the first time now have access to high-quality care."

Meany Asks Firm Stand Against Senate Rail Bill

In a few scattered locations, groups of workers walked out but returned to work within a few hours at the urging of union leaders.

In addition to his strong statement on the railroad dispute, Meany told the SIU:

• Some officials who supported Landrum-Griffin Act provisions that were supposed to "protect" rank-and-file union members from their leaders are now shedding "crocodile tears" when the rank-and-file rejects contracts negotiated by their leaders.

• The "credibility gap" applies more aptly to the press, radio and television when legislative conferences of thousands of union members, including government workers, receive no coverage but there are front page stories and hourly news bulletins when a handful of youngsters lies down in the Pentagon. He also charged the news media with ignoring responsible Negro leaders and organizations to play up "those who preach violence . . . who have no standing in the Negro community."

• Soviet Premier Kosygin gave an "incredible performance" at the United Nations. Terming his charges against Israel "bunk," Meany asked:

"Who was it who ordered the United Nations peacekeeping force out of the Gaza strip?

"Who closed the Gulf of Aqaba?

"What nations received $3 billion in military hardware from the Soviet Union?

"Which country has a national policy calling for extermination of its neighbor?"

• The "Rebuild America's Merchant Marine Now" banner in the SIU convention hall, Meany declared, is what he was saying back in 1940 and expresses his sentiments today.

Matthew Burns, 79, Led Paper Union

Albany, N.Y. — Matthew J. Burns, retired president of the former Paper Makers, now part of the Papermakers & Paperworkers, died in St. Peter's Hospital here following a minor operation. He was 79.

A native of Appleton, Wis., he joined Local 20 in Kaukauna, Wis., in 1903, became an international organizer in 1920 and the following year was elected secretary-treasurer, holding the office for six years. He was elected president in 1930, served until 1939, and was elected again in 1943, retiring after four years.

Surviving are two sons and a daughter. The UPP executive board attended the funeral here in a body.

Washington Labor Expands Staff

Seattle, Wash.—Pres. Sam Kinville of the Washington Council of County & City Employes has been appointed to the new post of government affairs specialist in the Washington State AFL-CIO.

At the same time Pres. Joe Davis of the state council announced the appointment of Harold G. Tipton, executive director of the Committee for Washington Tax Reform, as research director.

Kinville, a former social worker and a State, County & Municipal Employes staff member since 1957, will take over Aug. 1. Tipton, a member of Office & Professional Employes Local 8, has had a varied career in public service.

The new positions are part of "Project '66," a program of expanded operation adopted at the state council's 1966 convention by delegates representing some 200,000 AFL-CIO members.

Tobacco Union Sets Goals for New Contracts

Atlanta, Ga. — Contract goals highlighted by a substantial wage increase were spelled out by 100 delegates to a conference here called by the Tobacco Workers in anticipation of negotiations with five major employers.

The delegates, representing more than 22,000 members covered by the contracts, also voted to push for the elimination of wage inequities and the improvement of fringe benefits.

They expressed strong opposition to long-term agreements unless they have built-in safeguards to protect purchasing power.

International officers reported that the cigarette companies' profits during the past year contrasted sharply with the drop in purchasing power many of their workers had suffered because of shorter hours and rising living costs.

TWUI Vice Pres. Howard W. Vogt conducted the conference assisted by Vice Presidents Rene Rondou and Homer Cole.

Compulsion Splits Rail Bill Conferees

Editorial

Who Is The Aggressor?

For the last two months, irresponsible denunciations have marred the UN sessions on the crisis in the Middle East. Our country and to an even greater extent, Israel, have been the targets of bitter abuse and slanders by Soviet spokesmen and their Nasserite proxies. In such an atmosphere, the UN cannot serve as an instrument for fostering honorable and harmonious relations among its member states.

In these UN sessions, the technique of the Big Lie, fanatically applied by Hitler and Goebbels against the Jewish people more than thirty years ago, has been perfected by Federenko and Kosygin. Though the outrageous charges of Nazism against Israel and the nations friendly to it are reprehensible frauds, they are not surprising.

It is, however, shocking and distressing that the spokesmen of the democracies sat idly by in stony silence in the face of these diatribes. That such tolerance only encourages Communist arrogance and aggressivenesss was subsequently demonstrated in the tone and substance of Kosygin's remarks at the press conference before his departure for Moscow.

It is an old trick of the Communists to charge others with the crimes of which they themselves are guilty. We need but recall that the Soviet government hailed the Nazis as "blood brothers." In partnership with Hitler, the USSR butchered Poland and snuffed out the independence of the Baltic republics. The Kremlin congratulated Hitler on his capture of Paris, while denouncing the Allies for resisting Nazi aggression. Nor has the world forgotten that Communist Russia waged two cruel wars against the small heroic republic of Finland, while denouncing it as an aggressor against the Soviet Union.

And the world can never forgive the Soviet government for crushing by force of arms Hungarian democracy. For years, this same Soviet government—whose representatives now so hypocritically insist on instantaneous compliance with UN decisions—has flagrantly violated 13 UN resolutions for the withdrawal of Soviet troops and the restoration of Hungarian independence. Eighty-five thousand Soviet troops still occupy Hungary. In fact, the circulation of the UN reports and resolutions condemning the massive armed Soviet intervention in the 1956 Hungarian Revolution is still prohibited in all Communist countries on the pain of severe prison penalties.

The Kremlin and its Middle East clients have launched their assaults on truth and decency as a poisonous smokescreen for hiding the humiliating political and military defeat they have suffered at the hands of the overwhelmingly outnumbered Israeli forces, who were fighting for the very life of their country.

The Soviet government is primarily responsible for the dangerous crisis in the Middle East. It equipped Nasser and goaded him on to rally the reactionary Arab rulers for the destruction of Israel. Since the UN cease-fire, the USSR has resumed sowing the seeds of future war by stepping up its shipment of weapons for aggression to the discredited Nasser regime and its Syrian accomplice. The Soviet dictatorship should be sternly condemned and unequivocally repudiated for this war-breeding policy. In this situation, Israel deserves the commendation and support of all people devoted to peace and freedom.

Support Pres. Johnson's Middle East Program

We appeal to our government to mobilize all its influence and resources for UN support of Pres. Johnson's five point program. It provides a just and sound basis for a peace settlement and joint efforts by all the nations in the Middle East for the social and economic reconstruction they so urgently need. We urge our free trade union colleagues overseas to lose no time in having their governments give prompt and energetic support to this program.

We urge all AFL-CIO organizations and ICFTU affiliates to provide generous assistance to the Histadrut in its efforts to meet the vital tasks of social and economic reconstruction in peace and freedom. In view of its practical experience, Histadrut can make valuable contributions towards helping Arab and Israeli workers alike enhance their well-being, human dignity and self-respect.

We appeal to the workers of the Arab lands to help their countries strike out in a new direction and cooperate with the people of Israel in building a peaceful, free and prosperous Middle East.

Mill Shut to 'Chill' Unionism:

NLRB Reaffirms Darlington Order

By Eugene A. Kelly

Washington—The National Labor Relations Board in a 4-0 vote ruled that Deering Milliken & Co., Inc., closed a newly-unionized textile mill in Darlington, S. C., and discharged 500 workers for the purpose, at least in part, of discouraging union organization in its 26 other U. S. textile plants.

The board made new findings in the 11-year-old dispute involving the right of an employer to go out of business when his workers have chosen a union to represent them in collective bargaining.

The Supreme Court earlier had ruled that an employer has no right to close part of his business if his purpose is to "chill" unionism in other plants. It returned the case to the NLRB to determine if this was so at Darlington.

The new board ruling in effect reaffirms the NLRB's original decision of Oct. 18, 1962, that the mill closing was an unlawful discriminatory action to discourage union membership.

It also reaffirms the order directing Deering Milliken and Darlington as a single employer to pay the discharged employes lost wage from the date of their layoff until they are offered reinstatement or placed on preferential hiring lists in other mills of the giant textile chain.

Pres. William Pollock of the Textile Workers Union of America hailed the decision as confirming "in every respect" the charges brought by the union in behalf of the Darlington workers, 11 years ago.

"It proves that Deering Milliken, like most southern textile manufacturers, is actively engaged in a conspiracy to cancel out the rights of workers to join unions and share in the benefits of collective bargaining," Pollock added.

But above all, he observed the ruling points up "the glaring in-

Teacher Corps Voted Three-Year Extension

Congress voted to continue the Teacher Corps for at least three more years but to shift control of recruiting and training from the federal government to the states.

It was one of two "must" bills enacted before a June 30 deadline. The other was an increase in the national debt ceiling. If Congress had not acted before leaving for a 10-day recess, the Teacher Corps would have gone out of existence and the government would have been without money to pay its bills.

The Teacher Corps compromise, reluctantly agreed to by supporters of the program, ended two years of bitter controversy over the use of specially trained teams of novice and experienced teachers in poverty area schools that request their services.

Only token funds for the program had been appropriated in 1965 and 1966 and earlier this year the House voted to drop the Teacher Corps from the Elementary & Secondary School legislation.

Easily Passed

With the states' rights compromise winning over a sizable bloc of former opponents, the new lease on life for the Teacher Corps easily passed as part of a bill authorizing $910 million over three years for teacher training and recruiting programs. The Teacher Corps share of the funds, which still must be appropriated, is $33 million the first year, $46 million the second year and $56 million the third year. Passage of the bill before the June 30th end of the fiscal year also released some already appropriated funds to keep the program from grinding to a halt on July 1.

On the key House vote, a move to recommit the bill with instructions to delete the Teacher Corps section was beaten, 257-146.

The Senate, which has in past

Committee Appeals for Bargaining

A House-Senate conference committee on railroad strike legislation remained deadlocked after three meetings and put off further discussions until after July 10, when Congress returns from a 10-day vacation.

Six railroad shopcraft unions agreed to keep their voluntary no strike pledge in effect, although their 135,000 members have been legally free to strike since June 19.

The conference committee called on rail management and unions to use the interval to "negotiate with a view to settling their dispute through free collective bargaining."

Both the House and Senate bills provide for 90 days of further mediation and negotiation. But the similarity ends there.

The Senate bill would impose the terms recommended by the special mediation board if the two sides couldn't agree on a contract during the 90-day period.

The House had knocked out this compulsory arbitration feature by a 189-105 vote after the AFL-CIO and Pres. George Meany had denounced the Senate bill as a threat to all labor and to collective bargaining.

The chairmen of both the House and Senate conferees are personally opposed to the forced arbitration provision of the Senate bill. Both must be guided, however, by the decision of a majority of their committees. And while Rep. Harley O. Staggers (D-W.Va.) has the support of a majority of House conferees, Sen. Ralph W. Yarborough (D-Tex.) is in the minority among the Senate conferees.

Crux of the dispute is the insistence of the six shopcraft unions on a substantial narrowing of the

WHEN PUBLIC SCHOOL 100 in New York City planned its annual art festival, young Ricky Eddy, left, sent an invitation to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany. Although Meany couldn't make it, he sent AFL-CIO Regional Dir. Michael Mann, along with a U.S. Savings Bond to be awarded for overall excellence in school. Terry Tolan, the happy winner, accepts the bond from Mann.

NEWLY ELECTED OFFICERS of the Aluminum Workers, including new Pres. Henry Olsen (second from right, front row) repeat the oath of obligation from outgoing Pres. Eddie R. Stahl (left). Olsen, former executive assistant to Stahl, will serve the last two years of Stahl's term. Stahl was named president emeritus and collective bargaining consultant to his former aide.

Olsen Elected Head Of Aluminum Union

Evansville, Ind.—The Aluminum Workers elected a new president to succeed Eddie R. Stahl, resigning at the age of 61, and endorsed continuance of bargaining and organizing policies that officers called the most successful in AWIU history.

More than 135 delegates from 43 locals, voting at the biennial convention here, elected Henry S. Olsen president for the remaining two years of Stahl's term. They retained Stahl, the union's first president, as president emeritus and consultant to Olsen in major contract negotiations next year.

Stahl surprised the delegates on the opening day by announcing that he was presiding at his last convention. After 11 years as head of the international AWIU council and 14 years as president, Stahl said he hoped to devote more time to his farm at Columbia, Mo., after a lifetime with the union and as a worker in the Alcoa ore refining plant in East St. Louis, Ill.

Olsen has been an AWIU officer for 20 years—as director of organization, executive assistant to the president and as secretary-treasurer, all by appointment. He participated in his first election for high office, he said, when his name was placed in nomination for Stahl's job at the convention here.

The delegates returned Sec.-Treas. Patrick J. Reilly for another four-year term commencing Aug. 1. Other changes, confirmed by the executive board, will put Vernon Kelley in Olsen's post as assistant to the president and organizational director, and Lawrence Holley as research director succeeding Kelley.

Two new vice presidents were elected — John Robertson, Baton Rouge, La., and Harold Miller, Evansville, Ind.

By unanimous vote the convention approved U.S. policies in Viet Nam and authorized officers to send Pres. Johnson a message voicing "full support" for his efforts to keep armed forces in the field until an honorable peace can be negotiated.

The officers reported that the union sustained an average membership increase of about 20 percent since the 1965 convention, and added several thousand members in new and enlarged locals. Also the union won 15 representation elections for an average of 72 percent, they said.

Dir. Alexander Barkan of the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education made a strong plea for involvement of union members in political education, including registration and get-out-the-vote drives. "Quit voting your emotions and start voting the facts—the voting records of the candidates," he advised.

MDTA Training Boosts Earnings

Higher earnings have been achieved by 54 percent of the trainees completing Manpower Development & Training Act programs, Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz reported.

A study of 12,000 recent MDTA program graduates shows that 3,400 were earning at least 50 cents an hour more after training, according to Wirtz. In manufacturing industries, earnings rose from the $1.25 minimum wage to as much as $3 an hour.

The report, "Earnings Mobility of MDTA Trainees," shows that job opportunities for MDTA graduates lie principally in manufacturing (40 percent), the service industries (14 percent), wholesale and retail trade, 15 percent.

Patternmaking Craft Readies Contract Goals

Cleveland—The Pattern Makers League wrapped up its 25th convention here after setting a goal of "substantial" wage increases in 1967 negotiations in the auto and farm implement industries.

The 116 delegates called for increases that will preserve their traditional differential above the rates of other skilled trades in auto plants.

The 14,000 members of the union, one of the smallest in the AFL-CIO, make patterns from wood, plaster, plastic and metal for castings for machine tools, auto and aircraft engines and thousand of other items.

Pres. Gunnar Hallstrom, who was elected without opposition to another five-year term, said the average rate for pattern makers in the Great Lakes area, where many of the auto plants are located, is $5 per hour, exclusive of fringe benefits.

Five executive board members, including one from Canada, also were elected at the convention, which celebrated the 80th anniversary of the union.

Delegates approved a 35-cent increase in the per capita payment to the international, raising it from $2.25 a month to $2.60. The additional 35 cents will be used for general operations. Minimum local dues were raised from $3.50 a month to $5. Most locals already had been collecting $5 a month.

New President Heads Idaho Federation

McCall, Ida.—Robert W. Macfarlane of Pocatello won a runoff election and the presidency of the Idaho State AFL-CIO at the federation's convention here.

Macfarlane, a member of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, defeated Darrell Dorman, who had served as president of the State AFL-CIO for the past 10 years.

Dorman, a member of the Carpenters from Boise, had led on the first ballot—a three-man contest including Earl Stoddard, of the Idaho Falls local of the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers. When the field was reduced to two, however, Macfarlane came out ahead, 6,009 to 5,120.

William C. Hoop of the Woodworkers won re-election as vice president and Paul Mais of the Meat Cutters was unopposed for secretary-treasurer.

In the legislative area, delegates called for a state gross profits tax on business, protested national wage-hour law exemptions for potato processors, urged a state investigation of auto insurance abuses, called for appointment of qualified union members to state commissions and boards, and strongly opposed compulsory arbitration legislation in the railroad dispute.

Speakers addressing the three-day convention included Sen. Frank Church (D-Ida.), who held a question-and-answer session after his talk; Montana AFL-CIO Pres. Joe Crosswhite and Oregon AFL-CIO Pres. J. D. McDonald; regional AFL-CIO and COPE directors and state officials.

ACWA Welfare Benefits Pass $500 Million Mark

Montreal, Que.—Insurance and retirement programs of the Clothing Workers have distributed more than $500 million since their institution, Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky reported to the executive board at a meeting here.

Since the health and welfare fund was set up in 1940, Potofsky reported, $277.3 million has been paid out under more than 2 million claims.

The retirement program, started in 1947, has distributed $226.4 million to a total of 57,308 pensioners of whom 35,842 were on the rolls last Dec. 31. Nearly 2,000 retirees began to receive benefits last year, Potofsky said.

Soviet Bloc Rebuked:

Build Stronger ILO, Faupl Urges Nations

Geneva—U.S. Worker Delegate Rudolph Faupl urged at the Intl. Labor Organization conference here that the ILO be given the means "to pursue its time-honored goal of advancing human welfare and securing human freedom."

The appeal at the close of Faupl's major address at the three-week session of the United Nations specialized agency sparked loud applause from most of the worker, government and employer delegates of the 109 countries represented.

The unresponsive few were the Communist representatives. The leader of the AFL-CIO delegation had berated them for their "flagrant disregard of the letter, spirit and purpose" of the rules banning the use of the ILO as a political propaganda forum.

The Communists, Faupl recalled, had "unmistakably demonstrated a rather brazen insistence on operating under a code of their own making."

The Soviet bloc spokesmen had been repeatedly rebuked by Conference Pres. Getahun Tesemma of Ethiopia for what the U. S. worker delegate termed "abusive diatribes against member states of opposite political persuasion."

The issue raised was of "overriding importance not only to this conference but perhaps even to the salvation of the ILO," Faupl warned.

Discord Rapped

"Either," he continued "we accept the principle of law and order in the conduct of our affairs as civilized men and women and join hands here in the noblest of endeavors—the pursuit of human dignity for our fellow men—or we shall surely perish as an institution through the erosion of interminable dissension, discord and disruption."

Faupl said his ten years with the ILO made him more than ever convinced of the crucial role it played in "improving the lives of people all over the world." Yet most of mankind, he recalled, is "still caught in the mire of misery, deprivation and oppression."

The ILO's 119 member governments must be prevailed upon to provide the money the organization needs "to carry out its task of helping to eliminate poverty and enhance freedom," he stressed.

The mobilization of support for the ILO was listed by the conference's resolutions committee as one of the major objectives of the special events to be held in 1969 to mark the agency's 50th anniversary. The ILO was founded under the Versailles Treaty ending World War I with the aim of contributing to peace by promoting social justice.

As the conference entered its final stage, it completed the drafting of international standards to require that no worker may be asked to lift or carry a load that could "jeopardize his health or safety."

The maximum permissible weight for a man to carry was fixed at 121 pounds. The maximum, it was stipulated, should be "substantially less" for women and young workers. But the provisions also specify that "as far as possible" neither women nor young workers under 18 should be assigned to load-carrying jobs.

Another committee considering the question of how to deal with dissatisfaction on the job recommended that every worker be able to present his grievances without fear of reprisal. The worker should also be assured that his complaints will be examined under an "appropriate procedure," the report said.

A committee reviewing the ILO's role in aiding development of countries stressed the need to assure that such aid promotes "conditions of labor leading to social justice."

Philadelphian Named To Head LPIU Fund

New York—Financial Sec.-Treas. Frank H. Lee of Philadelphia Local 14L has been named administrator of the Lithographers & Photoengravers early retirement fund, which provides benefits at age 60 for members wishing to retire.

NLRB Replaces Jargon With Straight Talk Notice

Orders of the National Labor Relations Board should be written in "simple and readily understandable language," the board ruled in adopting a trial examiner's findings of unfair labor practices by a Nebraska paving contractor.

Three NLRB members showed what they meant by revising the customary legal jargon of an order finding Harry F. Berggren & Sons, Inc., fired five employes of the Scottsbluff firm to discourage an organizing attempt by Laborers' Local 880.

The traditional order has the management promising "we will not coercively interrogate or poll our employes with respect to their union desires" and "we will not discourage membership" in the union by firing employes or discriminating "in regard to their hire or tenure of employment" and agreeing to offer "immediate and full reinstatement to their former or substantially equivalent positions" to five fired pavers.

Members Gerald A. Brown, Howard Jenkins, Jr., and Sam Zagoria substituted this language suggested by the NLRB general counsel and gave the employer 20 days to sign it:

"After a trial in which both sides had the opportunity to present their evidence, the NLRB has found that we violated the law and has ordered us to post this notice and to keep our word about what we say in this notice.

"We violated the law when we had you vote on the union. We will not do this again. Since the board found that we violated the law when we fired Joseph Perez, Isidro and Pedro Rodriguez, Tiofilo Ramirez and Tony Lopez over the union, we will offer them their old jobs back and give them backpay.

"We will not fire anyone over the union again. You are all free to become or remain members of Local 880, and we won't punish you in any way if you do."

In Convention Action:

Seafarers Step Up Campaign For Strong Merchant Fleet

The Seafarers' 13th biennial convention voted to step up the union's vigorous campaign for a strong and healthy American merchant marine and to strengthen the SIU's internal structure through closer coordination of affiliates and an expanded organizing program.

Delegates from 20 SIU unions and departments re-elected Pres. Paul Hall and Sec.-Treas. Alexander Kerr for two-year terms by unanimous vote. They enlarged the executive board to 20 members by adding five new vice presidents, and changed the union constitution by increasing per capita payments $1 a month per member effective Oct. 1 for an expanded organizing and political action program.

The convention adopted in its entirety the American merchant marine and maritime policy enunciated by the AFL-CIO at its San Francisco convention for revitalization of the American shipping industry.

A major portion of convention time was devoted to a review of maritime policies, with more than 50 congressmen and several senators speaking on the subject. Many lauded Hall for his leadership in the battle for a strong merchant fleet and for an independent Maritime Administration.

Hall, who is president of the AFL-CIO Maritime Trades Dept., testified during the convention at merchant marine hearings before a Senate Commerce subcommittee headed by Sen. E. L. Bartlett (D-Alaska).

In his testimony Hall gave details of a 20-point program he submitted to the White House in March at the invitation of the President. The program calls for:

- Government assistance for construction of 60 new merchant ships a year for the next five years.
- Continuance of restraints against the building of any U.S.-flag vessels in foreign shipyards.
- Expansion of the preference given American ships in carrying government-sponsored cargo.
- Creation of an independent Maritime Administration to "effectively deal with the revitalization and expansion" of the merchant fleet.

The American-flag fleet has declined over the years from 5,000 ships to 900; from 40 percent of American-carried cargoes to 8 percent; from 80,000 merchant sailors to 50,000, the SIU reported in the convention resolution reaffirming Hall's position and that of the AFL-CIO.

"Today, when 98 percent of the men and materiel being moved to Viet Nam are being carried by ship," the convention related, "and when a strong American merchant marine offers a fruitful opportunity to improve our international balance of payments, the vital U.S. maritime industry continues to receive second-class treatment from our government."

The U.S.-flag fleet has declined because "budgetary expediencies, rather than national need, have been allowed to dominate our maritime programs," the resolution said.

The convention also urged protection for passengers and crews from hazardous conditions on "runaway" flag ships like the Yarmouth Castle, which sank with many lives lost; called for protection of the fishing industry and the "complete scrapping" of the concept that foreign-flag ships can be considered under "effective control" of the U.S.

The convention resolved that the SIU should continue to pursue its "vigorous and aggressive policies" and its dedication to the rebuilding of American shipping and shipbuilding to the "levels clearly required by our position as a major maritime nation."

In other action, the delegates voted full endorsement of the call of the Maritime Trades Dept. for a complete study and analysis of the Landrum-Griffin Act and the "broad investigatory powers" given the Labor Dept. to delve into union affairs.

Policy Backed

They reaffirmed SIU policy on the Middle East, particularly as to free transit of the seas and waterways by ships of all nations.

They voted support for Israel and urged SIU affiliates to buy $100,00 in Israel bonds. They backed the AFL-CIO position on the Middle East conflict and supported the Johnson Administration on Viet Nam.

The convention elected as new vice presidents Earl Shepard, New York; Lindsey Williams, New Orleans; Keith Terpe, San Juan, Puerto Rico; Everett C. Clark, Chicago, and Raoul Vincillione, Seattle. Joseph Leal, San Francisco, was elected to fill a vacancy.

Convention speakers included AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler and the heads of a number of federation departments.

Hall reported to the convention that the SIU is "constantly growing" but that a vigorous organizing program, especially in the industrial and inland boatmen's fields, would permit even greater growth. The union "no longer stands alone, as we did for many years," and is increasingly "an integral part of the labor movement," he declared.

Union Breaks Ground For Day Care Center

Baltimore—The Baltimore Regional Joint Board of the Clothing Workers broke ground at special ceremonies here for the first child day care center in the nation established by a labor union.

The day care facilities for the children of working mothers will be the first of three to be established by the joint board, it was announced by ACWA Vice Pres. Sam Nocella, joint board manager.

Similar centers will be erected in Hanover and Chambersburg, Pa., and the three will care for nearly 1,000 children, Nocella said.

The groundbreaking ceremony was in conjunction with an all-day conference on the problem of "Day Care in America." The program was coordinated with the Women's Bureau of the U.S. Dept. of Labor.

ACWA Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky congratulated the joint board for its pioneering step and predicted that the growing problem of child day care would eventually have to be solved by government assistance on a nationwide basis.

"The Amalgamated knew that government involvement was the final answer when we set up our first unemployment insurance plan for our members in 1923," Potofsky recalled. "As you all know, 12 years later unemployment insurance became part of the first Social Security Act.

"Today, as we inaugurate this first union-industry sponsored day care center, we have the same hope that government will assume the responsibility throughout the land of creating proper facilities for the young children of working mothers. They are the future of our country."

Nocella said the union had become aware of the need for day care centers a few years ago and had negotiated with the employers for an increase in the Health and Wefare Fund, earmarking it for centers where needed.

"Absenteeism was plaguing our industry," he told the conference. "We made a study of this problem and found that the reason most women stayed away from work was because of their children."

Industry, he said, encouraged women to come into the labor force in ever-increasing numbers but did very little to solve the problems.

"Through collective bargaining," Nocella said, "our union has made a start that will help the mothers who work in our industry and their children."

Mary Dublin Keyserling, director of the Women's Bureau, described a recent Labor Dept. study of mothers who worked 27 weeks or more in 1964. The study showed that 46 percent of the 12.3 million children under 14 left at home were cared for by some member of the family or someone hired to look after the child at home.

More Centers Needed

Mothers cared for another 28 percent either on the job or by working only during school hours. About 18 percent were cared for away from home in facilities of varying quality—only 2 percent in group care centers.

This study, she said, emphasizes the need for more child care centers, "and the Amalgamated is to be congratulated for once more leading the way."

Featured speaker at the luncheon that followed the groundbreaking was Assistant Sec. of Labor Esther Peterson, who had served many years with the union in its research department and as legislative representative.

IBEW Members Vote On Coast Shipyard Pact

San Francisco—Shipyard electricians in West Coast yards of the Pacific Coast Shipbuilders Association were preparing to vote on contract terms designed to end an eight-month-old dispute.

A three-member inquiry board appointed by Pres. Johnson said IBEW negotiators agreed tentatively to a settlement that includes pay increases of 15 cents an hour as of July 1, 1967, for 1,400 shipyard workers; an additional 5 cents an hour next Jan. 1, plus 4 cents an hour added to pensions and health and welfare funds.

In addition, the IBEW members will get a lump sum payment instead of free tools for a period retroactive to June 1, 1966.

The board announced through the Federal Mediation & Conciliation service that contracts of other shipyards crafts will be adjusted upward by Pacific Association yards. When contracts are reopened July 1, 1968, the IBEW will bargain jointly with the other crafts but will execute its own contract, the board said. Members were J. Keith Mann of the Stanford Law School, chairman; Paul Hanlon, Portland, Ore., attorney, and George E. Reedy, vice president of the Struthers Wells Corp. and former presidential assistant.

The electricians walked out last Nov. 3 after what they said was 16 months of frustrated effort to get satisfactory wage agreements. They returned under a Taft-Hartley injunction Mar. 2 and both sides to the dispute agreed May 3 to submit still unresolved issues to the board.

Both made "substantial concessions" which opened the way to collective bargaining, the board chairman said.

Previous settlement terms had been rejected by the shipyard IBEW locals on the ground they did not take into account current living costs. The locals are in San Francisco, Oakland and Pleasant Hill, Calif.; Portland, Ore.; Tacoma and Seattle, Wash.

Carney Heads USWA Community Services

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Appointment of John Carney as coordinator of community service activities of the Steelworkers was announced here by USWA Pres. I. W. Abel.

Carney, a representative of AFL-CIO Community Service Activities in New York since 1955, will serve in the USWA Education Dept. He is a former member of USWA Local 4519, Youngstown, O., and worked in the human relations field in Detroit and Youngstown before joining the former CIO-CSA staff in 1950.

SEAFARERS CONVENTION delegates hear AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany say that compulsory arbitration as proposed in the railroad shopcraft dispute would wipe out one of the main distinctions between a free labor movement and the totalitarian labor control of Hitler Germany and Communist Russia. MORE THAN 100 LABOR LEADERS from Western Missouri recently toured the Women's Job Corps Training Center at Excelsior Springs, giving Pres. John I. Three Democratic representatives also made the trip —Richard Bolling, William Hull and William J. Randall.

Musicians' Delegates Focus On Union Growth, Services

By Gervase N. Love

Miami Beach—A vivid picture of a union growing in strength and services to its members was painted by Pres. Herman D. Kenin at the opening session of the Musicians' 70th convention.

To more than 1,000 delegates from nearly 600 locals in the United States and Canada, Kenin and Sec.-Treas. Stanley Ballard reported the organization of 6,000 members in the past year, with the total climbing to 278,500, and progress in every part of the music field.

Kenin, an AFL-CIO vice president, cited additional benefits for members in new contracts with radio and television networks, expansion of the union-sponsored Congress of Strings public service scholarship program, international union cooperation with locals in winning better contracts with symphony orchestras, and successful defense against the efforts of some orchestra leaders to weaken the protections the union has built up for its members.

He noted that the dissidents recently filed another test of AFM laws and practices in U.S. District Court in Chicago and charged that such litigation "is a not-so-polite form of blackmail."

"It is aimed not at establising legal principles," he declared, "but is an effort to impose a minority will on this federation. This tactic—call it juvenile arrogance or contemptuous cynicism—will not work. . . .

"We will comply with the law; we will listen to requests; we will redress grievances. But we will resist bombast, bludgeoning, bullying and blackmail."

Kenin voiced pride in the creation, growth and performance under his administration of the union's pension fund and gave the convention some statistics which he declared "make sweet music" to musicians' ears.

Millions Invested

He said that 30 locals with 53,000 members enjoyed coverage as of Apr. 1, and that the fund owns investments worth $21.5 million which earned $723,000 in the last fiscal year. Employer contributions amounted to more than $4.5 million in the year ending with March. More than 500 awards have been made, he said, and 66 musicians are receiving monthly pension checks.

The delegates, taking note of the union's sound financial position, voted to increase the salaries of Kenin and Ballard by $10,000 each to $45,000 and $35,000 a year, respectively. Salaries of other officers and executives board members, who serve part time, were hiked from $5,000 to $8,000.

Kenin and Ballard were re-elected without opposition. J. Alan Wood of Toronto Local 149, who has been executive officer for Canada, was unanimously elected to fill the newly-created post of vice president for Canada.

Balloting was set for later in the convention on a contest for the vice presidency, with William A. Seeman of Perth Amboy, N.J., Local 373 challenging the incumbent, Hal Davis of Pittsburgh, Pa., Local 60-471. Also to be elected were five executive board members from among 11 candidates.

Former Vice Pres. William J. Harris of Dallas, Tex., Local 147, who retired recently, was elected vice president-emeritus for life.

Cash Payment

The convention unanimously passed a resolution requiring that scales in locals not under the pension plan include a cash payment to the musician in lieu of the payment the employer would otherwise make to the pension fund.

Other resolutions made minor changes in the union constitution and bylaws.

Former Pres. James C. Petrillo, now directing the AFM Civil Rights Dept., told the delegates that the number of dual white and Negro locals has been cut from 38 to 18 in the 30 months the merger program has been under way, "without demand, without threats but with patience."

Dr. Harold Arberg, Musicians education specialist for the U.S. Office of Education, discussed music education and the union member's role under the Elementary & Secondary education act of 1965 and outlined the opportunities for professional musicians made available in education through funds granted under the act. He touched off a barrage of questions from the floor, with many delegates critical of the uncertainty of standards for projects and of delays in acting on them.

Meany Message

In a message to the convention, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany declared the union does more than protect and advance the well-being of its members.

"It not only brings the precious gift of music to the young, to the ill, to men in uniform around the world and to thousands of others," he added. "It also exerts a strong and effective influence in the affairs of the AFL-CIO and in the social progress of this nation."

Other speakers included Pres. Edmund P. Tobin of the Union Labor Life Insurance Co., Edward Halbert of the Treasury Dept., who presented a Minute Man award to Kenin in recognition of the union's services to the Treasury; Mayor Chuck Hall of Dade County and City Councilman Leonard O. Weinstein of Miami Beach.

Mediators Press Talks In RCA, Rubber Strikes

Major strikes in the rubber and electrical industries continued as the AFL-CIO News went to press, with negotiators and federal mediators meeting in efforts to break the contract deadlocks.

Separate negotiations were resumed between the Big Five rubber companies and the United Rubber Workers after 30 hours of joint bargaining in Pittsburgh under the eyes of Federal Mediation Dir. William E. Simkin failed to bring an agreement.

Fifty-four thousand URW members are out on strike—at Firestone, Uniroyal and Goodrich since Apr. 20, and at two General Tire plants since June 14. Union members are continuing work on a day-to-day basis at the fifth big company, Goodyear.

A big, interest-free loan by the Auto Workers replenished the URW's strike fund, the union announced. Benefits, initially $25 a week, had been dropped to $15 in recent weeks.

In another major dispute, intensive negotiations were under way in Washington, D.C., between the Radio Corp. of America and the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, which has had nearly 30,000 members out at nine RCA plants since June 5. It was the first IBEW strike against RCA in 30 years of bargaining.

Two unions meanwhile reached contract settlements at other RCA plants.

Members of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers at 12 RCA locations ratified a contract settlement covering 20,000 workers by a margin greater than 4-1. The IUE members, whose contracts had a different expiration date, had not been on strike.

The union said the combination of wage, hospital and pension improvements added up to a first-year package of 7 percent, with an additional 4.5 percent the second year and 4 percent the final year of the contract.

Some 1,300 members of Technical Engineers Local 241 at Camden, N.J., and two nearby RCA facilities ratified a contract reached after a strike of less than 7 hours. The settlement included stronger job security language which was a major goal of the union.

Painters' Volunteers Aid Camp for Palsy Victims

Chicago — Some 225 journeyman members and apprentices of locals affiliated with Painters District Council 14 donated several hundred hours of their own time to redecorate Shady Oaks, summer camp near Lockport, Ill., for children suffering from cerebral palsy.

The volunteers included many union officers. The paint and equipment were donated by several employers with union contracts.

Laborers' Pact Covers New D. C. Transit Plan

A contract covering wages and safe working conditions for construction of a new rapid rail transit system in Washington has been signed by the Laborers' District Council after a year of bargaining with the Construction Contractors Council and the Maryland, Virginia & District of Columbia Heavy Contractors Association.

The project will cost about $400 million and involve jobs for some 600 men. The agreement is aimed at permitting maximum production with minimum delays or work stoppage, and with the least amount of inconvenience to the public, according to Pres. Francis L. Greenfield, Sec.-Treas. Robert L. Glenn and Business Mgr. Ray S. Sutherland of the district council.

The new system will be composed of 13.3 miles of subway structure and 12.6 miles of surface lines, the union and the employers said in a joint announcement.

The subway section will include 7.7 miles of tunnel and 5.6 miles of cut and cover box structure, they said, while the above-ground sector will be made up of 1.4 miles of aerial structure, 3.7 miles of grade track and 7.5 miles of at-grade structure on existing railroad right-of-way.

The union and employers were particularly concerned with providing safe conditions in the tunnel work, under both compressed and free air. Work under compressed air has always been considered dangerous, and the agreement was reached after considering the results of recent research.

It spells out such things as economical shift times, adequate decompression periods, proper work periods under compressed air, standards for operating equipment under compressed air, and other safety factors.

Labor Hits Bill to Relax Federal Utility Controls

The AFL-CIO opposed a special interest bill that would weaken the regulatory authority of the Federal Power Commission by exempting electric utilities indirectly receiving power across state lines.

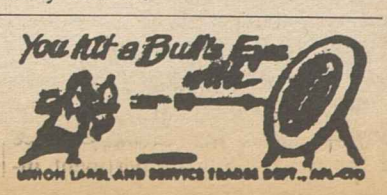
Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller urged the Senate Commerce Committee to reject a bill introduced by the two Florida senators following a ruling of the FPC that the Florida Power & Light and Tampa Electric Companies are subject to federal regulation of their wholesale rate charges.

The FPC ruling, which is being challenged in court, held that a utility is subject to regulation even if its activities are completely within a single state if it is hooked up with another utility in the same state which receives power across state lines.

Biemiller, whose testimony was presented by Legislative Rep. James F. Doherty and George Taylor of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research, said the bill would turn the clock back before 1935, when the Wheeler-Rayburn Act provided for federal regulation of interstate electric utilities.

The AFL-CIO termed the Smathers-Holland bill "simply the latest in a series of attempts made by one or more segments of the private electric utility industry to escape proper regulation. It can best be described as retrogressive, special interest legislation."

One effect, the federation said, would be to perpetuate high rates to the electric consumer in spite of the fact that technological advances are reducing the costs of electric power and should bring about rate decreases.



Hits Mill Closing:

Labor Board Affirms Darlington Ruling

adequacies" of present labor laws.

"The Darlington workers have had to wait 11 years for some semblance of justice," he noted. "Even now they must submit to further delays while the courts act on this long over-due decision. This outrageous situation clearly demonstrates the urgent need for congressional action to provide new and more effective remedies for the protection of American workers."

The NLRB found that when the TWUA won a 1956 election at the first Deering Milliken mill in South Carolina to be organized in a dozen years, the employer seized the opportunity to create "a graphic example of the hazards of unionism."

The decision was signed by Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and members John H. Fanning, Gerald A. Brown and Sam Zagoria. Member Howard Jenkins, Jr. did not participate.

The board cited the Supreme Court ruling in the Darlington case that an employer could lawfully close his business entirely for any reason, but that closing part of a business may be unlawful discrimination if "motivated by a purpose to chill unionism in any of the remaining plants of the single employer and the employer may reasonably have foreseen that such closing will likely have that effect."

"We find in conclusion," the NLRB said, "that such a chilling purpose, at least in part, lay behind the decision to close the Darlington mill." The board found, in reaching its conclusion, that:

- Those in control of Darlington, especially Roger Milliken, "had other business interests" sufficiently substantial to give promise of their reaping benefits "from the discouragement of unionization in those businesses."
- The relationship of the persons who closed Darlington to the other businesses made it "realistically foreseeable" that other employes would fear that their mills also would be closed if they went union.
- The "persons exercising control over Darlington did in fact foresee and intend this effect, and that a number of these employes were, in all likelihood, so affected."

The board related in its review of the facts that six days after Darlington cotton mill employes voted for TWUA, company directors headed by Milliken "hastily met" and "decided to close the plant and auction its machinery."

Considering evidence presented at four examiners' hearings, the 1962 proceedings of the NLRB, and more than four years of court proceedings since then, the board cited these points:

- In two public speeches by Milliken prior to the union organizing campaign, he warned of impending union efforts and urged South Carolina officials and businessmen to "avert unionism at all costs."
- Milliken spent $400,000 to improve the Darlington mill in the first eight months of 1956 and no serious consideration had been given to closing the mill until the employes went union. Less than a week later the directors decided to shut down.
- Stockholders met Oct. 17, 1956, and with Milliken casting the determinative vote ratified the closing, though 83 percent of Darlington employes had meanwhile signed a petition "disavowing" the union. The board quoted Milliken as having said "as long as there are 17 percent of the hard core crowd here, I refuse to run the mill."
- Milliken sent a packet of papers to officials of all his other mills after the stockholders' meeting. One was an editorial from a trade publication describing the Milliken "tradition" of closing unionized plants. Another was a Milliken memorandum urging company officials to make sure that community leaders "understand and are sympathetic to what you are trying to do."
- Workers at other Milliken mills testified that the common opinion of many employes was that their mills would be closed if they moved to organize.

Of Milliken's messages to his mills, the board declared that "clearly implicit in the material about plant closing was a simple message: if your local mill goes union it will, like Darlington, be closed down."

The Milliken firm has 10 days to notify the NLRB whether it will comply with the order or fight it in the courts.

UNION TEACHERS turned out 5,000 strong at a demonstration rally in New York's City Hall Park for better teaching conditions and "more effective schools." Pres. Albert Shanker of AFT Local 2 told the rally that more than 20,000 teachers signed statements promising to resign from their jobs unless a new contract is negotiated before schools open in September. More than 40,000 of the public school system's 57,000 employes will sign, Shanker predicted.

IUD Using Computers to Keep Tab On Corporation Mergers, Contracts

Coordinated bargaining and data processing are new tools that AFL-CIO unions are using successfully to keep up with the new diversified structure of American corporations, the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. reported at a two-day bargaining conference in Washington, D.C.

Corporations are merging and diversifying so rapidly that 75 percent of all major manufacturing company assets may be in the hands of 200 U.S. corporations by 1975, IUD Executive Dir. Jack Conway told 150 delegates from affiliated unions.

77 Committees

To meet the need for information, the IUD has helped set up 77 coordinated bargaining committees in industries where more than one union has bargaining rights.

It has also established a data center which, with the help of a computer service firm, provides up-to-date computerized information on union contracts, corporation policies and the locations of organized and unorganized plants, along with a history of Labor Board election results since 1950.

The department and its affiliates have "made substantial progress in perfecting the techniques of coordinated bargaining" but the new tools will not solve all problems or provide a panacea for union bargainers, Conway warned. The IUD is not a certified bargaining agent and its effectiveness depends on the joint efforts of all the unions involved, said Conway, who presided at the opening session.

The conference featured workshops on bargaining problems; reports on coordinated bargaining at General Electric Co. by Pres. Paul Jennings of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers and David Lasser, IUE director of economics and collective bargaining; and at Union Carbide Co. by Vice Pres. Elwood Swisher of the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers and District Dir. James P. Griffin of the Steelworkers.

Other conference reports were made by IUD Research Dir. Woodrow Ginsburg and Legal Counsel Leonard Lesser.

Member Sam Zagoria of the National Labor Relation Board urged conferees at a noon luncheon to help solve the problems of city workers.

The conference saw demonstrations of new equipment and heard that the IUD data center has contract information covering 3.6 million workers in more than 4,000 separate plant locations.

Older corporations are essentially the same as they were 30 years ago but many new corporations are conglomerates, speakers reported.

One example cited was Textron Inc., started in 1928 as the Franklin Rayon Corp., strictly a textile firm.

By 1956 it had 16,000 workers in 62 plants and profits of $6.5 million.

Last year Textron had 50,000 employes in 134 plants, and profits of $43 million from 28 separate companies in aerospace, industrial products, consumer goods and metal products fields, reports showed.

IUE Board Acts to Oust Two District 3 Officers

The executive board of the Electrical Radio & Machine Workers has initiated action to oust two officers of the union's New Jersey-New York district held by the board to "have put the union's funds to use for their personal benefit."

The board voted 29 to 3 to endorse the report of a committee named to investigate the financial affairs of District 3. The committee's report found that District Pres. Milton Weihrauch and District Treas. Joseph Iozzi "violated the IUE Code of Ethical Practices which provides for strict financial accounting and control of the union's funds."

The committee, appointed May 8 by IUE Pres. Paul Jennings, reported to the board after a 7-week investigation that included interviews with bank officers, local union officers and the District auditor. It noted that Weihrauch and Iozzi had declined to testify.

The committee said its investigation was hampered by "the fact that all of the records for almost eight years had disappeared. . . ."

"While no one will ever know to what extent the dissappearance of the records buried pertinent information," the report said. "the available records reveal a story of recklessness, waste and dissipation of union funds by two district officers," referring to Weihrauch and Iozzi.

The committee recommended, and the board directed, these steps "to protect whatever remains of the district funds and the interests of the membership":

- Notice to the bonding company of a claim on behalf of the district.
- Resignation of the district president and treasurer.
- Recall action by local unions in District 3 under the IUE Constitution if the two officers fail to resign.
- Steps by the District Council to prevent further access to the funds by the district president and treasurer.

Board Rejects Union Carbide Lockout Rule

The National Labor Relations Board, overruling a previous finding by a trial examiner, dismissed a union complaint that the Union Carbide Corp. illegally locked out 1,200 members of the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers in July 1966.

Examiner George J. Bott had recommended last October that the NLRB uphold a charge that the company insisted "to the point of impasse" on changes in pension and health plans. Three board members ruled that the employes were locked out after impasse was reached on other issues, and that Carbide used "permissible pressure" in support of its legitimate bargaining position.

The dispute has since been settled.

Screen Actors Reach New TV Film Pact

Hollywood, Calif.—The Screen Actors Guild has reached agreement with the Association of Motion Picture Television Producers and the three major television networks on a new contract covering acting work in television entertainment films. The four-year agreement was announced jointly by Association Executive Vice Pres. Charles S. Boren and SAG Executive Sec. John L. Dales, national executive secretary of the Guild. Effective date of the agreement is July 1.

Highlights of the agreement, effective July 1, include:

- An increase in minimum rates of 12 percent for the first two years, rising to 20 percent for the second two years. A day player who received the minimum rate of $100 under the old contract will receive $112 until July 1, 1969, and $120 thereafter.
- Residual payments on the second through the sixth runs of a program, totalling 165 percent of minimum, are automatically increased by 12 percent immediately and 8 percent in two years. Residuals also are extended to cover four additional runs, the seventh through the tenth, each at 15 percent of the minimum.
- An increase in the total percentage payable under the foreign rerun residual formula from 25 to 35 percent of the new minimums.
- The producers' contribution to pension and health and welfare funds increased from 5 to 6.5 percent of the salary.
- All new minimums and increased pension and health and welfare payments apply also to the Guild-Producer Theatrical contract, which is extended for a two-year period to expire simultaneously with the new television contract. New minimums in the theatrical contract take effect April 1, 1968. The increase in health and welfare payments starts July 1, 1967.

A number of other improvements in the contract were negotiated in such areas as overtime, trailers, exclusivity, options, policing of residuals and safety provisions.

Agreement was reached four days before the expiration of the old contract, June 30. Active negotiations began June 5, with the SAG bargaining again headed by Dales and Pres. Charlton Heston.

The union noted that this was the first time since the advent of television that it was able to negotiate a new TV contract without taking a strike vote.

A Page from the Past

WHAT HAS BEEN HAPPENING to farm workers in the Rio Grande Valley is a newly-printed page from a half-forgotten past—a black past which America renounced more than 30 years ago.

Here is a struggle that evokes grim memories to those of the older generation; memories of workers desperately struggling to organize against the unbridled opposition of their employers, the community and those who command the police.

The farm-owners in this Texas valley may not, in fact, be more bitterly opposed to union organization of their workers than many employers in other fields. The commander of the Texas Rangers may not be more hostile to union members (or to Mexican-Americans) than many of his counterparts elsewhere. The difference is this: These other employers and these other police officials must restrain their anti-union zeal to the limits established by federal law.

But farm workers are outside the law. They are not even given the protection of the National Labor Relations Act, limited as that may be. Their right to organize and to bargain collectively is not recognized by statute.

They are still in the jungle, and they must wage jungle warfare to establish a little clearing in which to build some measure of shelter from its perils.

There is no proper place in American society for jungle law. Farm workers should and must have the same rights as other workers.

The exclusion of farm labor from the labor relations law was opposed by unions from the start, and the AFL-CIO is leading a drive to reverse this old injustice. The events in Texas have dramatized the need—a need Congress should promptly meet.

The Darlington Autopsy

MANY YEARS AGO a union leader, describing the pace of justice in labor board complaints, told a Senate committee: "In these cases the NLRB does not hold hearings; it conducts autopsies."

The words are painfully relevant to this week's unanimous decision by the board that Deering Milliken Inc. had indeed closed its Darlington, S.C., unit after the 500 workers there voted for union representation in order to discourage union organization at its 26 other plants.

In accordance with practice, the board directed that back pay (less earnings) be given to the workers from the time the mill was closed until they are hired, or placed on preferential hiring lists, at other Deering Milliken units.

As a legal victory this is welcome, even though it will undoubtedly have another run through the courts. For the workers directly involved, its immediate value is at best dubious.

The Darlington mill was closed in October 1956, nearly 11 years ago. The mill was the only substantial source of employment in the town. What has happened to the 500 workers and their families? Where are they now? Over all these years, of what use to them, in their own lives, was the fact that by legal standards they were absolutely right?

An ancient adage of the legal profession is "justice delayed is justice denied." Darlington has earned a place among the classic proofs.

If the rights and the livelihood of workers are to enjoy the meaningful protection contemplated by the National Labor Relations Act, adequate remedies must be swiftly applied when violations occur. Autopsies are not enough.

Appeals Court Ruling:

FCC 'Fairness Doctrine' Held Safeguard of Free Speech Right

The following is excerpted from the opinion delivered by Judge Edward Allen Tamm of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia upholding the constitutionality of the Federal Communications Commission's "fairness doctrine" against a challenge brought by a Pennsylvania radio station.

I FIND in the fairness doctrine a vehicle completely legal in its origin which implements by the use of modern technology the "free and general discussion of public matters (which) seems absolutely essential for an intelligent exercise of their rights as citizens."

I observe, first of all, that petitioners are not prohibited from broadcasting any program which petitioners think suitable. Moreover, petitioners are not furnished with a mandatory program format, nor does the doctrine define which, if any, controversial issues are to be the subject of broadcasting. The latitude of petitioners' operation of their station insofar as programming is concerned is limited only by petitioners' discretion and good faith judgment.

The fairness doctrine impact arises, then, when in petitioners' exercise of their own judgment, they broadcast a program dealing with controversial issues of public importance.

After having independently selected the controversial issue and having selected the spokesman for the presentation of the issue in accord with their unrestricted programming, the doctrine, rather than limiting the petitioners' right of free speech, recognizes and enforces the free speech right of the victim of any personal attack made during the broadcast.

Such an attack, the doctrine directs, necessitates the petitioners' affording the maligned victim an opportunity to respond. Does such an obligation arising under these conditions deprive petitioners of any right guaranteed by the first amendment? I think not.

The American people own the broadcast frequencies. Speaking through their elected representatives in Congress, they have established a program of licensing the temporary use of allocated frequencies to broadcasters who meet the standards established by Congress.

The broadcasters, then, acquire no ownership of assigned channels but are authorized to use them for the service of the public interest, convenience, or necessity. In keeping with the public interest, I agree with the Commission that:

"It would be inconsistent . . . to assert that, while it is the purpose of the act to maintain the control of the United States over radio channels, but free from any regulation or condition which interferes with the right of free speech, nevertheless persons who are granted limited rights to be licensees of radio stations . . . may themselves make radio unavailable as a medium of free speech."

My conclusion in this regard is uninfluenced by petitioners' contention that the Commission in some manner has an obligation to first ascertain whether the complaint . . . was "in fact true or false." There is, of course, no statutory requirement for such a finding. Additionally, it is my view that any attempt by the Commission to make factual determinations of truth or falsity in controversial issues of public interest would constitute an illegal exercise of a non-existent authority. The basic concept of free speech is unfettered by any requirement that it be exercised only by those with a "right" viewpoint.

I readily agree that the compulsory granting of free time may, and probably does, impose a burden on the licensees. This burden, however, is not an unreasonable one. The broadcasters' licenses are issued upon a finding by the commission that the public interest will be served thereby, and thus the licensees accept the responsibility of discharging what is in actuality their public trust. There remains to the licensee the right, in the exercise of good faith discretion, of utilizing a paying spokesman to respond to a personal attack if one is available. But:

". . . (W)here the licensee has chosen to broadcast a sponsored program which for the first time presents one side of a controversial issue, has not presented (and does not plan to present) contrasting viewpoints in other programming, and has been unable to obtain paid sponsorship for the appropriate presentation of the contrasting viewpoint or viewpoints, he cannot reject a presentation otherwise suitable to the licensee—and thus leave the public uninformed—on the ground that he cannot obtain paid sponsorship for that presentation."

I conclude that there is no abridgement of petitioners' rights in the application of the fairness doctrine to their activities in this case.

Educational Needs Stressed:

Spanish-Surnamed Poor Seen Confronting Special Problems

The following is excerpted from an article in the June issue of The American Federationist—"Hope and Promise: Americans of Spanish Surname," by Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez (D-Tex.).

IF YOU ARE HUNGRY, hope itself is a distant thing; and if you are defeated, promises of better things to come ring empty. If yours is a world of dirt floors and tin roofs, tomorrow holds no promises and your greatest ambition is to live through today. For 5 million Americans of Spanish surname, all too many live in such a world, far removed from the American dream.

One of the biggest and least known groups of poor people is concentrated in the Southwest. Only one-sixth of the population of this country lives in the five southwestern states, but one-fourth of America's poor live there. In Texas alone, there are 63 counties—a quarter of the state's total—where half the people live on incomes of less than $3,000 a year.

In Bexar County, which I represent in Congress, more than a fourth of the population is classified as poor; 115,000 people there live in substandard housing. The overwhelming number of these ill-housed, ill-clad, ill-fed people are of Spanish surname.

Seventy percent of the unemployed slumdwellers of San Antonio in November of 1966 did not have a high school education. Forty-eight percent of them did not even have an eighth grade education. And 6.5 percent of the unemployed in the slums never went to school at all.

These people know too well what their handicaps are; they know that even when opportunity comes along they do not have the education or the skills to take advantage of it. They need help and they usually want it. They have not necessarily failed society; society may have failed them.

In the first place, there is the problem of definition. There is not even a generally accepted name for this minority group. I prefer to think of the group as Americans of Spanish surname because, after all, they are Americans and they all have Spanish surnames.

The Spanish-surnamed American group has problems in setting forth cogent goals, just as it does in finding an all-inclusive label. The group possesses no single program, no national goals and has not so far been able to coalesce into a single, meaningful whole, capable of speaking with a united voice. There is no national organization of Spanish-surnamed Americans that could be considered comparable to the NAACP.

Here is a minority drawn between the powerful forces of conflict, the one demanding a preservation of its art, music, culture, language, architecture and dress; and the other telling it to get Anglicized or lose out in the race of life.

The most crucial issue confronting any minority group is whether it should attempt to preserve itself as a cohesive and well-defined culture, or whether it should disband and its members assimilate into the majority, losing their cultural identity. Either a minority lives together, speaks its own language, maintains its own way of life, or it must break up and be absorbed into the community at large. In the case of the Spanish-surnamed American minority, there has been no decision.

The choice facing the Spanish-surnamed American is not an easy one and it is only natural that he is seeking some middle way between maintaining a cultural entity that binds him to remaining outside the pale and rejecting everything in the hope of finding success in a hostile world.

Educators especially must be aware of the problems facing the Spanish-surnamed. For it is the schools which are the first front in the war on poverty. It is the schools which turn out men and women who are either equipped for life or not.

In the case of the Spanish-surnamed, the schools have been failing. Instead of leaving school well-equipped to face life, the Spanish-surnamed have been leaving school in droves because it offers nothing to meet their needs and these children have been finding that the dubious choice of no education at all is better than a meaningless one.

EDUCATORS, happily, are beginning to understand this and do something about it.

Up until now, though, the sad fact is that the schools have been losing the promise of the Spanish-surnamed child somewhere between the first grade and high school graduation; and all too many do not stay around long enough to finish high school because of it.

I do not believe that it is the place of the schools to force a choice of cultures on children or suppress their native heritage. Great injury is done whenever this is attempted and we know this all too well. In our history, the schools have ignored the achievements of the Negro and have presented him as a problem and a blight on society while ignoring his considerable achievements and contributions. Belatedly, this is changing. It is a mistake which should not be repeated with the Spanish-surnamed American, for he also has his heroes and he also has played a part in our history that cannot be overlooked.

I believe the schools must make an effort to capitalize on the special talents and attributes of the Spanish-surnamed American. This will make his education meaningful and will do more than anything else to help him realize his full potential. His special educational problems need to be solved and his assets refined. After all of this is done, he will be ready to decide which way to go and what life to lead.

I believe that, more than anything else, improved educational opportunity will help the Spanish-surnamed American find his place in society and make his best contribution to it. From this will flow hope, ambition and the skill to realize it. Without better education, hopes kindled by the war on poverty will be shortlived and the promises made can never be turned into realities.

Fees Called 'Unconscionable':

High Medical Costs Held Bar To Needed Treatment for Many

HIGH MEDICAL COSTS prevent too many Americans from getting the full benefit of the nation's ability to detect and treat disease, an AFL-CIO spokesman said.

"Doctors' fees have gone up unconscionably," Leo Perlis, director of AFL-CIO Community Services Activities, charged on the network radio interview, Labor News Conference. "Doctors and organized medical people need to take into consideration that they are not in business—that they are out to practice medicine—and that they ought to live up to their own ethical standards," he said.

Perlis said that a national health insurance system, coupled with expanded group practice facilities, would be the best long-run solution to the problem. He said that many of those trying to improve the quality and availability of community-level medical services "are convinced that under the present system, voluntary medical care simply does not really work."

What is needed, he declared, is a system that will make it possible for physicians to "provide quality medical care at reasonable costs on a comprehensive basis."

Perlis noted that community action to overcome community health problems was the main theme of the 1967 AFL-CIO National Conference on Community Services last April. One such problem is alcoholism, he said, "one of the major diseases in this country—perhaps fourth or fifth . . . after mental illness, cancer and heart."

BOTH UNIONS and employers have a responsibility to help individual alcoholics get proper treatment for their disease by guiding them to clinics and organizations such as Alcoholics Anonymous, he said.

He suggested that "union-management committees that are outside the controversial arena of collective bargaining can help the alcoholic rehabilitate himself" and "again become a useful member of society and a useful worker in the plant."

Reporters questioning Perlis on the AFL-CIO produced public affairs program, broadcast Tuesdays at 7:35 p.m., EDT, on the Mutual Radio Network, were Alan Adams of Business Week magazine and Harry Conn of Press Associates, Inc.

Doctors Air Complaints:

'Hucksters' Assailed In Drug Price Probe

MANY DOCTORS have their complaints about the methods used by drug houses to push brand name products and are adding their testimony to that given by consumers before the Senate Small Business Committee investigating high prices in the drug industry.

Chief object of their wrath is the drug house advance man who plies them with free samples, literature and sometimes pre-written prescription pads all aimed at pushing the salesman's product.

Dr. Richard Burack, a Harvard Medical School professor who has recently written a book on drugs, said the pharmaceutical houses spend as much as $800 million a year on about 200,000 prescribing doctors. This means, he added, "that something in the range of three or four thousand dollars a year is spent on each individual doctor in an effort to influence his prescribing habits."

Burack cited Food & Drug Administration orders that have pulled some products off the market and caused firms to send "Dear Doctor" letters to previously circularized physicians correcting advertising that falsely or erroneously stated side-effects of medication.

Another physician, Dr. Melvin D. Small of Georgetown University Medical School, told how the advance man for the pharmaceutical company ballyhoos his product:

"He masquerades as an educator . . . he does not sell directly. He hopes to ingratiate himself to the physician by providing him with 'scientific information,' albeit somewhat biased, regarding the products of his employer, by leaving samples of his product . . . He will graciously offer to fill the physician's family needs with his employer's product . . . If the physician is busy, as most are, and gets a thumbnail resume of the new product, purportedly better than other similar products he has used, he may well try it. He has the starter samples available so that he can somewhat reduce the cost of the drug to the patient, not to mention the fact that by handing out these samples he gains further good will from the patient, and a prescription for the drug is a natural by-product."

Both doctors attacked the "Physician's Desk Reference," which Small called "nothing but a compendium of advertising . . ." The reference book contains a listing of drugs, including an alphabetical listing by drug brand names. It is given as a "gift" to practicing physicians.

The book, although it includes the generic names of drugs, does not index them in that manner nor does it give an indication as to the frequency of undesirable side effects, said the doctors.

UNION PHARMACISTS in New York City, members of Local 1199 of the Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Union, cast additional light on the subject in the June issue of their magazine.

Pharmacists, they say, have become the tools of the big manufacturers. The pharmacist "must dispense the trade-named product if the doctor prescribes it that way. Failure to follow the doctor's prescription can get the pharmacist cited for illegal substitution."

At one time, says the union's vice president, George Glotzer, the pharmacist was only forbidden to substitute a different chemical for one prescribed by the doctor, but the big drug producers have lobbied successfully for an interpretation that means a pharmacist cannot substitute an identical chemical unless it carries the brand name used by the doctor.

Local 1199 also reports on a recent debate between FDA Commissioner James L. Goddard and a Boston University doctor who blamed "government restrictions" for a reduction in the number of new drugs approved by the FDA for marketing.

The union pharmacist noted that this was not necessarily bad; that although fewer drugs reach the pharmacist they are "safer and more effective."

"What was exploited as a scientific explosion of wonder drugs was essentially a superior creativity in the promotional fabrications of the drug hucksters," said the union. (PAI)

NATIONAL HEALTH INSURANCE, coupled with expanded group practice facilities, would be the best long-run solution to the problem of providing comprehensive, quality medical care at reasonable cost to more Americans, AFL-CIO Community Services Dir. Leo Perlis (center) said on Labor News Conference. He was questioned by Harry Conn (left) of Press Associates, Inc., and Alan Adams of Business Week magazine on the public service interview, heard weekly on Mutual radio.

How to Buy:

Summer Food Prices Threaten To Reach All-Time Record High

By Sidney Margolius

FOOD PRICES are threatening to set new high records. Wholesale costs, as shown on the Dun & Bradstreet index, have jumped 5 percent in seven weeks. Moderate-income families are going to have a special problem in relation to protein foods this summer, with meat especially moving up sharply.

Except for food, July is a good buying month and this in particular is as good a July as you're going to see in a while. Because of slack sales, there is much price-cutting at retail levels on furniture, rugs, appliances and clothing. But even while retailers are chopping prices to stimulate business, furniture factories are planning to increase prices this fall by 10 percent and even more, trade reports indicate.

The furniture manufacturers are telling retailers that cutting prices is the wrong way to overcome consumer sales "resistance." Instead they urge that stores stress "fashion." The manufacturers never can get it through their heads that when food, housing and medical prices rise, moderate-income families are forced to curtail other purchases.

Other money-saving opportunities are the semi-annual July shoe sales; summer clothing clearances, including important reductions on men's summer suits and shirts, and clearances of this year's models of refrigerators and other appliances. Price-cutting is especially sharp on vacuum cleaners. Compare values among a number of stores since prices vary considerably.

Here are tips on July buying opportunities:

RUGS: Price cuts by fiber mills have led to reductions on the new polyester rugs (considered to be the coming rug fiber); acrylic, and nylon, (the most widely-bought because of relatively moderate price and durability, although with some disadvantages).

COLOR TV: While manufacturers have just cut prices to try to stimulate lagging sales, concern has been voiced about possible X-ray emission of some sets above "desirable levels." The sets in question are some 90,000 made by General Electric, which has announced that it will call back and modify them. The company says the rays are directed toward the floor and not the viewer, and so are not dangerous. The U. S. Public Health Administration has said that the danger is "potential," rather than actual, which seems to be playing with words.

Meanwhile, manufacturers have reduced prices from $20 to $90 to try to unload their heavy inventories.

WATERED JUICES: As we previously warned, the big cans of fruit "drinks" and "punches" look cheap but some actually have as little as 10 percent real juice.

At present there are no standards. Most such "drinks" are mainly sugar and water "with added vitamin C." Highest percentage of real juice this writer has found is in fruit drinks sold by consumer cooperatives. The new label for Co-op Grape Drink says, "Because the product in this can is at best only one-third straight grape juice, the economical shopper would be wise to compare its cost with undiluted Co-op Grape Juice. You may find that you are paying a high price for the added water and the convenience of a premixed drink."

Meanwhile, prices of frozen orange concentrate and full-strength fruit juices are exceptionally low. Supplies of frozen orange concentrate are 25 percent above average, with the lemon crop also heavy. So add your own water.

FOOD BUYING: All protein foods are getting expensive. Beef, pork and lamb have gone up and will rise further. Even broilers cost more. Two helps for price-harassed consumers are the heavy supplies of frozen turkey, and the still-reasonable prices of eggs, although higher than in the spring.

New Pamphlet Issued:

Citizen Action Urged In Fight for Clean Air

POLLUTED AIR attacks living and inanimate objects alike—people, plants, and animals; stone buildings and statues; clothing, tires, metals. The cost in lives can be reckoned in the thousands; property damage in the billions. And it could get worse.

The cause and sources of air pollution, its cost in terms of human discomfort and disease and economic waste, and what can be done about it are outlined in The Battle For Clean Air, by Edward Edelson. The author of this new Public Affairs Pamphlet is a science editor and co-author of the book, Poisons in the Air. The pamphlet is available for 25 cents from the Public Affairs Committee, 381 Park Avenue South, New York, N. Y. 10016.

"Fighting air pollution," Edelson states, "demands new scientific approaches [and] a new kind of political and personal effort: the enlisting of widespread citizen support for control measures that cross traditional community boundaries. Air pollution does not respect these boundaries, and the fight for cleaner air should not."

The basic cause of air pollution sounds simple: the imperfect burning of fuel and other materials, often made worse by weather conditions. But the solution is complex because much of our daily life is dependent on fuel-burning of one kind or another: transportation; electricity; rubbish disposal.

And pollution does not come free. Air pollution causes increased home, laundry, and personal expenses, as well as industrial and agricultural losses. Perhaps more serious is the evidence linking air pollution with bad health and excess deaths.

In spite of a slow start and inadequate budgets for clean air programs, fortunately "equipment and techniques for controlling most sources of pollution either exist or are being developed." Edelson cites the war against automotive pollution as an example of what can be done. Starting in 1963, various devices for reducing hydrocarbon emissions have been installed in new cars. But, "since pollution controls are being installed only in new cars," he explains, "it will take a decade before 85 per cent of the nation's cars have them."

Further reducing the amount of air pollution are control devices being installed on stationary pollution sources, and the substitution of less pollution-prone types of equipment. Some companies do so voluntarily. More often, however, legislation is needed to gain cooperation.

Public pressure in the local community, Edelson stresses, is the most effective stimulus to necessary programs of air pollution control.

FOR MORE than a decade, and more so since the Clean Air Act of 1963, the federal government "has become increasingly important in the battle for cleaner air." Especially significant has been its impetus to regional planning, including the right "for the first time to intervene directly in interstate air pollution problems. Using this authority, the National Center for Air Pollution Control . . . has moved against many conditions where air pollution sources on one side of a state line endanger the health or welfare of people on the other side."

For the future, Edelson sees some hope in the "rapid growth of atomic power to generate electricity." But since fuel-burning is likely to continue to be a major source of electrical power, we must look to the "development of devices that will remove sulfur from smokestack gas and produce a marketable product."

Research on pollution-free, long-lasting sources of power for an electric car indicates another possible answer to the pollution that emanates from the conventional internal combustion engine.

The cost of defeating air pollution may be high, the author agrees, "but the alternative is even greater losses of property and more killer smogs.'

From Soup to Nonsense:

The Twiggy Look Just Won't Fit Gals of the Has-Been Generation

By Jane Goodsell

THE OTHER DAY I watched an attractive fortyish lady viewing herself in a fitting room mirror as she tried on a black and white zigzag print tent dress. For a moment she seemed pleased and then, suddenly, her shoulders slumped and she heaved a sigh of despair.

"Oh dear," she moaned, "I don't look the least bit like Twiggy!"

It was a cry from the heart and a poignant example of the dilemma of the Has-Been Generation. It's easy enough to say that a matron in her middle years shouldn't try—or even yearn—to look like Twiggy. But what else can she do? The NOW look is mod, and it's the only In look around. It's smashing, absolutely fab, on young and skinny size fives. But—and this can hardly come as news to anyone who has eyes to see—not every female has a kid-brother 31-22-32 shape.

What's needed is an alternative In look for those of us who would never be mistaken for Twiggy in mini-skirts, tent dresses, jump suits, bloomers, bikinis and bugle beads. The way the fashion picture stands at this point, we can either wear what's in style and look ludicrous or refuse to go along and look frumpish.

But fashion isn't the half of it. These are trying times in general for the Has-Been Generation which includes everyone over the age of 26. According to all reports, that's the cut-off point for youth.

The Now Generation are the pace-setters. What the young are doing, dancing, buying, thinking, driving, listening to and going to is what's In. The Boogaloo and the fastback obviously aren't aimed at my age group and, in truth, very little is. Youth is in the ascendancy.

NOW, MIND YOU, I see nothing wrong with that. Generally speaking I think the Now Generation is wonderful. It's true that the young have little admiration for my age group ("Never trust anyone over 30" is their motto), but I don't hold that against them. The young have never seen eye-to-eye with their elders, as well they shouldn't.

Like many people my age, I don't exactly rock to the Ten Top Tunes of the week. When I hear them I can't help thinking wistfully of the music that was popular back when I was a girl. I can't pretend to be turned-on by the Rolling Stones, but I'm not tight-lipped about them either. I'm open-minded, see?

One day last week, to my surprise, I heard some music coming from Molly's radio that stopped me in my tracks. It was zingy and swingy and it really grabbed me. Overjoyed at the evidence that I am not a complete square, I said, "I love that music! Is it one of the Top Ten tunes?"

Molly gave me a pitying look. "No, Mommy," she said gently, "that's a commercial. It's the Coca Cola song."

Now honestly, what's the use of trying?

AUTO LICENSE TAGS designed to stimulate and keep alive a favorable organizing climate in Alabama are being sold by the State AFL-CIO for use on the front of union members' cars. They are being distributed by local central bodies, COPE Women's Activities Division members and direct from the state council at $1 each or 80 cents in lots of 50 or more. The state requires only one official license tag, on the rear of the car.

Slayton, who addressed the awards banquet; the safety award winners, Pan American Pilot Raymond C. Gerber and United Air Lines Stewardess Iris Peterson, and ALPA Pres. Charles H. Ruby.

Housing Drop Spurs Demand To Curb 'Fed'

An AFL-CIO economist called for steps to curb the Federal Reserve System's power to throw the home construction industry into a tailspin through the "blunderbuss approach" it uses when it tightens the money market.

Marvin Friedman, assistant director of the federation's Dept. of Research, charged that the 38 percent decline in private housing starts last year "was a direct consequence of the Fed's tight money policy."

He told a Senate Banking subcommittee that "vital ground" was lost last year in meeting the nation's housing needs, and "we simply cannot afford a repetition."

Friedman urged curbing the Federal Reserve System's "so-called independence," which leaves it unresponsive to the economic and social policies set by Congress and the Administration.

As an alternative, Friedman said, steps should be taken by Congress "to insulate residential construction activity" when the reserve board forces up long-term interest rates.

He made these suggestions:

- An interest rate calling on time deposits of all types to "avoid a repetition of the frenzied competition between lending institutions and the resultant withdrawal of funds from the mortgage markets."
- A program of government loans to home mortgage companies during periods of tight money, with the mortgages as collateral.
- Development of a broader secondary market for mortgages through the sale of securities backed by portfolios of both government-insured and conventional mortgages.

Even these measures, Friedman said, would be less effective if the Federal Reserve System remains "completely free to chart its own course, irrespective of national needs and national priorities."

Gamser New Chairman Of Rail Mediation Board

Member Howard G. Gamser of the National Mediation Board, which mediates disputes under the Railway Labor Act, has been designated board chairman for the fiscal year beginning July 1. Other members are Francis A. O'Neill, Jr., and Leverett Edwards.

Gamser was appointed to the board by Pres. Kennedy and reappointed by Pres. Johnson. He serves also as an adjunct professor of law at Georgetown University.

Pilots' Safety Forum Cites Airport Hazards

Airport modernization, better pilot training and more effective ways to avoid mid-air collisions were stressed at the 14th annual safety forum of the Air Line Pilots.

Pilot safety representatives from 52 air lines met for two days with safety experts from government and industry. At the same time, the ALPA steward and stewardess division held its fifth annual safety forum, covering such topics as emergency evacuation. Some sessions were held jointly with the pilots.

Conference speakers included Astronaut Donald K. Slayton, Transportation Sec. Alan S. Boyd and Sen. A. S. Mike Monroney as well as authorities in the safety areas covered by the program.

In a sampling of the conference discussion:

- Capt. L. Homer Mauden, chairman of the ALPA Airworthiness & Performance Committee, said most airport accidents are caused by planes overrunning, undershooting or sliding off the sides of runways that are too short or too narrow for existing conditions.

He urged longer and stronger overrun-underrun areas at each end of the runway, as well as stabilized shoulders 50 feet to each side.

- "Three pairs of eyeballs in the cockpit" remains the best way to avoid mid-air collisions, Capt. W. W. Betts, an ALPA safety chairman declared.

Third Pilot Useful

Some jet planes have two pilots in the cockpit; others have three. Betts cited a number of close misses, where a mid-air collision was averted by the actions of a third pilot in the cockpit. He warned that as size, speed and numbers of airplanes increase, the problem of collision avoidance has become more acute with completely effective systems still a long way in the future. "The human eye is here now and available for immediate service," he observed.

- More advanced pilot training is necessary before it can be determined whether air line operations can be safely conducted with lower ceiling and visibility conditions, the ALPA forum was told. The paper on the subject was given by Capt. Richard H. Beck, who serves on the union's All-Weather Flying Committee.

At the awards banquet concluding the forum, the ALPA presented its air safety award to:

Capt. Raymond G. Gerber, a Pan American World Airways pilot with more than 20,000 commercial flying hours, who has served as chairman of the ALPA All-Weather Flying Committee and as a member of international air safety committees.

Iris Peterson, regional vice president of the ALPA flight attendant division, cited "for her dedicated effort to advance cabin safety" and participation in accident investigation. Miss Peterson is a United Air Lines stewardess.

FHA to Back Mortgages for Group Clinics

The Federal Housing Administration is venturing into a new area of service with a program of mortgage insurance to finance group medical practice facilities, Sec. Robert C. Weaver of the Dept. of Housing & Urban Development announced.

The program is FHA's first outside the field of residential facilities, and also the first covering movable equipment.

Under it the FHA will insure mortgages for up to 90 percent of the value of the facility, including equipment, with 6 percent maximum interest for terms up to 25 years. The FHA mortgage insurance premium will be 1 percent the first year and one-half of 1 percent thereafter.

Both new construction and rehabilitation of existing buildings are covered by the program, which was developed with the cooperation of the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare.

HUD also announced that an information guide and handbook on the program can be obtained from the nearest FHA insuring office.

Advice on professional technical problems in developing group practice plans and proposals is available from the Public Health Service, Division of Medical Care Administration, 800 N. Quincy Street, Arlington, Va. 22203.

Board Issues New Order In 7-Year Backpay Case

The National Labor Relations Board punctured a seven-year argument over backpay by ordering Jack G. Buncher of Pittsburgh, Pa., doing business as the Buncher Co., to give $100,000 to 13 employes he fired in 1960 for trying to organize a local of the Steelworkers.

On paper, the laid-off workers have been entitled to the backpay since a previous board order of June 1961. But more years could pass if Buncher uses all the legal delays open to employers under the Taft-Hartley Act.

The employers' appeal has been shuttling through the law's labyrinths since Sept. 20, 1960, when NLRB Examiner George J. Bott ruled that Buncher had illegally laid off 13 employes between Jan. 16 and Mar. 5, 1960, because they had joined or assisted the charging union.

The employer filed exceptions and, nine months later, the NLRB ruled that Bott was on sound legal ground. The case went to another board examiner to determine the amount of lost pay, but before he could start hearings, the employer appealed to the courts.

Nearly two years later the 3d U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, Philadelphia, "enforced in full the NLRB order, including the provision for backpay," as board documents put it. Another year passed as the "present proceeding" was instituted "and the regional director for the sixth region issued his backpay specification, as amended at the hearing"—another quote from NLRB reports. The quotes continue:

"Following issuance of the Backpay Specification, the Respondent filed its Answer on Oct. 14, 1964 . . . On Oct. 19, 1964, the General Counsel filed a Motion to Strike Portions of Respondent's Answer and Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings, which Motions were referred to the undersigned . . . for ruling."

Then followed a series of orders, rulings and motions and finally a finding by Examiner Max Rosenberg of the amount of backpay due. This gave way to other hearings, other motions and another finding by the same examiner that the 13 employes should be paid $99,237, plus interest at 6 percent, less "any lawfully required tax withholding."

The board upheld this latter finding and rejected Buncher's arguments that seniority should not be used to determine backpay because his firm never took seniority into consideration. It ruled that Buncher had not come up with any better alternative to seniority.

The NLRB decision noted that Buncher testified in the original NLRB proceeding that "there was nothing seriously wrong with the work of the discriminatees, that he never had any serious complaints" about their work and that "he would rehire them if needed." Yet 17 new employes were hired and former employes were recalled to work before the union men were offered re-employment on Jan. 12, 1962, the board noted, citing the company's own work charts.

'Maximum Latitude' Urged:

CWA Convention Condemns Moves to 'Inhibit' Bargaining

Kansas City, Mo.—Opposition to governmental action that would "inhibit" the collective bargaining process was voiced by the 29th convention of the Communications Workers here.

"We recognize the interest of the federal government in the collective bargaining process and in assuring responsible action by all parties," the CWA declared. But it insisted that "the first obligation of our national labor relation policy must be to assure the maximum feasible latitude to collective bargaining—and any restraint imposed in the name of the national interest must bear equitably and reasonably on both parties."

The positions were voiced in a comprehensive statement of economic policy, which also assailed "inflexible" wage guidelines, called for a progressive tax policy in which old loopholes are finally plugged, and applauded discussions concerning the establishment of a guaranteed minimum income for every American.

A highlight of the convention was a speech by Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey, who flew to the meeting from his Minnesota home, where he had been recuperating from minor surgery.

Humphrey was applauded repeatedly as he praised the labor movement for its support of democratic institutions and its willingness to face current problems.

One major challenge to the nation, the Vice President suggested, is the question of constructive use of leisure time.

"I do not want to see our America have as its living memorial the fact that when we gained more leisure, all we did was to look at the 'tube' and erect ourselves a pile of beer cans as a monument. No, I think there are better things."

When the fighting stops in Viet Nam, Humphrey emphasized, the nation must seek something better than a mere "return to normalcy." Both after World War I and the Korean conflict, he said, "we had the chance to channel our resources that had gone into the war into the building of the peace. Tragically, we missed that chance.

"We are still paying for those wasted years after Korea in every American neighborhood where children are growing up without first class education. We are paying wherever there are children without good health. And we are paying wherever there are communities without adequate housing or equal opportunity."

CWA's statement on foreign policy praised efforts by the United States and other free nations to bring about an end to the fighting in Viet Nam. But it noted each such peace effort "has been sneered aside by Peiping, Hanoi and Moscow."

In the Middle East, the statement pointed out, "the systematic intensification of Soviet intrigue" in Syria and Egypt has caused deep concern. The future of the Middle East area will be brighter, the delegates declared, when Arab leaders accept the existence of Israel and follow its example of peaceful social progress.

The convention cheered Zeev Barash, U.S. representative of Histadrut, the Israeli Federation of Labor, when he brought his labor movement's greetings and thanks for CWA help and support. Barash voiced hope that Arabs and Israelis would find a way to work together to improve the living standards of the entire Middle East.

A proposal that CWA's present dues structure—mostly $5 a month—be changed to a system based on a dues payment of about 1.5 percent of each member's pay, was left to the option of the locals.

A series of salary increases for officers was approved by the convention. The president's pay rate was lifted from $29,400 to $34,000; the secretary-treasurer's from $24,000 to $28,500; the three executive vice-presidents from $22,400 to $26,500; nine vice-presidents from $18,000 to $22,000; and four national directors from $18,000 to $19,000.

An effort to give the national directors—for non-Bell companies, AT&T long lines, and Western Electric sales and installation divisions—the same salary as vice presidents was narrowly defeated.

Earlier, the delegates re-elected Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, Sec.-Treas. W. A. Smallwood, and Executive Vice Presidents James Massey, Glenn Watts and George Gill. Gill—first elected to the post this winter by the executive board to replace retired John Crull—defeated Roger D. Speck of Atlanta by a margin of about 4 to 1.

One incumbent board member—Willard W. Brown of Atlanta—was defeated by Ben Porch of Atlanta. Brown had been named to the post by the CWA board when Gill was elected to the executive vice-presidency.

Elaine Gleason, director of the AT&T long lines division of the union, was defeated for re-election. Her successor is Robert Minnery of Cincinnati.

CWA's 30th anniversary convention in 1968 will be held in Washton, D. C.

Canadian Council Formed by CWA

Kansas City, Mo.—Creation of an affiliated Canadian Communications Workers Council to bring together leaders of all CWA locals north of the border was approved by the union's convention here.

The council will be composed of presidents of all locals in Canada, plus four officers to be appointed by CWA Pres. Joseph A. Beirne on the basis of recommendations from the Canadian locals.

The council will have its own annual budget, employ staff officials and make recommendations for programs to be carried out by its officers.

ACWA Laundry Board Marks 30th Birthday

New York—The Amalgamated Laundry Workers Joint Board marked its 30th anniversary with a luncheon at which 15 college scholarships, worth a total of $30,000, were awarded children of members in honor of Louis Simon, the board's long-time manager.

In addition, the 16,000-member unit of the Clothing Workers sponsored a performance of "South Pacific" at Lincoln Center.

When the ACWA began to organize laundry workers in 1937 wages were as low as 10 cents an hour, Simon recalled at the luncheon, and employes suffered ill health brought on by substandard working and living conditions.

The present contract, he pointed out, calls for a minimum of $1.525 an hour with increases due later this year and again in 1968. More than 1,000 laundry and dry cleaning plant contracts also provide for paid holidays and vacations, sick leave and a variety of insurance benefits, he added.

The joint board is made up of 17 locals in the New York metropolitan area, Connecticut and Massachusetts. It maintains a health center with services that members can use without loss of pay.

The scholarships were provided by a fund honoring Simon, an ACWA vice president, which was set up in 1964. The winners were:

Marc Borish, Liberty, N.Y.; Edward Bruno, West Haven, Conn.; Elizabeth Cammarota, Rosedale, N.Y.; Marion O. Cherry, Stamford, Conn.; Sandra E. Ettinger, Laurelton, N.Y.; Arthur R. Firstenberg, John M. Land, Michael H. Matthews and Dollie E. White, all of Brooklyn; Raymond L. Guzman, Staten Island, N.Y.; Donald Jenkins, New Haven, Conn.; Carole Shapiro and Michael A. Verderosa, Bronx, N.Y.; Fred Spielman, Jackson Heights, N.Y., and Susan G. Wertheim, Long Island City, N.Y.

'Formidable Barrier':

Rising Costs Held Peril to U.S. Health

The rocketing cost of medical care is "one of the most formidable barriers" to a healthier America, Sec. John W. Gardner of the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare declared.

Gardner was host to some 300 doctors, hospital administrators and other health care experts at a two-day conference summoned by Pres. Johnson "to discuss how we can lower the costs of medical services without impairing the quality."

The conference convened just as a report came out that medical costs had shot up 2.4 percent during the first three months of 1967—on top of a record 6.6 percent increase in 1966.

At panel sessions and in papers presented by scores of speakers, delegates discussed such matters as group practice facilities, greater coordination of hospital services to avoid costly and unnecessary duplication, and training of skilled aides to doctors to take over routine duties.

U.S. Surgeon Gen. William H. Stewart translated some of the issues into human terms when he told the conference that the "real challenge" is to fulfill "a newly acknowledged right of every American—the right of access to quality health care."

He looked at his distinguished audience and commented:

"Very few of us in this room have really experienced the losing side of the health care system. Very few of us have been forced to forego or delay medical care for ourselves or our children because we couldn't afford it.

"Very few of us have tasted the bitterness and shivered in the impersonal cold of charity medical care.

"We haven't sat for hours on the hard wooden benches wondering if the kids were all right or if we would have a job to return to. We haven't faced the decision of spending $6 for a prescription or the week's groceries."

He asked the health professions to look with open minds at new ideas, new experiments. The conference, he warned, will not accomplish its purpose "by blind assults on the inevitable, alternating with blind defenses of the untenable."

AFL-CIO Social Security Dir. Bert Seidman and Melvin Glasser, Auto Workers social security director, were among the panel chairmen.

Seidman invited employers to join with unions in working towards more effective ways to provide health services.

He said third parties who finance health care services have too often "restricted their activities to paying bills and have remained aloof from questions regarding the organization of health care services."

Another panel member, Benton H. Goodenough, vice president for labor relations of the Pacific Maritime Association, said unions and management should pool their negotiating skills and bargain with providers of health services for more efficient systems of health care.

UNIONS MUST UNITE to bargain effectively with local medical structures if the rise in doctor and hospital costs is to be halted, AFL-CIO Social Security Dir. Bert Seidman (speaking) told a conference on hospital, medical and dental costs in Seattle sponsored by the Washington State AFL-CIO. At the left are Assistant AFL-CIO Social Security Dir. Richard Shoemaker, Executive Sec.-Treas. Edward J. Whelan and Pres. Joe Davis of the State AFL-CIO; at right, Field Rep. Thomas Ludwig of the Group Health Association of America.

Labor Bargaining Power Viewed As Weapon Against Medical Fees

Seattle—Unions must unite on the community level to bargain effectively with their local medical structure to combat fast-rising doctor and hospital costs.

This was the message delivered to some 100 unionists, health and welfare plan trustees, and medical experts who gathered here for a one-day "Conference on Hospital, Medical and Dental Costs."

The conference was sponsored by the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security in cooperation with the Washington and Oregon State Labor Councils. It was held in conjunction with the 17th Annual Group Health Institute.

AFL-CIO Social Security Dir. Bert Siedman described physicians as following the "Robin Hood theory" in determining charges for their services.

Most hospitals, Seidman observed have no incentive for efficiency and simply pass on increased costs to organizations handling union-negotiated health and welfare plans.

"Many unions," he noted, "feel they are only bargaining with their employers for more money for the doctors and hospitals, not more benefits for their members."

Real Gains Small

He pointed that between 1954 and 1962 union-negotiated hospital benefits rose only 25 percent and medical benefits two-fifths in real terms even though the negotiators achieved what appeared to be substantially higher benefit plans.

Seidman cited four basic faults with the current system of medical care in the United States—incompetent care in many cases, insufficiency of medical manpower and facilities, inefficiency in the use of medical resources, and inflation in the cost of medical care.

He urged unions to reexamine health care goals and bargain for the "total spectrum of health needs." Labor, he continued, must unite at the local level to confront doctors, hospital administrators and others directly or turn to prepaid group-practice cooperatives.

At the luncheon, the delegates heard Dr. Harry Rowe, director of the Group Health Dental Cooperative of Seattle warn the labor members that group dental care programs are more difficult to establish and administer than medical plans.

"No program of usual fee system for dentists will work," Dr. Rowe said. "Control of the dentist is mandatory."

He said dental group practice clinics in conjunction with self-insured trusts provide the most effective low cost dental care programs for union members.

During the afternoon session Dr. I. S. Falk, professor of public health, Yale University School of Medicine charged that hospitals do not operate efficiently and "most administrators of our hospitals ought to be in some other business."

Dr. Falk said voluntary health insurance plans have failed, and will continue to fail to have any effective control of hospital prices. He blamed the continuance of "solo practice" by physicians and over-utilization of hospitals as two of many reasons for high medical care prices.

Dr. Lorin Kerr, president of Group Health Association of America and medical director of the Mine Workers Welfare & Retirement Fund, said the UMWA had been able to hold doctor bills down by paying doctors on a fee for time retainer rather than on the traditional fee for service basis.

"You should pay the doctor for his judgment not to operate as well as for a decision to operate," Dr. Kerr said.

Mrs. Agnes Brewster, chief of the Health Economic Branch of the Public Health Service, reported the findings of a study conducted by the State of New Jersey that calls for a new regulatory citizens' body in that state to provide public scrutiny and certain types of controls over medical care prices.

Pres. Joe Davis of the Washington State AFL-CIO and Executive Sec.-Treas. of the Oregon AFL-CIO were hosts for the Conference.

700 Jobless Win Aid Under Auto Trade Act

Shifts of auto production from the United States to Canada have made nearly 700 jobless auto workers eligible for adjustment aid the Automotive Agreement Adjustment Assistant Board has ruled.

Certified for aid in separate decisions were:

● About 265 Chrysler Corp workers left idle when Dodge-Polara-Monaco assembly operations were transferred in January from the firm's Jefferson plant in Detroit to its plant in Windsor, Ont.

● Some 215 employes of the American Motors Co. plant in Kenosha, Wis., and 100 workers from its Milwaukee facility who lost their jobs when production was moved to the company's Brampton, Ont., operation.

● About 115 workers at General Motors Chevrolet and Fisher Body plants at North Tarrytown N.Y., laid off as a result of importation of autos from the GM plant in St. Therese, Quebec.

The certificates were issued after the Auto Workers had filed petitions on behalf of the workers, the board said. Additional employes also were laid off at three of the plants, it added, but the board ruled the dislocations grew out of a drop in sales rather than changes in production sites. For the same reason, the board said, it denied a UAW petition for adjustment assistance to laid-off workers at a General Motors plant in Wilmington, Del.

The ruling means that those certified will receive a cash allowance up to $73 a week for up to 52 weeks of unemployment as authorized by the Automobile Products Trade Act. They also may be eligible for counseling, training (including training allowances) and relocation expenses.

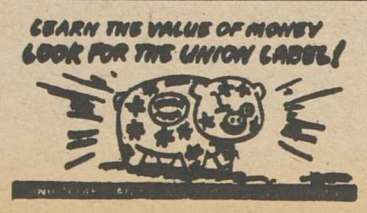
The adjustment board is composed of the secretaries of the Departments of Labor, Commerce and the Treasury.

U.S. Urged to Press Release Of Ship Crews

New York—Presidents of two maritime unions charged that the Egyptian government is subjecting crews of two American ships to "harsh treatment" and is "demanding their cargo be unloaded as the price of release" from forced anchorage in the Suez Canal.

Pres. Joseph Curran of the National Maritime Union and Pres. Jesse M. Calhoun of the Marine Engineers asked Sec. of State Dean Rusk to take "all steps necessary to free" the vessels, which were among 16 ships of all nations transiting the canal when Arab-Israeli hostilities broke out.

The two ships are the freighters S.S. African Glen and S.S. Observer, halted in Great Bitter Lake. The union officials wired Rusk and also asked the 6 million member Intl. Transportworkers Federation to call an emergency meeting of seafaring and longshore affiliates to discuss future action.



Living Costs Up Again, 'Real Wages' Below '66

The cost of living rose three-tenths of 1 percent in May, and for the fourth straight month American workers were earning more but able to buy less with their paychecks than a year ago.

Hourly wages of production workers rose to an all-time high of $2.64. But the rise in living costs coupled with a sharp three-fourths of an hour drop in the workweek left the buying power of the weekly paychecks the lowest for the month of May since 1964.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics report showed the May consumer price index at 115.6 percent of 1957-59 prices, 2.7 percent higher than a year ago.

Higher prices for clothing, used cars, medical care and home ownership accounted for most of the April to May increase. Retail food prices edged up two-tenths of 1 percent, the first increase in food prices since last August.

Medical care costs jumped six-tenths of 1 percent over the month. Over the past 12 months, hospital charges have soared 21.5 percent and doctor and dentists bills have been raised 6.5 percent.

The Labor Dept. said some 125,000 workers will receive pay raises on the basis of union-negotiated cost-of-living escalator clauses. The largest group of about 113,000 aircraft workers will receive a two-cent hourly increase based on the rise in the price index since February.

Average earnings of production workers before taxes and deductions reached $100.06 in May, with the after-tax earnings of a worker with three dependents averaging $89.45 a week. While this is $1.40 more than the average a year ago, its purchasing power in 1957-59 dollars is 81 cents less than in May 1966.

A rise in wholesale prices during the month is likely to show up as a further increase in retail prices in the June consumer index, the BLS said.

Cleared Before Deadline:

Congress Approves Teacher Corps Bill

years strongly supported a national Teacher Corps, accepted the House measure without change under pressure of the June 30 deadline.

Before final action, AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller expressed labor's disappointment with the shift to state and local control and the low ceiling imposed by the House on the pay of teacher-interns—$75 a week plus $15 for each dependent. Nevertheless he urged "speedy approval" of the legislation to keep the program alive.

In other congressional action:

The Senate Banking Committee unanimously reported a compromise truth-in-lending bill to the Senate floor, the first time in seven years that it has progressed that far.

The committee bill would require sellers or lenders to disclose interest charges totaling more than $10 both in terms of total cost and annual interest rate. It would, however, allow revolving credit charge accounts used by many department stores to be expressed in terms of monthly interest—1 percent a month instead of 12 percent a year, for example.

A congressional redistricting bill that had aroused the indignation of supporters of one man, one vote standards was returned to a House-Senate conference committee after a monumental mixup.

The House had originally passed a bill allowing a population disparity of 30 percent between the largest and smallest congressional district in a state until 1972. It also barred statewide election of congressmen on an at-large basis. After 1972, the population gap could not exceed 10 percent.

Its supporters hoped this would discourage the courts from insisting on immediate conformity to stricter one man, one vote standards.

Although normally the Senate does not change bills affecting only the House, Senators Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.) and Howard H. Baker (R-Tenn.) led a successful floor fight to amend the bill to apply the 10 percent limit to the 1968 elections.

A House-Senate conference committee then reached a surprise agreement on a bill which—from one man, one vote standards—was worse than the measure passed by either the House or Senate.

It would have exempted congressional districts from any population requirement until 1972, when the 10 percent figure would apply.

Kennedy promptly announced he would launch a major fight against adopting the conference report on the Senate floor. But meanwhile House conferees discovered to their embarrassment that they had inadvertently also dropped from the bill the bar to at-large elections.

The House then sent the bill back to conference, with its future uncertain.

In another complicated bit of legislative maneuvering, the House Judiciary Committee approved an "anti-riot" bill and a bill to protect civil rights workers from intimidation and violence.

Mississippi Democrat William M. Colmer, the chairman of the House Rules Committee, had threatened to have his committee take the anti-riot bill away from the Judiciary Committee and send it to the floor—a rarely-used stratagem.

A Judiciary subcommittee then combined the riot and the civil rights bill, but Colmer refused to agree to that solution. Finally the House leadership worked out an agreement that the Judiciary Committee would report separate bills on the two subjects, the Rules Committee would clear them, and both measures would be scheduled separately for House votes later this summer.

The Senate approved the House-passed debt limit bill without change by a 60-30 vote. But it defeated by only a 44-43 margin an amendment by Sen. Harry F. Byrd, Jr. (D-Va.) to trim $10 billion from the proposed $22 billion boost.

PURCHASING POWER, not military hardware, is Latin America's greatest need, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told the National Press Club. He spoke to Washington newsmen about the work of the American Institute for Free Labor Development.

Meany Sees Unions Best Hope For Latin America's Prosperity

Latin America's greatest need is mass purchasing power in the hands of its people, and strong, independent trade unions are the best means to bring this about, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told an audience of newspapermen.

Meany spoke to the National Press Club in Washington, D.C., of the goals and accomplishments of the American Institute for Free Labor Development.

He reported with pride on the AIFLD trade union education program—the young workers from Latin America and the Caribbean who have used their AIFLD training to help make unions a stronger force for progress in their own nations, and who have passed on their knowledge to thousands of other workers.

Meany reported also on the AIFLD's major role under the Alliance for Progress as "the largest builder of worker-sponsored, low-cost housing in Latin America."

Without social projects programs of AIFLD and the Latin American unions, he said, U.S. aid might merely mean "that the rich would get a little richer and there would be really no difference in the conditions of the great mass of workers in these countries."

He stressed that the AILFD is not trying to build carbon copies of American trade unions in Latin America or any other part of the world. "We do expect and hope, however, that they will build unions that are able to stand on their own feet . . . economically strong, capable of representing the workers of these countries and not dependent on outside elements for improving conditions."

Wherever workers lose their freedom, the AFL-CIO president said, "this represents a threat to us. . . . Where would our standing be as a free society if all of Latin America went the way of Castro's Cuba?"

The AIFLD programs haven't "performed any miracles," Meany acknowledged. "We are trying to make a contribution to building democratic societies through trade unions, but the Latin American countries have still got a long way to go. There is still too much money being spent for military hardware in these countries and too little being spent on the welfare of the people."

But, he said, "we're building credit unions in Latin America. We have established rural cooperatives and workers' banks . . . housing programs . . . vocational training . . . legal assistance . . . a program that will bring progress in the long run."

The 500 young men and women who have been brought to the United States for advanced teacher-training at the AIFLD school have held classes for "well over 60,000" on their return home, Meany pointed out.

Last month, he noted, 15 Latin American trade union leaders completed a nine-month course on labor economics at Loyola University in New Orleans—preparing them to serve as labor economists for their unions.

He told the newsmen of the makeup of the AIFLD—its governing board with a labor majority but including business representation. He discussed the direct cash contributions from labor and business and the use of union welfare funds under government guarantees against default to make mortgage money available to Latin American workers at moderate interest charges.

And he stressed that the U.S. government financing of the social projects program is all open and above board under a contract "signed by myself as the president of AIFLD and signed by the Agency for Intl. Development . . . not one cent from the Central Intelligence Agency."

In answers to questions ranging over the entire field of AFL-CIO activity, Meany told the Press Club:

- The AFL-CIO's work in Africa is primarily in helping to provide vocational training for workers . . .when the time comes I am quite hopeful that we will set up an institute for Africa" similar to AIFLD.
- On labor legislation in Congress, "we are going to fight any labor control legislation that is compulsory. And we are going to look with a great deal of suspicion on any former friends who tell us that it is good for us."
- Craft unions are willing to accept meaningful numbers of Negro apprentices; the problem has been to find qualified applicants.

New technologies and specialized skill requirements have become so advanced that "my union, the Plumbers, has 700 full-time instructors for their apprentices . . . and spends more money for apprenticeship training than does the United States government."

- On a question dealing with Transportation Sec. Alan S. Boyd's proposal to build U.S. merchant ships in foreign yards, Meany said: "Maybe we should get our secretary of transportation from some foreign yard."

He added, "We have plenty of people in the United States ready, able and willing to build them. I'm against building them in foreign yards."

Bargaining Rights Urged In Church Institutions

Chicago—Collective bargaining is a vital and necessary right of workers for church schools, hospitals, newspapers and similar enterprises, the Rev. Robert A. Reicher reported in a statement approved by a committee of the new Association of Chicago Priests. He is chaplain of the Catholic Council on Working Life.

Church institutions should "serve as a model of social justice," said Father Reicher, a professor of sociology at St. Mary of the Lake Seminary. Justice requires not only "suitable wages and working conditions" but also that those who work "have an influence collectively in their place of work," he said.

pay gap between craftsmen on the railroads and their union brothers doing similar work in other industries.

Two mediation boards acknowledged that a big gap exists, but recommended increases the unions rejected as inadequate.

After all of the procedures of the Railway Labor Act had been exhausted, Congress twice extended the "no strike" period in the hope that an agreement could be negotiated.

The shopcraft unions—Machinists, Boilermakers, Sheet Metal Workers, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Railway Carmen and Firemen & Oilers — have charged that rail management, in the expectation that Congress would not permit railroad workers to strike, has never seriously negotiated. Instead the companies have waited for congressional action to "bail them out," the unions said.

USWA Sets Nonferrous Strike Date

Pittsburgh—Industrywide negotiations in nonferrous metals headed for a July 15 strike deadline as the Steelworkers executive board approved a walkout unless a satisfactory settlement is reached by unions representing 37,000 employes of eight major firms.

Negotiators for a score of other international unions which have coordinated their bargaining with the USWA at various locations will be consulted on all contemplated action in time to make their own positions clear, Steel union leaders said.

None of the firms involved in negotiations has made "any real offer" to date, a 28-member committee of USWA's Nonferrous Industry Conference reported at a Chicago meeting.

Strike Plans

The USWA authorized a strike over local issues by 250 lead refinery workers at Omaha, Neb., but extended the deadline 15 days for all other nonferrous locals at the recommendation of the Chicago conference.

Members of USWA and Mine-Mill locals voted by a margin of 92 percent to strike after the last shift July 14 unless agreement is reached by that time, conference co-chairmen Joseph P. Molony and A. C. Skinner reported. Molony is USWA vice president and Skinner was president of the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers before the latter union affiliated with the USWA July 1.

Charging that the companies have not been bargaining in good faith, Molony and Skinner said they still hope that settlement can be reached without a strike.

The vote to authorize a walkout was reported as 18,620 in favor, 1,529 opposed, with 57 USWA and Mine-Mill local unions participating.

The industry conference and the strike referendum procedure are innovations for the USWA, that union reported. Its 1966 convention established a new system for conducting negotiations, with four major industry conferences set up. This year's negotiations in the nonferrous industry were the first for

IBEW Units Ratify RCA Strike Pact

Members of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, on strike since June 5 at eight Radio Corp. of America plants, voted to ratify a new three-year agreement by a margin of about 1,050 votes in a referendum among more than 30,000 employes.

The settlement, which had the recommendation of IBEW Pres. Gordon M. Freeman and all union negotiators, provides wage hikes of 4 percent a year, with a minimum increase of 10 cents an hour this year, and another 9 cents next year and in 1969; additional raises of 2 cents to 15 cents an hour for workers in highly skilled classifications; a ninth paid holiday effective next year, and major improvements in pension and insurance programs.

A key gain was an increase of $5 to $16 a day in allowances for hospital room and board. The new allowance ranges from $20 a day in Bloomington, Ind., to $39 in Van Nuys, Calif., with the maximum allowance increased from $100 to $365. The contract also provides for an annual review of rates to allow compensation of up to 80 percent of charges for hospital room and board. This issue was one of those that triggered the walkout, the union said.

The new pact raises the surgical schedule from a maximum of $250 a year to $800 this year, and to $900 next year. Major medical insurance protection, now $10,000, was increased to $100,000, and maternity benefits were improved.

THE PHYSICIAN who treated Magdaleno Dimas after witnesses testified that he was savagely beaten by Texas Rangers displays pictures taken of the striking farm worker to members of a Senate subcommittee which held hearings in Rio Grande City. Dr. Ramiro Casso described the extensive injuries Dimas suffered.

At Senate Hearings:

Farm Workers Tell Of Texas Struggles

Rio Grande City, Tex.—A minister testified that Texas Rangers beat and kicked a striking farm worker, then held his head inches from a passing train.

Local leaders of the AFL-CIO United Farm Workers Organizing Committee reported the refusal of managers of big corporate farms to agree either to union recognition or an election procedure.

And the chairman of the Senate's Migratory Labor subcommittee, Harrison A. Williams, Jr. (D-N.J.), said the two days of hearings in the strife-torn lower Rio Grande Valley "comprise the most powerful testimony this subcommittee has ever received" on the need to extend collective bargaining laws to farm workers.

Williams was accompanied by Democratic Senators Ralph W. Yarborough (Tex.) and Edward M. Kennedy (Mass.). Republican Sen. Paul J. Fannin (Ariz.) joined the hearings on the second day. Yarborough and Kennedy also had a first-hand look at poverty in Starr County, visiting a number of homes at the invitation of UFWOC Vice Pres. Gilbert Padilla and AFL-CIO Field Rep. David T. Lopez.

Several hundred Mexican-American farm workers crowded into the hot courtroom where the hearings were held, while others followed the proceedings on the courthouse lawn over speaker systems and television monitors.

They heard the story retold of their 13-month struggle for the right to organize and bargain at La Casita and the other big Starr County farms.

More Votes Set in Coast Vineyards

Delano, Calif. — The AFL-CIO United Farm Workers Organizing Committee won another major victory when workers at three grape ranches of Almaden Vineyards, Inc., chose the union in a cross-check election conducted by the State Dept. of Industrial Relations.

Contract negotiations will start immediately for the workforce which now is at 200 but will climb to 1,200 at the peak of the grape harvest season in August, UFWOC Dir. Cesar Chavez said in a report to AFL-CIO Dir. of Organization William L. Kircher, who announced the victory. Additional elections will be held within a month, Kircher said.

Management Convinced

Slightly more than 100 union membership cards had been checked against Almaden payroll records by State Conciliation Service staff members when management representatives called off the count, Chavez reported. They said they were convinced the union was the almost unanimous choice of Almaden workers at three orchards—Livermore, Los Gatos and Paicines.

The recognition was the latest in a series of hard-won gains by UFWOC in its two-year struggle to organize badly exploited agricultural workers in California, Texas and other states.

It has won contracts from Schenley Industries and the DiGiorgio Corp., both major employers of farm labor, and recently concluded a contract settlement with the bottlers of Christian Brothers wines.

In Texas, one grower in the Rio Grande Valley has agreed to recognize UFWOC, but union members continue to picket La Casita Farms and other holdout growers. Their nationwide boycott of La Casita melons is being carried on

USS Sam Gompers Joins Pacific Fleet

Bremerton, Wash.—The USS Samuel Gompers (AD-37), first ship of the U.S. Navy to bear the name of the founding father of the modern American labor movement, officially joined the nation's Pacific fleet July 1 in commissioning ceremonies at the Puget Sound Naval Shipyard here.

Several hundred labor officials and members gathered on and alongside the 643-foot destroyer tender during the ceremonies.

Assistant Secretary of Labor Thomas R. Donahue, the principal speaker, told the audience that "the men who built and put a union label on her and those who will sail her will own a piece of the Samuel Gompers."

Donahue, who formerly was executive assistant to the president of the Building Service Employes, presented to the ship the original message of congratulations signed by Pres. Johnson which was first read at the keel-laying of the Gompers just over three years ago. Capt. Harry Risch, Jr., USN, accepted the President's message on behalf of his officers and crew.

AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler brought the congratulations and best wishes of organized labor to the ship's company.

Schnitzler said organized labor not only has great pride in the Gompers because of its name but because the ship "typifies the ideal of Samuel Gompers" that peace can only be secured by the strength of the United States.

Federal Crackdown Hits Phone, Drug, Oil Firms

Federal regulatory agencies ordered a price cut in long distance telephone rates, curbed misleading advertising for aspirin and similar pain killers, and blasted the major oil companies for their pricing tactics.

The reduction in telephone rates came through a Federal Communications Commission decision to limit the profit rate for the American Telephone & Telegraph Co.—the nation's largest corporation—to a range of 7 to 7.5 percent.

A.T.&T. had sought a profit range of 7.5 to 8.5 percent, in line with its current earnings.

The giant monopoly is the parent corporation for the Bell System, comprising 23 telephone companies, Western Electric Co., and other subsidiaries.

15,000 Workers Head for Campuses As Unions Open Summer Schools

College doors which only last month closed behind departing undergraduates and new alumni have opened again to admit a different army of students—union members.

Nearly 150 week-long union schools, most of them on college campuses, are on the 1967 schedule, according to Walter G. Davis, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education. Total attendance will exceed 15,000, he said.

The idea of labor education goes back at least as far as Samuel Gompers' cigar-makers, who read to each other while at work, Davis noted. But in the last two decades the trade union schools have expanded greatly in numbers and even more in the sophistication of their curriculum.

"Twenty years ago, the relatively few union educational institutes were pretty much limited to fundamentals, and the simplest fundamentals at that," Davis observed. "Most of the institutes were operated to teach the fledgling officers of new local unions such basics as how to run a union meeting, how to process a grievance and how to make a speech. A course in labor history, usually a sketchy one, was the academic pinnacle. The institutes were held in camps or inexpensive resorts, and the instructors were nearly always drawn from the union staff.

"We still have basic courses for beginners. But all courses today, whether for beginners or for staff, cover much more ground. The prime example, I suppose, is the AFL-CIO's own two-week series of engineering institutes, where the most complicated industrial engineering techniques are examined.

"The big change, though, is that we are now welcome on most college campuses, and that we have not only availed ourselves of college faculty but have incorporated the concept of academic excellence."

Another recent change, Davis said, is the trend toward schools run by state AFL-CIO organizations, open to students from all affiliated unions. About 25 of these are on the schedule this year, and Davis predicted the trend would continue.

He pointed out, however, that by far the greater number of summer schools are arranged by national and international unions. The Machinists and Steelworkers have more than a score each; one of the former's, in Quebec, will be in French. The Auto Workers are close behind with 16, and four other unions have a half-dozen each.

Not all the union campus courses fall during the college recess, Davis went on. Nearly 40 have already been completed, and a dozen others are scheduled between September and mid-November.

"Moreover, the college courses, while they are the most visible, are not by any means the only educational operation of the labor movement," Davis pointed out.

"Many affiliates — even individual locals — offer weekend study throughout the year," he noted. "There are also a number of week-long Washington institutes, keyed to legislative functions, while Congress is in session."

Whatever the format or timing of the schools, those who attend usually sacrifice a part of their own vacation time to do so, Davis said. The modest tuition and expenses involved are usually borne by the student's local union.

Survey Shows Progress Of Youth Corps Alumni

Most of the unemployed young people who had work experience under Neighborhood Youth Corps programs have gone on to jobs, school or further training, Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz announced on the basis of a study by a private consulting firm.

The findings of the survey, he declared, gave testimony to the "outstanding success" of the NYC. He added:

"This is a striking achievement when you consider that these enrollees were from the ranks of the high school dropouts and the hard-core unemployed."

The survey checked in March and April of 1967 on the progress of 1,988 enrollees who had left NYC out-of-school projects between Jan. 1 and Sept. 30 of last year. Seventy-one percent were interviewed personally and data on the others was received from relatives, friends, employers and other sources.

The study showed that 35 percent were working, most of them at full-time jobs, and 24 percent were in school or undergoing training, including military training. Of those employed, about 40 percent had found their jobs through their own efforts. The rest had received help from state employment services, NYC personnel, relatives and friends. Their average wage was $1.54 an hour, and they were working an average 38-hour week. Eighty percent said they liked their work.

"Significantly," Wirtz pointed out, "the study shows that these young people keep looking for and finding work and educational opportunities months after they leave NYC.

"During the first week after they left the program, 50 percent were in jobs, school or training. At the time of the interview, when they had been out of the program for an average of more than nine months, the number had jumped to 59 percent."

The longer the enrollee stayed in the NYC, the survey disclosed, the more likely he was to have a full-time job when interviewed and the less likely he was to have trouble with the law.

Those working had jobs as helpers to welders, painters, auto mechanics and carpenters, teacher's aides, farmers, secretaries, typists, sales clerks, cashiers, telephone operators, cooks and nurses aides.

Alexander Named EEOC Chairman

Pres. Johnson named Clifford L. Alexander, Jr., chairman of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission—the agency charged with enforcing laws against job discrimination.

Alexander, a 33-year-old Negro, has been serving at the White House as a special assistant to the President. He succeeds Stephen N. Shulman, who is leaving the government to form a law firm. Alexander and Shulman were classmates both at Harvard and at Yale Law School.

Committee Kills Move:

Soviet Bloc Loses Bid to Reshape ILO

Geneva—A Communist bid to reshape the Intl. Labor Organization died still-born when the resolutions committee of the annual ILO conference here refused to report out a resolution calling for a special session to consider the ILO's "program and structure."

Western delegates viewed the Communist move as an effort to make this United Nations agency more pliant to the demands of the Soviet bloc by eliminating the autonomy of worker and employer delegates within the tri-partite framework of the ILO.

The Communists then resorted to a procedural maneuver to prevent formal adoption of a resolution presented by U.S. Worker Delegate Rudolph Faupl.

The resolutions committee had recommended the conference's adoption of Faupl's proposal for ILO action on the problems particular to performers and technical workers in the entertainment field.

At one of its windup plenary sittings, the conference endorsed the resolution by a vote of 172 in favor and none against, with 58 abstentions.

But by abstaining in mass rather than voting against the proposal, the Communists assured that the total of yes and no votes fell four short of the 176 needed to make the quorum required for formal adoption.

Communist Strategy

The Communist delegates defended their maneuver by asserting that ILO action on behalf of workers in the field of entertainment was not urgent.

Earlier, the conference unanimously adopted a proposal Faupl had co-sponsored with other representives of free workers urging the 119 ILO member states to assist poorer countries by strengthening "international cooperation for development, especially in the economic and social field."

In his major address to the conference, ILO Dir. Gen. David A. Morse reminded the delegates that the protection of "fundamental rights and freedoms has always been and must always remain a basic concern of the ILO."

This was one of the areas where Morse said he would "like to see the ILO achieve some substantial and lasting results in the years ahead."

But Morse, a former U.S. assistant secretary of labor, complained of the "relatively meager resources" that member states were making available to the ILO.

The 1968 budget, of $24,836,091 voted by the conference represented "only the smallest increase" over the ILO's level of activities of recent years, he said.

Governments, Morse declared, must decide "whether they have sufficient confidence in the ILO to invest in it as an instrument for greater prosperity, for progress and for peace."

The conference completed its technical work by adopting a series of new international standards on social security both in industry and agriculture.

These extend and broaden the minimum coverage that governments are asked to assure through old-age, disability and survivor insurance.

The conference also prepared a preliminary draft of standards to be adopted at next year's session for the protection of agricultural workers and farmers who do not own the land they till.

At the one-day session it held following the conference, the ILO's governing body elected Robert Ago, Italian government delegate, as its chairman for one year. A professor of law and political science, Ago has held the office once before.

Jean Moeri, popular Swiss trade union leader, was again reelected the executive group's worker vice chairman.

Negroes, Latins Found Victims of 'Rankest' Bias

Lubbock, Tex.—An example of "the rankest kind" of discrimination against Latin Americans and Negroes was exposed here by a National Labor Relations Board examiner's decision in a case involving the Farmers' Cooperative Compress, a Lubbock firm.

Examiner Alba B. Martin found the company guilty of a long list of unfair labor practices in refusing to bargain in good faith with the Packinghouse Workers on wages and working conditions, including the elimination of racial discrimination.

The union sought a clause that would guarantee equal wages for equal work to the company's Negroes and employes of Mexican or Latin American background. Martin found that while management finally agreed to a non-discrimination clause, it refused the union's request that any charge of discrimination be decided by arbitration and demanded the sole right to judge such charges.

The examiner cited numerous instances in which he found the company was paying Latin American employes less than "Anglos" doing the same work.

He called the case of one employe, Jesse Ruiz, "the rankest kind of discrimination." Ruiz was paid 30 cents an hour less than five or six "Anglos" over a period of seven months, even though he did exactly the same work, Martin noted.

Looking over the evidence as a whole, he found that the discrimination was intentional and that the company "considered Latin and Negro employes as docile, cheap labor, and intended to keep them in a condition of servitude."

The UPWA won a representation election at the company in December 1965. The union sought to negotiate an initial contract for eight months in 1966. Unsuccessful, it struck the plant in September 1966.

Martin also found that management had illegally tried to interfere with the workers' right to strike. He ordered the firm to cease and desist from all its illegal activities and bargain with the union in good faith.

Cardcheck Vote Won At Coast Vineyards

with the aid of the labor movement at many U.S. locations. (Related story, Page 1.)

The Almaden card-count was conducted at vineyards where the wine firm grows grapes for its own brands of wines.

Kircher said he expects that elections will be conducted next at the giant DiGiorgio orchards—the D'Antoni and New England ranches—at Marysville and Yuba City, Calif. They were agreed upon last year after the UFWOC organizing campaign at DiGiorgio's Sierra Vista ranch near Delano, its King ranch in the Bakersfield area and its Barrego Springs orchard in San Diego county.

UFWOC won all three, but the harvest season was over by the time agreement was reached on additional election procedures. The parties agreed that votes at the other locations would be held this year when employment is at its peak—in July or August.

"In addition, we expect within the next few weeks to get consent for elections at the Paul Masson vineyards in the Napa and Salinas valleys," Kircher said. "Also we anticipate a similar agreement for the big Gallo vineyards in the San Joaquin Valley."

UFWOC also announced the start of a union organizing campaign at grape-growing operations of the Guimarra Vineyards Corp., in Bakersfield, through the San Joaquin Valley and north to Mt. Shasta. Guimarra is known as the largest fresh-grape-growing firm in the U.S., the union said.

All of UFWOC's gains in winning bargaining rights for farm workers have been scored through strikes and subsequent efforts of state mediators, since farm workers are exempt from the protections of the National Labor Relations Act.

Last May, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz both urged in testimony before a House Labor subcommitte that the act be extended to migrant workers.

Meany said "simple justice" demands that farm workers be given the same right that other workers have to organize with the full power of the law behind them, and to bargain collectively with their employers for better wages and working conditions.

Farm workers trying to organize have experienced "firings, blacklists, yellowdog contracts, even arrest on trumped-up charges," Meany told the subcommittee. Wirtz testified that the nation has "paid a high price" for excluding farm labor laws.

"It has meant the consignment of millions of people to poverty," the labor secretary declared.

Last April the AFL-CIO farm union won the biggest agricultural wage and benefit package in its history in an arbitration award establishing its first contract with the DiGiorgio Corp. Its trailblazing provisions included a 25-cent per hour wage boost, a basic minimum wage of $1.65 an hour, unemployment insurance, a health, welfare and pension fund, a union shop and a union-operated hiring hall, with job preference for those with seniority in service.

SENATORS WHO CAME to the Rio Grande Valley for hearings on extension of collective bargaining rights to farm workers took time out to see at first-hand how the workers live. From left, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.); Baldemar Diaz, a member of the United Farm Workers Organizing Committee; AFL-CIO Field Rep. David T. Lopez; Sen. Ralph W. Yarborough (D-Tex.), and UFWOC Vice Pres. Gilbert Padilla.

Texas Melon Strikers Tell Story Of Beatings, Ranger Harassment

members, representatives of the Texas State AFL-CIO, the Rio Grande Valley Central Labor Council, church groups and volunteers, including a 4 foot, 11 inch college girl who described how three tall, booted and armed Texas Rangers converged on her to wrest away a picket sign.

Two physicians testified to the beatings inflicted on strikers by law enforcement officers.

The transcript of the hearings, Williams said, "will amount to powerfully persuasive evidence of a pattern of official behavior which is contrary to the public policy of the United States."

Noting that the commander of the Ranger detachment, Capt. A. Y. Allee, had not responded to an invitation to testify, Williams said:

"There has been a great deal of testimony that Capt. Allee and Rangers under his direction have trespassed upon private property, made numerous arrests without proper cause, used physical force far beyond that required to take a subject into custody, participated in acts of strike breaking, and committed other infringements of personal and property rights.

"That testimony stands uncontradicted by Allee."

The general manager of La Casita Farms, Roy Rochester, stalked angrily out of the hearing room shortly before he was to take the stand. In his place, a La Casita attorney testified in opposition to extension of the National Labor Relation Act to farm workers.

He contended the La Casita workers didn't want a union. When asked by Kennedy what initiative La Casita is taking to let its workers decide by a free election whether they wanted union representation, the lawyer was saved from answering by the intervention of Fannin.

"That's not the normal procedure in a labor dispute," Fannin said.

The Arizona Republican said to Kennedy that he understood the company lawyer was saying "that he doesn't have any labor problems and you are saying he should create one."

Asked why hundreds of charges against union members remained untried, some for as much as one year, County Atty. Randall Nye said he feared union demonstrations at the hearings. He promised the subcommittee to call all cases for trial within two weeks.

Chief Deputy Sheriff Raul Pena drew loud laughter from the subcommittee and the audience when he admitted candidly, "We try some cases . . . some times."

Williams said the subcommittee decided on hearings in the Texas Valley after receiving requests from the AFL-CIO union and reviewing the findings of the Texas Advisory Committee to the U.S. Civil Rights Commission.

The civil rights committee and an investigating group of four state senators found independently that the Rangers and local police appeared to be acting in concert with the growers to put down the strike by force.

Joint Training Program Set for Detroit Crafts

Detroit, Mich.—A cooperative program to prepare and train some 200 young people, most of them Negroes, for apprenticeship programs will be undertaken by the Trade Union Leadership Council under a contract with the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Apprenticeship & Training.

The agreement, which provides for the allocation of $94,980 from Manpower Development & Training Act funds, was signed in the TULC headquarters here.

Cooperating in the development and administration of the program are the Detroit Building Trades Council and the Michigan Building Trades Council. The staffs of the TULC, which is predominantly Negro, and of the two building trades units will work together to develop job opportunities in trades open to apprenticeship training and in recruiting applicants.

BAT Regional Dir. William C. Webb, who represented Sec. of Labor Willard Wirtz at the signing, said the goal of the program is to open apprenticeship programs to more minority group members and to anticipate the work of preparation for apprenticeship tests.

Classes are expected to include from 25 to 75 youths, depending on the number of apprenticeship openings at the time, and to run from four to 10 weeks. One of the high points of the instruction will be mock interviews aimed at familiarizing the recruits with the screening sessions held by the different joint apprenticeship committees.

The personnel and other resources of federal and local agencies in the Detroit area, including BAT and civil rights groups, will be utilized in various phases of the program.

The contract was signed for the TULC by Pres. Robert Battle III and by Webb, acting for Wirtz. Also present were Sec.-Mgr. Jack Wood of the Detroit Building Trades Council, and Deputy Manpower Administrator Neil B. McArthur.

First Mexican Border Job Center Opened by United Farm Workers

San Diego, Calif.—The first in a projected string of farm worker education and job information centers along the U.S.-Mexican border was opened in nearby San Ysidro.

The AFL-CIO United Farm Workers Organizing Committee, sponsor of the project, described its purpose as two-fold:

- To educate farm workers, most of them of Mexican background, in the goals and methods of organized labor.
- To help match workers to available jobs. In the latter respect, the centers will serve as a form of "hiring halls."

AFL-CIO Dir. of Organization William L. Kircher and UFWOC Dir. Cesar Chavez described the project at a press conference in the San Diego County AFL-CIO office.

Kircher said San Diego was chosen as the site for the initial center because of the excellent cooperation between labor here and nearby unions in Mexico, and because many farm workers pass through here en route to jobs in California.

Stressing the need for "close working relationships" between the U.S. and Mexican labor movements, Kircher added:

"Poverty does not stop at a border. Unionization will break down exploitation of all workers and make possible better lives for all."

He said Fidel Velazquez, head of CTM, the Mexican labor federation, had pledged full support for the project.

Hands-Across-Border

Chavez said that most Mexican workers have no knowledge of how the labor movement functions in the United States.

"If we can show them how a strike is sometimes necessary to bring good to all, they'll be less likely to cross a picket line set up by their brother workers," he pointed out.

AFL-CIO Assistant Regional Dir. Irwin De Shetler said that "this is a hands-across-the-border project that will bring great benefits to UFWOC and ultimately the entire labor movement."

Roberto Luevano Aguayo, CTM general secretary in Tijuana, said unionists in Mexico will welcome the project because it will benefit them, just as it benefits U.S. labor.

"Our aims are the same," he asserted.

Fred Martinez, a veteran San Diego labor leader who is bilingual, will direct the center here. Announcements explaining its function will be placed in Mexican newspapers and radio stations, UFWOC said.

The next center is slated to open soon in Calexico, and another will be opened in the Rio Grande Valley in the fall.

IBEW Strikers Approve Pact At RCA Plants plan include an increase in the minimum benefit from $2.70 per month times years of service to $4.50 a month, broadening of widows' benefits to cover the surviving spouse; and a hike in interest rates from 2.5 to 3.5 percent for those withdrawing from the pension fund before reaching retirement age.

Other gains include a provision for payment of double time after 11 hours, instead of the former 12; a joint time study committee; and numerous improvements in local supplemental agreements.

Workers involved produce radio, television and phonographic records and equipment at plants in Indianapolis, Bloomington and Marion, Ind.; Findlay, O.; Meadowlands and Lancaster, Pa., Rockaway, N.J., and West Palm Beach, Fla. An IBEW local of 163 members at Hollywood, Calif., is newly covered, union negotiator Lawson Wimberly said.

Earlier agreements had been reached with RCA by the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers and the Technical Engineers.

The Health Dollar

THERE IS NO quick and easy solution to the runaway costs of health care. But it is possible to provide better value for the health dollar—including the negotiated dollar put into health and welfare plans and the tax dollar paid out in government programs.

We know some of the answers. There is an obvious need for more efficient use of doctors, nurses and semi-professional health aides. Preventive care that keeps people well is cheaper in the long run than curing illness. A coordinated, communitywide hospital system would avoid needless duplication of expensive equipment. Encouragement of non-profit, group health plans and prescribing and making available low-cost drugs which are identical to costly brands makes sense and saves dollars.

The problem is to bring this about. The government can lead the way through stricter standards and cost controls under medicare and other public programs. Pressure must also come from the consumers of health service, from unions and other concerned groups in the community.

The trade union movement, which has done so well in bargaining for health insurance dollars, must make sure that the sellers of health services, including hospital administrators and local medical societies, do not dilute these gains.

Labor will fight cut-rate services subsidized by low-paid hospital workers. Its goal is a full dollar's value through a more efficient system of delivering health care.

An AIFLD Milestone

REDEDICATION rather than self-congratulation is the theme of the fifth anniversary milestone of the American Institute for Free Labor Development.

The AIFLD's accomplishments are statistically impressive. They can be measured in terms of training programs and classes that have reached tens of thousands of Latin American trade unionists. They can be tabulated in the numbers of cooperatives, credit unions, health clinics, in multi-million dollar financing of workers' housing projects and in gifts of typewriters to union offices.

AIFLD graduates of the advanced training programs are in the front lines of the fight for democratic trade unionism in their home countries—and for the decent wages needed to enable workers to buy the goods they produce.

But the greatest tribute to AIFLD is its continuing adherence to the concept that lies behind the unique cooperation of U.S. labor, business and government to advance free trade unionism in the Americas.

That concept was expressed five years ago in the statement announcing the start of the AIFLD program. It said, in part:

"The essential and, we think, inspirational aspect of the institute is . . . an effort not to dictate but simply to assist free and independent people to strengthen in their own countries a free and independent trade union movement as a vital element in the achievement and preservation of democracy itself."

Not all of Latin America's problems can be solved by stronger unions. As George Meany told Washington newsmen recently, "There is still too much money being spent for military hardware in these countries and too little being spent on the welfare of the people."

But, as Meany pointed out, without effective, independent unions, no modern nation can be both economically strong and politically democratic. The AIFLD, thanks to the dedicated efforts of trade unionists on both sides of the border, is making its contribution to these twin goals.

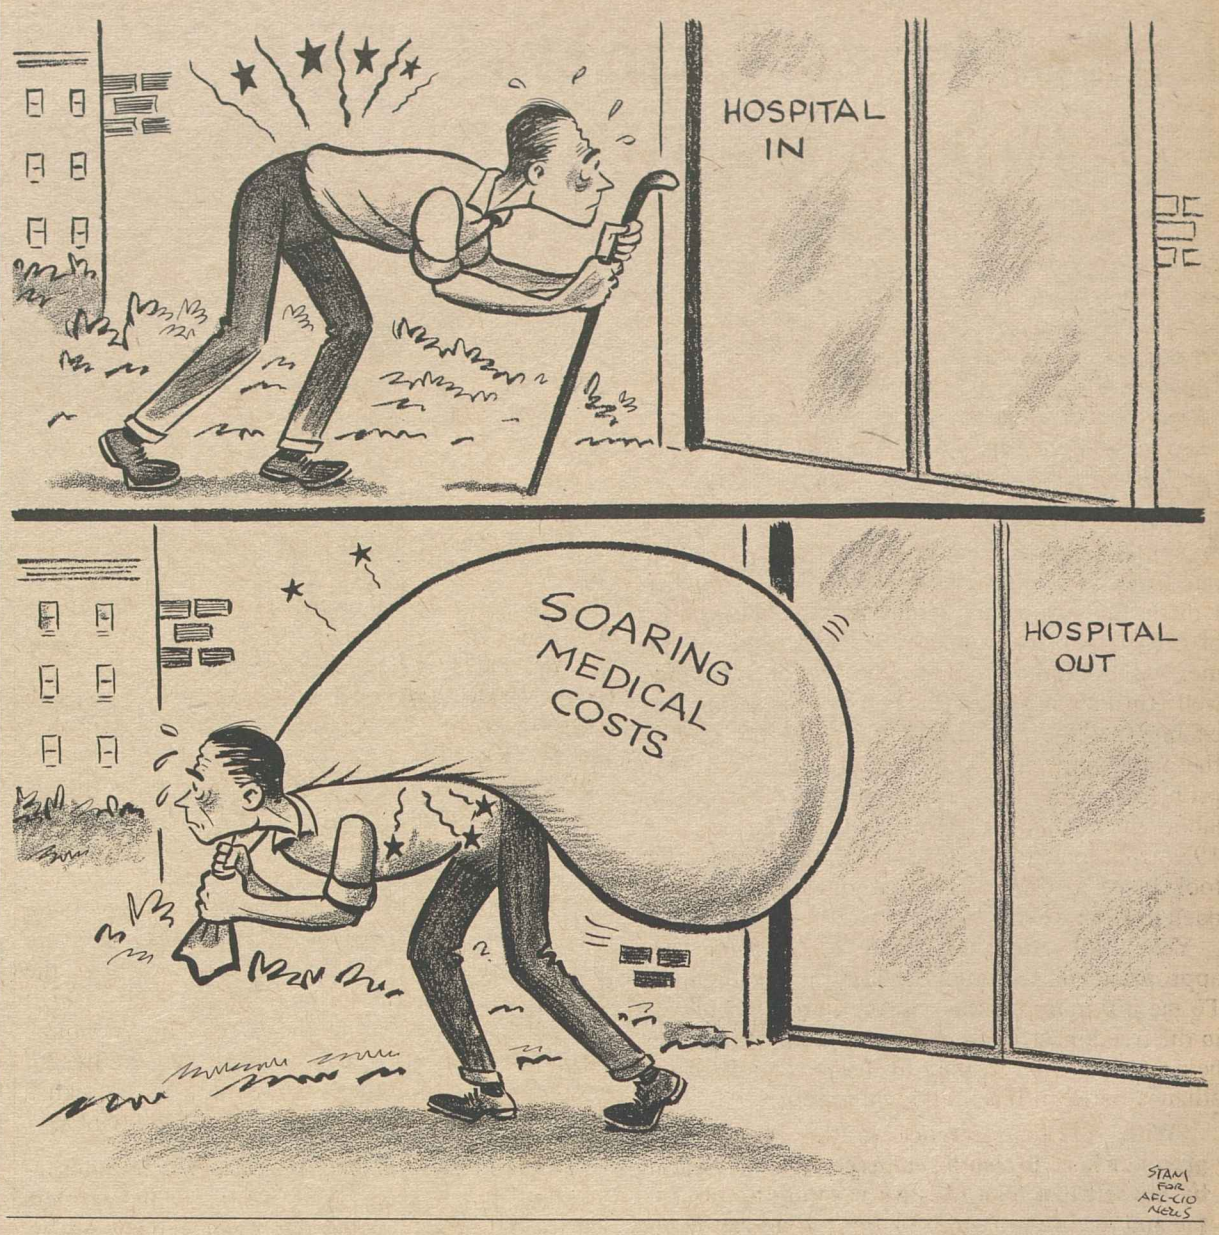
Chronic Backache



Dubinsky Resolution:

N. Y. Constitutional Convention Urged to Affirm Labor's Rights

The following is excerpted from a presentation by AFL-CIO Vice Pres. David Dubinsky before the New York State Constitutional Convention, June 12, 1967.

ORGANIZED LABOR has had to travel a long, hard road to achieve its present position. Barely a century-and-a-half ago, workers who formed trade unions were brought before the courts as criminal conspirators. It took a great deal of effort by labor, many changes on the statute books and fundamental shifts in the courts for trade unions to achieve their proper place in economic society.

Those changes in our laws were embodied in two fundamental documents which I believe warrant clear and simple repetition in our constitution. They are a declaration of the fundamental right of workers to self organization and the freedom to exercise that right free of partisan injunctions.

At the end of the last century, the Sherman Act was passed to limit business monopolies. But the courts quickly distorted its purpose, and applied it to workers and their unions.

In 1914, Congress tried to end this distortion of its purpose by enacting the famous section 6 of the Clayton Act. There it laid down the basic principle that "the labor of a human being is not a commodity or article of commerce." That fundamental principle was later embodied in the Constitution of New York State and is the key to labor's status in the state.

When Pres. Wilson signed the Clayton Act, he declared that: "Justice has been done to the laborer. His labor is no longer to be regarded as if it were merely an inanimate object of commerce . . ."

Samuel Gompers, then president of the American Federation of Labor, hailed Section 6 as the "Industrial Magna Carta." He proclaimed that its words were "sledge-hammer blows to the wrongs and injustices so long inflicted upon the workers."

But Wilson's optimism and Gompers' high hopes were misplaced. Within six years, the courts again put an end to the intentions of Congress. In 1920, over the protests of Brandeis, Holmes and Clarke, the U.S. Supreme Court held that the Clayton Act did not extend any new rights to labor. Overnight, the industrial Magna Carta disappeared and labor was again left unprotected against indiscriminate injunctions and the threat of anti-trust laws.

Real relief to labor from these evils came in the Norris-LaGuardia Act of 1932. That law defined a "labor dispute" and forbade federal courts from issuing injunctions in such disputes. This fundamental principle was applied to New York State courts when it put on the statute books of the state a similar anti-injunction act.

So far, all I have described were defensive measures for labor.

The Wagner Act brought about a revolutionary change in our industrial relations thinking. For the first time, labor acquired positive rights. An employer, as a matter of law, became obligated and had a duty—to bargain in good faith with the majority representative of his workers concerning the terms and conditions of employment.

This new philosophy of labor strengthened not only labor, but also the economy of the country as a whole.

In response to the spirit of the times, New York State enacted our present law which incorporated the principles of the Wagner Act, commonly referred to as the "Little Wagner Act."

BUT WHAT a liberal legislature may give, a reactionary legislature may take away. I do not expect that our New York State legislature will ever become so misguided as to attempt to take away the hard-won rights of organized labor. But one cannot tell what may happen in times of prejudice and in moments of hysteria.

We all know that there are other states which have enacted reactionary anti-labor laws seeking to undermine the legitimate functions of labor unions. I am sure that we would not want to see that happen in New York State.

I therefore propose that in writing a new Constitution, the basic principles of the Wagner Act and the protective principles of the Norris-LaGuardia Act—both of which are now on the statute books of our state—become a part of the new Constitution. I am introducing a resolution today to that effect and I ask that it be referred to the proper committee.

We are writing a charter of progressive government for a state of free men. Let us enshrine in a permanent place in that document those hard-won rights of labor, which have now become a permanent part of the fabric of our lives. Let us affirm beyond future doubt the rights of labor, and the dignity of the working man.

Past Is Prologue:

Labor-Civil Rights Unity Called Essential in Battle on Poverty

The following is excerpted from a speech before the Arkansas AFL-CIO convention in Hot Springs by Ernest Green, one of the Negro students who desegregated Little Rock's Central High School in 1957. He is now director of the joint apprenticeship training program in New York City sponsored by the A. Philip Randolph Institute and the Workers Defense League in cooperation with the local AFL-CIO and Building & Construction Trades Council.

I WANT TO THANK YOU for your generous applause which is much more friendly than the one I received on the day, several years ago, when I made my first public appearance in the politics of Little Rock. But that, as you may well remind me, was a different kind of audience, and you may well consider my presence before you as another example of the fact that it has been the fate of the labor movement to be asked to deal with problems that other people create. I'm sure the labor movement in Arkansas had no idea in 1957 that one of the ghosts of the events that took place at Central High would one day come back to haunt them.

Yet, in all seriousness, there is something very appropriate and symbolic about my being here. To me it symbolizes the part that labor has played in the freedom struggle as well as the part it is now being called upon to play in the new stage of the alliance between black and white poor.

With specific reference to the Negro, my presence here is also a reminder that the Negro by himself can take his own revolution only so far and no further—that by himself he can fight for better public education, desegregated public facilities, and voting rights, but beyond those points he can go no further without the active, willing, and energetic cooperation of a larger coalition of forces, the chief element of which must be the trade union movement.

Almost a decade before the civil rights movement reached its peak, nine of us in Little Rock took our lives in our hands by attempting to desegregate that school. Why? Because we believed at the time that Central High offered, in a way that the all-Negro schools did not, the best chance of preparing ourselves for a better future.

The events of the past 10 years have made some significant changes. There were those who said in 1957 that we would wreck the school system. But I am glad to notice that Central High School is standing, and that standards have, if anything, improved. People can now eat in whatever restaurants they please, and stay in whatever hotels they can afford. This convention is integrated, and we all know that it wasn't too many years ago that integrated facilities for any meeting, including union meetings, were not available. (I know the Arkansas AFL-CIO was a pioneer in this.)

Yet, all of these changes have not altered the basic economic problems of most of the people.

The slums of the South and even some in the North are occupied not by Negroes alone but also by whites. Both are victimized by inadequate jobs at substandard pay. Both want better education, which they either can't get or can't afford. Both are being cut back and being cut out by automation. Both are being used by union-busting industries as the cheapest source of labor in the South. Both are being forced to work in shops where unions cannot bargain, and if it weren't for a federal minimum wage, black and white workers in the South would still be earning less than a dollar an hour.

It is no accident that those who sought to establish the labor movement in the South were terrorized by more beatings, killings, and maimings than they encountered in any other region of the United States. It is no accident that there are more economically depressed whites living in the South than there are poor Negroes. It is no accident that the South is the bastion of right to work laws that still impair the effective functioning of the trade union movement; and it is no accident that the crime rate in white southern slums is as high and in some instances higher than in Negro slums.

Though Negroes tolerate the existence of these conditions no more than anybody else, they are not surprised by it; they understand how the system works, and what it is trying to do. But it would seem to me that the social and economic deprivation that blights the lives and futures of so many white families in the South is too high a price to pay to maintain a sense of whiteness.

IF ALL THIS is true, then there is no alternative but that Negroes, white workers, and farmers must unite behind the labor movement in its struggle against unemployment, low wages, discrimination, union-busting and poverty.

My own experience with the building trades in New York City only emphasizes the fact that we are desperately in need of an alliance between civil rights and labor to help create more jobs and improve standards of living; and as we are seeing in New York on a limited scale, this alliance can work. But we must go further, and strive towards uniting black and white working people behind programs to tear down slums, rebuild sections of our cities, and call for full employment programs.

This same kind of cooperation can and should take place in Arkansas as well as in other states. Otherwise there will not be enough jobs for the black worker and no more for the white worker, and they will both be left to scramble and fight against each other for the few jobs that will exist.

No one can dispute the contributions that unions have already made to the achievement of a better standard of living for millions of our people, including Negroes. Yet we need a policy of non-discrimination from all unions. We need to work together for higher wages for the poor and full and fair employment. We need more apprenticeship openings.

I have no illusions. I know the problems are not easy. You in the labor movement have met the challenge of social crisis before, and there is no reason why we cannot do it again.

Cites Strikebreaking Actions:

Kircher Hits Texas Rangers For Aiding Struck Growers

TEXAS RANGERS and local law enforcement officials have been used by employers trying to break the year-old farm workers' strike in the Rio Grande Valley, the AFL-CIO's chief organizer charged.

The Rangers are "squarely on the side of the employers" and consider it their job to help get the crop harvested, produced and marketed, "despite the fact that a strike is going on," said Organization Dir. William L. Kircher. He made the charges on the network radio interview, Labor News Conference, aired Tuesday at 7:35 p.m., EDT, on the Mutual Broadcasting System.

Rangers have "physically beaten" strikers and "literally shoved back into the fields" workers who have tried to leave their jobs and join the strike, Kircher said.

He reported that he had met with Gov. John B. Connally (D) on the Rio Grande Valley situation. Shortly thereafter, the governor ordered substantial reduction of the Ranger force in the strike area, Kircher said.

He noted that the governor "made quite a point of the fact that my meeting with him had nothing to do with his decision. "I don't care whether it did or not," he declared, saying the important thing is that nearly all the Rangers were removed. "We are very happy" about the governor's order, he added.

KIRCHER NOTED that a nationwide consumer boycott has been launched against products of strikebound growers in the Rio Grande Valley.

"We are asking anybody who finds melons that have little labels on them that say 'Starr County, Texas,' or 'La Casita,' not to buy them, because they are helping to inflict conditions of poverty on them every time they do," he said.

Reporters questioning him on the AFL-CIO produced public affairs program were Stanley Levey of the Scripps-Howard Newspapers and Sam Sharkey, of the Newhouse Newspapers.

Washington Window

By Press Associates, Inc.

NOW THAT the Johnson Administration has given every indication that it will press for a tax boost to meet the costs of the Viet Nam war, there are members of Congress who feel that a bit of tax reform might be in order, too.

Whatever tax bill eventually is submitted, it will open the door to amendments designed to close some of the more obvious loopholes in the law that have grown up over the years.

Sen. Gaylord Nelson (D-Wis.) has been conducting a steady campaign in recent months to get one of the worst loopholes plugged up—tax-exempt industrial bond financing that not only cost the Treasury huge sums but encourages industrial pirating, runaway shops and anti-union activities.

Nelson warned that "some time soon Congress will have to face the issue head-on of the abuse of municipal financing for private ventures." He has introduced legislation that would put an end to the industrial bond racket that now flourishes in 35 states, in some states as a means of enticing industry from other areas and in some as a protective device to keep their present industry from running away.

The legislation has nine co-signers in the Senate. Similar legislation has been introduced in the House by Rep. Henry Reuss and Rep. Clement Zablocki, Wisconsin Democrats.

ORIGINALLY Congress voted tax exemption for industrial bonds as a means of encouraging new industry in Appalachia and similar areas desperately in need of development. Over the years the privilege has been steadily expanding as a means of permitting the states and even local communities to raid one another.

Here is a summary of some of the major abuses:

● The Investment Bankers Association, which is afraid that abuse of tax-exempt industrial bonds will imperil normal community financing, estimates that up to 1 billion dollars of such bonds were issued in 1966 severely eroding normal income tax collections.

● The gimmick is more and more being used by wealthy corporations. In 1966 two-thirds of the bonds were issued for the benefit of eight large corporations. Sec. of the Treasury Henry H. Fowler has commented that many corporations that obviously don't need financial help are profiting from tax-exempt bond issues and that the whole question of the exemption should be reviewed.

● Industrial piracy is of deep concern to such areas as New York City and many northern industrial states which have been the victims of industrial bond issues in other—mostly Southern— states. Nelson recited the case of one Milwaukee firm which moved part of its operation to Kentucky to take advantage of a brand new $6.5 million plant built with the proceeds of a tax free bond issue. The move cost Milwaukee 750 skilled jobs and a $5 million payroll.

● One aspect of the "runaway shop" part of the industrial bond gimmick has been the use to which it has been put by anti-union employers. Northern employers who are determined to resist organization of their plants have been the target of widespread, national advertising calling on them to transfer their operations to fine, new plants with a local, docile labor population. The records of the NLRB are filled with cases where local communities have ganged up on unions even more viciously than employers themselves.

The AFL-CIO Executive Council last February denounced present industrial bond financing as a "growing menace" and urged Congress to end the "malpractice."

It is increasingly clear that other segments of the nation are equally disturbed by the practice and that introduction of a tax boost measure would be an opportune moment for Congress to correct one of the worst of the current tax loopholes.

Pacts Avert New Strike:

Avco Workers Ratify 53c Wage Package

Stratford, Conn.—Contracts with wage gains totaling 53 cents an hour were ratified by Auto Worker locals representing 5,200 Avco Corp. workers shortly before no-strike injunctions under the Taft-Hartley Act were due to expire.

UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther and Vice Pres. Leonard Woodcock, who were called into Washington negotiations by federal mediators, said the settlements provide "substantial progress never before achieved" at Avco's Lycoming Div. plants here.

The plants make helicopter engines and parts for the Defense Dept. Last April the Administration obtained an injunction to halt a walkout. Members of UAW Local 1010, representing 4,600 production and maintenance workers, and Local 376, with 600 office-clerical employes, were forced to return when the court ruled their production essential to the national defense. The 80-day no-strike period was due to expire July 6.

Both locals ratified new three-year agreements containing parallel benefits tailored to unit working conditions.

The Local 1010 settlement provides wage increases averaging 18 cents an hour the first year, with 10 cents retroactive to Apr. 16; 17 cents the second year, and 18 cents the third; improved cost of living protection, night shift premium of 10 percent, an additional wage boost of 10 cents an hour for skilled workers, and an automatic wage increase for shop clerical workers.

Other improvements were made in sick leave allowances, hospital-medical benefits and other health and welfare programs. In layoffs, employes will draw supplemental unemployment benefits instead of the extended layoff benefits formerly provided.

A "vastly improved" pension plan provides benefits of $4 a month times years of service starting next Jan. 1 and rising to $4.75 a year later. The former benefit rate was $2.70.

The plan also provides for cash vesting after 10 years of service instead of at age 40, as before. There is an automatic survivor benefit and the same increase in pension benefits for present retirees as for employes. The plan provides also that retirees will be covered by company-paid hospital-surgical insurance combined with medicare benefits.

The new contracts contain a number of local benefits, including auto-industry-type survivor benefits; jury duty pay up to 25 days per year, and new arbitration procedures.

The final settlement was worked out in two steps—with the aid of a three-member board of inquiry on non-economic issues, and on economic issues by union and management negotiators with the aid of the Rev. Leo C. Brown, S. J., chairman of the inquiry board; Under Sec. of Labor James J. Reynolds, and Deputy Dir. Robert H. Moore of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service.

Food Stamp Prices Slashed in Mississippi

The Agriculture Dept. has slashed the price of food stamps for thousands of destitute Mississippi families amid reports of hunger approaching starvation in some rural areas of the state.

Food stamps are sold to low-income families—in states participating in the program—at prices based on ability to pay. Those with little or no income have been charged $2 for each member of their family for stamps that can be used to buy food priced at about six times the cost of the stamps.

Now the poorest Mississippi families will only have to pay 50 cents a month per person for the same number of food stamps previously costing $2.

Since the food stamp distribution is on a twice-a-month basis, this means that a family of six that formerly paid $6 for $35 worth of food stamps each half-month now would have to pay only $1.50 for the same amount.

The cost reduction came after federal efforts to induce local welfare agencies to pay the cost of food stamps for the neediest families met with little success.

In an effort to overcome another phase of the problem, the Agriculture Dept. said it plans to recruit and train a corps of program aides, including Negroes from the communities, to cut through red tape and explain the working of the food stamp plan to families living in poverty. Currently only about 130,000 people in Mississippi are buying food stamps as compared with more than 200,000 who received direct food aid under the former surplus food distribution program.

A companion program will seek to encourage low-income families who need help but don't qualify for the lowest cost food stamps program to purchase stamps as a way of providing a better diet. They will receive their stamps at half-price for the first month they enroll in the program. No date has been set yet for the inauguration of the half-price program. One reason for the half-price offer, department officials said, is that many families buy groceries on credit and have little cash left after paying their bills.

Labor Awards Set For Aid to Retarded

Four awards recognizing outstanding accomplishments in behalf of the mentally retarded will be presented to labor representatives at the convention of the National Association for Retarded Children, to be held in October in Portland, Ore.

AFL-CIO Community Services Dir. Leo Perlis has notified all international and national unions and state and local central bodies of the detailed standards and criteria. The four categories are international unions, state central bodies, local bodies (union locals and central bodies), and individuals.

Additional information may be had by writing the association at 420 Lexington Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10017.

Bricklayers Sign Arizona Training Pact

Phoenix, Ariz. — The Arizona Bricklayers Joint Labor-Management Apprenticeship Committee under a contract with the Labor Dept. will start 20 jobless and disadvantaged young men in the northern part of the state on their way to journeyman status.

The bulk of the instruction will be given by journeyman members of Bricklayers Arizona Local 3 on the job site.

However, the recruits will take six weeks of pre-job elementary school instruction conducted by the State Vocational Education Dept., followed by 12 weeks of on-the-job training with selected employer-members of the Arizona Master Contractors' Association. The union also will give up to 6.5 hours a week of classroom instruction during this period.

Those who complete the training successfully then will be indentured into regular apprentice programs.

The contract is the federal government's second with the state's Bricklayers and their employers, and is designed for poorly-prepared but otherwise suitable prospects. As many as possible of the trainees will be chosen from among Neighborhood Youth Corps graduates.

The program is financed by a grant of $16,291 under the Manpower Development & Training Act.

A. R. Kinstley Dies, Retired Staffer

Ft. Worth, Tex.—A.R. (Sarge) Kinstley, assistant director of AFL-CIO Region XVII (Texas) until his retirement Feb. 1, 1965, died here at the age of 67.

He was a charter member of Boiler Makers Local 74, Houston, in the early 1920s and joined the former Oil Workers Houston Local 227 in 1936. He was local president and international vice president until 1952, when he became CIO regional director for Kansas and Western Missouri. He was named a special representative for the CIO following the merger of the Oil Workers and the former Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers into the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers early in 1955. He became assistant regional director after the AFL-CIO merger.

He is survived by his widow and two daughters.

Housing Co-op Project Slates 6,000 Units

New York—The United Housing Foundation, a labor-backed, non-profit cooperative, will sponsor a 6,000-family apartment project in Brooklyn for middle and low income families.

Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller announced at a press conference that New York State will finance a $121 million mortgage and advance seed money to purchase the 145-acre tract overlooking Jamaica Bay in the Canarsie section.

A special city tax formula will enable the apartments to be sold at modest down payments.

Jacob S. Potofsky, president of the United Housing Foundation and of the Clothing Workers, said monthly carrying charges for the apartments will average about $22-$23 a room. About 20 percent of the apartments will be available in the $18-$19 a room range, comparable to the rental of public housing.

The foundation has built or is building some 45,000 cooperative apartments in the New York area and the new Twin Pines Village will be second in size only to the giant Co-Op City in the Bronx, which will house 15,300 families.

Only 15 percent of the land in Twin Pines Village will be used for the apartment buildings — planned as 43 structures of 16 and 21 stories. Gardens and playgrounds will take up the rest.

Closer Links Urged Between EEOC, Labor

More avenues of cooperation should be opened between the labor movement and the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, according to AFL-CIO Civil Rights Dir. Don Slaiman.

He spoke at the second of 10 regional conferences for international union representatives and central labor body officers sponsored by the EEOC, held in Washington. About 100 union officials discussed the EEOC's policies and procedures and had an opportunity to meet EEOC regional personnel.

Charles (Red) Muntain and Marvin Rogoff, EEOC labor specialists, offered the union representatives assistance in developing programs.

The first of the conferences was held in April in Cincinnati, O. Additional meetings are planned during the coming year in other regions.

Local Labor Unit Alerts Home Buyers to Pitfalls

Garden Grove, Calif.—The Orange County AFL-CIO has set up a Real Estate Council to alert members to the wide variety of pitfalls surrounding the buying or selling of a home.

The unit was established by the central body on recommendation of a Real Estate Committee after an initial inquiry into problems facing local union members in all facets of home ownership, according to local AFL-CIO Exec. Sec. Peter J. Remmel.

Goals Cited

The Real Estate Committee, chaired by John B. Kulstad, specifically proposed that home owners be made aware of "forebearance" possibilities should they be faced with foreclosure, that mortgage interest escalation clauses be vigorously opposed, that efforts be pressed to cut costs in the buying and selling of homes, and that a general improvement in the practice of real estate be pursued as it affects individual home ownership.

Locals that affiliate with the real estate council pay a $25 annual membership fee. The council in return provides education services, advice and support for the highest professional standards in matters pertaining to home ownership.

"For self-protection," said Kulstad in a letter to the locals, "it is essential that union members become better educated on matters affecting their homes."

He urged union members to read carefully all papers presented for their signatures in connection with the purchase or sale of a home. To avoid misunderstandings and to assure legal enforcement, he added, all agreements and understandings must be in writing.

The council has lined up the services of a number of real estate brokers available to members at a reduced commission rate of 4 percent.

It also has conferred with members of Congress and the legislature with a view to legislation strengthening consumer protections.

The correct date for the annual convention of the Maryland-District of Columbia AFL-CIO, scheduled for Baltimore, is Aug. 14-17.

Pepper Pledges Legislation:

'Music for Peace' Program Proposed to AFM Delegates

By Gervase N. Love

Miami Beach—A "music for peace" plan along the lines of the nation's successful Food for Peace program was proposed by Rep. Claude Pepper (D-Fla.) in an address to the 70th convention of the Musicians.

"What could do more than music to eliminate hate in the world, to end discord and disharmony?" Pepper asked. "What could do more than music to bring the world into harmony?"

He said he planned to "do something" in Congress about his proposal, under which U.S. music units would be heard by audiences in other countries. He urged the delegates to press for support among their own representatives and senators.

Pepper also promised backing for a long-time AFM goal—amendment of the copyright laws to end a situation in which "the only money a performer receives for the record which he has made comes from his contract with the record company" and he is left without regular performance royalties. A correction, as proposed in a bill introduced by Sen. Harrison Williams (D-N.J.), is "only elementary justice," Pepper added.

"It seems to me," he asserted in discussing another area of AFM interest, "that when radio stations devote so very much of their air time to recorded music, they could and should have an employment average higher than one musician per station."

Rep. Frank Thompson, Jr. (D-N.J.), in a speech taped while he was in Geneva, as a member of the U.S. delegation to the Intl. Labor Organization conference, also promised support for the copyright law revision, but was dubious of its chances for enactment. He explained he expected Congress to "uphold the traditional custom of failing to protect performers' rights."

The "cultural boom" sparked in part by federal arts and humanities legislation, Thompson said, is symbolized chiefly by the steel and stone of new buildings and might more properly be described as a "bust" for musicians who have been left "to wage their own private war on poverty."

"The achieving of performing rights may take many years," he said, "whatever its form may be. Too many musicians have had to scrape just to get by . . . We must start to make an effort to help the musician make a decent living."

The union presented a gold life membership card to Vincent Lopez, veteran orchestra leader who was one of the first remote control broadcasters in the early days of radio, for "long and outstanding service to music."

Lopez, recuperating in the Miami area from a serious illness, reminisced about his long career and the musicians who had played with him, and had reunions over the floor microphones with several delegates who had been his sidemen nearly 50 years ago.

The committee charged with reporting on the services of Pres. Herman D. Kenin hailed him for leading the union to "new high levels of accomplishment."

Among gains it singled out were major breakthroughs in extending the rights of musicians in their relations with their employers and in their need for personal and family financial security, and the advancement of music as a profession and as "the keystone of this nation's relatively new and vigorous support of the performing arts."

A resolution directing the international executive board to work for the union label on records made by AFM members was referred to the president's office with a favorable recommendation. A proposal to raise dues by adding a 6 percent surcharge, to be divided between the international and the local, was defeated on recommendation of the finance committee.

A resolution directing the executive board to charter the Bermuda Federation of Musicians as an AFM local, proposed by a group of Canadian delegates, was referred to Kenin's office for study. Gen. Sec. Charles Vaucrosson of the Bermuda group spoke briefly and thanked the AFM for assistance in getting organized.

Other speakers included Gen. Counsel Henry Kaiser, who discussed legal problems the AFM must deal with, and Jerome Adler, AFM counsel in New York.

Election returns showed Vice Pres. Hal Davis chosen for his first full term following his appointment earlier this year to fill a vacancy. All incumbent members of the executive board were re-elected.

In other actions the convention urged passage of the public television bill, tightened bylaws and work rules, and called on members to work through local central labor bodies to stop the use of public funds for the purchase of texts and other books produced by the Kingsport, Tenn., Press, where five unions have been on strike for more than four years.

GOLD MEMBERSHIP CARD was presented to Vincent Lopez (right) at the Musicians convention in Miami Beach, Fla., for "long and outstanding service to music." Making the presentation to Lopez, a major orchestra leader for nearly a half-century and a pioneer in remote control radio broadcasting, are AFM Pres. Herman D. Kenin (center) and Sec.-Treas. Stanley Ballard.

Michigan Labor Girds For Legislative Battles

Grand Rapids—The Michigan AFL-CIO drafted a program of state legislative goals, re-elected the officers who will direct the fight for its adoption, and empowered the 1968 COPE convention to raise per capita taxes to provide funds needed to "meet the challenge of the jet age."

Nearly 1,000 delegates to the fifth biennial meeting of the state federation endorsed Pres. August Scholle's plea for an expanded political action program if labor "expects to do a political job in this state."

Scholle said tactics that proved successful for labor in the elections of 1948 are as antiquated today as those of 1848. Unlike the proponents of big business, he said, "we can't expect financial aid from the fat cats who raised $1 million for (Gov. George) Romney's campaign and chipped in for (Sen. Robert P.) Griffin's campaign too." Both are Republican incumbents.

The convention re-elected Scholle and Sec.-Treas. Barney Hopkins without opposition. Executive Vice Pres. William C. Marshall was re-elected, 349,321 to 62,238, over James Cookenmaster.

Scholle is rounding out 25 years as president of the state AFL-CIO and the former CIO state body. Hopkins has been in office since 1944 and Marshall since 1960.

Meeting for four days, the delegates adopted a series of policy resolutions that:

- Called for passage of industrial safety and health laws on national and state levels; urged Gov. Romney to sign a pending state law after enactment, and recommended that all union-management contracts contain clauses requiring safety codes of American Standards Association as minimum requirements.
- Urged more adequate financing of central bodies after hearing Executive Sec. Sam Ezelle of the Kentucky AFL-CIO call for full affiliation for all union locals with state and city AFL-CIO centers.
- Asked the Michigan Legislature to make registration and voting more convenient by establishing special registration centers, expanding the use of deputized registrars, and studying Sunday registration and registration by mail.
- Called on local unions to support Kingsport Press strikers financially and by pressing school boards to stop buying books produced at the Kingsport, Tenn., plant where 1,800 workers struck four years ago.

The convention also called for an increase of at least 50 percent in federal funds for the war on poverty; urged the President to "dust off" the "unused Full Employment Act" to relieve the plight of 3.8 million jobless, and asked a minimum wage of $2 an hour for migrant workers, decent housing and special schooling for their children.

New Jersey AFL-CIO Maps Fall Voter Drive

Newark, N.J.—The election of the state legislature next November drew the major attention of the New Jersey AFL-CIO convention here, attended by 1,500 delegates representing 400,000 union members.

Without a dissenting vote, delegates authorized a doubling of per capita dues from 5 to 10 cents a month. The action also meant a doubling of funds earmarked for the Committee on Political Education, which receives one-sixth of the per capita payments.

In his keynote address, State AFL-CIO Pres. Vincent J. Murphy told delegates that New Jersey labor has scored "unparalleled success" in the last two years in the legislature, winning passage of 28 labor-backed bills.

One of these, he noted, brought major gains in state unemployment benefits, including a provision for their payment to union members after seven weeks of a strike or lockout.

Murphy cited several reasons for labor's legislative success: one man, one vote reapportionment and the resulting election of a liberal, Democratic-controlled legislature in 1965, the progressive views of Gov. Richard J. Hughes (D), and unity in the labor movement.

Murphy warned that failure to re-elect the legislators who are friends of workers "could deprive us of all these resulting benefits."

State AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Charles H. Marciante told the delegates that re-election of legislators who "voted right" on labor issues "will require concentrated efforts in each of New Jersey's 21 counties and in most of 40 sub-districts."

Two other main speakers were AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, who saluted New Jersey labor for having "one of the most outstanding records of labor accomplishment in the nation," and COPE Dir. Al Barkan, who promised "all-out help" in the November election.

Ballot Box Remedy

Citing renewed agitation for laws to curb unions, Barkan said, "You are not going to stop these threats at the bargaining table or on the picket line. The only place to stop them is at the ballot box."

The convention unanimously adopted resolutions backing Pres. Johnson's policy in Viet Nam and calling for permanent protection of the territorial integrity of Israel.

Among other actions, the delegates approved a study of the advisability of the state AFL-CIO setting up its own auto insurance plan for union members, urged Congress to pass the on-site picketing bill, and asked for a ban on state industrial bonds issued as a means of "pirating" industry from other states.

Murphy, Marciante and other top officers were re-elected by acclamation.

Rail Retirement Board Issues Medicare Kit

Chicago—The Railroad Retirement Board announced that a free kit will be available July 1 for all railroad retirement beneficiaries enrolled in the medicare program. The kit, useful for keeping records of medical expenses, will be given to new beneficiaries when they file applications. Others may get it at the nearest RRB office.

ENLISTING the aid of AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany in the September drive for funds of the National Cystic Fibrosis Research Foundation is Melinda Ferrebee, the organization's 1967 national poster child.

Washington AFL-CIO Fills Education Post

Seattle, Wash.—Robert S. Johnson, a member of Seattle Typographical Union Local 202 and publisher of the labor-backed Auburn, Wash., Citizen until publication ceased on June 1, has been appointed education director for the State AFL-CIO.

The post was established by last year's convention. Johnson's duties will include the development of labor education programs for the state's public and parochial schools as well as for affiliates of the state central body.

'Union Name, Union Label':

"It would mock Samuel Gompers," he said, "to look upon this ship as a symbol of brute power rather than as an instrument of peace . . . the USS Samuel Gompers represents the armor of security."

He said the ship will sail the seas of the world as a symbol of freedom and hope and predicted that this newest ship of the navy "will be worthy of the men who built her and the name she bears."

Pres. B. A. Gritta of the AFL-CIO Metal Trades Dept. said that if Gompers were alive today he would be proud of the officers and men of the ship, the personnel of the Puget Sound Naval Shipyard, and the Bremerton Metal Trades Council and its 16 affiliates whose members made the ship possible.

'A Man of Peace'

"Samuel Gompers was a man of peace," Gritta said, "may she always sail the seas of the world in quest of peace."

At 2:55 p.m. Risch directed his executive officer, Cdr. C. E. Chinn, to put the ship in commission. The ensign, jack and commissioning pennant were hoisted smartly and the first watch was set. This was followed by the breaking of the personal four-star flag of Adm. J. J. Galatin, chief of naval materiel, who was in attendance at the ceremonies, along with other high ranking officers.

Mrs. Joseph Holmes, oldest granddaughter of Samuel Gompers and sponsor of the ship at its christening last year, was then introduced and she thanked the navy for this honor to her grandfather.

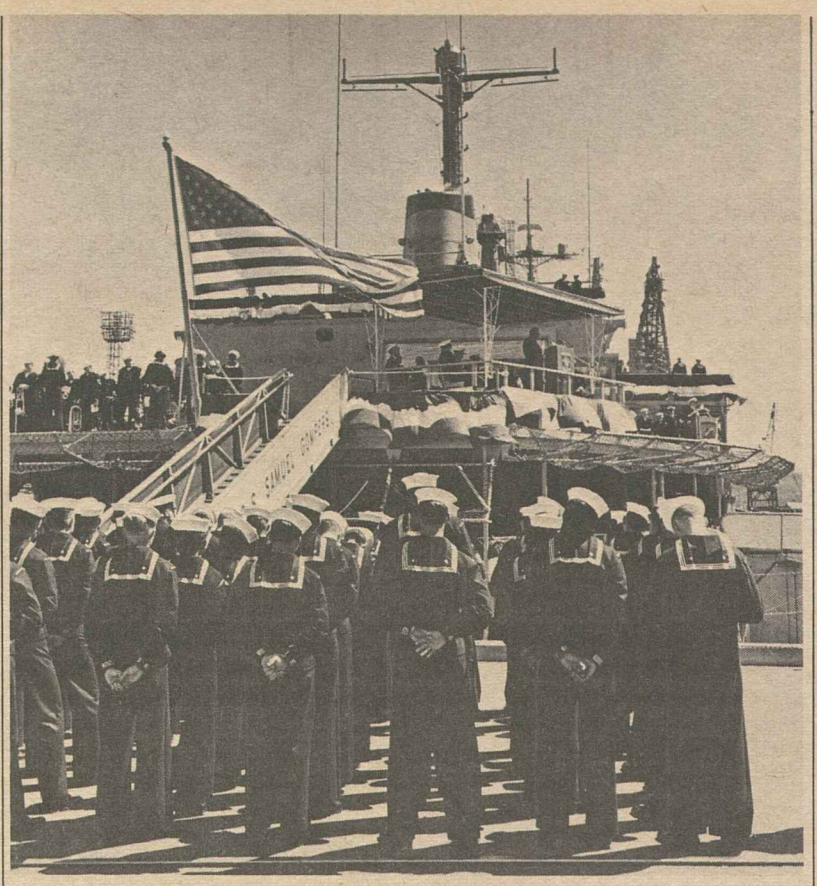
Risch, who is both an experienced naval aviator and destroyerman, thanked the national and local AFL-CIO representatives for their gifts of the ship's traditional silver service as well as four television sets and an AM-FM system for the enjoyment of the crew.

First of New Class

The Gompers is the first of a new class of destroyer tenders. Its mission will be to repair and support destroyer-type ships, including destroyer escorts and nuclear-powered guided missile frigates.

The ship is 643 feet in length, 85 feet in width and displaces 20,200 tons at full load. Her single screw power plant will drive her at a top speed in excess of 20 knots. She will be manned by 31 officers and more than 1,000 enlisted men and has accommodations for a flag officer and his staff.

During the christening ceremony last year, the Gompers was actually floating dockside when the traditional bottle of champagne was broken across its bow by Mrs. Holmes. At the commissioning, however, the ship was on blocks in dry dock with scarcely a drop of water beneath her—but she could be put to sea within a few hours virtually fully operational. It was one of the few times in naval history that a ship has been commissioned while in dry dock.



UNION LABEL, UNION NAME formally became part of the U.S. Navy when the Destroyer Tender Samuel Gompers, named in honor of the founder of the modern U.S. labor movement, was commissioned at the Puget Sound Naval Shipyard, Bremerton, Wash. AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, who brought the congratulations of organized labor, is shown speaking.

Federal Crackdown Hits Phone, Drug, Oil Firms

state and foreign rates by $120 million a year, about 3 percent. The rate cut does not apply to local telephone charges which are regulated by state rather than federal commissions.

Tough new rules covering advertising for non-prescription pain killers were proposed by the Federal Trade Commission, subject to modifications on basis of industry and public comments before Sept. 15.

Manufacturers spent more than $90 million last year advertising that their aspirin or pain killer is faster, lasts longer or upsets the stomach less, but the FCC said the different brands are all about the same.

Proof Required

Its proposed order would require manufacturers to back up claims of significant differences with proof and to list the ingredients they claim make their product superior by their common names.

In another area, the FTC served notice on the 19 major oil companies that produce 75 percent of the nation's gasoline that it will hereafter act quickly and sternly to crack down on tactics aimed at driving out independent competition.

It said the big companies have used their economic power to put small competitors out of business through price wars. But in competing among themselves, the FTC report said, the big companies use promotional gimmicks in place of lower prices.

"Rather than put a penny in the consumer's pocket," the FTC said, the major company "prefers to put a tiger in the consumer's tank or a raffle ticket in his hand."

The commission took no action on a series of long-pending complaints but instead sought to lay out guidelines for the future, pledging quick and stern enforcement.

In the short run, there is nothing in the FTC guidelines that would bring gasoline prices down. However, the commission argued that preserving competition from independents gives the consumer a price choice and is good for the industry.

Shipbuilders Upheld On Internal Appeals

Philadelphia, Pa.—The U.S. Court of Appeals here has upheld the Marine & Shipbuilding Workers' expulsion of a member for not exhausting his rights of appeal with the union before taking a grievance to the National Labor Relations Board.

The decision reversed an earlier NLRB ruling that the Shipbuilders had violated the National Labor Relations Act's section forbidding unions to coerce or restrain employes.

The case grew out of the discharge from membership of Edwin Holder, who had filed charges with his local claiming that the local president had caused his employer to discriminate against him. The local considered and dismissed the charges.

Although the Shipbuilders' constitution provides for an appeal to the international's executive board, Holder ignored this process and filed an unfair labor practice charge with the NLRB against the local.

The board dismissed this complaint and Holder was charged by his local with violating the international constitution. He was found guilty and expelled from membership. He then appealed to the international executive board, which upheld the expulsion.

Holder again went to the NLRB, this time charging that the union had illegally coerced him in the exercise of his rights under the law.

The board upheld him and ordered his reinstatement, along with relief from paying any back dues and reimbursement for any fringe benefits he might have lost.

In reversing this ruling of the NLRB, the Appeals Court noted that the same section of the act that protects employes' rights also sets forth the right of a union to prescribe its own rules on membership.

Judge William H. Hastie, writing the opinion, pointed out that "the union rule in question required only that the union be given a fair opportunity to correct its wrong," if one were committed.

"We do not see," he wrote, "how such a rule offends public policy or impedes the normal and proper administration of the act." In fact, he added, such a rule can relieve the board of "unnecessary grievances that can be settled within a union."

Joining Hastie in the unanimous decision of the three-member panel were Judges Collins J. Seitz and Ralph C. Brody.

House, Senate To Try Again In Rail Dispute

A deadlocked House-Senate conference committee will make a new effort to agree on railroad strike legislation on July 11, the day after Congress returns from a 10-day recess.

The labor-opposed Senate bill calls for compulsory arbitration if 90 days of mediation, fact-finding and negotiations fail to bring a voluntary settlement of the shopcrafts wage dispute.

The House bill likewise bars a strike during the 90-day period. But it stops short of compulsory arbitration if an agreement isn't reached.

Meanwhile the six unions representing 135,000 rail workers stayed on the job under a voluntary no-strike pledge, although they have been legally free to strike since June 19. The unions have charged that rail management hasn't made a serious effort to negotiate a settlement, counting on Congress to keep the workers from striking.

Farm Union Rights Pressed by Meany

Conditions Likened to 'Dark Ages'

By David L. Perlman

The "law of the jungle" will dominate labor relations in agriculture until farm workers have the legal right to organize and bargain with their employers, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany said at a Senate hearing.

Meany was the first witness heard as the Senate's Migratory Labor subcommittee resumed in Washington the hearings it had begun in the Rio Grande Valley of Texas, where police and employers have worked hand in hand to try to break a strike for recognition by the AFL-CIO United Farm Workers Organizing Committee.

Because there is no federal machinery to compel farm employers to bargain with a union, Meany said, "they must do what other workers had to do in the dark ages of labor history—scratch and claw and dig out their own little clearing in a hostile jungle."

It is the only segment of American labor, Meany noted, where workers still are "clubbed down or thrown in jail for attempting to organize," and where "the whole power of the community, the employers, the police, the courts and the so-called 'good citizens' of narrow minds and empty hearts, is thrown into the fight against them."

Family Farmer Aided

The family farmer would be [illegible] of the National Labor Relations Act to the larger farms, Meany stressed.

Half of the farms don't use any hired labor, Meany pointed out, and 6 percent of the farms account for 76 percent of the wage bill. In effect the family farmer is competing with his own labor against "the exploited workers hired by the corporation farmers, the factories in the field." The threat to the family farmer is not higher wages but "the perpetuation of low wages and miserable conditions."

Without unions, farm wages have fallen from 76 percent of the average factory wage to 36 percent, and while there once were fringe benefits on the farms and none in the factories, the situation is now reversed, Meany said.

In California, Texas and other states, Meany told the senators, farm workers "have made it clear that they are determined to be full-fledged members of American society . . . and we in the AFL-CIO are doing all we can to help them. It is right and proper for America, for it is just as un-American to discriminate

'Truth-in-Lending' Wins Approval in Senate, 92-0

STRONG AGREEMENT on need to extend National Labor Relations Act to farm workers was expressed at Senate Migratory Labor subcommittee hearings at which AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany testified. From left, Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller, Sen. Ralph W. Yarborough (D-Tex.), Subcommittee Chairman Harrison A. Williams, Jr. (D-N.J.), and Meany.

Solid Vote Climaxes Long Fight

A "truth-in-lending" bill passed the Senate, 92-0, after an uphill seven-year battle for legislation to enable consumers to compare credit and interest charges as well as price tags.

Sen. William Proxmire (D-Wis.), who steered the bill through the Banking & Currency Committee and then to unanimous passage, told the Senate at the start of debate:

"If any one person is responsible for the idea of truth in lending, it is our great former colleague, Sen. Paul H. Douglas of Illinois. Paul Douglas introduced this issue in 1960 and kept it alive for six long years while support for the measure gradually developed."

To move the bill to the floor, Proxmire had to give ground on some of the coverage of the measure, although the principle of full disclosure of interest and credit charges remained intact.

The bill exempts transactions in which the credit charge is less than $10 and first mortgages on homes. It allows most forms of department store revolving credit accounts to be stated in terms of monthly rather than annual interest rates.

On the bulk of consumer credit, however, buyers and borrowers would be told in advance the total cost of credit in dollars and cents and the annual interest rate. To avoid technical conflict with some state usury laws, interest charges could—until 1972—be expressed in terms of dollars per hundred, such

AFL-CIO Gives $50,000:

Labor Mobilizes Aid For Rubber Strikers

The labor movement rallied financial support for the Rubber Workers in the longest strike in the URW's history as negotiators and government mediators stepped up efforts to reach a contract settlement.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany announced that the federation's Executive Council has made a direct contribution of $50,000 to the Rubber Workers and waived all per capita payments from the union until further notice.

Meany called on all AFL-CIO affiliates to contribute as generously as their financial resources permit to support the URW strike.

With such assistance and support, he said, the strike can be brought to a successful conclusion.

Meanwhile, a breakthrough in the long dispute occurred in a tentative settlement covering 3,300 workers at General Tire Co. plants in Akron and Waco, Tex.

URW Pres. Peter Bommarito said the proposed settlement, reached by union and company negotiators in Cleveland, would provide a wage increase of 43 cents an hour over three years, plus 10 cents more for skilled trades in the first year. The general increase would be divided into steps of 15 cents an hour in each of the first two years and 13 cents the third year.

Other terms listed by the URW include an increase in Supplemental Unemployment Benefits from the current rate of 65 percent of regular wages to 80 percent. Pensions would be hiked to $5.50 per month times years of service as against $3.25 currently and present retirees would get an

Jobless Rate Hits 18-Month High at 4%

By Duane Emme

The nation's jobless rate jumped to 4 percent in June, its highest point in 18 months, the Labor Dept. reported. The rise of two-tenths of 1 percent from May was the biggest one-month increase since February 1965.

The department also reported that non-farm payrolls rose 790,000 between May and June to 66.1 million, greater than seasonally expected. Most of the gain was in government jobs.

The higher jobless rate occurred in the face of this payroll rise because of a sharp jump in the total civilian labor force—from 76 to 79 million over the month, a much greater than seasonal expansion.

Harold Goldstein, assistant commissioner of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, declined to predict what the unemployment rate might do in the next few months.

He termed the job picture in June "hard to figure," but pointed out that the rise in unemployment was at least partially due to a continuing shortage of jobs in manufacturing and construction.

Total joblessness for the month was 3.6 million, the Labor Dept. said, about the same as in June 1966 but up by 1.2 million from May and 200,000 more than seasonally expected.

Nearly 1.1 million of the unem-

NLRB Ruling Upheld Against J. P. Stevens

New York—The 2d U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled here that J. P. Stevens & Co., Inc., committed numerous illegal acts when it interrogated, intimidated and discharged employes to smash a union organizing drive in 20 of its Carolina plants in the early 1960s.

With minor modifications the court approved an order by the National Labor Relations Board that Stevens, a major textile firm, must reinstate 71 workers fired for joining the Textile Workers Union of America, and make them whole for all income lost from date of firing to the date of a bona fide offer of reinstatement.

The appeals courts ruling was the first since the TWUA and the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. filed NLRB charges in 1963 against Stevens, a firm which holds extensive government contracts. Last March the NLRB issued a second order against Stevens in the firing of 18 other union members. Two examiners' finding of additional illegal activities await board rulings.

Meany Sees New Vigor in Rights Drive

The civil rights movement and its friends will continue to broaden their fight against discrimination in all walks of life despite misunderstanding and provocations, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany declared in a message to the 58th convention of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Meany noted that NAACP activities were "crucial" in winning the "significant changes" that have grown out of the struggle to end segregation and discrimination, but added that "America is far from out of the woods" in achieving equal opportunity for all citizens.

NATIONAL SPINNING CO. strikers from Whiteville, N. C., march on the sidewalks of New York under canopy sheltering occupants of 860 Fifth Ave., apartment home of top company officials, Philip and Carl Leff. Their union, Textile Workers Union of America, brought 10 pickets to New York to tell the story of their long struggle for a first contract.

Southern Strikers Shift Picket Line to 5th Ave.

New York—Ten North Carolina textile workers, on strike against the National Spinning Co. since May 4, moved their picket lines to Fifth Ave. and Park Ave. "to see how other people live" and to tell the story of their struggle for existence.

They were here only three days, but in that time they carried picket signs and passed out handbills in front of company offices in the Empire State Building and the Manhattan apartments of company Chairman Philip Leff and Vice Chairman Carl Leff.

The demonstration picket lines had little visible effect on management, but the strikers, who were joined by members of other Textile Workers Union of America locals in New York and New Jersey, went back home more satisfied than ever that their cause was just and their trip worthwhile.

"We are from North Carolina —We Want Our Rights," the picket signs proclaimed. And a few interested New Yorkers stopped to talk to the strikers— Barbara and Edna Long, Nancy Hill and Marlene Hardwick, Fred McIntyre and Jay Lewis, Philip Stevens, Bob Eddy Bellamy, T. A. Ethevidge and J. E. Long.

Barbara Long told how she and 11 other National Spinning workers were fired for supporting the union during an organizing campaign, and for helping win the National Labor Relations Board election in which the 560-member unit voted for TWUA as their bargaining agent last October.

She and eight other fired workers received $10,904 in backpay from National Spinning as the result of an NLRB award. But the unfair practices that caused union members to strike after six months of frustrated bargaining still continue, she told questioners. The NLRB will hold a public hearing Aug. 14 in Whiteville on a complaint that company unfair practices caused the walkout.

'Union Busting' Hit

The strike has been marked by the "typical union-busting tactics employed by other Southern textile employers," said TWUA Vice Pres. Paul Swaity, who met with the visiting pickets.

Management, he said, has "mobilized the politicians and the entire business community" of Whiteville against the strikers.

Thirty North Carolina state troopers are enforcing an anti-picketing injunction at plant gates, and strikers have been threatened with eviction from their homes, they reported. The local newspaper—the Whiteville News Reporter—ran ads and editorials opposing the union but refused to report the NLRB's backpay decision on the ground it was "not newsworthy," according to union officers. They said that the paper finally permitted TWUA to buy advertising space so readers could learn about the NLRB award.

The union said that in negotiations, company representatives have "stuck rigidly" to a position of refusing to agree to arbitration and union security and have insisted on a no-strike clause. Thus, the TWUA noted, the union would have no means of grievances.

Ironically, said Swaity, National Spinning provides more reasonable contract terms to unionized employes in its Jamestown, N. Y. plant.

Musicians Publicist Hal Leyshon Dies

New York—Hal Leyshon, public relations and legislative director for the Musicians since 1948 and an internationally-known public relations consultant, died of a heart ailment in Doctors Hospital 10 days after directing publicity during the union's convention in Miami, Fla. He was 66.

A native of Mountain Ash, Ky., he attended Maryville (Tenn.) College. He worked for the Miami News for many years and as editor directed the publication of a series of stories on political corruption in Miami that won the paper a Pulitzer Prize in 1939.

He established his public relations firm here in 1941, served as an Army Air Force public information officer during World War II and was a consultant to the Democratic National Committee during Pres. Truman's 1948 campaign for re-election. His firm represented the state of Florida during the terms of four governors and for the past six years was publicity consultant to the Virgin Islands.

Surviving are the widow, the former Marion Pollard, and a son, Hal Richards Leyshon.

Foreign-Flag Tanker Bid Withdrawn

The Defense Dept., following strong protests from three AFL-CIO maritime unions, withdrew its request that the Mobil Oil Corp. be authorized to use foreign-flag tankers to transport 1.2 million barrels of crude oil from Texas to Paulsboro, N.J.

The protest to Defense Sec. Robert S. McNamara, which carried a threat to strike if the foreign-flag vessels were permitted to invade domestic trade, was filed by Pres. Joseph Curran of the National Maritime Union; Pres. Lloyd W. Sheldon of the Masters, Mates & Pilots, and Pres. J. M. Calhoon of the Marine Engineers.

They cited an earlier letter to Curran in which McNamara said that "clearly we do not need more tankers in the U.S. flag fleet" and that 18 tankers in the defense reserve fleet remain unactivated "as insurance against sudden increases in need."

The union presidents noted that their members had moved Viet Nam supplies without question "at considerable personal sacrifice of life and comfort," and charged that McNamara "rewarded us by the setting of patterns under your authority that can only lead to our extinction."

The Defense Dept. request was made to the Treasury Dept.'s Customs Bureau, as the law requires. In withdrawing it, Assistant Sec. Paul R. Ignatius wrote that Mobil Oil had been able to hire U.S.-flag tankers and the waiver was no longer necessary.

Emme Joins Staff Of AFL-CIO News

Duane Emme has joined the staff of the AFL-CIO News as an assistant editor. For the past 13 years, he has served as an associate on the staff of Labor, the rail unions' weekly newspaper published in Washington, D. C.

Before coming to Washington, Emme was a reporter on the Mankato, Minn., Free Press. Earlier, he was an advertising and free lance writer in Minneapolis. He is a native of Minot, N. D., and a journalism graduate of the University of Minnesota.

A member of the Newspaper Guild, Emme formerly headed the Washington local's Labor Press unit and served on the local's executive board.

AFL-CIO Asks Rehearing:

Threat to Labor Seen In Contempt Ruling

The AFL-CIO has asked the U.S. Supreme Court to reconsider its recent 5-4 decision upholding the conviction of eight Negro ministers who, in 1963, defied a state court injunction and led a civil rights march in Birmingham, Ala.

The ministers, including the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., were convicted of contempt of court for violating an order barring picketing or demonstrating without a city parade permit.

If the decision stands, federation attorneys said, it could be "widely used to destroy the right of workers to organize."

Even though unions were not directly involved, the possible impact on the labor movement is so great, the AFL-CIO declared, that it was for the first time participating in a request that the Supreme Court rehear a case.

King and his associates argued that the court injunction was unconstitutional, but both the state and the U.S. Supreme Court took the position that the constitutionality was irrelevant since the ministers did not take legal action to challenge the injunction before defying it.

Four dissenting Supreme Court justices noted that the ministers had sought a parade permit from Birmingham Police Commissioner "Bull" Connor, and his reply was: "No, you will not get a permit in Birmingham, Ala., to picket. I will picket you over to the City Jail."

In its "friend of the court" brief urging a rehearing, the AFL-CIO attorneys made these points:

● "The decision may encourage abuse of the labor injunction by state courts . . . it may be read as requiring compliance with an injunction, even if the issuing court has no jurisdiction because of federal preemption."

Temporary restraining orders are often issued freely by southern courts, the brief noted, and a strike or organizing campaign will often be broken "long before appellate review is granted."

A union should have the right to ignore an illegal injunction, subject to penalty if the injunction is subsequently found to have been legal, the brief urged.

● "The decision permits the use of unconstitutional licensing ordinances to bar unions."

The AFL-CIO brief noted that many southern cities have enacted ordinances making it a crime to solicit union membership without a license and often imposing exorbitant license fees.

Found Unconstitutional

Courts, including the Supreme Court, have found such ordinances unconstitutional. Nevertheless, they remain on the statute books in a number of towns where they have never been enforced.

Under the Birmingham precedent, the federation suggested, an injunction could be issued barring a union from violating such an ordinance. The obvious unconstitutionality of the law would not be a defense against a contempt of court conviction if the injunction were violated. The AFL-CIO brief declared:

"We are concerned that the decision of the court in this case may furnish local officials and judges with a means of destroying rights of free speech and assembly generally, and the right of workers to organize in particular. Further, it has been the experience of the AFL-CIO over many years that in some areas local officials, including, unfortunately, judges, will seize upon any legal device available to frustrate union organization."

Nonferrous Bargaining Faces Strike Deadline

Salt Lake City, Utah—Federal mediators worked against a July 15 strike deadline here to keep bargaining talks going between 20 unions representing 37,000 copper workers and eight companies in the nonferrous metals industry.

Mediation Activity Dir. Walter A. Maggiolo of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service concentrated on Kennecott Copper Corp. negotiations while other mediators offered their services to unions and management in other western states.

The Steelworkers, and other unions which are coordinating their negotiating efforts this year, reported all the companies standing pat on their refusal to make a "satisfactory" proposal.

The USWA said negotiations are continuing but that a walkout is set to start after the last shift July 14 unless an agreement seems in sight.

Major issues in dispute include wages and an escalator clause tied to cost of living rises. Living cost increases since the 1964 contract settlement have wiped out all the wage gains made in that pact, the union said.

Companies involved besides Kennecott are the Anaconda Co., Phelps Dodge Corp., American Smelting & Refining Co., Magma Copper Co., Inspiration Consolidated Copper Co., U.S. Metals Co. — an American Metal Climax Co. subsidiary—and the Miami Copper Co.

Unions taking part in the talks, in addition to USWA, include the Operating Engineers, Int'l. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, Auto Workers, Sheet Metal Workers, Machinists, Ironworkers, Carpenters, Painters, Boilermakers, Molders, Bricklayers, Plumbers & Pipefitters, Blacksmiths, Teamsters, Railroad Trainmen, Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen, Railway Carmen, Office & Professional Employes.

ILA Atlantic Unit Re-Elects Gleason

Miami Beach—Longshoremen's Pres. Thomas W. Gleason won re-election by a wide margin as president of the ILA's Atlantic Coast district, the largest of the union's three geographical divisions.

Gleason defeated Anthony Scotto, 33-year-old president of the big Brooklyn, N.Y. Local 1814, by a vote of 412 to 114. Eighty-two of Scotto's votes came from his own local.

The only incumbent officer unseated was Joseph Colozzo, Sr., a Scotto supporter, who was beaten for district vice president from Brooklyn by Bernard Griffin, 304-217.

The quadrennial convention of the full ILA, marking the union's 75th anniversary, opens here July 17.

Proposals Given GM, Ford, Chrysler:

UAW Opens '67 Bargaining With Big 3 Auto Producers

Detroit—The Auto Workers opened 1967 contract negotiations with the auto industry by presenting a series of proposals telling how and why auto's Big Three can give 650,000 UAW members a bigger share of the continuing prosperity of "these incredibly wealthy" corporations.

At meetings with General Motors, Ford and Chrysler bargainers, the union presented written and oral proposals for a substantial wage increase, better job security and job tenure, and major increases in benefits for retirees and their surviving spouses.

The union also called for salary status for workers now paid by the hour, a guaranteed income in wages or layoff benefits for up to one year, reduced working time, and meaningful changes in basic problems like the pace of work, contracting-out, and job losses due to automation. Other changes were asked also in the terms of three-year contracts due to expire Sept. 6 at 393 Big Three locations.

UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther headed the union team that opened talks first with GM, then Ford and finally Chrysler on successive days. The union bargainers presented the first of 39 separate proposals for contract changes in position papers spelling out the UAW aims. Reuther spoke at each opening session, and the UAW team returned for later presentations to be spread over a nine-day period.

At GM, the union position papers stressed these points:

● The most important problem facing the UAW and its members is job security and job tenure during this period of "galloping technology." Workers know they may be replaced by "Iron Mike," a robot whose ranks will grow to more than 5,000 within five years. They are entitled to consideration.

● As part of protecting the UAW member's basic right to work, the issue of subcontracting and substandard work "takes rank as part of the top priority—protection of the bargaining unit and the jobs of our members."

● The UAW insists that 1967 negotiations must find answers in these areas: prohibiting the layoff of workers because of technological changes, transfer of blue collar workers to white collar jobs, better relocation allowances and more separation pay, advance notice of changes, improved training programs.

● Layoffs of salaried workers lag behind declines in a company's business, and this form of long-term security of employment and income should be extended to blue collar workers.

● If an employe is not provided with work, he should continue to receive enough income, including SUB and unemployment compensation, to maintain his normal living standard for up to a year.

● The "degrading" hourly wage system must be ended and replaced with an annual income maintenance system. The guaranteed annual income, however, is not proposed as a substitute for SUB, which the UAW said must be improved. The basic benefit level must be increased substantially above the present 62 percent level.

The UAW told management that retirement security is a "high priority goal" of every auto worker. It asked for improvement in early retirement arrangements, rules governing pension credits, and benefits tailored to higher living costs.

Proposed changes affecting skilled trades workers, who number about 150,000 of auto's 650,000 workers, were spelled out in detail. No mention was made of profit-sharing, but Leonard Woodcock, head of the UAW-GM Dept., said the subject is a "mechanism" and not a demand.

Woodcock announced also that early bargaining for Canadian UAW members will start about Aug. 1 with GM management. Union goals include wage parity for Canadian workers, who get 43 cents an hour less than U.S. auto workers.

Computers to Get Task Of Pairing People, Jobs

The Labor Dept. is turning to automation in an effort to speed the matching of unemployed workers and job openings through the federal-state employment security system, Sec. W. Willard Wirtz announced.

Under a $3.3 million contract, the Auerbach Corp. of Philadelphia will seek to develop an automatic data processing system to match people and jobs or training opportunities on an area or statewide basis.

Plans include the exchange of information between local and state organizations that support manpower services, as well as the availability of a wide range of job market information of concern to workers, employers, the government and institutions.

The system initially will cover the New York City metropolitan area, including adjacent New Jersey and Connecticut, and the states of Michigan, Florida and Utah. The states were selected because of their differing sizes and the different manpower problems they offer.

The program is broader in scope than the one the federal government has backed for the past three years in California. The California program covered San Francisco, Los Angeles and Sacramento and was concerned for the most part with locating jobs for professionals.

Once the new program is in operation for a while and has been evaluated, the Labor Dept. said it will consider installing similar systems in other states.

The department said the system will consist essentially of a computerized data base in each state containing the information necessary for the planning, operation and evaluation of the state employment security system. The data base will include job applications and orders, claims, tax data and management information.

Use of the computer, it is expected, will do away with manual matching of job applications and job openings in U.S.-State Employment Service Offices. Instead, the matching will be done much more quickly by computer and also will be done on a wider basis, offering workers a broader range of opportunities and employers a broader field of job-hunters.

Apprenticeship Termed Best Road to Success

Norfolk, Va.—Until the nation's schools improve the quality of education for Negroes and other minority group members and raise the qualifications of their young people, union-employer apprentice programs will serve as their "greatest single road" to success, AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler declared.

Schnitzler, addressing the Middle Atlantic States Apprenticeship & Training Conference here, ridiculed as "sheer, unadorned bunk" the criticisms of those who charge that unions refuse to allow Negroes to become apprentices.

The American labor movement need never be defensive or ashamed of the great good the union-employer apprenticeship programs have done both as the training ground for millions of youths from all backgrounds and as the means of breaking the poverty cycle for thousands of youths of minority groups, he said.

"Labor's apprentice programs provide education, a skill, an excellent income and a secure future. Not a dead-end job, but a meaningful career. Our apprentice programs provide a means of escape from poverty for both the worker and his family . . .

"The vistas that are open to Negroes, Puerto Ricans and other disadvantaged youngsters in America who participate in apprentice programs are almost limitless. And we in the labor movement can be proud of every program we have established and proud of every young man we have made into a craftsman and sent into the working world."

Nevertheless, he noted, the number of apprenticeship openings is only a small part of the total employment picture.

Schnitzler cited Labor Dept. reports detailing the efforts that labor—and especially the building trades unions—has been making to channel minority group members into apprenticeship openings, and pointed to programs undertaken by unions in all parts of the country to prepare youngsters for apprenticeships.

"We have found that where youngsters are properly informed, the number of young men to sit for [apprenticeship] tests and to pass them increases dramatically — including candidates from minority groups," he said.

More Non-Whites

"Consequently, the number of non-whites to flow into the trades has become considerably greater. And, in so doing, an exhaustive study of the Negro in apprenticeship programs has disclosed that there is no discrimination or resistance to anyone who passes the examination. Whoever passes the test and goes to work is accepted fully.

"The only resistance is the refusal by unions to dilute or erode the apprentice standards of training that are applied equally to all."

Schnitzler said that the District of Columbia Apprenticeship Information Program "revealed not the shortcomings of the union programs, but the woeful failings of the D.C. educational system."

"The many hundreds of applicants who failed to qualify were found, for the most part, to be unable to read sufficiently well to cope with the tests," he observed.

Board Order Hits Garment Chain, Directs 'Extraordinary' Remedies

The illegal anti-union campaign waged by Marlene Industries Corp. at its southern plants was so "massive and deliberate" that it calls for "extraordinary as well as conventional" remedies, the National Labor Relations Board ruled.

The board upheld an earlier finding of NLRB examiner Paul E. Weil that the company violated the National Labor Relations Act by "instigating, encouraging, causing and permitting" actions to smash organizing efforts by the Ladies Garment Workers in 1965.

The union sought to organize employes of Marlene, a New York-based firm, at plants in Frisco City, Ala., Aynor and Loris, S.C., and Decatursville, Hartsville and Westmoreland, Tenn.

Weil had cited a long list of unlawful actions by Marlene. They included "threatening, assaulting, and beating" employes, damaging automobiles, illegally firing 17 workers for union activities, spying on employes and threatening plant closings to thwart the union.

The board ordered the employer to "cease and desist" in these and other "extensive" illegal activities and to rehire the fired workers with full backpay for lost time.

Weil also found Marlene guilty of a number of unfair labor practices in taking "abnormal" steps to bar the union from having access to employes.

In one instance, he found the company had used guards with dogs to prevent union representatives from coming on its property. In another, he brought out that Marlene threatened to fire workers who accepted union literature.

Special Steps

The examiner recommended that the firm be ordered to grant the union access to its bulletin boards; arrange for the union to hold a meeting on company time; mail a copy of his notice to all employes and have it published in newspapers; permit union organizers on company parking lots; and mail pre-stamped union literature to all employes.

The board sustained Weil's recommendations that the company take these "unusual" steps, with the exception of requiring the union meeting and publishing his notice in newspapers.

But the NLRB expanded the remedies to direct Marlene to furnish the ILGWU with a list of names and addresses of all employes. The examiner had rejected the union's request for such a list.

The board recalled that it recently ordered the J. P. Stevens & Co., which it also found guilty of "massive unfair labor practices," to similarily furnish the TWUA with names and addresses of employes.

"We believe," the board said, that this is "one of the best ways to insure the right of Marlene's employes, which Marlene has so flagrantly violated, to be informed of their . . . right to organize."

Rail Striker Wins Damages For Shooting

Miami, Fla.—A Florida circuit court jury here has awarded $17,500 damages to Alfred O. Morgan, a member of the Railroad Trainmen on strike against the Florida East Coast Railway, who was shot in the arm by an FEC "special agent."

The shooting occurred at New Smyrna Beach, Fla. in the early morning of Aug. 7, 1963. Testimony brought out that special agent Floyd Truman, seated in a car with another agent, fired one or two shots at Morgan.

Then, according to testimony, Truman leaped from the car and emptied his revolver at Morgan's fleeing back.

ILGWU in Montreal Wins 35-Hour Week

Montreal—A cut in the workweek from the present 37.5 hours to 36 hours in July 1969 and 35 hours a year later was won for 3,000 members of the Ladies' Garment Workers here in a new three-year agreement with an association of 75 employers.

There will be no loss in take-home pay. The new contract provides wage increases of about 15 percent across-the-board, ranging from $8 to $18.75 during its lifetime.

Jobs and Civil Rights

THE ECONOMIC ROOTS of the nation's civil rights problems —especially among young people—were starkly revealed in the latest Labor Dept. report on unemployment.

The figures for June show an overall decrease in the unemployment rate for younger persons between 16 and 21 from 18.5 percent two years ago to 15.2 percent last month.

For white youngsters the rate dropped from 17.5 in June 1965 to 15.1 in June 1966 to 13.6 in June of this year.

For "non-whites"—meaning almost entirely Negroes—the rate increase moved from 25.4 percent two years ago to 26 last year and 27 this year.

The Labor Dept. report points out that an additional 600,000 younger workers are likely to enter the labor force in July and that "more new jobs will be needed to absorb the July entrants and those unemployed in June."

With more than one-quarter of Negroes between 16 and 21 unemployed; with the unemployment rate for all non-white workers more than double that for white workers, the conditions are ripe for exploitation by extremists.

The programs so far formulated have obviously not made a sufficient impact. They need to be expanded, invigorated and more closely tied to the needs of the jobless.

A Consumer Milestone

SEVEN YEARS AGO the AFL-CIO and a few consumer organizations launched a campaign for legislation to have lenders clearly disclose the actual cost of borrowing money—the "truth-in-lending" bill.

Year after year the trade union movement testified for the measure, produced witnesses with almost unbelievable case histories of ignorance of credit costs and rallied support for the efforts of then Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D-Ill.) in his struggle to give the consumer protection through a simple disclosure law.

The Kennedy and Johnson administrations threw their weight into the battle against the wide array of lending institutions—banks, small loan companies and retail organizations. But the measure never emerged from the Senate Banking Committee for floor action.

The story of credit cost kept building, however, and this year action finally came in the Senate which adopted a "truth-in-lending" measure last week. The bill is not as strong or as inclusive as it should be. But it is an important and meaningful milestone in the struggle for consumer protection.

The next step is to have the measure strengthened in the House and to secure final passage at the current session of Congress.

The AFL-CIO has been deeply involved in every facet of the consumer protection campaign, operating as the "people's lobby" in securing legislation in the interests of all citizens, whether they be union members or not.

It is the same task that the trade union movement undertook in helping win expanded coverage and protection of the minimum wage and a higher wage floor; it is the same campaign that labor is now carrying on for a stronger social security system.

The passage of "truth-in-lending" by the Senate, albeit in a modified version, is proof once again that a determined, dedicated, unyielding campaign for a liberal and progressive program can produce results.

In Convention Message:

Meany Hails NAACP for Gains, Cites 'Dangers of Complacency'

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany sent the following letter of greetings to the 58th annual convention of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in Boston:

THE AFL-CIO is again happy to have the opportunity to extend greetings to the NAACP at this—its 58th annual convention. In the past few years we have seen significant changes in this country brought about by the struggle to eliminate segregation and discrimination in America. The activities of the NAACP have been crucial to these achievements.

Yet America is far from out of the woods in reaching our goals of equal opportunity for all our citizens. Indeed for many thousands, especially in the heart of our large urban centers, the important gains of the last decade have had too little significance. This has led some to question whether civil rights struggles had been in vain and civil rights achievements have had any meaning.

We in the trade union movement have had some experience in evaluating progress towards goals on one hand and unfinished problems on the other. We see no advantage in downgrading our own achievements because there is still unfinished business on the agenda. At the same time we are aware of the dangers of complacency.

The civil rights movement and its friends can be proud of what has been done already by peaceful and constitutional means. It will continue to expand its work in eliminating discrimination from all walks of life, in spite of misunderstandings and provocations.

Another legislative battle is still necessary. The Civil Rights bill of 1967 contains at least four vital sections:

- Protection from those using existing civil rights legislation from intimidation and physical harassment.

- A guarantee that the jury system will be free of discrimination.

(These are crucial if our system of equal rights under the law is to be meaningful for all.)

- An amendment to Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act, giving the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission the authority to issue cease and desist orders.

- A title which sets up a national fair housing law. While equal access to housing is important in itself, it is also crucial to the attainment of many other goals that are now statutory principles.

EVEN MORE important is the implementation of and compliance with already existing legislation, especially in the areas of employment and education and we—as well as you—are working on these too.

But it becomes increasingly clear that eliminating discrimination is not sufficient for the achievement of equal opportunity. Full employment, better schools, adequate housing, protection of the aged, higher minimum wages, medicare and the benefits of union representation are necessary ingredients for the achievement of equal opportunity.

As the AFL-CIO Executive Council stated in August 1964, the right to service in a restaurant or hotel has no meaning for those with no money to spend; the right to a job is only meaningful if there are jobs to be filled, and the right to education requires adequate schools as well as access to them.

In all of these matters, the AFL-CIO has a commitment for equality and equal opportunity for all, for an end to poverty and for a healthy economy and an expanded standard of living for all.

In conclusion let me say that whether we continue to make progress and solve our social and economic problems depends on the election of men and women favorable to these aims and to the programs which make them possible.

Too often appeals to prejudice and racism have diverted many of our citizens from voting in their own interests and in the interests of their country and communities. I am sorry to see that this tendency has crept into the Negro community. It has affected only a small group but it is worrisome nevertheless. It makes more important than ever the type of dynamic but responsible leadership that has been called for by your executive director.

We in the AFL-CIO want—as you do—an America that is true to its promise of equal opportunity for all citizens. Working together I am sure we will achieve it.

A Call for Re-Thinking:

Problem of Rising Medical Costs Challenge to Nation's Creativity

The wide scope and challenge to the nation of rising medical costs were outlined to the recent National Conference on Medical Costs by Dr. William H. Stewart, surgeon general of the U.S. Public Health Service. The following is excerpted from his remarks.

THE REAL CHALLENGE before the nation to which we are addressing ourselves is the fulfillment of a newly acknowledged right of every American—the right of access to quality health care.

Access has many dimensions. The dimension of cost may be the most important, but it cannot be separated neatly and cleanly from geographic, social and educational dimensions. Nor can costs of care be split off from the dimension of human dignity.

Every one of us is keenly conscious of the fact that we can't discuss costs of care without considering quality of care. I hope we are equally aware of the fact that we can't discuss costs without considering the special nature of health care.

And this is where the problem of representation enters the equation. We are here to examine a system that has evolved into a multi-billion dollar industry. We are being asked to analyze that system, find out why its product is becoming more costly at a faster rate than the products of other systems, and then recommend changes in it. You have been invited to take on this analysis because you are the people who know the system best.

Very few of us have really experienced the losing side of the health care system. Very few of us have been forced to forego or delay medical care for ourselves or our children because we couldn't afford it. A number of us may have felt the economic blow of unforeseen major medical costs, but few if any of us have been truly impoverished by it. Very few of us have tasted the bitterness and shivered in the impersonal cold of charity medical care. We haven't sat for hours on the hard wooden benches wondering if the kids were all right or if we would have a job to return to. We haven't faced the decision of spending $6 for a prescription or the week's groceries.

It's hard for a winner to change the rules of the game, however conscientious he may be and however strong his humanitarian motive. Yet this is what you are being asked to do.

I suggest that you will succeed if you are successful in viewing yourselves not as representatives of separate elements in the system but as representatives of the American people who need health care at a price they can pay.

How do these people look at this system of ours?

First, they view its product as something tremendously important, and something to which they are entitled. This has not always been so. Certainly the preservation of life and good health has always been highly valued, but unrelieved suffering and early death have until very recently been tacitly accepted as the common lot of common man. Medical care was a privilege, almost a luxury. He who could afford it sought it and bought it.

Strong social currents of the past few years have made this privilege concept of health care obsolete and unacceptable. Yet many features of the economics of the marketplace which grew up around this concept remain.

The individual outside the system who needs, or feels he needs, health care is in the position of a buyer. He has to shop around for it. And among all the goods and services he purchases, health care is perhaps the most difficult for him to shop for intelligently.

Thus, as Rashi Fein has pointed out in his new book, "The Doctor Shortage":

"Most persons consider medical care to be vastly different from other commodities. That medical services are demanded, supplied, and priced is true. That market forces operate in this sector is clear. Economists can analyze this market and the impact of desired and undesired departures from it. The fact remains, however, that many Americans do not want the allocation of resources within and to the medical care sector to be determined entirely by the market."

Can we not recognize that health care is fundamentally different from other goods and services both in nature and in basic importance, and then devise an approach to paying for it that takes this difference into account? Can we arrive at some new kind of interaction between provider and consumer? Can the relationship be more analogous to the negotiated contract than to closed bidding?

THE BATTLE for control of the costs of health care will be with us for a long time—as long as people go on wanting care and science goes on generating new and better kinds of care. This battle cannot be adequately joined without consideration of the total structure of the health system, in all its vastness and complexity.

But this does not mean that this conference is an exercise in futility, or a sounding board for hollow phrases. It will not accomplish its purpose by blind assaults on the inevitable, alternating with blind defenses of the untenable. Rather, you can set in motion a process here which shapes and guides change toward more efficient delivery of care at prices that are truly necessary to its performance.

If this process works, words spoken here will lead out to action. New ideas, or new combinations of old ideas, will spark experimentation. Things will happen—small things resulting in small efficiencies, and eventually big things leading to more effective systems.

There are two ways of reacting to a challenge. To some it is an irritant—a disturber of the status quo, a threat to things as they are, something to be brushed aside or wished away.

To others a challenge is a stimulant, an invitation to creativity, to make things better.

This challenge—the challenge of access to quality health care at costs that people can pay—will not go away. It is woven into the hopes and determinations of American society.

Business Urged to Volunteer:

Labor Scores Plan to Permit Profiting from Poverty War

PROPOSALS for profit-making ventures as part of the war on poverty have been flatly rejected by the AFL-CIO.

In a nationwide radio interview, Julius Rothman, assistant director of the federation's Dept. of Social Security and coordinator of its anti-poverty efforts, took sharp issue with the suggestion that business and industry can be persuaded to play a wide role in the poverty war if their efforts are coupled with profit incentives.

"The war on poverty ought not to produce a profit," he asserted. "Labor, management, church and other groups ought to contribute their talents, their leadership, their skills, their knowledge and their wisdom" to the anti-poverty drive, he declared, and if that is successful, the economic system itself will take care of the profit aspect.

Rothman appeared on Labor News Conference, an AFL-CIO produced public service program, aired Tuesdays at 7:35 p.m., EDT, on the Mutual Radio Network.

He described union-sponsored leadership training programs in the 12-state Appalachia area and the New England states, a Tennessee Job Corps Center, Neighborhood Youth Corps and Youth Conservation Corps in Alameda County and Los Angeles, Calif., and said they are typical of labor's anti-poverty effort under way in many states.

ALTHOUGH the projects vary in content and operation, he noted, all are aimed at boosting the education, training, work experience, motivation and hope of economically deprived Americans. Those, he said, are the basic elements needed to wage a successful fight against poverty.

Reporters questioning Rothman on Labor News Conference were Frank Swoboda of United Press Intl. and William Eaton, Washington correspondent for the Chicago Daily News.

LAST FALL the nation was faced with an unprecedented shortage of almost 170,000 qualified teachers. The shortage was acute in the urban slums and in depressed areas.

It was just this sort of "crisis" that the original National Teacher Corps was designed to meet. But it was never given the chance.

In 1965, when the first push for the Teacher Corps was undertaken, strong concern was expressed that the finest teaching talent, the most imaginative and enterprising educators, was being funneled to the wealthy suburban school systems and children in the depressed central cities and rural areas were being deprived of such talent.

The 89th Congress was moved by this pattern to set up a program whereby the federal government would play a strong role in attracting and preparing men and women for teaching schools serving disadvantaged children.

With the Peace Corps as a model, the authors of the Teacher Corps were convinced that young graduates with no formal teaching training could have on-the-job training for half a day and spend the other half in specialized university teaching sessions.

The Teacher Corps was voted into existence—but it received no funds. It was a year later that it obtained its first appropriation—$9.5 million. One additional appropriation of $7.5 million was provided. But it was a small sum to meet a "crisis."

This point was substantiated by the House Labor Committee, which declared:

"The National Teacher Corps has been acclaimed by most local educational agencies having a Teacher Corps team; yet the program has been small in comparison to the national need."

States rightists and conservatives were never happy about the program. Conservatives in Congress opposed the "assignment of an elite corps of federally supported teachers in our schools under any guise whatsoever." They claimed it was "a pernicious precedent for direct federal intervention in local schools."

However, under the driving leadership of its director, Richard A. Graham, the Teacher Corps went into operation. Last February, in his Education Message to Congress, Pres. Johnson said:

"Young as it is, the Teacher Corps has become a symbol of new hope for America's poor children and their parents—and for hard-pressed school administrators.

"More than 1,200 interns and veteran teachers have volunteered for demanding assignments in city and rural slums. Teacher Corps volunteers are at work in 275 schools throughout the country, helping children in 20 of our 25 large cities, in Appalachia, in the Ozarks, in Spanish-speaking communities."

PERHAPS the best measure of the corps' vitality is that 10 times as many Americans as it could afford applied for service.

Meanwhile, Congress was well on its way to killing the whole program and only desperate, last minute compromises saved the concept. Its life and death struggle was compared by one writer to the "Perils of Pauline."

The end-result was the National Teacher Corps saw the "National" dropped and with it was removed the federal role, except to pay up to 90 percent of the cost and assume an advisory role. Local educational agencies, colleges and universities will be responsible for recruitment, selection and enrollment, and state educational agency approval of the local agency's request will be required.

There was much unhappiness over the fact that teacher interns would be compensated at the lowest rate for teaching full-time in the school system in which they teach, or at a rate of $75 per week plus $15 per dependent, whichever is less. None of these is seen designed to enhance teaching salaries. Over a three-year period Congress authorized $33 million the first year, $46 million the second and $56 million the third. But aside from some limited funds to keep the program from falling apart at the end of the fiscal year, all this is yet to be appropriated.

PROFIT-MAKING ventures as part of the war on poverty were flatly rejected by AFL-CIO Assistant Social Security Dir. Julius Rothman (center) on Labor News Conference. Frank Swoboda (left) of United Press Intl. and William Eaton of the Chicago Daily News questioned him on the AFL-CIO public affairs interview, broadcast Tuesdays on the Mutual Radio Network.

Switchmen Told:

Forced Arbitration Dogging Rail Unions

Buffalo, N. Y.—The collective bargaining atmosphere on railroads has shown no improvement in the past four years and may have further deteriorated, Pres. Neil P. Speirs of the Switchmen's Union told delegates to the union's convention here.

At the time of the Switchmen's 1963 convention, Speirs recalled, legislation was pending in Congress—and later enacted—to impose compulsory arbitration on the union and other rail "operating" unions involved in a rules dispute.

Now, he pointed out, similar legislation is before Congress to impose a compulsory settlement of a wage dispute between shopcraft unions and the railroads.

Speirs made his observations in a keynote address to the opening session of the quadrennial convention, attended by 325 delegates.

In his address Speirs charged that the threat of compulsory arbitration, "the failure of emergency boards to act as neutrals" and court injunctions have constantly hampered free collective bargaining by railroad unions.

Added to this, he said, the railroads firmly believe that the government will not allow a strike even though it is permitted under the Railway Labor Act when the law's other requirements have been exhausted.

He told the convention that despite a steady drop in rail employment over the past four years, the union has managed to hold its membership at a stable level.

Speirs' report cited other developments that have had a strong impact on collective bargaining, including merging of railroads and technological changes.

While the union has made "significant" advances since its last convention, he concluded, "the fact remains that the problems and issues which faced us in 1963 continue to confront us in 1967."

Pres. James King of the Buffalo AFL-CIO Council welcomed the delegates to Buffalo, where the union has its headquarters. He described the role the AFL-CIO councils have played in New York in helping to keep the state's "full crew" law in effect despite continuing attacks by rail managements and legislators unfriendly to unions.

Because of the increasing effect of legislation and political actions at the state level, "the fate of the railroad workers may ultimately depend upon the work of state and local bodies," King said.

Other scheduled speakers included Chairman G. E. Leighty of the Railway Labor Executives Association; Leon Keyserling, who was chairman of Pres. Truman's Council of Economic Advisers; National Mediation Board Chairman Howard Gamser, and Pres. H. E. Gilbert of the Firemen & Enginemen.

Bargaining Agent Held Entitled To Names, Addresses of Workers

The National Labor Relations Board has ordered Standard Oil Co. of California to supply a long-established plant union with the names and addresses of the employes in its Richmond, Calif., refinery.

The board ruled that the list is needed by Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers Local 1-561 in carrying out its legal duty to represent all employes, union and non-union, in its bargaining unit.

Local 1-561 has been the bargaining agent since 1950 for 1,500 Standard of Cal employes in oil production and maintenance. The union first sought an address list in April 1965 and filed unfair labor practice charges when its request was repeatedly refused.

Major oil producers have successfully blocked all union proposals for the union shop, which requires employes to join the union which represents them, usually after 30 days, OCAW said. It called the decision a "landmark" of significant benefit to unions forced to operate without a union shop contract.

Last year the board, in a series of decisions, adopted the rule that a union seeking to organize employes is entitled to ask for names and addresses of employes in the bargaining unit when reasonable access to the eligible worker is otherwise not available. The California case, according to OCAW and the NLRB, is the first address-list case involving a union that already holds bargaining rights.

The board, reversing a trial examiner by a 2-1 vote, found that under existing conditions at the four-square-mile refinery complex on San Francisco Bay the union "could not in any effective manner communicate" with employes in its bargaining unit who drive to work from a five-county area.

Board member Sam Zagoria, in a dissenting opinion, said he agreed with the examiner that the union's request for a list of names and addresses was based "solely on its desire to counter" company propaganda. Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and member John H. Fanning reached a contrary conclusion based on these factors:

The union's duty to represent employes extends to all those in the bargaining unit. It cannot effectively communicate with them all because of its "relatively low" membership—about 50 percent—in a constantly changing unit; the absence of a union-security clause in its contract with the company; the scattering of employes over a wide area; the "apparent ineffectiveness" of the steward system; the lack of adequate exposure of employes to union bulletin boards, and the "inefficiency of handbilling efforts" in presenting the union's views.

Management, on the other hand, conducts employe orientation sessions, drives home the point that unions are not necessary, and mails a 50-page booklet to employes asserting that Standard of Cal "wages, hours and working conditions are among the best in the industry" and that, "while your company recognizes your right to join a union," it believes that "representation by an outside organization is not necessary."

Labor Dept. Bars New Alien Strikebreakers

The government has barred six struck Texas farms and 13 employers elsewhere from importing new strikebreakers across the Mexican border. But a loophole in the new Immigration & Naturalization Service regulation permits continued use of "green card" aliens already hired to replace strikers.

"Green cards" are permits given to Mexican nationals allowing them to cross the border daily to work at U.S. firms.

Hired as Strikebreakers

When the AFL-CIO United Farm Workers Organizing Committee struck for recognition at the big corporate farms in the Rio Grande Valley, green carders were hired to replace the regular workers.

The new regulation went into effect on July 10 and that same day the Labor Dept. certified the existence of a labor dispute at the struck farms. But since the regulation does not apply retroactively, its impact will be slight for the immediate future.

AFL-CIO Organizing Dir. William L. Kircher said the new regulation falls short of accomplishing its goal. He added, however, that he was encouraged by the quick action of the Labor Dept. in certifying the existence of labor disputes in the border areas.

The Rio Grande farms named in the order are La Casita Farms, Sun-Tex Farms, Griffin & Brand's Trophy Farms, A. B. Margo Farms, Los Puertos Plantation of Starr Farms, and the Rancho Grande and Ringgold Farms of Elmore & Stahl.

Other establishments made out of bounds for new green carders, and the unions on strike, are Desert Belt Transportation Co., Indio, Calif., Teamsters; Kernco Painting Contractors, Oceanside, Calif., Painters; Uniroyal Inc., Santa Ana, Calif., Rubber Workers; Hines Wholesale Nursery, Santa Ana, Teamsters; Riverside Bus Co., Riverside, Calif., State, County & Municipal Employes; Fed Mart, Calexico, Calif., Retail Clerks; Webb Pump & Supply Co., Escondido, Calif., Machinists; Tucson Newspapers, Tucson, Ariz., Typographical Union.

A second group of struck establishments certified by the Labor Dept. includes: the California Laundry, San Diego, Laundry Workers; Texas Hat Co., Laredo, Tex., Communications Workers; Southland Cafe, Laredo, Laborers; Utility Trailer, El Paso, Tex., Auto Workers; W. T. Liston Co., Brownsville and Harlingen, Tex., Teamsters.

The AFL-CIO Maritime Trades Dept. announced that its 1967 convention will be held Dec. 4-6 in the Americana Hotel, Bal Harbour, Fla.

Federal Guide Lists Consumer Services

The President's Committee on Consumer Interests has issued a 140-page Guide to Federal Consumer Services describing the services to consumers that 40 federal agencies and divisions provide.

"For the first time the consumer has available in one book pertinent facts about his relationship with the federal government," Betty Furness, assistant to the President for consumer affairs, said.

The booklet gives basic information on the organization and origin of each agency, the major laws it administers, its services for consumers and how they can be obtained, and its publications.

Appeals Court Upholds Ruling Against Stevens

tration, said it is considering an appeal to the Supreme Court and that changes in the remedies ordered by the NLRB "could have an important bearing" on its decision.

The court modified the NLRB order to require Stevens management to read the list of board findings to employes only in the 20 plants where unfair labor practices had been committed, and not at 23 other plants in the Stevens chain. The court also deleted a provision that Stevens must give the union access to all plant bulletin boards.

However, it left standing another board remedy requiring management of the Stevens corporation to mail copies of the board findings to its employes in all 43 plants. These were among the "extraordinary" remedies fashioned by the board, in the Stevens case and others, to make a board order "something more to lawbreaking employers than just another piece of paper," as union complaints put it.

TWUA Pres. William Pollock called on Stevens to end the "agony of these workers" by further delays "or the seeking of further loopholes."

"It is also our hope," Pollock added, "that a voice from top management will put an end to company policies and practices of flagrantly . . . denying workers their right to form a union of their own and to bargain collectively."

All five NLRB members, in the March 1966 ruling just upheld by the 2d Circuit, found the Stevens firm guilty of "massive and deliberate unfair labor practices" in its plants at Rock Hill and Greenville, S.C., and Roanoke Rapids, N.C.

Accepting a report by Trial Examiner Horace A. Ruckel, the board added two more names to the 69 workers found by Ruckel to have been fired for union activity, and listed other illegal acts "inadvertently" not cited by Ruckel as law violations.

They included company spying on union members, threats of reprisal for union adherence, intimidation of labor witnesses in company employ, changing working conditions to thwart union activity, and a pattern of barring some employes from engaging in union activities while others were encouraged to commit anti-union acts.

More than 200 instances of illegal activity have been cited in union charges heard by board examiners. All four examiners who heard testimony found the same pattern of illegal conduct to prevent employes from exercising their rights. One examiner—Boyd Leedom, former NLRB chairman in the Eisenhower era—reported that labor law violations of J. P. Stevens & Co. have been so persistent, and the testimony of management witnesses so untruthful, that "it begins to appear doubtful" that any legal remedy can right the wrongs done employes.

Leedom advised another approach by Stevens management—a "signal from the top" and a "complete conversion" of the Stevens way of treating its employes.

The AFL-CIO Executive Council has urged the government to end the "disgrace" of awarding government contracts to violators like Stevens.

Rep. Frank Thompson, Jr. (D-N.J.), chairman of a House labor subcommittee, proposed that instead of what he called "wrist-slapping" penalties now provided by the Taft-Hartley law, the NLRB be given the power to impose double or triple damages on deliberate violators and that other agencies be authorized to withhold government contracts from companies in that category.

'Danger of Complacency':

Wider Rights Drive Backed by Meany

"Indeed for many thousands, especially in the hearts of our large urban centers, the important gains of the past decade have had too little significance," he said.

"This has led some to question whether civil rights struggles have been in vain and civil rights achievements have had any meaning.

"We in the trade union movement have had some experience in evaluating progress towards goals on one hand and unfinished business on the other. We see no advantage in downgrading our own achievements because there is still unfinished business on the agenda. At the same time we are aware of the dangers of complacency."

'Another Legislative Battle'

Meany pointed to the Civil Rights bill of 1967 as "another legislative battle" and emphasized at least four "vital" sections — protection from intimidation and physical harassment for those using civil rights legislation; a guarantee that juries be free of discrimination; vesting the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission with authority to issue cease and desist orders, and a national fair housing law.

"Even more important," Meany continued "is the implementation of and compliance with already existing legislation, especially in the areas of employment and education and we—as well as you—are working on these, too.

"But it becomes increasingly clear that eliminating discrimination is not sufficient for the achievement of equal opportunity. Full employment, better schools, adequate housing, protection of the aged, higher minimum wages, medicare and the benefits of union representation are necessary ingredients for the achievement of equal opportunity."

He recalled that the AFL-CIO Executive Council observed in August 1964 that the right to service in a restaurant or hotel is meaningless to those without money, the right to a job is meaningful only if there are jobs to be filled, and the right to education "requires adequate schools as well as access to them."

"In all of these matters," he added, "the AFL-CIO has a commitment for equality and equal opportunity for all, for an end to poverty and for a healthy economy and an expanded standard of living for all."

Meany concluded with a plea for the support of political candidates who favor the aims and programs of the labor and civil rights movements.

"Too often appeals to prejudice and racism have diverted many of our citizens from voting in their own interests and in the interests of their country and communities," he said. "I am sorry to see this tendency has crept into the Negro community. It has affected only a small group but it is worrisome nevertheless. It makes more important than ever the type of dynamic leadership that has been called for by your executive director.

"We in the AFL-CIO want, as you do, an America that is true to its promise of equal opportunity for all citizens. Working together, I am sure we will achieve it."

SAFETY LANE VEHICLE CHECK for Minnesota state employes was conducted in St. Paul for the eighth year by State Highway Employes Local 1011, a unit of the State, County & Municipal Employes, and turned up many minor defects as well as some major ones. Members of the local who did the work are shown above.

Labor Board Extends Coverage of Apartments

The National Labor Relations Board has asserted its jurisdiction over all employers in the residential apartment industry who have gross revenues of $500,000 or more each year.

The board announced its new policy in granting the petition of Building Service Employes Local 536 for a representation election among custodial workers at Parkview Gardens Apartments, Riverdale, Md., a Washington suburb.

Since 1958, the board had been assuming jurisdiction over residential apartments on a selective basis. Mainly, it had taken jurisdiction only over employers in the District of Columbia and in cases involving national defense, large scale operations and apartment owners connected with other operations under NLRB jurisdiction.

The board said it was setting the new "dollar standard" because of the "increasing incidence" of cases involving the industry and the fact that it now exerts "a substantial impact on commerce."

It cited "a growing trend toward corporate ownership" of apartments, noted that the building of large apartment buildings involves interstate commerce, and said these developments are "almost invariably financed by interstate financial institutions."

The NLRB said its decision to set the new policy on apartments was guided by "our experience in asserting jurisdiction over retail concerns and those in the hotel and motel industry, where we have applied the $500,000 standard."

Commenting on the decision, BSEIU Pres. David Sullivan predicted that "it will be of great benefit to workers employed in apartment buildings. They will now have the protection of the national law which is badly needed in most state where protection is lacking."

Sullivan suggested that the ruling also is important to the drive to end poverty since most of the workers involved are in low income groups. He said the board's action will enable them "to engage in collective bargaining and thereby raise their standard of living."

Flight Engineers End EAL Boycott

The Flight Engineers have ended their long boycott of Eastern Air Lines, Pres. William A. Gill, Jr., announced.

Gill said the union has been unable during three years of court action and Civil Aeronautics Board proceedings to obtain reinstatement of Eastern flight engineers who had struck the company.

"We can no longer, in good conscience, request support of the affiliates in boycotting Eastern," Gill said. "We will be forever grateful to those of our labor friends who have continued their boycott and we know they did it with personal disadvantage in many cases."

Railway Clerks Add 'Airline' to Full Name

Cincinnati—The Railway Clerks announced that the official name of the union, effective July 1, is the Brotherhood of Railway, Airline & Steamship Clerks, Freight Handlers, Express & Station Employes. The change was made with the approval of the AFL-CIO Executive Council.

Labor Rallies Wide Support In URW Strike

increase of $1.50 times years of service. Also provided is an additional paid holiday, two more steps on the vacation schedule to bring the maximum to 6 weeks after 30 years of service, and major improvements in life, accident, hospitalization and surgical insurance, the union said.

The two General Tire units had joined the URW strike on June 22. Some 53,000 Rubber Workers at 37 plants of Firestone, Goodrich and Uniroyal have been on strike since Apr. 21.

At AFL-CIO News press time, the union said there was no change in plans to extend the strike to Goodyear Tire & Rubber's 11 plants at midnight July 14. The 21,000 Goodyear workers have remained on the job on a day-to-day basis since the expiration of their contract.

Bommarito took direct part in negotiations with Goodrich at Columbus, Ohio, with Dir. William E. Simkin of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service sitting in.

A substantial loan by the Auto Workers has helped replenish the URW's strike fund, which had been emptied by benefits paid during the 12-week dispute.

The URW's longest previous strikes had been in 1959, when Firestone was shut down for 58 days and Goodrich for 55 days.

URW members working at plants and shops not affected by the strike have been making voluntary contributions of one hour's pay a week to help their union brothers.

L. I. Bus Drivers Win 45c Boost

New York—A wage boost of 45 cents an hour effective July 1 brought the top rate for operating members of Amalgamated Transit Union Division 1179 to $3.80, with the top rate for mechanics rising to $4.07 on that date.

The 425 members of the division, who are employed by the Green Bus Lines, Inc., Long Island, will get a further increase of 5 cents an hour next Jan. 1.

The union called the new rate the highest in the U.S. for bus operators. Negotiators headed by Pres. Vincent Glasso also won an additional paid holiday for a total of 10 per year; a sickness and accident payment of $95 a week for up to 52 weeks; a uniform allowance of $5 a year for each operator and a tool allowance of $25 a year for mechanics.

Jobless Rate Hits 4%, Highest in 18 Months

ployed were adult men, 1.1 million were adult women and nearly 1.5 million were in the 16 to 19 age group.

The number of jobless adult men was unchanged from last June, but there was a substantial increase in the number of jobless adult women over the year.

Among teenagers there was a slight decline in total joblessness over the year, but this did not extend to Negro youths. The unemployment rate for white workers aged 16 to 21 dropped from 16.4 to 15.2 percent while the rate for non-whites in the same group rose from 26 to 27 percent.

The overall non-white unemployment rate, covering all age groups, was 7.8 percent in June, unchanged from May and from a year ago. The white rate, at 3.5 percent, was up from May but little-changed over the year.

Breaking down employment by industry in June, there were 19.2 million workers in manufacturing, 632,000 in mining, 3.3 million in construction, 4.2 million in transportation and utilities, 13.6 million in trade, 3.2 million in finance, 10.2 million in service jobs and 11.5 million in government.

On an over-the-year comparison, jobs in trade, finance, government and service were up notably; manufacturing and transportation jobs remained virtually unchanged; and construction employment showed a sizeable decline.

In another area, the Labor Dept. reported that the workweek in June for workers on non-farm payrolls averaged 38.3 hours, down six-tenths of an hour from June 1966. Weekly earnings, at $101.90, were up $2.70 over the year.

The factory workweek averaged 40.5 hours for the month, up from May but less than seasonally expected.

Average hourly earnings of factory production workers were unchanged from May to June at $2.81 per hour. Weekly factory earnings rose to an average of $113.80, up about $1 since June 1966.

Goldstein said that the "upward creeping of unemployment over the year continues to reflect a major weakness in the manufacturing and construction industries."

Wisconsin Court Orders City to Arbitrate Firing

Madison, Wis.—The Wisconsin Supreme Court ordered the City of Rhinelander to live up to its agreement with Local 1226 of the State, County & Municipal Employes and arbitrate the discharge of a city worker.

In doing so, the state's highest court declared that it had been wrong 16 years ago when it ruled that courts cannot be used to enforce an arbitration provision in a collective bargaining agreement.

It specifically repudiated the 1951 decision and adopted instead a minority opinion in the case declaring that it is illogical to hold that arbitration provisions are valid but can't be enforced.

"The very purpose of grievance arbitration is to prevent individual problems from blossoming into labor disputes which cause strikes and lockouts," the court declared.

It also rejected the city's contention that the discharge was not subject to arbitration and that in any event the city had no statutory authority to enter into a binding arbitration agreement.

The State Supreme Court said the authority to enter into binding agreements was specified by state law and that a grievance resulting from a dismissal certainly came within the scope of a contract clause permitting arbitration of any controversy over interpretation of the agreement or conditions of employment.

A lower court, relying in part on the state Supreme Court's 1951 decision, had ruled against the union. The Supreme Court reversed the lower court action.

Toronto Professor Joins UAW Review Board

Detroit, Mich.—Appointment of Prof. Harry W. Arthurs, associate professor at the Osgoode Hall Law School of the University of Toronto, as a member of the Auto Workers Public Review Board has been announced by UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

The appointment fills the vacancy caused by the retirement last year of Magistrate J. A. Hanrahan, Windsor, Ont.

Climax to 7-Year Fight:

'Truth-in-Lending' Clears Senate, 92-0

as $18 per $100 instead of 18 percent.

A strong effort to strengthen the Senate bill is anticipated in the House Banking Committee, where a subcommittee headed by Rep. Leonor K. Sullivan (D-Mo.) is expected to begin hearings by early in August. Mrs. Sullivan was a cosponsor of the original Douglas bill and has indicated she will seek to expand the Senate measure.

The Senate bill does not limit the interest or credit charge that can be levied. But it allows buyers and borrowers to compare rates by requiring a uniform method of stating the credit charges. At present, one establishment might state its credit charge as 3 percent a month; another might claim a finance charge of 8 percent if a loan of $100 requires payment of $108 in 12 monthly installments, although the true rate is approximately 16 percent; a third firm might merely offer its goods at "$2 down and $2 a week."

Passage of "truth-in-lending" has been a major AFL-CIO goal for years and the federation told the Senate committee at hearings in April that many union families pay more than they should for credit charges because of the "flim-flam" and the "curtain of indecipherable statistics" used by stores and moneylenders.

The House and Senate passed separate but similar bills on the same day to raise life insurance coverage for federal employes.

Both bills would slightly increase the government share of the cost of the group insurance premiums—from the present one-third to 40 percent. Employes would pay 60 percent instead of two-thirds.

The House bill boosts the coverage from the amount of each worker's annual salary, rounded off at the highest thousand dollars, to one and one-third his salary. The insurance ceiling would be hiked from $20,000 to $40,000.

Under the Senate bill, all persons making under $8,000 a year would be covered by a $10,000 policy and persons above that salary would have their coverage boosted by $2,000. The ceiling would go to $30,000.

Unions' Proposal

Federal employe unions had urged that the government pay at least 50 percent of the cost and the chairman of the subcommittee which considered the legislation, Rep. Dominick V. Daniels (D-N.J.), told the House that insurance programs in private industry "have progressed far beyond the federal program," with most private employers paying either all or at least half of the cost.

As Congress returned from a 10-day recess, there were indications that the Administration will press for a tax increase this year to meet rising Viet Nam war costs and that the session is likely to last well into the autumn.

Both House Speaker John W. McCormack and Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield used almost identical language to this effect at news conferences.

Gompers Story Slated for TV On Labor Day

Dramatic highlights in the life of Samuel Gompers, the immigrant youth who rose from New York slums to help found the American labor movement, will be featured in a special television presentation during the Labor Day holiday period.

Arrangements are now being completed to show the half-hour public service film on more than 100 television stations.

Produced by the George Meany Foundation in conjunction with the National Broadcasting Company, "The Liquid Fire" dramatizes Gompers' lifelong dedication to "represent the side of the toiling, wage-earning masses," as he described his role.

Scenes in the film portray Gompers as a fiery young leader among striking cigar workers, as the first president of the American Federation of Labor in 1886 and as an international figure in zealous pursuit of a worldwide labor organization.

The film also provides glimpses into Gompers' personal philosophy, which guided the movement during his tenure and which survives today.

Gompers, who was born in London in 1850 and came to the United States at 13, was self-educated and, in the custom of his day, read aloud to his fellow workers while they rolled tobacco leaves. To this training Gompers credited his vocal strength and physical endurance to withstand lengthy orations and debate in the pre-electronic era.

Gompers died in 1924 while leading an American labor delegation to Mexico in behalf of a Pan-American Federation of Labor.

Arbitration Set For St. John's Faculty Firings

Brooklyn, N. Y.—The "final and binding" arbitration offer made by St. John's University has been accepted by 13 of the 31 faculty members who were discharged in December 1965 in a dispute over academic freedom.

All 13 are members of the United Federation of College Teachers, which is Local 1460 of the American Federation of Teachers. Five other union members rejected arbitration. Two non-union teachers among the dismissed have been reinstated, and 11 others have taken posts elsewhere; the university said none accepted arbitration.

UFCT Pres. Israel Kugler said the union had delayed action on the proposal, which was made March 7, in the hope of inducing the university to change its insistence on closed hearings, which will be conducted by the American Arbitration Association.

Those who agreed to arbitration include the Rev. Peter O'Reilly, chairman of the university's UFCT chapter, who has accepted a teaching post at the University of Southern Illinois for the coming academic year, and three other union leaders—Msgr. John G. Clancy, biographer of Pope Paul VI; Dr. William McBrien and Dr. Rosemary Lauer.

Shopcraft Unions Press Conferees on Rail Bill

Six rail shopcraft unions served notice on House-Senate conferees that their voluntary no-strike pledge can't continue indefinitely.

The conferees are trying to reconcile two bills passed last month to head off a strike for higher wages by 135,000 shopcraft workers. Both measures would bar a strike during a 90-day period of mediation and negotiation. The Senate bill, if no voluntary agreement were reached, would impose the terms recommended by a special mediation board.

Rail unions, although legally free to strike since June 19, have stayed on the job while the conference committee worked on the bill. But the unions have now put an expiration date on the no-strike pledge they gave a month ago.

They wrote Rep. Harley O. Staggers (D-W.Va.) that the pledge will be withdrawn at midnight, July 15, if the congressional deadlock continues. They did not, however, set a new strike date.

Later, Machinists Vice Pres. Joseph W. Ramsey said in a statement that union members on the railroads "need and deserve a substantial wage increase, and they are getting very restless." He added:

"The railroads have stalled this issue for 14 months and they are still stalling, hoping Congress will enact compulsory arbitration. The only way we can get the railroads to negotiate seriously is through our members' right to strike."

Other shopcrafts bargaining jointly through the AFL-CIO Railway Employes Dept. are the Boilermakers, Sheet Metal Workers, Int'l. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Railway Carmen and Firemen & Oilers.

The AFL-CIO strongly opposed the Senate compulsory arbitration bill, terming it a threat to collective bargaining and a danger to the entire labor movement.

Union Rights Pushed For Farm Workers on grounds of occupation as it is on grounds of race."

Answering objections that have been raised by farm employers to labor law coverage, Meany pointed out that the strikes the employers fear would be most likely to occur in the absence of collective bargaining.

"The farm workers' strikes during the last year have been strikes, not for wages and working conditions, but for the fundamental right to bargain collectively," he said.

As for the mobility of farm workers and the seasonal nature of the work, this would pose no more difficulty than in the construction industry, Meany observed. He noted that the NLRB machinery proposed in the legislation is patterned on the construction industry model.

In answer to questions, Meany said the entire economy will benefit by higher wages and more purchasing power in the hands of farm workers, just as it has by higher wages for industrial workers.

Subcommittee Chairman Harrison A. Williams, Jr. (D-N.J.) described the AFL-CIO testimony as "the most eloquent I have ever heard."

Williams and the other two subcommittee members present—Senators Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.) and Ralph W. Yarborough (D-Tex.)—said they had been completely convinced by their on-the-spot investigation in Texas of the need to bring farm workers under the National Labor Relations Act.

They cited the "obstinancy of employers" and the apparent indifference of the state government as evidence of the need for federal action.

Williams said the subcommittee still hoped to hear from Capt. A. Y. Allee of the Texas Rangers in reply to charges of beatings and harassments of strikers.

Allee Invited Again

Allee had refused to appear at the Rio Grande hearings and Williams made public a new telegram inviting him to come to Washington with expenses paid to put his side of the dispute on the record and answer questions.

Williams wired the Rangers captain that "the subcommittee received testimony from numerous witnesses that you and Texas rangers under your command have trespassed upon private property, made numerous arrests without legal cause, used physical force far beyond that required to take a subject into custody, participated in acts of strikebreaking and committed other infringements of personal and property rights."

Migrant Crew Leader Draws Federal Fine

Scranton, Pa.—The first prosecution of a farm-labor contractor under a new federal law brought a $100 fine and a year's probation for a Florida woman. The case grew out of an accident in which a busload of migrant farm workers overturned and hit a tree, killing one of the workers and injuring 17 others.

Miss Bernethea Williams of Perrine, Fla., pleaded guilty to a charge of failing to secure a certificate of registration as a farm labor contractor and having no accident insurance on the bus she used to transport 21 tomato pickers. U.S. District Judge William J. Nealon imposed the sentence in Federal Court here.

State police told Assistant U.S. Attorney Thomas Hanlon that the bus, with faulty brakes and tires ran off the road near Bloomsburg, Pa., last Aug. 31 en route to a tomato farm. One of the injured workers lost a leg and the driver, James Chapman was fined $25 and $5 costs by a Bloomsburg justice of the peace for driving without a license, Hanlon reported.

The law under which Miss Williams was convicted—the Farm Labor Contractor Registration Act—requires leaders of migrant crews to register annually with the Labor Dept., meet standards in recruiting and transporting workers, and maintain insurance on vehicles used in moving the workers from crop to crop. About 2,000 crew leaders and regular employes have registered this year under the law, in effect since 1965, Labor Sec. Willard Wirtz said.

Steelworkers Pledge Funds to University

Chicago—The Steelworkers will contribute $100,000 to Roosevelt University's "Up to Excellence" Campaign, Dr. Rolf A. Weil, university president, announced.

The gift, which reflects the union's historic support of the university, will be paid in five $20,000 installments beginning this year, according to Frank McCallister, director of the university's Labor Education Division.

Boot & Shoe Wins 3rd Plant Of Maine Chain

Old Town, Me.—The Boot & Shoe Workers won bargaining rights for 410 workers at a Penobscot Shoe Co. plant here, their third in seven months at a Penobscot location. The vote in a National Labor Relations Board election was 205-140 in favor of the union, with 12 votes challenged.

The plant here produces medium to high-priced women's handsewn and sports shoes. It is one of four units of the Penobscot chain.

Boot & Shoe first won recognition from the chain last November at Pittsfield, Me., where members staged a 13-week strike to win an acceptable contract. The strike drew public notice because of picketing and fund-raising activities of University of Maine students on behalf of the workers.

The union won its second election last March in another Old Town plant of Penobscot. Union membership in the chain now totals 1,200, according to Mara.

President Names Mediation Board

By Duane Emme

Pres. Johnson named a five-member mediation board in the rail shopcrafts dispute after Congress enacted a compulsory arbitration bill ending a series of strikes by the nation's railroad workers.

The President named AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany to the special board and designated Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.) as chairman. Other members are former Sen. Leverett Saltonstall (R-Mass.), Fred Kappel, retired president of American Telephone & Telegraph Co., and Theodore Kheel, a New York mediator.

The compulsory arbitration law, which passed the Senate 68 to 21, and the House 244 to 148, and was signed by the President—all on the same day, July 17—is virtually the same as the bill previously passed by the Senate. (Rollcalls, Pages 10 and 11.)

It provides for a 90-day mediation period. If there is no agreement in the first 60 days, the board will propose settlement terms. They become effective in another 30 days if no settlement is reached before then, and will remain in effect, if imposed, until the parties reach a contract agreement, or until Jan. 1, 1969, at the latest.

Immediately after Congress acted, and after accepting appointment to the board, Meany in addressing the Longshoremen's convention in Miami Beach declared that "if railroads are so important that workers are not allowed to strike "then the public should own the railroads, not any private interest."

Chairman G. E. Leighty of the Railway Labor Executives' Association charged that the new law is "unfair and un-American." He said Congress has told workers "you must labor for government-imposed wages for the profit of your private employers."

Strikes by members of the shopcrafts began at midnight July 15, when a previous no-strike pledge of the six unions expired. The

URW Wins Pattern for New Pacts

Akron, O. — The Rubber Workers pushed toward settlements with all Big Five rubber firms after reaching tentative agreement with General Tire & Rubber Co. and the B. F. Goodrich Co. on terms the URW called pattern-setting.

Goodrich was the second of the Big Five to reach agreement with the union. Its 12,000 workers had been on strike since Apr. 21 in nine plants.

43-Cent Raises Won

The breakthrough in the long strike came first at General, where a three-year pact increases wages 43 cents an hour, with 10 cents more for skilled trades workers in the first contract year, and boosts Supplementary Unemployment Benefits to 80 percent of earnings instead of 65 percent. The SUB improvement was a major union objective.

Another major gain, the union said, was Goodrich's acceptance of the union demand that all employes, in both tire and non-tire plants, get the same pay raises. Previously non-tire workers got smaller raises than tire plant employes.

The two settlements cover 15,300 of the 77,300 workers engaged in

Abel Hits 'Inadequate Terms':

Copper Strike Tied To Industry Stand

Pittsburgh—A strike of 37,000 copper workers against eight major nonferrous metals firms was provoked by a "rigid" management policy of offering "wholly inadequate terms" designed to cause a stalemate in contract talks, Pres. I. W. Abel of the Steelworkers charged here.

When a July 15 strike deadline approached without any change in management's united stance, members of the USWA and 19 other unions arranged an orderly shutdown of facilities and walked out at 1 minute after midnight across the nation.

Key strike issues include wages and a living-cost escalator clause.

All the unions reported "solid" picket lines and high morale at mines and smelters of the Big Four firms—the Anaconda Co., Phelps Dodge Corp., American Smelting & Refining Co., Kennecott Copper Corp.—and these smaller companies: Magma Copper Co., Inspiration Consolidated Copper Co., U.S. Metals Co. and Miami Copper Co.

The unions are coordinating their negotiations for the first time in copper industry history.

Besides USWA they are the Operating Engineers, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, Auto Workers, Sheet Metal Workers, Machinists, Iron Workers, Carpenters, Painters, Boilermakers, Molders, Bricklayers, Plumbers & Pipefitters, Blacksmiths, Teamsters, Railroad Trainmen, Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen, Railway Carmen, and the Office & Professional Employes.

Abel's statement denounced industry leaders for refusing to reach an equitable settlement and pledged the full support of the USWA to the strikers. Other unions also rallied behind the strikers and messages of support flooded in.

Co-Chairmen Joseph P. Molony and A. C. Skinner of USWA's nonferrous industry conference called

Farm Labor Rights Urged In New Study

A blue ribbon presidential commission, completing an extensive 18-month study of the nation's agricultural problems, has urged that farm workers be brought under the protections of the National Labor Relations Act.

The commission, in its report to Pres. Johnson, saw "no justification" for differentiating farm labor from other workers.

"Rural workers must have the same rights to bargain collectively for wages as urban workers," it declared.

The 29-member Food & Fiber Commission, set up by the President in November 1965, also recommended that farm workers have protection equal to urban workers

Members Back Union Policies, LBJ

Union members would vote overwhelmingly for Pres. Johnson over any leading Republican contender and they solidly back the legislative positions of the President and the AFL-CIO, according to an in-depth poll taken earlier this year.

Dir. Alexander E. Barkan of the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education discussed the findings of the survey in an article scheduled to be published in the August issue of the American Federationist.

Barkan noted the widespread membership support and added:

"Yet there is some uncertainty and unease among unionists, notably concerning jobs and economic security, some areas of civil rights and Viet Nam, though the vast majority of union members support the President's conduct of the war there."

He stressed the scientific accuracy of the poll commissioned by COPE and conducted last January by professional pollster John Kraft. Interviews were conducted with 1,700 members selected at random from 12 international unions—industrial, craft and service. The sample reflected the age, sex, geographical and racial characteristics of the membership.

The survey yielded a good deal of information about union members today as well as data on their attitudes toward their unions and their government.

Barkan said this general profile of the union member emerged from the survey:

- 32 percent of union families are in the $5,000 to $7,500 a year income range, a total which includes all family income.
- 46 percent are in the $7,500 to $15,000 a year income range.
- 25 percent of union members are less than 30 years old.
- Nearly 50 percent are less than 40 years old;
- Nearly 50 percent of all members now live in suburbs.
- Nearly 75 percent of members under 40 live in suburbs.
- About 20 percent of union members are women.
- About 13 percent of union members are Negro and 4 percent are Mexican, Oriental or other racial minorities.
- 25 percent of present members have belonged to their union for 5 years or less.

Rusk Hails Labor's 'Enormous Help' In Supporting Nation's World Role

By David L. Perlman

Miami Beach—Sec. of State Dean Rusk spoke to American labor, to Congress, to Hanoi and to Moscow from the platforms of two big union conventions here.

He spoke of war and peace, of America's goals in a troubled world, and of the obstacles to these goals.

To delegates at the Retail Clerks and Longshoremen's conventions, Rusk expressed his and Pres. Johnson's deep appreciation for the "enormous help" of the trade union movement in world affairs.

"You provide strong leadership and generous assistance to the development of free trade unions," he said. "You help fellow workers in many lands to improve their living standards, at the same time strengthening the foundations of democracy. The good will you have shown others has genrated good will toward your own country among the free people of the world."

Rusk thanked the Longshoremen for the "extraordinary help" their teams of experts gave towards breaking the cargo-handling logjam in Saigon and other Viet Nam ports. He hailed the "far-sighted and far-flung international activities" of the Retail Clerks in Latin America and elsewhere.

Amid press reports that the foreign aid bill is in trouble with Congress, he acknowledged that "there is a certain weariness in some of the present discussions of foreign aid."

He stressed that the entire foreign assistance program costs only six-tenths of 1 percent of the nation's gross national product.

"I find it hard to believe that this nation cannot afford that kind of investment," he said.

"Peace in Viet Nam" remains Pres. Johnson's goal, Rusk said, "and if we can get a response from the authorities in Hanoi, there could be peace in Southeast Asia." Thus far, he added, "no one has been able to produce a real live North Vietnamese with whom we can talk peace."

If North Viet Nam wants the bombing stopped as a prelude to negotiations, Rusk said, "we would like to have someone, somewhere, at least whisper behind his hand that those three or four divisions of North Vietnamese forces in the demilitarized zone will not attack our Marines while negotiations are going on."

To Moscow, Rusk suggested that the Soviet Union take a second thought before entering on a new missile and missile defense race which would "add tens of billions of dollars" to the defense budgets of both countries "without changing in any way the existing strategic situation."

Both nations, Rusk said, would do better to spend their billions on "vast unfinished business in our homes and communities, in our schools, in our social welfare programs, in our medical care."

The secretary of state was given cheering, standing ovations at both conventions. Retail Clerks delegates greeted him with banners and placards ranging from a formal "Welcome Secretary of State Rusk" to a hand-drawn sign, reading "Hi, Dean."

Rusk returned to Washington carrying gold honorary membership cards in both the Retail Clerks and the Longshoremen.

Switchmen's Delegates Set Bargaining Goals

Buffalo, N. Y.—Delegates to the Switchmen's convention here wound up six days of sessions by approving a series of actions aimed toward a new era of progress on bargaining and legislative fronts.

The convention re-elected Pres. Neil P. Speirs and Sec.-Treas. Daniel W. Collins to new four-year terms. It also re-elected Vice Presidents W. R. Meyers, George Clark, J. C. Van Heck, L. B. Richardson and Lloyd Combs.

George T. DuBose, a former Switchmen's general chairman on the Central of Georgia, was elected a new vice president to succeed John S. Tamaska, who did not seek another term.

A major resolution on bargaining set these goals for the union's next national movement: A six-hour work day without reduction in present eight hours pay, an improved health and welfare program and additional vacation benefits.

In the legislative area, the convention called for improvements in benefits under the Railroad Retirement Act and overhaul of the Railway Labor Act to make its bargaining procedures more equitable to unions.

Employers Stall

The delegates charged in a resolution that the RLA is being "used to the utmost" by rail managements to stall bargaining. The convention re-emphasized the union's firm opposition to "any and all forms of compulsory arbitration."

A main speaker, Chairman G. E. Leighty of the Railway Labor Executives' Association, declared that "Congress must cease to be an instrument for intervening and settling labor disputes by compulsion.

Leighty pointed out that "in those countries where compulsory arbitration has been tried, it has not prevented strikes or brought industrial peace."

If rail workers are to be barred from striking and "required to work for the good of the country, then railroads should be seized and required to give up their profits for the good of the country," he declared.

Pres. H. E. Gilbert of the Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen issued a strong plea for merger among rail operating unions to meet the challenges posed by shrinking employment and the "tremendous" economic pressures on unions.

He declared that there are too many inter-union rivalries that enable managements to use the unions for "whipsaw purposes."

The convention reiterated the Switchmen's support for merger among operating unions on a basis that would protect craft autonomy. Delegates chose a 10-man committee, headed by Speirs, to study prospective merger proposals.

Among other actions, the convention voted a $1 increase in the per capita payment. The new rate of $4.50 a month, starting next Jan. 1, is needed to meet rising costs and finance expanded organizing efforts, delegates were advised.

San Francisco Banker Named to Head FNMA

Raymond H. Lapin of San Francisco, former commissioner of the California Economic Development Agency, chairman of the Governor's economic task force and banker, has been appointed president of the Federal National Mortgage Association, HUD Sec. Robert C. Weaver announced.

Convention Told:

Retail Clerks Set For New Growth

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The Retail Clerks are better prepared than at any time in the union's 80-year history to meet the twin challenges of bargaining and organizing, Pres. James A. Suffridge told 1,000 convention delegates here.

Suffridge said the union entered the convention with more than 500,000 members and a record of 23 consecutive years of growth. Membership has risen nearly 32 percent in the four years since the last convention, he reported.

The retail field is "one of the fastest-growing, most rapidly-changing industries" in the United States and Canada, Suffridge said, with "an increasing trend" towards domination "by a small number of large corporations."

Growth of suburban shopping centers and the impact of automation in the retail field are two of the key problems facing union negotiators and organizers in the years ahead, he observed.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told the delegates that "organizing the unorganized is still the prime responsibility" of union members.

"It is a fundamental truism," he declared, "that the unorganized, low-paid worker is a menace to the high standards achieved by those who are organized."

But labor, Meany stressed, "cannot advance as a group apart at the expense of the rest of society. . . . Labor has a long record of fighting for things that benefit all the people of America—workmen's compensation, unemployment insurance, medicare, social security, better housing. All of these things benefit all the people, and all of them carry the label of the trade union movement."

Medical Cost 'Scandal'

Just as labor has taken the lead on these matters, Meany said, it will lead the drive to bring down the cost of medical care and drugs.

Medical and drug costs are "becoming a national scandal," he declared, adding that "It is getting to the point where there are very, very few people who can afford to be sick."

The trade union movement is "the only organized group in this country with the power and dedication" to bring down medical costs, he said. If "we don't do it, it will not be done," he said, "and I predict that we are going to lead this fight and that this particular scandal is going to be eliminated."

Besides Meany and Sec. of State Dean Rusk, speakers included congressmen and senators from both parties.

From strife-torn New Jersey, Sen. Clifford P. Case (R) spoke soberly of the riots in Newark's Negro ghetto.

"If decent leadership for civil rights is not supported by the American people," he warned, "then the demagogues will take over."

The RCIA and other unions, Case said, have stood up "against racism, against the white backlash and the black backlash, too. It is essential that this be done."

Rep. William Anderson (D-Tenn.) urged the RCIA to continue its drive for state laws barring the use of so-called "lie detectors" in employment and added, "I think we ought to have a national law" as well.

Hits 'Lie Detectors'

When employers are allowed to compel workers and job applicants to submit to polygraph tests, Anderson said, it means that a prospective worker must "submit to an unregulated, emotional probing so that his qualifications for employment may be judged on scientifically unreliable criteria, by interpreters who are, themselves, probably unqualified."

Also on the opening day, the convention viewed brief filmed greetings from 15 U.S. senators.

Pres. Paul Hall of the Seafarers, said that the trade union movement had been instrumental in rallying support for Israel when it was threatened by the Arab blockade. The big "oil cartels," Hall said, were ready to sacrifice Israel "on an altar of black gold."

The Mideast crisis strikes at freedom of the seas, he noted, "because when a bum like Nasser says we can't use the Suez Canal, hundreds of American ships are affected."

The eighth gold card honorary membership conferred by the RCIA in its 80-year history was presented to Rusk "in recognition of his friendship, understanding and devotion to the basic ideals, aims and objectives of the RCIA." One of the five other living gold card members, Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey, was scheduled to speak later.

As the convention moved toward its final days, committees worked into the night on resolutions and proposed constitutional changes.

Midwest Editors' Parley Studies Urban Challenge

Chicago—Some 60 editors of union publications looked into "Urban Society—a Challenge to Labor," at the annual conference here of the Midwest Labor Press Association.

The program included workshops on radio and television programming and a showing of part of "Labor's Language," weekly TV series sponsored by the Colorado AFL-CIO.

The sessions were held in cooperation with the University of Illinois Chicago Labor Education Program. Dr. Philip M. Hauser, president of the American Sociological Association, delivered the annual Eugene Debs Memorial Lecture at the conference banquet.

Pres. Leslie Orear, Chicago, editor of the Packinghouse Worker, was re-elected to a second term. Floyd Smith, Chicago, editor of the Clerical Bulletin (Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers), was elected secretary-treasurer, and Bernard Schuck, Anderson, Ind., editor of the Auto Workers' Lamplighter, was chosen editor of the MLPA Newsletter.

Elected vice presidents were Daisy Kaschte, Canada; Robert Kite, Illinois; Sam Williams, Indiana; Leona Nichols, Kansas; Meyer Goldman, Missouri; Paul Morris, Michigan; Bernard Stern, Ohio; Josephine Curran, Minnesota; Jeraldine Marchant, Wisconsin; Anthony Franschini, Pennsylvania, and C. Wage Competition Hit:

Longshoremen Set to Bargain For Uniform Labor Standards

Miami Beach—Industrywide standards of wages and working conditions in Atlantic and Gulf Coast ports and full protection against job loss from pre-packaging of cargo emerged as major goals of the Longshoremen at the union's 75th anniversary convention here.

ILA Pres. Thomas W. Gleason, unanimously re-elected to a second four-year term, told delegates that he expects the 1968 round of contract negotiations to be "difficult and trying."

The union, he said, will strive "to eliminate any vestige of competition among ports based on lower wages or working standards. To protect all our members, we must continue to work for uniform conditions, industrywide bargaining and a national contract."

ILA Gen. Counsel Louis Waldman blamed the refusal of several minor employer groups to agree to conditions negotiated with the major shipping associations for greatly prolonging the dock strike during the last contract talks. "True industrywide bargaining" would be good for both dock workers and their employers, he said.

Waldman stressed the "basic trade union principle that employers should not be able to compete with each other on the inducement of lower wages."

The impact of containerization—pre-packaged cargo units — on waterfront employment was soberly discussed by several speakers.

Gleason told the delegates that the container royalty payment Longshoremen now receive "is not sufficient protection to our members" and charged that much of the packaging is done under low-wage, non-union conditions.

Acting U.S. Maritime Administrator J. W. Gulick said the efficiency of containerization is making U.S. shipping more competitive with other nations. He added, however, that management and government, as well as labor, must share a concern about adverse effects on employment.

An employer spokesman, New York Shipping Association Chairman Alexander P. Chopin, said the problems of technological change in the industry "are far too complex to be postponed for deadline bargaining in a countdown atmosphere. This is no job for 3 a.m., cold coffee, colder hamburgers and punchy thinking during waning zero hours of a contract. Let's get at it well in advance of actual negotiations."

The ILA's role in helping South Viet Nam cut down unloading delays at its ports was lauded by Chairman Edward A. Garmatz (D-Md.) of the House Merchant Marine Committee.

Garmatz noted that Gleason and a team of five ILA specialists—with the union paying all expenses—"worked seven days a week, from 7 a.m. until 11 p.m." on the Viet Nam assignment.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told the delegates, "I cannot praise too highly the work the ILA has done in the defense of the free way of life . . . not only in Viet Nam but in other areas as well."

Clear Thinking Lauded

The ILA, Meany said, "is one organization where the officers and members have never been deluded or confused about the real nature of the struggle that is going on in the world today—a contest between freedom and tyranny over the minds and lives and labor of men."

Meany termed "the campaign of aggression against South Viet Nam and the campaign of aggression against Israel the work of the same authors."

He suggested that those who are interested in cultural exchanges with the Soviet Union "meet them at the Berlin Wall and then you will know what Soviet culture is."

The ILA's strong commitment to civil rights was stressed during the convention, with speakers including AFL-CIO Civil Rights Dir. Donald Slaiman and Whitney M. Young, Jr., executive director of the National Urban League.

Young, in a moving speech which Gleason said would be recorded and sent to every ILA local, urged union members not to condemn the riots in Newark unless they also condemn "the climate and conditions that brought about the senseless and desperate actions."

He told the delegates that Negroes make up 55 percent of the population of Newark, live in only 20 percent of the residential area, and have a 16 percent unemployment rate.

"These are some of the conditions that bring people to foolish behavior," Young said.

4,000 Unionists March To Back 9-Month Strike

Little Rock, Ark.—Arkansas union members, 4,000 strong, marched through the streets of Little Rock to the Capitol steps to demonstrate their support for 1,000 striking members of the Ladies Garment Workers and protest a no-picketing injunction.

The orderly but spirited crowd whistled, cheered and sang in a demonstration that buoyed the strikers' spirits after nine months on the picket line. The rally had been called by the Arkansas AFL-CIO to underscore the support of union members for the ILGWU strikers at the Ottenheimer plant of the Kellwood Corp., major supplier of women's dresses for Sears Roebuck & Co.

Plant employes have been trying for 18 months to get fair contract terms from management, whose delaying tactics led to the walkout last Oct. 25.

Gov. Winthrop Rockefeller (R), an unexpected speaker at the rally, drew cheers and applause when he walked through the Capitol doors and told the rally that management had agreed to resume talks. The governor said his staff, along with State Labor Commissioner Dotson Collins, will help seek a settlement.

Introduced by State AFL-CIO Pres. J. Bill Becker, Rockefeller said he was "shocked" after taking office in January to find little information in State Labor Dept. files on the background of the Ottenheimer strike.

Meanwhile, he and Collins had met with both sides and arranged to get all interested parties around the conference table July 21, he said. He added:

"I am pleased and proud of the way this gathering has been organized. It has been peaceful, exactly as you said it would be."

Picketing Banned

Becker was cheered when he condemned a June 22 order by Pulaski County Chancery Judge Murray O. Reed banning all picketing at the struck plant. On the first day of the strike, Reed issued an injunction limiting the pickets to four at each gate. He made the injunction permanent Dec. 20, and later found 13 strikers guilty of violating it. He fined them from $50 to $100 and sentenced three strikers to 10 days in jail—a decision the union called unjustified.

Becker told the rally that Ottenheimer management, which has continued operating with strikebreakers recruited from rural areas, did not come into court with clean hands. When the court enjoined all picketing—an order later upheld by the Arkansas Supreme Court—the State AFL-CIO and the Central Arkansas Labor Council decided to show their support for the strikers in the only other way open to them—by a public rally, Becker said.

Strong Meat Inspection Law Urged by Labor

Enactment of "strong, effective" federal meat inspection legislation was urged by AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller in testimony before the House Subcommittee on Livestock & Grains.

Biemiller recalled that in February the AFL-CIO Executive Council strongly recommended "inspection for wholesomeness and cleanliness of all meat and poultry, whether or not the meat crosses interstate lines." Some of the legislation before the subcommittee, including the bill proposed by the U.S. Dept. of Agriculture, "would not accomplish this objective," he observed. He specifically endorsed the coverage of the bill sponsored by Rep. Neal Smith (D-Ia.).

Biemiller noted that most Americans believe that all the meat they buy has been inspected by the federal government and that they are thus fully protected.

"Of course, they are not fully protected," he declared, "and they are being deluded into a feeling of false security.

"Actually, some 15 percent of all meat slaughtered in the nation and some 25 percent of all meat products processed are not federally inspected. Some of this undergoes state inspection, but even the best of the state programs . . . leave something to be desired."

The 60-year-old Meat Inspection Act does not permit "adequate regulation" in many areas, Biemiller declared, and the need for its modernization is "totally apparent." The AFL-CIO believes the consumer has the right "actually to get the full protection" he believes he has.

He urged that federal meat inspection cover all plants "which are in or affect interstate commerce," and dismissed objections based on states' rights as "unrealistic." He deplored weaknesses in the Agriculture Dept. bill, including continued dependence on the states.

Many of the amendments proposed by the packing industry and the National Association of State Departments of Agriculture, Biemiller charged, "would be a hoax on the consumer" and compound in his mind "present illusions about protections."

O'Brien Joins Staff On Social Security

James R. O'Brien has been appointed as an assistant director in the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security. He will deal particularly with unemployment insurance, workmen's compensation and related matters.

O'Brien previously was an assistant director in the Education & Research Dept. of the State, County & Municipal Employes. He had formerly held a similar position with the Woodworkers for a number of years.

A native of Massachusetts, O'Brien lived for a number of years in Brighton and attended parochial school there. He is a graduate of the University of Houston and a veteran of World War II.

Two Pacts Spur Rubber Strike Talks

URW's longest strike against the rubbermaking giants. Union negotiators were driving toward matching settlements with Firestone, Uniroyal and Goodyear as the AFL-CIO News went to press.

The URW has been on strike for 13 weeks against Firestone and Uniroyal. Some progress toward settlement was reported but significant working condition provisions still had to be resolved, union bargainers said.

Contract language has been in the acceptable stage for two weeks at Goodyear but movement toward settlement has not been rapid despite establishment of the economic pattern at General and Goodrich. The URW strike against Goodyear started July 9.

URW Pres. Peter Bommarito and Dir. William E. Simkin of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service were in on the Goodrich negotiations.

Bommarito hailed the Goodrich and General agreements, calling the terms "historic" and the best ever won by the union in bargaining with the Big Five.

He credited union bargaining committees, international and local union officials and "the men and women who walked the picket lines." Both agreements have been valued by the companies at more than 80 cents an hour and higher than the 5 percent national pattern in manufacturing settlements.

15-15-13 Formula

Wage increases in the two settlements break down to 15 cents an hour in each of the first two years and 13 cents the third year.

Both contracts raise pension benefits from $3.25 a month for each year of service to $5.50. Disability pensions will be $11 a month for each year of service. Survivors of URW members who die after retiring from either plant will get five years of pension benefits guaranteed. Both companies agreed to extend the coverage to survivors of employes who retire at 62, and General Tire gave the same guarantee to survivors of employes who die between 62 and 65 and who qualify for a pension but keep on working.

The death benefit on company-paid life insurance was raised $1,000 to $7,500. Hospitalization was doubled to provide 730 days of care and a new schedule for full-coverage surgical insurance was adopted, based on a "reasonable and customary" fee.

Survivors of workers who die after reaching age 55 and completing 15 years of service will be covered by hospitalization and surgical benefits until death or remarriage of the spouse. If the worker dies before reaching 55 and completing 15 years of service, the coverage still will last three months after the death.

Both Goodrich and General employes will get five weeks' vacation after 22 years instead of 25, and for the first time, a sixth week after 30 years. At Goodrich, employes will get two weeks' vacation after their first year of service and three weeks after five years. Now they must work three years for two weeks and 10 years for three weeks. General Tire employes won't get the early vacation step-ups but will get a 10th paid holiday, not offered by Goodrich.

Sickness and accident insurance benefits were raised $10 a week by Goodrich to $60 for women and $70 for men. General Tire adopted a graduated scale based on earnings that would give most employes in the Akron and Waco, Tex., plants $20 a week additional benefits.

Both companies raised pension benefits for retirees by $1.50 a month for each year of service. General additionally agreed that if the retirees purchase medicare those benefits would not be substracted from any they might receive from their company-paid hospitalization and surgical insurance.

The General Tire agreement was ratified by most members of Akron Local 9. Ratification meeting for Waco Local 312 was scheduled for July 22. Goodrich locals were to vote July 23.

How Members Would Vote

The Kraft poll revealed that, as of January 1967, union members would have voted for President Johnson's reelection overwhelmingly against any of the prominently-mentioned potential Republican candidates. Since January represented a low ebb in the President's popularity with the public at large and since recent public opinion polls show a sharp upturn in his popularity, inevitably this would reflect an even higher standing for the President among union members than the following figures show:

		Age Group
	Total	Under 30	30-49	50 and Over

COPE Poll Provides Profile Of Union Members, Attitudes

● 54 percent have belonged to their union for 10 years or more.

● 58 percent identify themselves as Democrats, 16 percent as Republicans, 17 percent as independents and 9 percent are not sure.

Before the findings of the Kraft poll were released, Barkan observed, the poll had been the subject of a spate of newspaper stories—"most of them are completely distorted."

He said the Wall Street Journal, "on the basis only of hearsay," ran a lengthy article on the poll and a press service picked up this version and gave it wider distribution.

In an article crowded with distortions and inaccuracies, Barkan said, the Journal claimed the poll showed that "labor's traditional legislative goals are far out of line with union members' main interests . . . The AFL-CIO's No. 1 goal in this session of Congress—boosting social security payments—draws more boos than cheers. . . ."

Barkan said that, in fact, the Kraft poll revealed "overwhelming support" among union members for AFL-CIO legislative positions with the single exception of open occupancy housing. And, he added, social security as such was not included as a question. Medicare was, he noted, and membership support for expanding the Medicare program registered 74 percent.

He said the Wall Street Journal also claimed that "the poll's political findings were stunning. . . ." The Journal quoted "one incredulous union man" as saying the poll showed anyone could beat Pres. Lyndon Johnson in 1968, even Sen. Charles Percy (R-Ill.).

Barkan said Pres. Johnson actually was an overwhelming favorite for reelection among union members when pitted in the poll against the most prominent potential Republican candidates.

For one thing, he pointed out, Percy's name didn't even figure in the poll.

When asked their choice for President, Barkan reported, union members picked Pres. Johnson over former Vice-Pres. Richard Nixon by 55 to 22 percent. They picked Pres. Johson over Michigan's Gov. George Romney by 46 to 30 percent, over California's Gov. Ronald Reagan by 60 to 16 percent and over New York's Gov. Nelson Rockefeller by 55 to 20 percent.

Barkan also noted that the Kraft poll was conducted in January, when national polls were showing the President's popularity to be slipping. The Louis Harris poll had only 43 percent giving the President a good job rating at that time, but by June the President had soared to 58 percent. This rise in popularity among the public undoubtedly would be accompanied by a similar or greater rise among union members, Barkan observed.

He said the President trailed in only one group of union members. Among members under 30, Gov. Romney was favored over Pres. Johnson by 47 to 42 percent at the time of the Kraft poll.

From medicare to pollution control, union members supported "by huge margins" the achievements and aims of the Administration and proposed improvements, he reported.

He listed the following degree of membership support: 74 percent in favor of expanding medicare; 94 percent in favor of federal efforts to control water pollution and 91 percent for air pollution control programs; 76 percent for strengthening workmen's compensation; 91 percent behind truth-in-packaging legislation and 91 percent for truth-in-lending.

Somewhat lower, but still substantial, support was expressed for expanded federal aid to education—67 percent—and in favor of an increase minimum wage—71 percent.

The feeling on the issue of repealing Section 14(b) of Taft-Hartley was closely related to geography. Overall, 54 percent favored repeal and 23 percent disagreed, with 23 percent not sure. In states where an open shop law prevails and this has been a live issue, union members "overwhelmingly reject it and want 14(b) repealed," Barkan said.

In another major area of the survey, the union members were asked: "What are the big problems on your mind—the things that bother you and should be getting attention?" Barkan said the issues uppermost in their minds involved jobs and economic security, the war in Viet Nam and civil rights.

He said 53 percent of all members listed economic problems from the cost of living and taxes to the job picture and wages. Forty-two percent listed the war in Viet Nam, "with the largest percentage of these supporting the President's policies there." Over 33 percent listed civil rights as a major issue. While most members backed civil rights progress in voting and public accommodations, support for open housing was slightly below 50 percent, Barkan said.

On other points, he reported that union members feel the White House rather than Congress should bear the responsibility for action on problems. Suburban living also shifts members' concerns to local issues like tax assessments, street repairs, school bond issues, etc.

In the area of communications, the poll showed that, while members by and large read union publications, they rely on television, daily newspapers and magazines for information. Despite the mass media, however, a fair portion of members look to union sources for helpful information. From a list of sources, only Pres. Johnson, a top nightly TV newscaster and a major news magazine came before AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany as the "most helpful source for information."

Of those who named Meany, 78 percent did so because he "represents my interests, levels with me, tries to solve problems."

Barkan noted that this was a far higher percentage of identity of interest than was achieved by any other listed source.

"The Kraft poll on the whole is encouraging," Barkan concluded. It indicates, he said, that AFL-CIO convention policies accurately reflect the feelings of the members, except on open occupancy housing which has 43 percent overall support and 48 percent support among members under 30.

Barkan said the "warning signals" set up by the poll's findings involve younger union members and suburbanites. The challenges facing COPE and the labor movement, he declared, are to strengthen labor's support among young people and to relate local and suburban problems to national issues.

Presidential Commission Reports:

Full Labor Law Protection Backed for Farm Workers

in "such important areas" as unemployment and workmen's compensation, social security and minimum wages.

The farm labor proposals were part of a 361-page report in which the commission called for "major shifts" in farm policies, including a new "social investment" program to bolster the economy of poor rural areas.

"Farming was once primarily a way of life" but now "it has become overwhelmingly a business," the commission observed.

Widening 'Gap' Cited

"The march of technology," it added, "has brought a widening gap between the poor and the well-to-do in agriculture, with widely different social and economic problems."

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany hailed "the most important recommendations" of the commission regarding farm workers and noted they had been "virtually ignored by the nation's press" in stories on the report.

Meany also pointed out that the recommendations were adopted by a "healthy majority of a generally conservative commission."

"These are all goals of the AFL-CIO and we welcome the support of the majority on the commission as we seek to achieve this legislation so necessary to farm workers," Meany said.

Pres. Johnson had instructed the commission to make a "penetrating and long range appraisal" of our agricultural and related foreign trade policies as they affect the national interest, farmers, workers and consumers.

The commission was headed by Dean Sherwood O. Berg of the University of Minnesota's Institute of Agriculture. It was made up largely of leaders in agriculture, business and education. Representing labor were Frank Fernbach, assistant director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research at the time of his appointment and now with the Steelworkers, and Vice Pres. Leon Schachter of the Meat Cutters.

Varying Views Heard

The commission received testimony from spokesmen for farm groups, cooperatives, business, religion, government, education and labor. It held hearings in Dallas, New York, Minneapolis, St. Louis, Atlanta, Tucson and San Francisco.

Labor's testimony was presented by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, Organizing Dir. William L. Kircher, Dir. Cesar Chavez, of the AFL-CIO United Farm Workers Organizing Committee, and Pres. Hank Brown of the Texas AFL-CIO.

Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey termed the report a "charter for agricultural progress" and "the most comprehensive study of the role of agriculture in the American economy . . . undertaken in the past 50 years."

The report stressed that farm workers "should not by federal or state exemption, be denied the benefits of policies and standards that are deemed to be in the interest of other wage earners."

These workers, it declared, should "be included under the provisions of the National Labor Relations Act, to the extent feasible and wherever necessary to achieve equivalence of personal and social protection for the rural work force."

Also, it added, rural workers need protection "equal to that of urban workers in such important areas as workmen's and unemployment compensation, social security, collective bargaining and minimum wages."

Fernbach, Schachter and three others on the commission, while agreeing with the recommendation to extend minimum wage coverage to farm employes, took issue with an allusion to possible unemployment if this were done.

In a supplementary statement, they attacked "peon" wages paid by some farm employers as "tragic and un-American" and said that the benefits derived from a farm minimum wage would "far exceed" any "minimal displacement."

"Decent pay for those who raise food and fiber," they said, "is not only a matter of equity and good economics, but also a matter which should touch the conscience of the entire nation."

The commission urged a "social investment" program to rebuild the economy of poor rural sections and assist those displaced by farming's technological revolution.

Income Floor Urged

It called for the government to provide a "minimum annual income opportunity" of $600 (in 1966 dollars) for a person over 65 with a farm background, for anyone disabled by farm work and for survivors of dead farm employes who —had they been in nonfarm work —would now be receiving such benefits.

The commission said the $600 minimum also should be made available to "underemployed" farm workers while they are looking for other jobs or taking job retraining courses.

To further alleviate rural "underemployment," the commission proposed new government programs of education, job training, job placement, relocation payments and more public works projects.

The report urged a stronger federal role in the federal-state unemployment service so as to eliminate racial bias and bias against rural people. It opposed any use of public funds that would only shift jobs from one area to another or "jeopardize" already established private enterprise.

Spelling out this opposition, the commission recommended that Congress "discontinue the opportunity presently existing under the Federal Tax code which allows the use of tax-free bonds for municipal bond financing."

In the area of "commercial" farming, a 16-member commission majority, including the two labor members, called for continuing, and in some cases improving, government farm price support set just below an average of world prices. This would be done until farm workers have incomes comparable to other workers.

Dissent Filed

The 13 minority members, including all business representatives, filed a dissent proposing a phasing out of price supports, with direct payments to farmers to assure only a "modest" proportion—possibly about 80 per cent—of world market prices.

The majority also proposed a study to determine if payments to farms should be reduced in ratio to their total production and recommended that "family farms" get priority over "corporation farms" in access to reclamation projects.

Elsewhere, the commission recommended that the U.S. stress technical and research aid in helping other nations grow enough food to meet "exploding" population needs, urged the government to expand trade in food and fiber, asked for steps to strengthen the U.S. merchant marine so it can compete with foreign fleets.

Additional views from Fernbach and Schachter asked that payments to farms be reduced now in relation to production increases, not merely studied, and that any expanded East-West trade be geared to our foreign policy objectives, not to profit.

Also, they "held strongly" that 50 percent of our grain shipments to the Soviet bloc should be carried on U.S. ships in view of the "critical need" to strengthen our merchant fleet and the desirability of "showing our flag" in ports where U.S. food is being delivered.

Joseph Liggett Dies; IBEW Vice President

Schenectady, N.Y.—Vice Pres. Joseph W. Liggett of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, head of the union's largest district, died at his home here three months after suffering a cerebral hemorrhage. He was 68.

He was business manager of Schenectady Local 166 when he was first elected to the international union post in 1946.

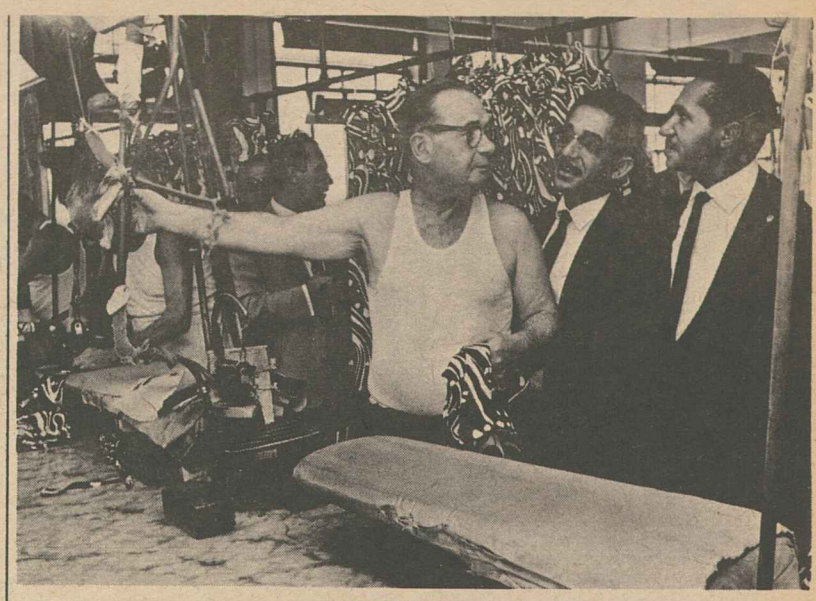
New Brochure Exposes Birch Society's Racism

Who's who and what's what in the John Birch Society's propaganda effort to fan the flames of racial tension are spelled out in The Shake-Up America Campaign, a new brochure published by the Institute for American Democracy, Inc.

"The Birch campaign is both false and devious," said IAD Chairman Franklin H. Littell, a Methodist minister and president of Iowa Wesleyan College. "The society is hammering home the theme that the civil rights movement was begun by the Communists and is still controlled and directed by them. J. Edgar Hoover has said that this is not so, and the IAD pamphlet documents this.

"Such a theme does two things: it foments racial strife; it serves as a recruitment device for the Birch society. The real threat to innocent citizens is that this campaign is couched in terms designed to deceive the public into thinking its goal is the 'improvement of race relations.' Nothing could be further from the truth."

The brochure, by Barbara Hogan, details the Birch operation and suggests ways to expose it. The IAD is an educational organization supported by church, business, labor and civic groups and is concerned with exposing far left and far right organizations. Copies of the new brochure can be had from the IAD at 1330 Massachusetts Avenue, N.W., Washington, D. C., 20005; one to nine copies at 35 cents each; 10 to 99 copies at 25 cents; 100 or more 20 cents each.



LANGUAGE BARRIERS meant nothing when eight officials of Brazil's Clothing & Garment Workers Trade Union spent two days as guests of the Ladies' Garment Workers in New York. At top, the Brazilians talk things over with members of Local 22 in the shop of L. Liman & Sons. Below, ILGWU Pres. Louis Stulberg welcomes the visitors and outlines the union's history and institutions.

NLRB Able to Handle Agricultural Coverage

The National Labor Relations Board will be able to handle the additional work if Congress extends the labor act to cover farm workers, NLRB Executive Sec. Ogden W. Fields testified at a Senate hearing.

Experience teaches, he told the Senate Migratory Labor subcommittee, "that the board can find workable solutions both for the problems anticipated and for those not yet foreseen."

As the subcommitte continued the Washington phase of its hearings, Chairman Harrison A. Williams, Jr. (D-N.J.), was sharply critical of the Texas Rangers for blocking testimony by Capt. A. Y. Allee. Allee and Rangers under him were charged in earlier testimony with abusing and harassing farm workers on strike in Starr County, Tex.

Charges Pending

Williams said at the hearing that Dir. Homer Garrison, Jr., of the Texas Dept. of Public Safety had advised him that charges against strikers who had testified to abuse by Allee were still pending in the courts. A department policy based on recent U.S. Supreme Court decisions, Williams said Garrison related, "prohibits its officers from making public comment on pending cases."

The subcommittee chairman observed wryly that the policy "only runs to Senate subcommittees," as Allee had recently testified in an action brought by a grower to enjoin picketing by the AFL-CIO United Farm Workers Organizing Committee.

Many farm operators and grower organizations opposed to "the very thought of unions" would be better off if federal laws provided a "floor of human decency" below which no other farm operator could fall, Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. said in testimony given for him by IUD Executive Dir. Jack T. Conway.

Reuther, urging extension of the labor laws to farm workers, expressed the conviction that "unions will hasten the day when farm workers can toil with a greater semblance of human dignity and America's marvel of abundant agriculture will not be based on the misery of a few."

Conway declared that Texas farm workers "are going to be organized into an effective union" in spite of grower opposition and police brutality.

Arnold Mayer, legislative representative of the Meat Cutters, made the same point when he declared that "whether Congress approves NLRA coverage or not, farm labor organization will continue and it will succeed."

"Either the law of the jungle will continue and the costs will be great," he said, "or established national laws will set the limits for both sides and will provide an impartial body to settle differences."

Research Dir. Kerry Napuk of the Packinghouse Workers urged Congress "to bring industrial democracy to the farm from the factory where it has flourished for 30 years or more," and warned that "the time to act is now before rising aspirations of farm workers themselves turn farms into battlegrounds."

AFM Waives Residuals For Public TV Series

New York—Pres. Herman D. Kenin has announced that the Musicians will waive residual payments of the theme and cue music of the new educational television series, "Operation Government," which is being produced by the Westinghouse Broadcasting Co.

The Critical Tax Question

IF, AS PRES. JOHNSON told a news conference last week, a tax increase is necessary to hold down a budget deficit and head off another period of price increases and rising interest rates, the nature of the new tax burden becomes a critical question.

In his message to Congress earlier in the year, the President called for a 6 percent surtax on corporate and individual income, excluding lower-income taxpayers.

The AFL-CIO Executive Council noted at the time that "by proposing to exempt lower-income families from the suggested tax increase, the President has given partial recognition to the principle that taxes should be based on ability to pay. It is the view of the AFL-CIO that, if such a tax increase is to be imposed later in the year, a greater increase should be levied on the extraordinarily high profits of business than on individual incomes."

Organized labor is convinced that the economy has the resources for extending social advances while meeting the military requirements of the conflict in Viet Nam. The cost of the war should not be absorbed by freezing or cutting expenditures for housing, the rebuilding of the cities, aid to education, the war on poverty or the achievement of clean air and water.

The nation could easily afford a substantial expansion of domestic programs within the present tax structures were it not for the war in Viet Nam. The additional cost of securing freedom in Southeast Asia may require a tax increase. But the basis for that increase must be an equality of sacrifice.

That equality involves a much greater contribution to the national welfare from profit-heavy business and industry.

The President has indicated that he may adjust his original proposal as to size and timing. It should be adjusted also to assure that the new tax—if really needed—is based on equality of sacrifice and ability to pay.

Rights for Rural Workers

A NEW AND IMPORTANT voice has been added to the growing chorus of demands for removal of the second-class citizen status of the American farm worker that denies him the simple protection of the nation's labor laws.

The President's Commission on Food & Fiber in an exhaustive report on agricultural policies and related problems has spoken out strongly and forthrightly for protection of rural workers by national and state laws on collective bargaining, social security, workmen's and unemployment compensation.

"Farm workers," said a majority of the commission, "should not, by federal or state exemption, be denied the benefits of policies and standards that are deemed to be in the interests of other wage earners." The commission said specifically that farm workers should be included under the provisions of the National Labor Relations Act.

Legislation to achieve this goal is before the Congress and the AFL-CIO has taken the lead in pressing for its passage.

The need is urgent. The farm worker has been denied the right given to every other worker by law—the right to bargain collectively through a union of his own choosing. This denial is intolerable. This bar to simple justice must be removed.

Excerpts from Decision:

Court Finds No Doubt Exists Of Stevens' Union-Busting Plan

The following is excerpted from the decision of the 2d U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New York upholding the NLRB's findings that J. P. Stevens & Co., Inc., violated the National Labor Relations Act in smashing a union organizing drive in its North and South Carolina plants.

ACCORDING to the board, in the spring of 1963, the union launched a campaign to organize the textile plants operated by the company in North and South Carolina; this proceeding involves incidents in 20 of those 43 plants. In response to the union's appearance, the company posted a notice on the bulletin boards in the plants which stated its "positive intention to oppose this union and by every proper means to prevent it from coming in here."

Prior to the organizing campaign, the plants had been operated in a permissive manner. Once an employe was hired, his tenure was fairly secure; discharges were uncommon. The company was tolerant, even lenient, in such matters as absences, work breaks, transfers, and rehirings. Formal written reports of employe reprimands, known as personnel action reports or write-ups, were infrequent and occurred only where misconduct was serious or repeated. With the advent of the union, however, this attitude changed swiftly. Issuance of write-ups, often quickly followed by discharge, became common for union adherents. Incidents or activities that had previously been overlooked now occasioned disciplinary action.

The board found that the company also resorted to other means in its campaign to defeat the union, such as much closer supervision of employes at work and in rest periods, surveillance of union meetings and union organizers, and interrogation of employes, all of which far exceeded the "proper means" of opposition referred to in the company's original notice. In brief, the board found that the company followed a pattern of interference, restraint and coercion of its employes.

On the facts taken as a whole, there was far more to support the findings of the company's illegal activity than the discharges alone. The sudden changes in pattern from permissiveness to harsh construction of work customs and rules has already been mentioned. Employes who became fearful when they saw fellow union members fired and who went to their supervisors to say they wanted to get out of the union were told they would have to prove they were through with it, for example, by reporting what the union was up to.

At the company's Watts plant, a supervisor allowed a typewriter, a duplicating machine and one of its employes' services to be used to reproduce and circulate forms for withdrawing from the union. And so it was that all but four of the 46 Watts employes who had notified the company of their union membership resigned.

There is no room for doubt of the board's ultimate conclusion:

[The company], through its plant superintendents, acting in collaboration, initiated and pursued a pattern of conduct the purpose of which was to crush the union movement. With scant regard for the means employed other than their effectiveness, it interfered with, restrained and coerced its employes in the exercise of their rights under the act, flagrantly, cynically, and unlawfully.

IF THERE WERE room for such doubt, it would be demolished by the frequent evasiveness of key company personnel in their testimony and the company's failure to supply convincing corroborative data from records it admittedly possessed to back up some of its otherwise unsupported but crucial assertions, for example, that the discharges in dispute were just a small percentage of those comparable in the plants or that the increased number of write-ups was due to higher standards, rather than being a form of interference with the unionization campaign.

The company also asserts that in some of the discharges it did not know that the employe was a union supporter; it also claims that the increased discipline was due to unwarranted employe preoccupation with union activity. The board rejected these contentions and it was justified in doing so. The evidence in this record, circumstantial and direct, overwhelmingly supports the board, taking into account whatever detracts from its weight.

We have reviewed the board's findings and the evidence to support them with respect to each of the 71 employes discharged discriminatorily and the two denied overtime; most of the company's charges that the evidence is insubstantial are entirely frivolous; all are without merit. We have also reviewed the six cases of discharge that are the subject of the union's appeal. Here too, the strength of the evidence varies, but we conclude that the board's findings are all supported by substantial evidence and hence cannot be disturbed.

Doctors' Team Reports:

Starving Negro Children Make Mississippi 'National Disaster'

A Senate Labor subcommittee investigating poverty in the U.S. heard from a team of doctors which visited Mississippi last May and found hunger approaching starvation among hundreds of Negro children. The following is excerpted from the testimony of one of the doctors.

MY NAME IS Raymond Wheeler. I am a resident of Charlotte, N. C., where I am engaged in the private practice of medicine. I am also chairman of the executive committee of the Southern Regional Council. Between May 27 and May 31 of this year I participated in a field survey of living and health conditions of a group of Negro children enrolled in a pre-school program sponsored by the Friends of the Children of Mississippi.

I would like at this time to make a statement summarizing the conditions that I personally saw in Humphreys and LeFlore Counties.

I might say here from the moment of my arrival until the moment I left the impact of the poverty, the malnutrition, the illness, the hostility of white Mississippians toward Negroes and toward even the whites who were seeking to help them, the impact of this was simply overwhelming.

Each doctor was taken into the homes of a number of the young children who attended the Friends of the Children of Mississippi centers. We saw these children, we talked with their parents, and we gained a mass of information from which emerged a pattern that seemed to fit every community that we saw.

The homes in which these children lived were quite tiny, usually two or three rooms, and in a poor state of repair, located most often in narrow alleys surrounded by accumulated filth and debris.

Some of the houses had running water, but few had inside toilets. Most were without screens or adequate ventilation. The land allocated to each dwelling was so limited that the houses were oppressively close together, allowing virtually no play room for the children and no room for a garden through which a family might supplement its diet.

When we questioned the mothers and the children about their diets the answer was always the same: a little rice, a biscuit for breakfast, dried beans or peas with occasional salt pork for lunch if lunch could be afforded, and for supper perhaps more bread or rice with molasses, occasionally peanut butter or a little meat. Only one of the families that I visited had milk regularly and this was reserved for what the mother termed the sickliest one.

One mother summed up the whole problem of diet in a very poignant sentence. "These children go to bed hungry and get up hungry and don't ever know nothing else in between."

The physical appearance of these children made her comment quite easily believable. We saw running noses, legs covered with indolent sores.

We saw thin arms, sunken eyes, lethargic behavior, swollen bellies. Even cursory examinations of the tongues, the eyes, the nail beds disclosed evidence of anemia and vitamin deficiency.

A white surgeon in Jackson, Miss., and Dr. Walwyn in Yazoo City both told me that almost without exception when these children are admitted to the hospital for elective surgery they have to be blood transfused in preparation for that surgery.

Mothers told me that they rarely sought medical services due to their inability to pay for them. I would estimate that 9 out of 10 children that we saw had never seen a doctor. I was told by some mothers of outright refusal of hospitals to care for their youngsters when they were sick because they were unable to pay.

Over and over again the urgent need for food was emphasized so that any medical needs for these children must be subordinated to this. The very accomplishment of provision of enough of the proper type of food would be the most important single measure that one could institute for maintaining good health.

The financial resources of these people are so meager as to make it beyond my rational comprehension as to how they are able to exist, to say nothing of paying for medical bills.

Sources of public assistance, in my opinion, in those two counties and perhaps throughout Mississippi, are totally inadequate to provide even for survival.

TIME AFTER TIME we were told stories of the dehumanizing treatment or refusal of aid by county welfare departments. There seemed to be no pattern or standard by which anyone could be certain that he could receive help from the welfare department.

There did seem to be, from the reports we received, a pattern of active discouragement by the welfare department of anyone applying for aid. I am talking about personal indignities suffered by those who applied for welfare, unexplained cuts in the size of checks, lack of welfare aid for hospitalization when the need was acute.

Frequently throughout the Mississippi Delta we heard charges of an unwritten but generally accepted policy on the part of those who control the state to eliminate the Negro in Mississippi, either by driving him out of the state or starving him to death. At first the charge seemed to me beyond belief. Yet now reviewing all that we saw and heard it becomes more and more credible.

Mississippi, it seems to me, is, for its poor and particularly for its Negro poor, a kind of prison in which live a great group of uneducated, semi-starving people from whom all but token public support has been withdrawn. They are completely isolated from the outside world.

In my opinion, Mississippi is not simply a medical emergency, it is a national disaster, and I hope that the federal government will see it in that light and move quickly to help these people who need our help so much.

Fees 'Getting Sky-High':

Controls Urged to 'Put Brakes' On Spiraling Medical Charges

REASONABLE CONTROLS to "put some brakes" on spiraling medical care costs were urged by an AFL-CIO spokesman.

Between 1956 and 1966, overall medical costs rose more than twice as fast as the combined costs of consumer price index items, and over the last 18 months the pace has "doubled or tripled," said AFL-CIO Social Security Dir. Bert Seidman. Doctors' fees and hospital charges, he noted, are the main components of medical care prices.

"Doctors' incomes have been going up even faster" than their fees, with one-third of the nation's doctors now topping $40,000 yearly, Seidman declared on Labor News Conference, an AFL-CIO produced public affairs interview broadcast Tuesday at 7:35 p.m., EDT, on the Mutual Radio Network.

Seidman agreed with the American Medical Association's charges that historically, hospitals have been insulated from discipline of the marketplace, that hospital costs now appear to be out of control, and that incentives for increased efficiency and productivity are mandatory.

But the same charges apply to doctors, he said, noting that "market-place disciplines don't apply to doctors" and their prices are soaring.

HE SAID the shortcomings are most evident in "third party" payment situations like prepaid private insurance and medicare. Fee schedules now in most plans are "virtually no restraint on what the doctors can charge," he said. They are "based on what doctors are charging, and if they increase their charges, this becomes the new prevailing rate," he noted. Without basic changes, "there is no end to this cycle," he declared.

Seidman called on government and private groups, including labor, management and consumers, to develop "some real initiative and some real determination" to hold down mounting medical costs. Doctors, he said, would participate.

Questioning him were Judith Randal, medical writer of the Washington Evening Star, and Jerome Brazda, editor of Washington Report on the Medical Sciences.

Washington Window

THERE ARE always two sides to every story. Certainly there are two sides to the story of the thousands of migrant farm workers who are trying to organize unions in an effort to climb out of the deep pit of poverty and indifference in which they have lived so long.

Their side of the story is simple:

● Substandard wages—as low as 45 cents an hour in Texas, an average of 95 cents an hour in the South, not better than $1.18 for farm laborers in general, about one-third of the factory rate.

● Except for a small minority, no minimum wage protection and no unemployment compensation, no workmen's compensation except in five of the 50 states and no protection against child labor.

● No social security protection except in relatively rare cases, no real school system for their children and no right to organize under the protection of the labor laws so they can fight for their rights as every other type of worker in the United States now can.

Now take the other side of the story:

● It is told mostly in the files of the U.S. Dept. of Agriculture, which annually spends billions of dollars to protect the farm owners' interests in all sorts of ways:

The Commodity Credit Corp., Stabilization & Conservation Service, Rural Community Development Service, Farmers Home Administration, Soil Conservation Service, Consumer & Marketing Service, Commodity Exchange Authority, Economic Research Service, Statistical Reporting Service, Agricultural Research Service, Federal Extension Service . . . the list comprises every possible support for the agricultural interests of the country.

Many of these services have been of great value to the country at large. Many of them have been heartily supported by the labor movement in the interest of the nation at large.

Yet many of these programs have been the source of huge financial windfalls for the very farm corporations that now are so bitter in their fight against the right of their workers to profit from the American system as have other workers.

Last year four California "farmers" received between $1 million and $2.8 million in federal payments for keeping some of their vast land holdings out of production. There were another four which received between $500,000 and $1 million, including the Kern County Land Co., one of the biggest in the West.

There were 76 companies and individuals who received sums ranging between $100,000 and $500,000 and another 167 who received payments ranging between $50,000 and $100,000. In all, California "farmers" participating in the programs listed received some $35 million.

In Texas, now the center of a stubborn battle by farm corporations to keep unionism out of their labor force, the story was the same. At least $16 million was paid to farm corporations in sums of $50,000 apiece and up, while Arizona wasn't too far behind with a total of more than $11 million.

BUT THESE SUMS really are minor matters in the care with which the federal government regards its agricultural clients.

Aside from the guarantee of farm parity for major crops, the government has spent billions of dollars in agricultural loans based on surplus crops, the cost of storing of which has been staggering.

Vast sums have been spent on agricultural research that have meant billions of dollars to farm interests, notably the farm corporations which are better equipped to take advantage of vital discoveries in better seeds, better fertilizers, better insect control, better shipping facilities and better markets both domestic and foreign.

The huge investment of taxpayers' money in adding to the wealth of the country has paid off well. The U.S. is probably the best-fed country in the world despite its pockets of poverty. Yet this vast outpouring of concern and help has been directed almost entirely toward the great property interests.

An equal attention to the workers who have done more than their share to make all this possible would seem in order.

GOVERNMENT AND PRIVATE GROUPS, including labor, management and consumers, must develop real initiative and determination to hold down soaring medical costs, AFL-CIO Social Security Dir. Bert Seidman (center) told reporters on Labor News Conference. He was questioned by Jerome Brazda, editor of Washington Report on the Medical Sciences, and Judith Randal, medical writer for the Washington Evening Star.

How to Buy:

Statistics, Language Confusing Debate on Rising Food Prices

by Sidney Margolius

YOUR FOOD COSTS are rising again. Not only are meat prices bouncing up but milk prices began rising even in the spring, when they normally go down. Ordinarily, milk prices decline from December, when cows begin to lactate, to June, the flush month.

The only whipping boy for the food-price problem the U. S. Agriculture Dept. has been able to find is consumers. The department can't blame farm prices because farmers are resentful themselves about their rising costs and lagging income, even to the extent of striking and dumping milk recently.

Nor does the department pin any responsibility for high food prices on food processors and distributors for the increasing spread between farm and retail prices.

The department's line is that consumers are the ones who are profiting from the farmer's cost-price squeeze. Recently Agriculture Sec. Orville Freeman told a gathering of writers and editors, called together by the Agriculture Dept., that "it is the middle-income and better-off consumers who have 'never had it so good.' "

He said that farm prices had dropped since the peak reached in August 1966, but "consumers continue to enjoy an ever diminishing demand on their disposable dollars for food."

To try to prove this, Freeman made some perplexing use of statistics and language:

"Consumers are now spending only about 18 percent of their take-home pay to feed themselves and their families. Ten years ago food took nearly 21 percent of take-home pay, and 20 years ago nearly 25 percent."

This will come as quite a surprise to wage-earners who see their wives spending 25 to 30 percent of their take-home pay for food. But don't start beating your wife. Freeman's claim is based on national spending, which includes food expenditures of institutions, single individuals, and the value of home-produced food used by rural families.

What may have misled you and perhaps even some of the writers and editors is the use of the phrase "take-home pay."

If families are spending a lower percentage of total family income for food nowadays, it is not because food prices are lower. Food prices are about 14 percent higher than the 1957-59 period even if you buy the same foods and not the more highly-processed versions being promoted by processors. The real reasons why families have been able to spend a lower percentage of income for food over the years is that union organization and increased productivity have raised wages and more wives now work, thus increasing family income faster than food prices have risen.

If you send your wife out to work next week you too can cut almost in half the percentage of income you can spend for food. The only trouble is that Freeman would claim the credit.

Freeman didn't always talk this way. When he was governor of Minnesota he was critical of high food prices. He called for more protection for consumers and for elimination of artificial state barriers which tend to keep cheap Midwest milk out of the big coastal cities in favor of higher-cost regional milk.

IN 1959 then-Gov. Freeman told the Minnesota Legislature:

"This overall rise in the cost of living . . . has aroused people to be as concerned about their 'spending power' as they are about their earning power. Rising prices can eat up all the gains from higher wages and incomes. Even more disturbing is the toll taken by rising prices from older people on fixed retirement incomes."

If Freeman had only kept copies of his old speeches, as we did, he now would think of trying to get processors and distributors to reduce the farm-retail price spread. He already has done some good work in reducing somewhat the unfair difference in prices paid by distributors for milk for drinking purposes, and by food manufacturers for milk for manufacturing. There really is no valid reason for any differential at all.

Now he, and all of us, need to try to keep down costs this expensive summer as best we can by battling the price spread. For working families, this means buying the least-expensive version of foods, not the highly-processed versions. Processing and distribution costs now take 62 cents of your food dollar (38 cents goes to the farmer). In the case of milk, over 55 cents of your dollar goes for processing and distribution.

Plea to Credit Unions:

Expansion Is Urged In Aid to Consumers

The following is excerpted from remarks by Betty Furness, special assistant to the President for consumer affairs, to the annual meeting of Credit Union National Association in Dallas, Tex.

MANY OF YOUR CREDIT UNIONS have gone into the community and enlisted the help of voluntary organizations in support of the consumer program. They have worked with such groups as labor unions, federated women's clubs, churches, and others to establish state consumer associations.

These consumer associations work for new and improved state consumer laws and improved consumer education. This is a relatively new and very exciting area. Idaho, Arizona, Indiana, Wisconsin, Kentucky, Ohio, Nebraska, Iowa and Missouri have been leaders in enlisting community volunteer participation.

When I worked with the poverty program recruiting for VISTA, I learned about the educational and counseling programs offered by credit unions. The programs are very important to people in low income areas.

Still, too many consumers who need it are not getting consumer education. They don't benefit from educational literature available from CUNA; they don't go to libraries where there are shelves of CUNA material; they don't know about CUNA's family budget counseling.

A very few credit unions are setting up allied consumer education programs. An imaginative credit union consumer counselor at the Jeffries Community Project in Detroit organized buying tours for shoppers who have little money.

That same consumer counselor staged "fashion" shows for the poor. The fashion show commentary is not so much on "style" as on "how to buy quality clothing."

It is this practical kind of assistance—this self-help, which I hope you will greatly expand.

The credit unions that have such educational programs begin with adding a consumer counselor to their staff and go on from there.

I WOULD LIKE to recommend that you not only continue but increase consumer counseling. This can be done by establishing a consumer affairs office in your headquarters in Madison, Wis., and in your state leagues.

I would hope that one of the major aims of the new offices would be to provide consumer counselor services for every credit union in the nation.

The consumer counselor would work closely with community volunteer organizations and with federal programs such as Project Moneywise.

It might be possible for small credit unions in the same area to share the same counselor. Or perhaps a staff member could be trained to work as a counselor part-time.

Of course, consumer education takes different forms. For example, there is education for the young, for the newly married, for the poor, and for the aging.

Consumer education won't cure poverty, but it will help. It can help stretch earnings. It can help prevent earnings from being drained by unwise buying, fraud, and deception.

In earlier days, the credit union emphasis was more on lending money and encouraging people to save. Today, the credit unions have become a part of the community and a part of the family.

From Soup to Nonsense:

Economizing, Pennypinching Are Often Hard to Tell Apart

By Jane Goodsell

THE INSIDIOUS thing about dieting is that it leads to an excessive preoccupation with food. And thinking about food makes people hungry.

So it it with economizing. The desire to save money probably flattens more bank accounts than gambling fever, which it is not unlike. The urge to splurge and the impulse to economize are as closely related as the chicken and the egg, becoming at times so hopelessly intertwined that it is impossible to distinguish extravagance from pennypinching.

The whole business of spending and saving money is fraught with confusion and cross-purposes. What it boils down to, actually, is how you look at it.

Nobody wants to feel like a reckless spender and it is, alas, all too easy not to. With a little thought and imagination, we can convince ourselves that anything is a bargain. Like so:

The we-can't-afford-to-pass-up-this-opportunity argument. Oddly enough, this line of reasoning is most effective when we are flat broke—a fact the merchandise marts recognize when they schedule the January white sales to coincide with the arrival of Christmas bills. A customer on the verge of bankruptcy is in no position to bypass a once-a-year chance to recoup by purchasing $3.79 sheets marked down to $3.48.

The cheaper-in-the-long-run bit. This is an all-purpose argument which can be used to rationalize almost any expenditure from a Mercedes-Benz (they last forever) to plastic toothpicks (you can wash and re-use them).

The think-of-the-money-we'll-save-on-something-else gambit. If we buy a color television set, we'll stay home more. If we install a home workshop, we can make our own furniture. Wall-to-wall carpeting will save us the expense of waxing the floors.

The consider-how-cheap-this-is-compared-to argument. The way it works is to make something expensive look like a bargain by comparing it with something more expensive. Or, in other words, to turn a silk purse into a sow's ear by pointing out how much cheaper it is than an alligator handbag. Endless variations can be played on this theme: Filet mignon at home is less expensive than eating out. Two weeks at a posh beauty spa is cheap compared to psychiatric treatment.

Thus doth our thriftiness make spendthrifts of us all. A pity.

Unions Assail Measure:

Newspaper Bill Seen Aiding Monopolies

Strong opposition to a Senate bill to exempt so-called "failing" newspapers from prosecution under the anti-trust laws was expressed by two unions and three newspapers at the start of hearings called by the Senate Antitrust and Monopoly subcommittee.

Executive Vice Pres. William J. Farson of the Newspaper Guild and Pres. Elmer Brown of the Typographical Union charged that the bill would help destroy competing publications and accelerate monopoly. Also testifying in opposition were Louis M. Loeb, general counsel for the New York Times, and publishers Evan Mecham of the Tucson, Ariz., American and Eugene Cervi of the Denver Rocky Mountain Journal.

Sen. Carl Hayden (D-Ariz.) is chief sponsor of the proposed "Failing Newspaper Act." It would exempt two other Tucson newspapers—the Star (morning and Sunday) and the Citizen (evening) from prosecution under the Sherman-Anti-trust Act. Published since 1941 under a joint operating arrangement, the two papers have been ordered by the Justice Dept. to abolish their combined advertising and circulation functions under a ruling by the U.S. District Court.

Similar operating arrangements are in effect in 21 other U.S. cities, the committee reported. Hayden's proposal would affect them also.

Real Motive: Profits

Farson testified that "maximization of profit" all too often is the motive behind newspaper mergers and consolidations rather than the "inexorable economic forces" usually cited by publishers. The Hayden proposal would, he said, accelerate newspaper mergers and monopolies rather than slow them.

He suggested the subcommittee consider an alternate proposal endorsed by conventions of the AFL-CIO, the Guild and the ITU. It would provide:

- Advance notice to the Justice Dept. of any proposed newspaper acquisition, merger or consolidation, with detailed financial records of the owners and papers involved.
- No consummation of merger for at least 90 days. If the Justice Dept. upholds the "failing" claim, a federal court would be asked to name an appraiser to determine the fair market value of the property.
- Public bids for the claimed failing newspaper. If no buyer is found and the publisher is unable to continue independent publication, a joint production arrangement with a competitor could be allowed. The arrangement, however, would have to be made available to any other local publisher on the same terms.

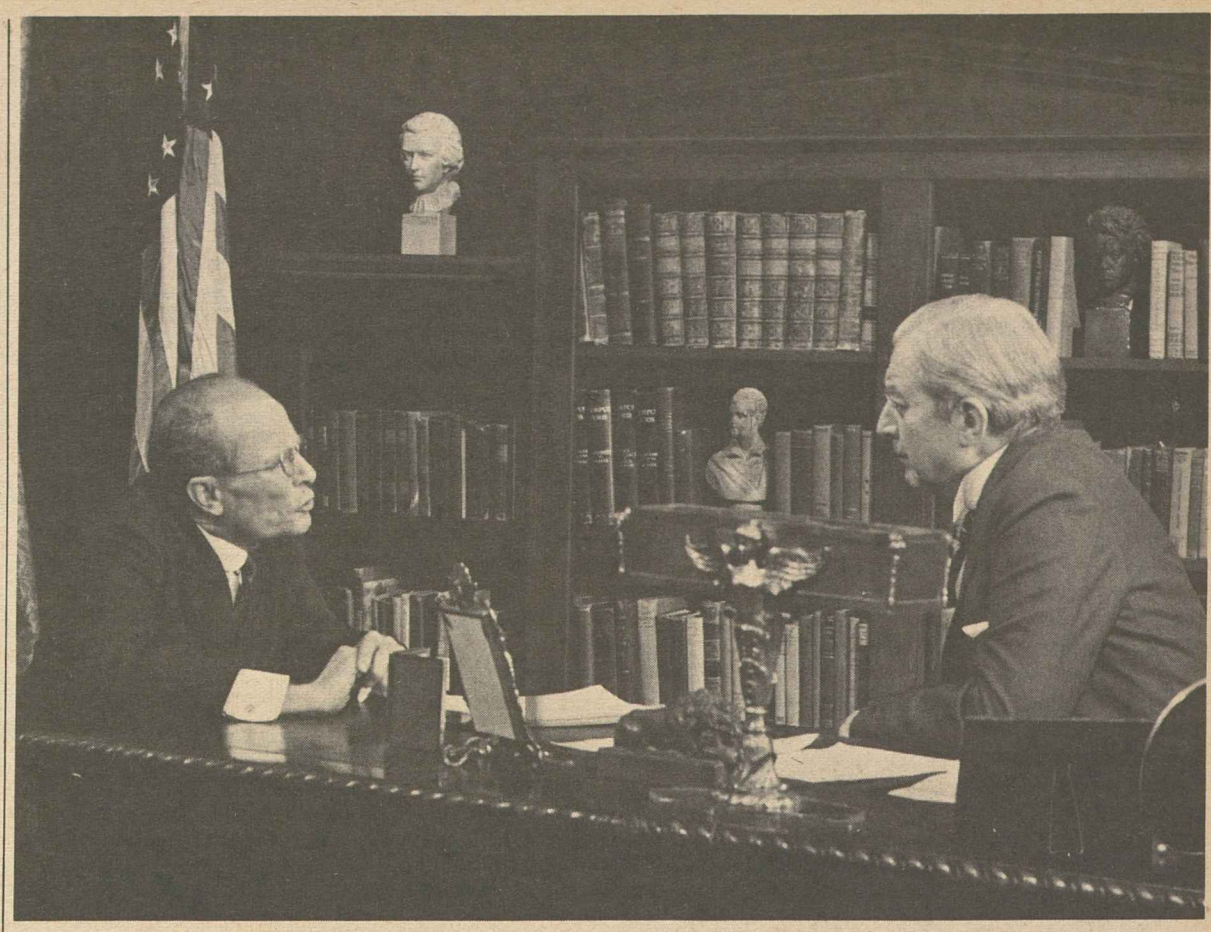
Farson said the Guild's proposal would restrict joint operations to printing facilities only, and would not allow joint advertising rates, price-fixing or profit-pooling, as the Hayden bill does.

Brown said established newspapers already have potent weapons to prevent any competing newspaper from being established. His union has for eight months supported a strike of ITU members at the Tucson Star and Citizen.

Loeb told the subcommittee that a special antitrust exemption would be "unnecessary and unwise." What is needed, he said, is for the Justice Dept. to issue guidelines telling publishers how far they may lawfully go in setting up joint operations.

Mecham testified that monopolistic newspapers in Arizona exercise a "dictatorship" over statewide elections. The only way to have a free and competitive press, he said, is to allow the Justice Dept. to "move against every monopoly, whether by agency agreement or by one ownership . . . and see that combinations of advertising and distribution are split up."

Cervi described the Hayden bill as "filled with vast misconceptions, false promises and undemocratic aims" and asked: "If Congress can pass bills to keep newspapers from failing, can it also pass laws to make them succeed?" He publishes a weekly business and public affairs newspaper.



THE AFL-CIO'S LABOR DAY TV presentation for 1967 will feature the achievements of Samuel Gompers, the immigrant youth who rose from the New York slums to become organized labor's first president. In a scene from "The Liquid Fire," to be shown on more than 100 television stations, Gompers is shown here appealing to Pres. Woodrow Wilson in behalf of an international labor organization. The film also dramatizes Gompers' youthful leadership among striking cigar workers and his election as president of the American Federation of Labor.

'Don't Buy Swift' Drive Set to Spur Bargaining

Chicago—The Packinghouse Workers moved to speed up lagging contract negotiations with Swift & Company by launching a nationwide "Don't Buy Swift" campaign and authorizing strike votes among Swift workers Aug. 7 to 12.

The UPWA executive board and representatives of Swift plant locals reviewed the pace of contract talks in recent months and said in a statement "we find progress wholly unsatisfactory."

"We see no indication that Swift is prepared to negotiate and accept the kind of terms" previously agreed to by Armour, Wilson, Cudahy, Morrell, Oscar Mayer and other firms, the statement noted.

Although Swift is the largest meat packing company in the United States in terms of size, volume and profits, its management "gives no indication of recognition of its leadership role or its responsibility to its employes and the communities where they live and work," the UPWA said.

It cited these instances of what it called company foot-dragging:

- Refusal to take "significant" steps to remove a wage differential of up to $1 an hour for southern workers.
- The continuing threat to the security of older employes posed by company policies, such as its refusal to provide adequate job transfer protection for older workers whose jobs are seriously threatened by possible closedowns of plants or departments.

The union said it will keep trying to negotiate a satisfactory agreement before the current three-year contract expires Sept. 1. But, it said in view of Swift's reluctance to "engage in forward-looking bargaining" on these and other issues, the UPWA has officially undertaken "Don't Buy" campaigns among consumers.

In recent months UPWA negotiators came to terms with Armour and other major packing firms on contracts with substantially improved benefits well in advance of expiration dates of current pacts. No such cooperation has been shown by Swift, the union reported.

GOP Leader Raps 'Work' Vote Drive

Billings, Okla. — Former Gov. Henry Bellmon issued a statement here opposing any attempt to put a new proposal for a state "right to work" law on next year's ballot in Oklahoma. "Work" law proponents have announced plans for a petition drive to put the question to a referendum.

Bellmon, the state's first Republican governor, noted that the state "generally is enjoying excellent labor-management relations and is gaining important new industrial plants."

"Oklahomans," he pointed out, "have recently had the opportunity to express themselves on the right-to-work question and it seems untimely for proponents to launch another petition drive so soon."

Voters rejected a law to ban union shop contracts in a 1964 referendum.

Liberal Paper Damaged By Fire in Mississippi

Lexington, Miss.—A midnight fire that started in the pressroom of the weekly Lexington Advertiser caused an estimated $10,000 damage but failed to block the appearance of the largest of the four Mississippi weeklies published by Mrs. Hazel Brannon Smith, one of the state's outstanding enemies of racism.

Mrs. Smith, who won a Pulitzer Prize in 1964, has been the target of a boycott by the White Citizens' Council for 13 years, when she began her fight for racial equality.

She recently announced her candidacy for the State Senate. The fire followed by a few days a White Citizens' Council political rally here at which she was denounced by some candidates.

Mrs. Smith's fight against extremism has cost her dearly. Another of her weeklies, the Northside Reporter in Jackson, was bombed in 1964, and as a result fire insurance companies cancelled all policies on her holdings. She must bear the loss from the Lexington fire herself.

Pres. Claude Ramsay of the Mississippi AFL-CIO has launched a drive for funds to help write off the cost of the blaze and other expenses that have piled up because of her views.

"Mississippi has made considerable progress in the field of race relations in recent years," Ramsay said, "and Hazel Smith has been responsible for that progress more than any other single individual. It would be most tragic if Hazel Smith were forced to leave the fight when victory seems just around the corner."

Oklahoma Negro Leader Hits New R-T-W Drive

Muskogee, Okla.—An Oklahoma Negro leader spoke out strongly against a new attempt to enact a state "right-to-work" law prohibiting union shop contracts.

A petition drive to put the question to the state's voters again is scheduled to get under way Aug. 1. "Right-to-work" was on the ballot in 1964 and was turned down by the voters.

J. J. Simmons, Jr., state president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, urged Oklahoma NAACP members not to sign the petition.

He said the so-called "right-to-work" laws "hurt the working people of all races," and added:

"Lower wages seem to follow 'right-to-work' laws and, it appears to me, discrimination is much more prevalent in 'right-to-work' states."

The national NAACP's opposition to "work" laws is "absolutely correct," Simmons said.

"I cannot recall one single case when the Right to Work Committee has come forward to support civil rights legislation," he declared. "I cannot recall any help from the Right to Work Committee on such important matters as better education for all children, improved social security or meaningful anti-poverty programs.

"On the other hand, the AFL-CIO has stepped forward with our civil rights leaders to fight hard for these programs as well as many others which are beneficial to the Negro community. It is my opinion that we have nothing to gain by signing petitions for a 'right-to-work' law which I feel will hurt the wages of all working people."

Dynamite Blast Aimed at Home Of Vic Bussie

Baton Rouge, La. — Dynamite thrown from a speeding auto wrecked the car of Pres. Victor Bussie of the Louisiana AFL-CIO, badly damaged his wife's car and blew out windows from his home.

Bussie, his family and neighbors were unhurt in the midnight blast. Damage to Mrs. Bussie's car was estimated at $1,000. Windows also were blown out in a house near the Bussie residence.

The explosion came about an hour after the home of Mrs. Viola Logan, a retired Negro school principal living in Port Allen, across the Mississippi River from Baton Rouge, was damaged in a comparable attack. Three Negro youths told the sheriff's office they saw white men in a blue car throw something on the lawn and flee.

Bussie reportedly has been the target of a recent propaganda attack by the Ku Klux Klan.

Mrs. Logan has been active in the all-Negro West Baton Rouge Improvement Association, which has been involved in a dispute with the parish school board over the naming of a new school principal.

House Rollcall on Rail Arbitration Law

The only recorded vote in the House on a bill to end the rail shopcraft dispute by compulsory arbitration came July 17 in a roll-call on adoption of a Senate-passed measure ordering striking rail workers back on the job and setting up new mediation procedures that would end in a final and binding settlement in 90 days if no settlement is reached between the parties. The House had earlier passed a bill to extend mediation for 90 days but without the compulsory feature of the Senate bill. The House-Senate conferees deadlocked, leading to the new votes in both chambers. Labor opposed the bill that passed the House 244 to 148.

Wrong votes (W) for the bill were cast by 123 Republicans and 121 Democrats. Voting right (R) were 103 Democrats and 45 Republicans. Other symbols: PR—paired right; PW—paired wrong; A—absent and not paired. Numerals show districts; AL—at large.

President Appoints Board:

Congress Halts Rail Strike; Compulsory Arbitration Set

walkouts spread until an estimated 90 per cent of rail capacity was shut down.

Johnson asked Congress to act swiftly to head off a "national crisis."

On Monday morning, July 17, a House-Senate conference committee met and again sought a compromise on differing bills.

The House had refused to accept the forced settlement feature of the Senate bill and had acted to bar a strike only during a 90-day mediation period. Previous conferences had failed to resolve the differences. It was this deadlock that led the shopcrafts to withdraw their no-strike pledge.

Conferees Report Back

When the conferees still failed to agree, they took the dispute back to the House and Senate.

The Senate immediately took up the House-passed bill, amended it to put back in the compulsory features, made changes to embody a back-to-work order, passed the measure and sent it to the House, which accepted the Senate changes.

Senators Jacob Javits (R-N.Y.) and Robert Griffin (R-Mich.) had sought to amend the legislation to give Congress a chance to vote on the mediation board's recommendations. But this move was defeated 79 to 10.

Sen. Ralph W. Yarborough (D-Tex.), chairman of the Senate conferees, sought in vain to get acceptance of the original House bill without a forced settlement. Morse led the drive for the Senate version.

In the House, Representatives Harley O. Staggers (D-W. Va.), chairman of the House conferees, and Claude Pepper (D-Fla.) led debate against the arbitration provision. Rep. Samuel Friedel (D-Md.) led the forces favoring it.

In the Senate, 36 Democrats and 32 Republicans voted for the legislation to impose arbitration, while 20 Democrats opposed it. The only opposing GOP vote came from Sen. Edward W. Brooke (Mass).

In the House, the breakdown was 121 Democrats and 123 Republicans for the strike-ending bill, 103 Democrats and 45 Republicans against it.

Meany, in his speech to the ILA, had a sharp word of warning for "smug employers" who "think they have won a victory" and see the rail legislation as a future pattern for Congress. He declared that if an industry is so vital that its workers can't strike "then that industry is so important to the public interest that nobody should make a profit" and the public should own it.

The rail stoppage "confronted the President and Congress with a very acute problem," Meany observed. But he stressed that this was just what rail management was counting on when it held back on realistic bargaining.

Workers have no bargaining power, unless they can go to the bargaining table with the right to strike and their employer knows they are ready to strike, he said.

Leighty recalled that rail labor had previously agreed to move all shipments vital to the military effort and economy in the event of a strike, but that this offer was rejected by the government.

Now, he continued, "Congress tells these workers: You must labor for government-imposed wages for the profits of your private employers. Congress decrees compulsory wages, but they won't touch the profits."

"That kind of law is unfair and un-American," he concluded. "If Congress and the President say the country can't stand a railroad strike, they should end it by seizing the railroads and impounding the profits until settlement is reached.

Skilled Pay Sought

The crux of the shopcrafts' dispute, which dates back to May 1966 is the unions' demand that skilled workers in the railroad industry be paid wages comparable to craft rates in other industries.

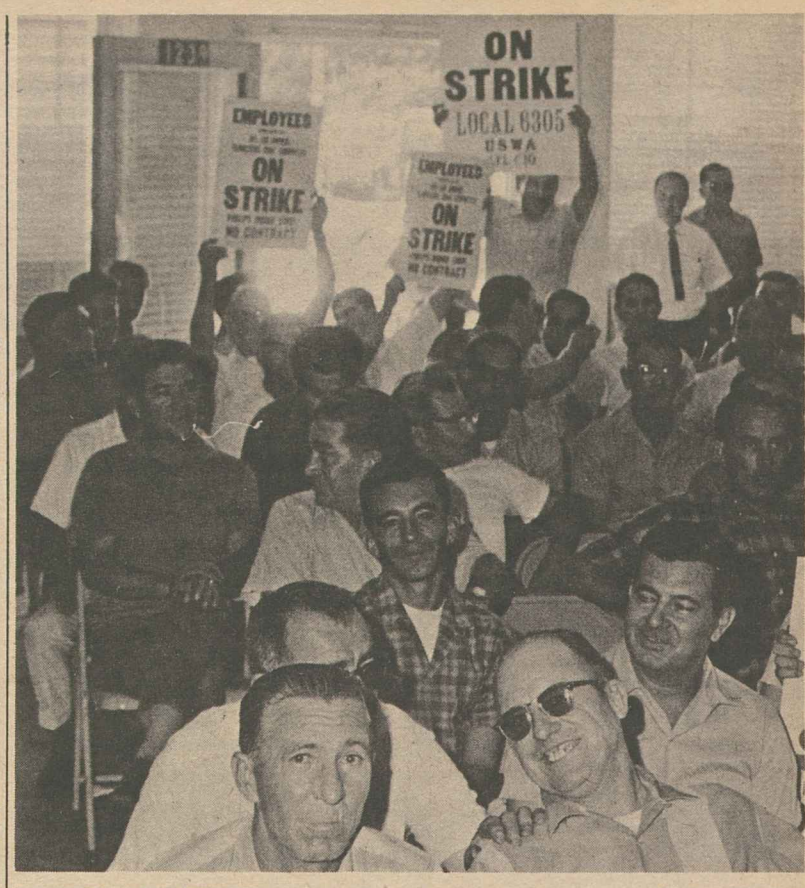
A Presidential Emergency Board and later a mediation panel agreed that a big gap exists, but recommended increases the unions considered inadequate as a first step.

The latest proposal was from the mediation panel. It recommended an 18-month contract with a 6 percent general wage increase, plus three 5-cent an hour increases for skilled workers. Neither side has accepted that offer.

The unions seek a two-year settlement with raises of 6.5 percent in the first year and 5 percent in the second, plus two annual increases of 12.5 cents an hour for skilled workers.

Rail managements have offered only a 5 percent, one-year increase, which they argue is the "pattern" in the industry. They have hinted they might come up from that but only if the unions accept a "job evaluation" study.

Shopcrafts bargaining jointly through the AFL-CIO Railroad Employes' Dept. are the Machinists, Boilermakers, Sheet Metal Workers, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Railway Carmen and Firemen & Oilers. They represent 135,000 workers.



UNION MEMBERS at the Douglas, Ariz., smelter of the Phelps Dodge Corp. wait for picketing assignments in nationwide strike of 37,000 Steelworkers and members of 19 other unions against eight firms producing 90 percent of all U.S. copper. All unionists downed tools when July 15 deadline passed without an acceptable contract offer on wages or cost-of-living-escalator clause, major issues in dispute.

Senate Rollcall Vote on Compulsory Arbitration

The labor-opposed bill providing for compulsory arbitration of the rail shopcraft dispute passed the Senate 68 to 21. The Senate had passed a virtually similar measure early in June by a 70 to 15 vote.

'Rigid' Industry Stand Cited in Copper Strike

a top-level strategy meeting of the conference's Continuations Committee and members of other unions in Denver July 24.

Meanwhile this tentative schedule for renewed bargaining talks between labor and management was drawn up at the request of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service: for Phelps Dodge negotiations, July 20 in Tucson, Ariz.; Kennecott, July 21 in Salt Lake City; American Smelting, July 26 in Denver; Anaconda July 28 in Butte, Mont.

Strike leaders expect to take part in similar talks with U.S. Metals representatives in Carteret, N.J., and with Miami Copper, Inspiration Consolidated and Magma Copper management elsewhere.

Abel's statement charged that "the selfish refusal of the companies to share their sharply increasing profits and their failure to engage in realistic collective bargaining left workers with no honorable alternative but to refuse to work without contracts."

He said that the unions had demonstrated a "sincere desire" to avert a strike by voluntarily extending the contracts from June 30 to July 15. But, he said this effort "was met by the companies with a continuation of the same rigid positions they had taken at the outset of these negotiations."

The companies will discover shortly, "if they haven't already," that they are confronted with a unity and determination they have not experienced from their workers in prior negotiations, Abel declared.

Public TV Bill Backed As Key Education Step

The Public Television bill received strong AFL-CIO support as "a worthy companion and an essential supplement to the splendid series of educational measures" enacted during the past few years.

AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller told the House Commerce Committee that labor warmly welcomes the bill's approach—"an independent corporation, established and supported in part by the federal government but free of government control."

"We do recommend very strongly," he added, "that one member of the governing body be named from the labor movement—the largest single group of viewers and listeners in the nation. This independent corporation would be charged only . . . with the duty of making available to all Americans the kind of programs that will enrich as well as amuse, edify as well as entertain.

"This, we believe, could well be the most effective stride ever taken toward adult education—toward a better-informed citizenry, and even toward the improvement of public taste."

Biemiller's endorsement of the bill included its coverage of radio, which he said is "in even greater need of educational influence" than TV.

He emphasized also that the AFL-CIO is "in no way attacking the concept of private profit" in commercial TV.

"I personally agree with those who complain that too often, TV programming is aimed at the lowest common denominator in terms of taste and intellectual content," he added.

"On the other hand, I am not at all sure I would be happy with the kind of programming some of these critics seem to have in mind . . . The fact is that tastes differ . . .

"Viewers and listeners ought to have a choice—a wider choice than they have now, and a wider choice than commercial TV can reasonably be expected to offer."

IUE Appoints Administrators For District 3

Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers District 3, covering New York and Northern New Jersey and containing about one-third of the union's members, has been placed under two administrators by the international executive board.

Named were Jack Suarez, vice president of the district, and William Bywater, its executive secretary. Their appointment blocks access to district funds by District Pres. Milton Weihrauch and Treas. Joseph Iozzi.

An IUE announcement of the action said an executive board committee had investigated the district's financial affairs, found that Weihrauch and Iozzi had violated the union's Code of Ethical Practices by converting union funds "to use for their own personal benefit" and "found nothing" to justify criticism of any other officer.

The executive board ordered that the district president and treasurer be asked to resign. The district council, at a meeting in Albany, N.Y., voted to request the appointment of an administrator by the international union, the IUE said.

IUE Pres. Paul Jennings said that prior to the executive board action, 81 district locals representing more than 70,000 members wired requests for the naming of an administrator. A telegraph poll of board members resulted in a 29-3 vote of approval, Jennings said.

Omits Federal Standards:

New Clean Air Bill Approved by Senate

The Senate has passed a clean air bill giving the Federal government new emergency power to crack down on sources of air pollution. The measure also authorizes a $700 million appropriation to fight air pollution over three years.

The legislation, passed unanimously, 88 to 0, does not, however, provide authority sought by Pres. Johnson to set federal industry standards on pollution in cases where states do not have satisfactory standards.

The AFL-CIO, in testimony before a Senate subcommittee, had strongly supported this proposal along with other provisions that were included in the Senate-enacted bill. Labor stressed that industries are among the main air polluters.

Study Called For

Instead of authorizing federal standards on pollution, the Senate bill calls for a 2-year study of this issue. Meanwhile, power to set specific smokestack controls would be left with state governments.

However, the bill contains an additional feature not sought by the Administration. It would permit the Health, Education & Welfare Dept. to seek federal court injunctions to halt operations in cases where HEW determines through air samples that pollution has become an "imminent" danger to health.

Under the bill, which expands a clean air law passed in 1963, HEW would continue its authority to issue statistics showing the relationship between levels of pollution and human health.

The $700 million authorization would go toward research into new ways of reducing the amount of sulphur and other pollutants in fuel, and for devices to cut factory emissions of pollutants.

The federal funds also would help finance the cost of special regional "air quality commissions" that would be organized in areas having common atmospheric conditions.

Federal officials would have authority to set up these planning commissions only if states failed to do so. The AFL-CIO had sought broader power for HEW in establishing the commissions.

The legislation now goes to the House, where the Commerce Committee is expected to hold hearings early next month.

Meanwhile, the House, following five hours of emotional debate, passed by 347 to 70 an "anti-riot" bill that would make it a federal crime to cross state lines to incite a riot.

The bill would provide penalties of up to five years in jail and a $10,000 fine for traveling in interstate or foreign commerce, or using facilities such as mails or telephone in such commerce, "with intent to incite a riot."

In the debate, proponents claimed that recent riots in Newark and other cities, were caused by outsiders. They contended the bill would be a deterrent to future riots.

Rep. Emanuel Celler (D-N.Y.), chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, blasted the bill as a "futile gesture, neither preventive nor curative."

The bill will not allay the "anger and frustrations" of the Negro in the ghetto, Celler warned: "Instead, it will arouse his anger and frustration more deeply. His leaders ask for better housing for their fellows. You offer them jails.

"His leaders ask for better facilities for education. You read them a riot act. They ask for decent living. You feed them a drastic statute. They ask for more employment. You give jobs in prison garb.

"You cannot fight fire with fire. You can only fight fire with water."

Raymond Perry Named To Fire Fighters' Post

Pres. William D. Buck of the Fire Fighters announced the appointment of Raymond L. Perry of Birmingham, Ala., as the union's first general international representative. Perry resigned as a union vice president to accept the new post.

N.Y.C. Unions Hail 'Model' Labor Law

New York—An ordinance creating an Office of Collective Bargaining in the New York City government was signed into law by Mayor John V. Lindsay in a City Hall ceremony attended by international and local labor leaders.

The measure spells out specific procedures for city employe unions to achieve certification as collective bargaining agents and lays down ground rules to guide unions and management in negotiations and processing grievances, and for mediation, fact-finding and arbitration in deadlocks.

It establishes a Board of Collective Bargaining composed of labor, city and impartial representatives, and a Board of Certification made up of the impartial members of the Board of Collective Bargaining. The emphasis is on impartiality.

Enactment of the ordinance grew out of the 1965 strike by city welfare workers who belonged to the State, County & Municipal Employes. Settlement of the dispute provided for machinery to end management domination of labor relations in the city's service. The AFSCME and other unions worked closely with the city to devise the new system.

Speaking at the signing ceremony, AFSCME Pres. Jerry Wurf called the law "the model for collective bargaining in the public service." The efforts of the Democratic City Council and the Republican Lindsay administration to come up with a workable ordinance, he said, constituted a "true bipartisan effort."

Pres. Paul Hall of the Seafarers, an AFL-CIO vice president said the enactment had "gladdened the hearts" of organized labor because it showed recognition of the importance of collective bargaining for public employes.

The city law cannot ease the punitive provision of the state's Rockefeller-Travia Act, which includes fines up to $10,000 a day against a striking public employe union.

Canadian Price Index Jumps Sharply in June

Ottawa, Ont. — Canada's Consumer Price Index climbed seven-tenths of 1 percent to 148.8 in June, the Dominion Bureau of Statistics reported.

The CPI, based on 1949 as 100, has risen every month since September 1965.

Senate Urged to Restore Model Cities, Rent Aid

The AFL-CIO strongly urged the Senate to restore cuts made by the House in model cities and rent supplement programs, warning that "the growing crisis of America's cities can no longer be neglected."

AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller asked a Senate Appropriations Subcommittee to vote the full amount sought by Pres. Johnson for the budget of the Dept. of Housing & Urban Development.

He said the most serious slashes made by the House were in the model cities program, hacked from $400 million to $150 million, and the rent supplement program, where the $40 million budget request was slashed to a $5 million appropriation to fulfill contracts already signed.

Even the $400 million requested would have been a "frugal expenditure" to make cities liveable, Biemiller said.

The problems of the cities, Biemiller said, are urgent and pressing and will become even more so in the years ahead.

Qualifications Required

To receive funds under the model cities program, cities must draw up comprehensive plans to rehabilitate entire neighborhoods—housing, better transportation, health services, recreation and child care facilities. Federal funds for most parts of these programs are available under existing laws, provided cities match the federal money. But communities qualifying under the model cities program would receive additional federal funds covering 80 percent of the cost of matching grants.

The rent supplement program is an attempt to ease some of the problems of public housing by authorizing contracts with non-profit organizations to provide modest apartments for low-income families. The families agree to pay one-fourth of their income for rent and the government picks up the difference.

Biemiller noted that unions are among the groups that have sponsored rent supplement projects—"the one program which makes possible a private enterprise approach to providing decent housing for lower income families."

He also asked restoration of a $30 million House cut in funds for metropolitan development incentive grants and a $15 million slash in money for new urban research and technology programs.

Job Guidelines Set to Curb Religious Bias

The burden of proof is upon the employer when he rejects a prospective worker on the ground that his religious practices would constitute an "undue hardship," the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission ruled in making public guidelines on religious observances in relation to job discrimination.

The commission acted after a year of study following complaints from several persons that they were discharged or denied jobs because they observed as the Sabbath a day other than Sunday, or observed holy days on which work is prohibited.

The Civil Rights Act, the commission pointed out, includes an employer obligation to make "reasonable accommodations" to the religious needs of employes and prospective employes where such accommodations can be made without undue hardship on the conduct of the employer's business.

Campaign 'Postponed':

Work Law Petitions Stalled in Oklahoma

Oklahoma City—The "right-to-work" movement in Oklahoma is a wounded animal and the labor movement is trying to put it out of its misery.

"Work" law advocates were set to launch a petition drive to get the issue on the ballot in time for the primary election in 1968. But after a series of sudden and surprising political developments last week, Oklahomans for Right to Work announced they are postponing the campaign for five weeks.

Oklahoma labor is convinced, however, that the whole issue has been dealt a mortal blow and a petition drive will never really get off the ground.

Here are the developments that disrupted the plans of the "right-to-work" movement and caused the postponement:

● Former Gov. Henry Bellmon, first Republican governor in Oklahoma history, announced his opposition to "right-to-work" being on the ballot in the crucial 1968 elections. In a weekly column circulated throughout the state, Bellmon said: "Oklahoma generally is enjoying excellent labor-management relations and is gaining important new industrial plants. Oklahomans have recently had the opportunity to express themselves on the right-to-work question (in 1964). It seems untimely for proponents to launch another petition drive so soon."

Pulp, Paper Boards Okay Merger Plan

Glens Falls, N. Y.—A proposal to merge the Papermakers & Paperworkers with the Pulp, Sulphite & Paper Mill Workers, both AFL-CIO affiliates, has been approved by the executive boards of the two unions, they announced in a joint statement.

Pres. Joseph P. Tonelli of the Pulp Workers and UPP Pres. Paul L. Phillips said a proposed joint constitution will be presented to the combined executive boards of the two unions in October and, if approved, to separate but simultaneous constitutional conventions meeting in the same city. The separate conventions then will vote on the merger plan, with a joint convention to follow if both union groups approve.

Meanwhile, the two unions will

AFL-CIO Testifies:

Congress Told to Face Cities Crisis

The AFL-CIO called on Congress to face up to the grim problems of the cities and of millions of Americans "still trapped in the mire of poverty."

Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller testified before House and Senate committees dealing with housing and poverty legislation as flames still smoldered in the ruins of big city ghettos ravaged by "mindless destruction."

No single piece of legislation can "heal all wounds," Biemiller said. But the solution to "a long, difficult and often frustrating task," he stressed, isn't to slash the budget for the model cities program and dismember anti-poverty operations which are "opening doors" for at least some of the poor.

"Just the opposite," he said, "it is all the more reason for pressing on with urgency."

Biemiller termed "incomprehensible" the House action in refusing even to consider a federal rat control program. The motion to take up the bill was beaten, 207-176, by a budget-cutting coalition of Republicans and Democrats amid laughter and jokes about the proposal to use government funds to wipe out rats which infest city slums.

He told the House Labor Committee that the AFL-CIO's support of the anti-poverty program directed by the Office of Economic Opportunity is based on "hard facts"—and the first-hand experience of unions and union officers working with the programs.

Some 3,000 local union leaders are serving on boards and committees of community action programs, Biemiller noted. AFL-CIO Vice Presidents David Sullivan and James A. Suffridge are members of OEO's national advisory committee, and Sullivan heads an 18-member labor advisory council.

Biemiller cited union sponsorship of job corps training programs,

Farm Union Wins Major Grape Pact

Delano, Calif.—AFL-CIO farm workers continued to build their two-year-old union by winning favorable contract terms here from another big grower—Almaden Vineyards, Inc.

The three-year agreement was the fifth major settlement since the National Farm Workers Association and the Agricultural Workers Organizing Committee joined forces and were chartered by the AFL-CIO Executive Council as the United Farm Workers Organizing Committee.

Field workers on three grape ranches of Almaden, numbering 300 now but due to increase to 1,200 at the peak season in August, are guaranteed these contract benefits:

● A wage increase of at least 40 cents an hour, effective immediately, and additional raises of 10 cents an hour in each of the next two years.

● Wage minimums of $1.80 an

Appeals for Prompt Aid To Victims

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany wired labor's strong endorsement of a call by the nation's four top Negro leaders for an end to "mob law" and "a redoubling of efforts through legitimate means" to end "grievances of long standing."

Meany said the "sober, thought-provoking statement" by the four leaders "fully merits the support of all Americans. Let me assure you that it is the position of the AFL-CIO."

The AFL-CIO, he pledged, will continue to fight "with all the vigor at our command" for congressional action to wipe out "disease, slums, unemployment, poor educational facilities and above all else, discrimination."

It will seek as a "first priority" government aid for "the innocent victims of the rioters."

Meany's wire was sent to AFL-CIO Vice Pres. A. Philip Randolph, elder statesman of the civil rights movement. The joint statement was signed also by Roy Wilkins, executive director of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; Whitney M. Young, Jr., executive director of the National Urban League, and the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference.

Their statement (text on Page 12) endorsed Pres. Johnson's call for Negroes and whites alike to maintain law and order and to demonstrate "by word and deed that riots, looting and public disorder will just not be tolerated."

They pointed out that "the primary victims of the riots are the Negro citizens," the "overwhelming

Uniroyal Accord Signals Strike End; Rubber Workers Hail Record Gains

Akron, O.—The Rubber Workers reached contract agreement with Uniroyal, Inc., to signal the end of the longest major strike in the union's history, scoring gains URW Pres. Peter Bommarito called the greatest ever achieved in one set of negotiations.

Uniroyal, formerly U.S. Rubber Co., came to terms July 26 on a three-year agreement paralleling contracts reached earlier with other firms in the industry's Big Five—General Tire & Rubber Co., B. F. Goodrich Co., Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. and Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co.

The Uniroyal strike lasted 97 days but will not end officially until voting is completed this weekend among 22,000 workers at 19 plants. The ratification process has been completed among 53,000 other URW members at the four other firms.

In addition to wage increases of 15 cents an hour in each of the first two years, 13 cents the third year and an extra 10 cents an hour the first year for skilled trades workers, the URW made a giant stride toward its goal of the guaranteed annual wage; won notable pension improvements, and parity in wage increases for employes of both tire and non-tire plants.

Bommarito, in his first year as head of the 180,000-member AFL-CIO affiliate, said agreements providing "just, equitable and unprecedented benefits for younger and older workers" and their dependents were achieved through the "strong militancy and spirit" of workers in supporting the union negotiating teams.

In an obvious reference to the mutual aid pact entered into by the Big Five, Bommarito said that "for the first time in history five companies—each in the billion dollar class—challenged the union at the

THE SPECIAL BOARD named by Pres. Johnson to mediate the dispute between shopcraft unions and railroads held its initial meeting in Washington and its first conference with the parties. AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany is at the far end of the table with others on the five-man panel. Union bargainers are on the right, management representatives on the left.

Rail Talks Reopened As New Board Meets

Shopcraft unions and rail managements have resumed bargaining in Washington in an effort to settle their dispute without the intervention of a Presidential board.

An agreement to give negotiations another try came during a meeting with the five-member board headed by Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.). The meeting was the first between the panel and the parties.

Morse said both sides "ought to make every effort now to reach a settlement without the board's intervention. We're hopeful that they'll be able to do it alone."

The board was named by Pres. Johnson to mediate the protracted wage dispute after Congress enacted legislation to end a series of strikes by shopcraft workers.

The board's members, in addition to Morse, are AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, former Sen. Leverett Saltonstall (R-Mass.); Fred Kappel, retired president of American Telephone & Telegraph Co., and Theodore Kheel, a New York mediator.

The legislation calls for an imposed settlement of the dispute by the board if 90 days of mediation and negotiations fail to bring a voluntary settlement.

Meanwhile, the six shopcrafts have chosen Vice Pres. Thomas Ramsey of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers as their chief negotiator. He succeeds his brother, Joseph W. Ramsey, who has just retired as a vice president of the Machinists.

The executive council of the AFL-CIO Railway Employes' Dept., made up of the six unions, also appointed James E. Yost to represent the department during the absence of Pres. Michael Fox due to illness.

Ramsey, the new head negotiator, said in a statement that skilled rail shopmen are paid 50 cents to $1.50 an hour less than men doing comparable work in other industries, and semi-skilled men "earn even less."

He deplored the anti-strike legislation but added:

"We believe the President's special board will make every effort to settle this dispute as quickly as possible and we intend to cooperate with it to achieve this goal. This is the only chance left for our members to get a decent wage increase."

R-T-W Forces 'Delay' Campaign in Oklahoma

● Following the Bellmon statement, Oklahomans for Right to Work, already hard pressed to raise funds, found that sources all over the state were rapidly drying up. Republican leaders were explaining that "right-to-work" was using up funds that should go to the 1968 Republican political campaigns.

● Internal dissension began to hit the "Work" group. First, K. S. (Boots) Adams, board chairman of Philips Petroleum Co., announced that he was resigning from Oklahomans for Right to Work immediately. Then Fred Jones, the biggest auto dealer in the state, said he was also quitting the committee. Both were faced with practical considerations. Adams had been snowed under with an avalanche of gasoline credit cards returned by angry AFL-CIO members. Jones found that union members weren't buying his cars.

Sec.-Treas. Henry L. Likes, of the Oklahoma AFL-CIO called the petition postponement a ruse to draw attention away from the bad reception "right-to-work" has received across the state.

"Although the 'right-to-workers' talk about postponing action until 1969 in order not to interfere with the 1968 elections," he observed, "there is absolutely nothing to indicate that this is their real intention."

Likes posed a number of questions that he asked Oklahomans for Right to Work to answer:

"You say you have postponed petition circulation after conferring with leaders of both political parties. Who are these leaders? Which Republican? Which Democrat? Name them.

"Who wants 'right-to-work' in Oklahoma? Not labor. Not management. Not Democrats. Not Republicans. Who?

"Who profits from 'right-to-work?' Is it the advertising agency men on the committee who will share in lush commissions?

"Are the 'right-to-workers' telling us that Gov. Dewey Bartlett will squander $300,000 of the taxpayers' money to put this issue up for a vote at a special election?

"We need answers to these questions. We need them now. We need to stop this nonsense for once and for all. 'Right-to-Work' is a simple conspiracy against the people of Oklahoma. The facts will prove this."

Construction Union Helps Train Apaches

Sixty Apache Indians will be trained as heavy equipment operators in a project to be conducted by Phoenix, Ariz., Local 428 of the Operating Engineers and the Arizona chapter of the Associated General Contractors.

Upon completion of a year of apprentice-entry training, they then will move through apprenticeship programs to broader skills and minimum wages of close to $5 an hour.

Gila River Project

The project will be conducted in the Gila River area of the San Carlos Indian Reservation and will include the construction of flood controls, clearing tributaries of salt cedar growth, building and maintenance of roads, and maintenance and repair of equipment owned by San Carlos Tribal Enterprises, Inc., a tribal company.

The trainees will receive wages of $2.34 to $3.18 an hour, depending on previous experience, from the Bureau of Indian Affairs and the San Carlos Conservation District of the Interior Dept. The Labor Dept. has allocated more than $124,500 in Manpower Development & Training Act funds.

Local 428 will provide the instructors and the contractors the heavy equipment. The project includes operation, maintenance and repair of the machinery.

N.Y.C. Postmaster Plays a Union Sax

New York — John R. Strachan, a saxophone-playing member of Musicians Local 802 and a veteran of membership in several postal unions and the Teachers, has been sworn in as postmaster of New York.

Strachan (pronounced "Strawn") is 51 and a career postal employe. He began as a clerk in 1941 while studying for bachelor's and master's degrees at New York University; later joined AFT Local 2 while working days and teaching nights, and until promoted out of their respective jurisdictions was a member of the Postal Clerks and other postal service unions.

An Army veteran of World War II, Strachan most recently has been assistant director of the New York postal region, which is made up of New York State, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands.

Hall Renews Plea:

Maritime Unions Ask Independent Agency

The 6 million-member AFL-CIO Maritime Trades Dept. has called on Congress to reconstitute the Maritime Administration as an independent federal agency to oversee the affairs of the sagging U.S. merchant marine.

Paul Hall, MTD president and head of the Seafarers, told a House Merchant Marine subcommittee that the commercial fleet had been allowed to "deteriorate so disastrously" that only a "full-time" agency can properly "promote its recovery."

At the same time, he sharply criticized Administration proposals to incorporate maritime into the Dept. of Transportation.

Submerged, Ignored, Neglected

"History, experience and the facts prove beyond doubt that the Maritime Administration, if included in an executive department having other duties and responsibilities, becomes submerged, is largely ignored and languishes from neglect," he said.

Hall said the MTD's support of the record 104 maritime independence bills introduced in the 90th Congress is based on the action of the 1965 AFL-CIO convention in San Francisco, which unanimously adopted a resolution supporting the principle of an independent agency. This position was reaffirmed at the 1966 meeting of the federation's Executive Council in Chicago.

The MTD president was sharp in his attack on Transportation Sec. Alan S. Boyd, who has been pressing the campaign for inclusion of the agency in his department, and for the building of U.S.-flag vessels in foreign rather than American shipyards.

He noted that in 1965, a Maritime Advisory Committee appointed by Pres. Johnson had charted a long-range program for revitalization of the merchant fleet, and that this report had produced "a consensus without parallel in the history of the maritime industry." Hall continued:

"Here was industrial consensus on which the Administration could have built, promoted and undoubtedly enacted into law a maritime program without serious dissent."

Yet, he continued, Boyd now contends that he is stymied in trying to put across his foreign-building program and a plan to "tinker" with the subsidy system, because he cannot obtain the "consensus" of maritime labor and management.

"When it is remembered that (Boyd) started with consensus, and wound up with loud dissent from most of the industry and tension between its segments," Hall went on, "it is difficult to reconcile his announced objective with his obvious technique." The union official described this technique as one of "divide and conquer."

Hall presented the subcommittee with a 20-point maritime program, noting that it was the first concrete proposal to be given to Congress. Thus far, Boyd has declined to present a formal program because of the lack of "consensus." Said Hall:

"All proposals we have seen originating with government agencies base our maritime needs at best on the present, at worst on the past. An effective merchant marine policy would be one which paralleled the projected expansion of our foreign commerce over the coming decades. Such a program would require not only a vast expansion of the merchant marine, but the modernization and utilization of our shipbuilding industry."

Living Costs Move Up, 'Real Wages' Still Lag

The cost-of-living continued to go up in June, and the average production worker was able to buy less with his paycheck than a year ago even though his earnings were higher.

A jump in food prices helped push the Consumer Price Index to 116 percent of its 1957-59 average, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported. This was three-tenths of 1 percent more than in May and 2.7 percent more than a year ago.

The rate of increase was less than in 1966, however. Prices moved up 1.2 percent during the first six months of 1967, compared with a 1.7 percent rise in the first six months of last year.

A typical worker with three dependents averaged $90.90 a week after taxes. While this was $1.94 more than a year ago, it was 44 cents less in terms of buying power—the eleventh month in a row that "real wages" have been less than the previous year.

The gross pay—before deductions—of all nonsupervisory workers was $113.81 before taxes. The factory worker with three dependents took home $100.39—62 cents more than a year ago, but $1.83 less in buying power measured in 1957-59 dollars.

Despite a sharp advance in the past two months, grocery store food prices averaged about the same as in June a year ago.

Medical care services continued to cost more, going up six-tenths of 1 percent over the month and 9.2 percent over a year ago. This was the largest year-to-year rise in any category of the market basket of goods and services measured by the government.

About 75,000 workers with cost-of-living escalator clauses in their union contracts will receive pay raises based on the June price index. Some 46,000 will receive 3-cents-an-hour more, including 36,000 aircraft workers. Another 29,000 will receive 2-cent increases, including 13,000 Greyhound employes.

Pilots Demand Action to Halt Air Collisions

Chicago—Urgent action to speed development of techniques that would provide more safeguards against midair collisions was urged by Pres. Charles H. Ruby of the Air Line Pilots in a telegram to Sec. of Transportation Alan S. Boyd.

Pilots have long been critical of the inadequacies of air traffic control and have been seeking improvements for years, Ruby recalled.

The annual ALPA Air Safety Forum in Washington last month, he added, had the subject high on its agenda.

Obviously, "strenuous and accelerated on the part of all industry segments working on the problem is required to arrive at a prompt solution," Ruby told Boyd.

same time." He added:

"The membership of the URW met that challenge. Because of the determination, unity and spirit of our members on the picket lines, the negotiators and the leadership, the URW has re-established itself as a first class union capable of providing dignity, equity and justice" for workers and their families.

Primary among URW bargaining goals and a point on which the union scored a significant breakthrough was a guaranteed annual wage. The union sought to raise supplemental unemployment benefits (SUB) to 92.5 percent of regular wages for laid-off workers under a Full Employment Earnings Program. The final settlements boost SUB to 80 percent from the previous level of 65 percent, believed to be a new high in major industry.

As an example, a laid-off worker who was earning $4 an hour or $160 a week will get $128 a week under the 80 percent formula. Since SUB is an add-on to State Unemployment compensation which is not taxable, URW members employed by the Big Five actually should net over 90 percent of regular wages when laid off or given short work weeks.

Benefits range from 52 weeks for employes with less than five years of service to four years for those with over 25 years.

The old $50-a-week maximum on benefits was eliminated. There is no ceiling under the new pact.

The companies had sought to raise the pay of non-tire workers less than that of tire plant employes. It was one of the last points the companies conceded and it came in the talks with Goodrich, headed in the last week by Bommarito, with Dir. William E. Simkin of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service sitting in.

Also won from Goodrich was the vacation schedule which gives employes two weeks of vacation after one year of service and three weeks after five years. Previously they had to work three years to get two weeks' vacation and 10 years for three weeks.

Five-year vacations start after 22 years of service instead of 25, and an unprecedented sixth week for 30-year employes was added. Both breakthroughs came in the General Tire settlement.

Goodrich set another pattern by agreeing to pay six cents a manhour into the SUB fund any time it dips below 100 percent funding. Normal contribution is five cents a manhour. The full funding level will be raised from $250 per employe to $300.

"Tremendous strides were made in pensions," Bommarito said. "This is the biggest gain ever made by the URW."

Benefits were raised from $3.25 a month for each year of service to $5.50. Retirees or their survivors will get an additional $1.50 a month for each year they served before retiring. Disability pensions were raised from $6.50 a month for each year of service to $11.

Labor Statistics Handbook Issued

The Labor Dept. has announced publication of the Handbook of Labor Statistics 1967, a compilation of basic statistical information in many fields.

The 300-page volume has 153 tables which carry statistical series from the earliest dates on which reliable and consistent data can be found through 1966. It covers several foreign countries in addition to the United States.

As BLS Bulletin 1555, the handbook can be purchased for $2 from the Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C., 20402, and from BLS regional offices.

COLLEGE STUDENTS joined union pickets when Textile Workers staged a one-week demonstration strike at seven Cone Co. mills in North Carolina. TWUA members and students from six area colleges are shown picketing Cone offices in Greensboro, N.C., as company stockholders met inside. Student interest continues during the summer, the TWUA reports.

Examiner Hits Big Textile Chain, Finds 'Sealed Mind' Bargaining

Cone Mills Corp., Southern textile chain whose labor relations policies inspired North Carolina college students to join union picket lines in protest demonstrations, has been hit with findings of refusal to bargain with the Textile Workers Union of America, and discriminatory firings of TWUA members.

The findings—the second in two years by National Labor Relations Board trial examiners—were that Cone management has shown such opposition to the labor law by the "variety, extent and type of its unfair labor practices" that the NLRB should order it to stop infringing upon the rights of its employes.

Examiner Thomas S. Wilson found Cone guilty of failing to bargain in good faith with TWUA by prolonging negotiations for more than 21 months; firing nine employes for pursuing a work overload grievance, and refusing to give union negotiators actuarial information they needed to analyze a company pension plan.

Public attention was focused on Cone mills in recent months when 100 college students attended union rallies, joined a one-week demonstration picket line at mills in and around Greensboro, N. C., and volunteered to help tell the story of Cone's anti-unionism during vacation periods.

When union members stopped work for a week to protest Cone's unfair practices, students from the University of North Carolina joined TWUA picket lines at the mills, and at company offices during a stockholders' meeting. They were from the University of North Carolina and from Duke University, Guilford College, Davidson, Catawba and other colleges. Four collegians were arrested on charges of trespassing, along with two TWUA members.

Student involvement drew an approving editorial from the Daily Tar Heel, student newspaper at UNC's Chapel Hill campus, which posed the question "What business do students have in a labor dispute?" and answered "Plenty." Students should rally behind the textile workers, the paper said, "to swell the muscles of the unions and show management that not only the workers, but the people of North Carolina too are fed up with the way things are being run now."

When the semester ended in June, TWUA hired five college students for the summer and hopes to hire more in the fall from the ranks of college volunteers. Student interest is high in other areas, too, including New York, where volunteers from Columbia and New York universities helped picket headquarters of another textile firm, TWUA Vice Pres. Paul Swaity said.

In the latest ruling against Cone Mills, the examiner related that TWUA began negotiations on new contracts May 11, 1965, at Cone's Salisbury, N. C., mill and that by Feb. 24, 1967, "these so-called negotiations had . . . continued through a total of 39 sessions over a period of 21 months without agreement at any of the seven plants."

Testimony about the talks at each mill "sounded like nothing more than a phonograph playing a broken record . . . in one groove only," Wilson reported. While the law does not require concessions by any party, he observed, "it still verges on the unusual, if the bargaining actually is being conducted in good faith, to find the parties 1 year and 9 months later . . . in the same exact position they were in at the very first meeting—as occurred in this case due exclusively to the incessant repetition" by management of its take-it-or-leave-it offer.

The examiner summed it up by saying the record shows that management "entered negotiations with a hermetically sealed mind" on the issues of pensions and dues deduction. It still shows "no conception of the meaning of good faith," and "this inevitably will result in aggravated labor strife damaging to all parties," Wilson said.

San Antonio Garbagemen's March Wins Public Support, Major Gains

San Antonio, Tex.—The day the garbage collectors marched on City Hall is a day red-letter-marked for history in San Antonio's crowded Latin section.

It is strictly against the stern Texas law for public employes to engage in strikes or organized work stoppages, but the long-held-down garbage and rubbish men nerved themselves for a move that could cost every man his job.

Early one July morning, 350 employes of the city Dept. of Public Works gathered at the West Martin St. hall of Laborers Local 1095 and, flags waving, walked through downtown San Antonio in a peaceful plea for improved wages and conditions.

First there were three men carrying the American flag, then two men with the red and black "Huelga" flag used in Mexico to warn workers away from a struck establishment, followed by Jose Montoya with a drum, keeping step for the strikers, their families, friends and sympathizers.

The rally took only 10 minutes after the procession wound three times around the city building. Everyone went home, the men wondering if they would ever work again in a city dominated by an official establishment long hostile to unions.

Union negotiators then resumed talks interrupted by the protest march. At the finish, the Laborers had won pay raises of 15 to 27 cents an hour, additional vacation and sick leave betterments, and an agreement that another attempt will be made to work out an insurance coverage plan for the families of city employes.

For the newly-organized laborers it was a stirring victory.

"Now they feel like men—they have a union, more food for the children, but best of all they feel self-respect," said Dir. Henry T. Wilson of the Federal-Public Service Employes division of the Laborers, who sat in on negotiations.

The DPW employes joined the union last year, and have been trying ever since to get union recognition, some form of grievance procedure and overtime pay for work after 8 hours (most have been working 12 to 13 hours a day without overtime and without time out for lunch).

They got nowhere in the face of a state law proclaiming that it is a violation of public policy for the state or any county or municipality to recognize or reach a contract with a labor organization.

The law provides that a public employe who strikes forfeits all job rights and benefits.

All attempts to negotiate improvements for the service employes were met with a "strictly legalistic" attitude by city officials—they couldn't recognize the union or negotiate with it, they couldn't agree to a dues checkoff, they refused to talk officially with union representatives unless they secured a power of attorney from each union member.

A brief work stoppage by rubbish men in the "rich" section of town brought no improvement, so the Laborers tried a new approach—calling in sick. When City Manager Jack Shelley ordered layoffs, the workers organized their march on City Hall, and garbage began to pile up in the yards.

The city hired vacationing collegians as replacements and furnished police patrols accompanying every garbage truck. But community sympathy was with the strikers, and they went back to work after a union vote to accept the city's offer.

One further meeting was necessary after the strikers returned—they refused to work with strikebreakers and the city agreed to move the latter to other departments as yet unorganized.

Wage-Hour Enforcement Funds Sought

The AFL-CIO asked the Senate to vote funds for at least 250 additional wage-hour inspectors to meet part of the extra workload from last year's expansion of minimum wage coverage.

Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller said 500 new inspectors would be needed to enable the Labor Dept. merely to continue its present pattern of inspecting 5 percent of covered work places each year.

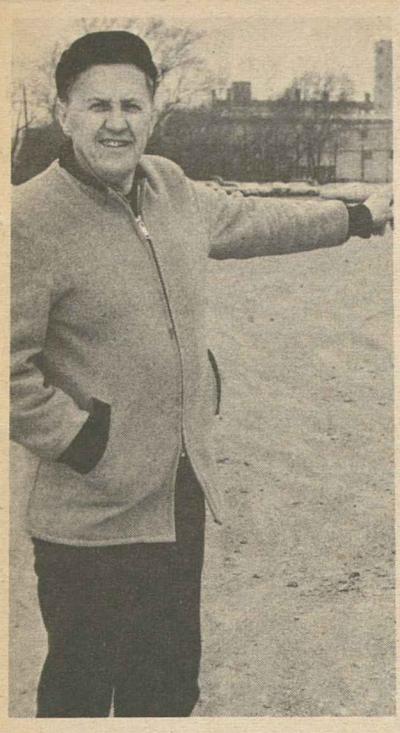
The Administration budget asked for 175 new investigators but the House earlier this year allowed funds for only 112.

Biemiller noted that last year wage-hour investigators discovered 429,000 workers underpaid $90 million—and estimated that only about half of the actual violations of the law were uncovered.

He said that since this February 11,119 complaints were filed by workers, many through AFL-CIO committees set up to spur enforcement of the law. This compares with 7,690 complaints during the same period of 1966.

Biemiller also urged the Senate Appropriations subcommittee to restore cuts made by the House in the civil rights compliance budget of the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare.

"It is our strong belief that the full appropriation is necessary if adequate enforcement of the law is to be obtained," he said.



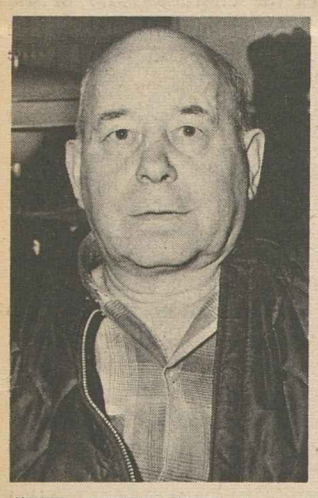
THE DEAD AND WOUNDED of the 1937 Memorial Day Massacre at the South Chicago Works of Republic Steel were honored on the 30th anniversary date this year when the Steelworkers dedicated a simple monument to the memory of those who were shot down while parading for the right to organize a union. Above are some of the police who a minute later were shooting and clubbing 10 men to death, wounding more than 90 others. Left, Casey Klimowski points to the spot where the onset started.

Labor Honors Memorial Day Martyrs

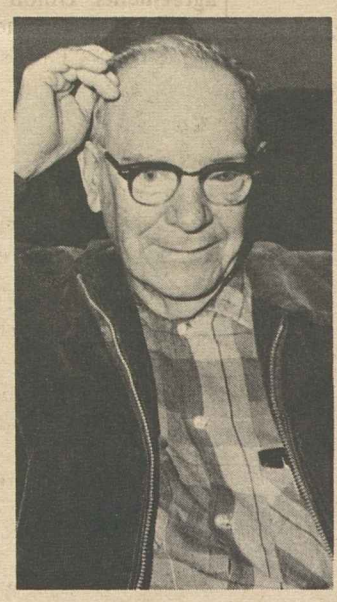
BITTER MEMORIES were revived for veteran members of the Steelworkers when the marker was dedicated to those who died on that Memorial Day of 1937—Hilding Anderson, Otis James, Earl Handley, Kenneth Reid, Alfred Causey, Leo Francisco, Anthony Tagliori, Joseph Rothmund, Sam Popovich and Lee Tisdale.

The monument and plaque, USWA District Dir. Joseph Germano said in his dedicatory address, will recount for future generations their names as those of martyrs who died for unionism. The terror and bloodshed that rained down upon the marchers from the guns and clubs of the Chicago police followed by but a few weeks the Supreme Court's ruling that the Wagner Act was constitutional.

The Little Steel companies had refused to recognize the CIO Steel Workers Organizing Committee and a strike was called—four days before the massacre. At right, local union officials and USWA Rep. Al Towers (right) recall the grim day as they stand at the marker, across the street from the Republic plant.

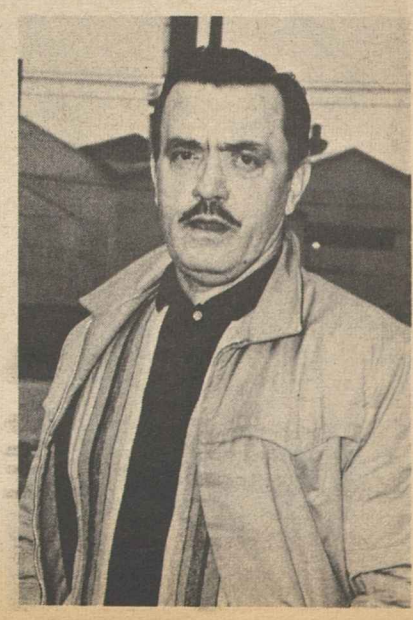


"WE THOUGHT the police were just fooling," recalls Joseph Buffanio (left). "I started running. . . ." For some, such as the victim being dragged away (above), it was too late to run—for their lives.



THE VICIOUSNESS of the police attack and the flight of the terrorized paraders are dramatically shown above in a photo from a Paramount newsreel of the massacre which the union says was never released for public showing. The whole shameful story is recorded in the annals of the LaFollette Committee, which investigated, as well as in the searing memories of men like Steve Borozon (right), an open hearth worker who also recalls that police had broken up two earlier picket lines.

GUNFIRE and clubbing was remembered vividly by Frank Jurek (left), of Local 65, who retired two years ago after a lifetime in the mills. Many of the wounded were carted (right) to waiting ambulances and patrol wagons with no consideration for their bullet-torn bodies and battered heads. Seven SWOC members were dead on the field when the police ended their attack; three others died in nearby hospitals.



Organizing: New Jobs, New Workers

Major Changes Pose Challenge to Unions

New types of workers in new occupations in fast-growing industries pose great organizing challenges for the labor movement, according to the July edition of the American Federationist, monthly publication of the AFL-CIO.

The current Federationist is devoted entirely to the subject of "Organizing: New Jobs, New Workers, New Challenges," with major attention to the younger, more educated typical worker in today's labor force.

In an editorial, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany explains that organizing must be "a continuing effort" of the labor movement not only to win more benefits for workers but to build a better society for all. (Text, Page 6.)

Other articles describe labor's approach to the new worker, the changing profile of the workforce, the growth of public employe unionism, the possible awakening of white collar workers, the expansion of the service industries and the techniques of organizing today.

"Unions exist because workers organized them . . . driven by sheer necessity and enlightened self-interest," Meany declares in the editorial.

He says a continuing organizing effort is necessary for several reasons: Non-union workers in strongly-unionized industries and occupations must be informed of the benefits of organization; the professional, technical, clerical and other white collar employes are a growing majority and have the same need for unions as blue collar workers; the labor force includes more and more young people and they must be told the value of unionism.

Now, as always, Meany observes, the workers must organize themselves. The organizer can only serve as an educator: what he organizes is the thinking of the workers.

The organizer can explain to professionals and other white collar workers what teachers have lately learned—that while their job duties may be different, their job problems are no different from those of craftsmen or factory workers, Meany points out. And, he adds, the organizer can show young people how collective bargaining can improve their opportunities.

While unions can improve the job benefits of members, Meany concludes, the ultimate goal is a strong labor movement which can fight for a better society for all. He cited labor's role as "the people's lobby" in working for better schools, better housing, old-age security, medicare, full and equal opportunity and other achievements.

"This, in essence, is what organizing is all about," he declares.

AFL-CIO Organization Dir. William L. Kircher discusses "Labor's Approach to the New Worker."

'Specific Needs'

Recognizing that the youngster entering the workforce today is "better educated, more knowledgeable, more sophisticated," Kircher writes, organized labor knows it must tailor its appeal and program to meet specific needs. He recalls that the 1965 AFL-CIO convention made the point that "general exhortation is not an effective method of organizing today."

The organizing challenge today involves approximately 32 million men and women, Kircher says. As the labor force—and the non-union area—has grown, the percentage of those organized, has dropped from about 39 percent to 35 percent, he observed. Yet in the same period, since the AFL-CIO merger in 1955, at least 3 million workers have been organized, Kircher points out.

In government, he notes, collective bargaining was encouraged by Pres. Kennedy's executive order and about 1 million federal employes now work under negotiated agreements. Union growth in state and local government jurisdictions also is unprecedented, he adds.

In retail and service fields, Kircher reports, vigorous campaigns have extended unionism into new areas. He notes that unions have won National Labor Relations Board elections for a successively larger number of workers each year for the past five years.

Among professional workers, he says, the long-anticipated move may be under way, reflected in "the dramatic union organizing gains made among teachers. . . ."

With these favorable signs, Kircher concludes, "the formidable obstacles to organizing can be overcome" through substantial resources and skill.

Marvin Friedman, assistant director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research, reviews "The Changing Profile of the Labor Force."

Changes Discussed

Friedman discusses the changes against the background of several dynamic forces: advancing technology, the worker's quest for ever-higher living standards and the pressure on industry for improved products and higher profits.

He points out that, between 1949 and 1965, over 6,000 "new" occupations arose and 8,000 types of jobs disappeared. In geographical terms, the eastern and midwestern areas still make up the bulk of the population and industrial concentrations but the fastest rates of growth are in the South, the Southwest and the West.

In recent years, he notes, jobs have been moving out of the cities and into the suburbs. He cites a Dept. of Labor study of 12 metropolitan areas showing that overall payroll employment between 1959 and 1965 grew by 12 percent but soared 30 percent in the suburbs alone.

By far the most publicized development in the job picture, Friedman observes, has been the growth of white collar and service jobs. This long-term trend will continue, he stresses, with white collar jobs increasingly outnumbering blue collar jobs.

All these changes, Friedman concludes, carry policy implications for union organizing, for bargaining to ease the impact of change and for national economic policy to meet urgent social needs.

David L. Perlman, an assistant editor of the AFL-CIO News, traces the recent growth of government worker unionism in "Public Employes: An Emerging Force." Perlman suggests that the impact on public employes of Pres. Kennedy's executive order can be compared to the influence of the Wagner Act in the private sector.

Robert B. Cooney, assistant editor of the Federationist, asserts that the worker ferment of recent years may be creating the right climate for "Loosening the White Collar." He writes that experts see the necessary pre-conditions for white collar unionism developing as the traditional promotion ladder is blocked by college-trained managers, as automation impacts office work, and as teacher and government unions provide respectable models for protecting employe interests.

Rudolph Oswald, an economist in the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research, describes the characteristics of the diverse subdivisions making up the service industry. "The Man in the Gray Collar" works in stores, restaurants, hospitals, barber shops, theaters, laundries, banks and so on. There are 25 million service workers and many are women. Oswald reports unionization to be very spotty.

Edward S. Haines and Alan Kistler, assistant directors of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Organization, wrote about "The Techniques of Organizing." They put great emphasis on mastering the tools of analysis and communications and explain the groundwork that must be laid. The article traces a typical organizing campaign through to election day.

Television, Radio Artists Map Picket Line Clause

San Francisco—The traditional support of the Television & Radio Artists for other unions on strike in the broadcasting industry was reaffirmed at AFTRA's 30th anniversary convention here.

In the same resolution, the TV and radio performers' union expressed appreciation for labor support in its strike of last April.

The delegates also moved to guarantee the right of members to respect the picket lines of other unions by declaring their intention of seeking in 1969 negotiations a contract provision outlawing employer recriminations.

The convention formalized a mandate laid down by the 1966 convention and provided for the inclusion of radio and TV newsmen on the national board.

Another resolution called on local unions to establish committees on wages and working conditions soon after the 1968 convention to review national codes, exchange information and begin formulating bargaining proposals to be acted upon by the 1969 convention before they go to the employers.

Proposals for 1968 bargaining on AFTRA's national code for phonograph recordings were approved.

Mel Brandt, New York announcer for the National Broadcasting Co., was elected president to succeed Tyler McVey, Los Angeles actor. Howard K. Beasley, Denver, Colo., was named recording secretary and Jack Costello, New York, was chosen treasurer.

'Crisis' Coverage

IN THE PAST FEW MONTHS the mass media—newspapers, magazines, radio and television—have shortchanged their vast audiences in their coverage of labor disputes.

They have virtually ignored a number of vitally important disputes and strikes while reacting with an almost hysterical tone to others.

The basic issues in the disputes—a fair share for the workers of industry's rich harvest of profits, the removal of wage inequities, protection for workers against rising living costs—have been either brushed aside or buried deep in a mass of not-very-perceptive reporting.

For 13 long weeks the workers in major rubber plants were on strike to secure economic justice that could not be won at the bargaining table because of the companies' hard-nosed refusal to concede the workers' needs. This dispute went virtually unreported and unnoticed until settlements were finally arrived at.

Workers in the non-ferrous mines and mills have been on strike for two weeks, forced onto the picket lines by a rigid company position on key issues of wages and cost-of-living clauses. There has been nary a line or a film clip on this dispute involving copper, zinc, lead, etc.

The struggle by the farm workers to organize in the Texas fields finally penetrated the media when a Senate committee went down into the Rio Grande Valley to hear firsthand of the strikebreaking activities of the Texas Rangers and the beatings and jailings of strikers.

There are other disputes scattered across the country—strikes to establish the simple fact of union recognition, of combatting sweatshop wages and inhuman working conditions. These go basically unreported except in the labor press.

In the year-long rail shopcrafts dispute, the media took real note only when the railroads—intent on forcing congressional action on compulsory arbitration—in effect refused to bargain. When frustrated rail workers finally struck in a last effort to win wages comparable to those paid for similarly skilled workers in non-rail operations, the hysteria point was reached.

Strikes that had been long ignored or glossed over suddenly won notice in the media as part of the "labor crisis," and "strike round-up" stories flourished to support the crisis contention.

The on-deadline reporting shed neither light nor understanding on the issues involved—many of them complex and having their roots in problems of prior bargaining and contracts.

TRADE UNIONISTS do not go on strike lightly. They bear the economic brunt of the battle. They exercise the strike weapon—the right to refuse to work under conditions not acceptable to them—as a last resort.

In the struggle to win a fair share of the wealth they have helped produce they are entitled to a full hearing in the mass media, to in-depth reporting, not a sweeping attack on unions for allegedly endangering the public interest when at most what is involved is the public convenience.

The public interest in the rubber strike, in the copper strike, in the shopcrafts dispute is in peaceful, good-faith labor-management relations that result in justice and equity for the workers.

Meany Editorial:

Continuous Organizing Needed To Strengthen 'People's Lobby'

The following editorial, "Organizing: A Continuing Effort" by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany appears in the July 1967 issue of the American Federationist.

UNIONS EXIST because workers organized them. To most of us in the labor movement, this fact is self-evident. But to many other Americans—including a minority within our own ranks—it is not self-evident at all. It is not even accepted as a fact.

The principal reason for this misconception is the passage of time. Within the memory of most of those now in the labor force, there have always been unions—if not in their own place of employment, certainly in similar establishments. In the eyes of the misinformed, "the union" is an institution which deals with workers from one direction, just as the employer deals with them from another. Nothing could be further from the truth.

The origin of unions as spontaneous movements by workers, driven by sheer necessity and enlightened self-interest, is too little known or too often dismissed as irrelevant in today's society. Yet these spontaneous movements were indeed the way unions began; and if the unions that have grown from them should vanish, there would be a new round of spontaneous movements to build new ones.

This being so, why is a continuing effort to organize the unorganized necessary?

There are several answers.

First, in those industries and occupations where unions are strong, workers in non-union establishments generally enjoy equal or nearly-equal wages and other monetary benefits. Many will not realize the other benefits they are missing unless they are told.

Second, the nature of employment in the United States is changing. Professional, technical, clerical and other white-collar workers are a growing majority. Union organization was not the norm when their numbers were smaller and their relationships with management were more intimate. But today, their relationship with management is as impersonal as that of factory workers and they have the same need to organize.

Third, the labor force contains an increasing proportion of younger workers. These younger workers, inexperienced and unversed in labor history, have yet to learn the value and importance of trade unionism.

This is why organizing must be a continuing effort. These are the problems to which the union organizer must address himself.

DESPITE the well-worn trade union phrase, an organizer does not organize a plant. Now, as in the beginning, the workers must organize themselves. The organizer can serve only as an educator; what he organizes is the thinking of the workers.

He points out to non-union workers in well-organized industries that while they may have parity in the pay envelope, they lack the system of industrial democracy, of justice on the job and the assurance of personal dignity and independence that a union contract provides.

He explains to the professional and other white-collar workers what so many teachers have lately learned—that while their job duties may be different, their job problems, as employes, are no different from those of craftsmen or the men on the assembly line or the women in the sewing rooms.

He exposes to ambitious youth the role of collective bargaining in the progress of the individual—not imposing ceilings but raising sights and opening up new opportunities.

All this is related to the well-being of workers on their jobs. This is a sound objective in itself. But the ultimate goal is much greater.

For the ultimate goal is not just more benefits for union members, but a better society for all.

The record proves that a strong labor movement can play a decisive part in achieving better education, better housing, old age security, medicare, full and equal opportunity for all, cleaner rivers, purer air—the whole range of the needs and aspirations of the American people.

We are the people's lobby and this our obligation.

The bigger and stronger we are, the more people we can enlist in this cause, the more effective we can be in the interests of all.

This, in essence, is what organizing is all about.

Guild Cites Examples:

'Profits, Not Preservation' Held Motive for Newspaper Mergers

The following is excerpted from testimony presented to the Senate Anti-Trust Subcommittee on newspaper mergers and failures by Executive Vice Pres. William J. Farson of the American Newspaper Guild.

IT IS TOO OFTEN assumed that every newspaper merger and suspension and joint operating arrangement is the result of inexorable economic forces over which management has no control and takes place only when a paper has its financial back to the wall. Neither of these beliefs will withstand examination.

The fact is that many mergers and semi-mergers have taken place when both participants were either perfectly healthy or suffering from no more than a temporary financial indisposition.

Maximization of profit rather than its mere preservation has, we believe, all too often constituted the motive. And where papers have traveled down the financial toboggan, it has often been their own fault.

Newspapers do face competition for the advertising dollar but are not fighting a losing battle, according to the industry figures we have cited.

But we have grown increasingly skeptical, over the years, of publishers' inevitable explanation that survival of the property, or the complete absence of an alternative, forces mergers, suspensions, consolidations, semi-mergers, joint operating arrangements—whatever name is given to a particular event in the constriction.

And we have grown equally skeptical of the other party's protestions, especially in cases of semi-mergers, or joint operating arrangements, that he is really only interested in preservation of other newspapers in the community.

Let me cite a few examples of events upon which feeds our skepticism.

When the St. Louis Star-Times sold out to the Post-Dispatch in 1951 the Star-Times was a money-making operation.

Publisher Elzey Roberts claimed costs had risen more rapidly than revenue for five consecutive years. But Editor & Publisher reported that since 1946, when the Star-Times earned a profit of one million dollars, costs had gone up only $80,000 more than income—leaving an apparent profit of almost $920,000 a year.

Three years later Col. Robert McCormick sold the Washington Times-Herald to the Washington Post for $8.5 million, almost twice what he had paid for it only five years earlier. At the time of the sale the Times-Herald had the largest circulation of all four Washington papers—25 percent higher than the Post.

Eugene Meyer, then publisher of the Post, gave McCormick 48 hours to accept his offer. At the hour the time limit expired and the sale was consummated, McCormick's niece had raised $1,350,000 of the $1.5 million needed for a "good-faith showing" to buy the paper herself and keep it going. She was desperately trying to borrow the remaining $150,000.

In 1958, David Stern, Jr., sold the New Orleans Item to the competing Times-Picayune for $3.4 million more than it had cost him nine years earlier. E & P reported on July 19, 1958, that the Item had shown a net profit in both of the previous years . . .

When no outside buyer was found willing to pay the $3.4 million that the Times-Picayune was ready to pay to buy a monopoly, the sale received the approval of the Justice Dept.

The Chicago Daily News was sold in 1959 to Field Enterprises, publishers of the rival Chicago Sun-Times. Only three years before, John S. Knight, publisher of the Daily News, had pronounced the following judgement on the sale of the Chicago American to the Chicago Tribune:

"The Tribune, loaded with profits from its own and subsidiary operations in New York and Canada, purchased the American to throttle competition. Even at the fantastically high sale price" —reported to have been between $11 million and $13 million—"for what has been a hollow journalistic shell, the Tribune can list the American's losses against its own high earnings."

Yet, when Knight sold the News to Fields to further throttle Chicago newspaper competition, he did not even have the excuse of yielding an unprofitable operation. The news, according to E & P, had average earnings of $1,250,000 after taxes in the 15 years Knight owned it, had liquidated a $12.8-million debt, and had added $2.5 million in plant and equipment.

IN 1958 one of the major wire services, Hearst's Intl. News Service, was merged with Scripps-Howard's United Press to form UPI.

At that time the Guild asked the Justice Dept. to investigate a persistent rumor that the news-services merger also involved an agreement to suspend publication of certain newspapers . . .

Specifically we mentioned reports that Hearst would vacate Pittsburgh, where it was publishing the Sun-Telegraph, and Scripps-Howard would cease publication of its San Francisco News. Spokesmen for the two chains assured everyone there was no foundation to the rumor.

Yet, today, of the two, only Scripps-Howard remains in Pittsburgh, where it publishes the Pittsburgh Press. Hearst left town in 1960. And in San Francisco, only Hearst remains.

When all this has been said, there are still the cases of those newspapers that have gone down because of financial difficulties.

Undeniably, many factors share the responsibility. But these factors—rising costs, competition for advertising dollars, and the rest—are phenomena confronting all newspapers, yet the majority not only survive but thrive.

I would suggest that the quality of the product and the ability of management are the decisive factors in determining whether a competitive newspaper goes under or forges ahead.

Justice Delayed:

Put Teeth in NLRB Orders, Pollock Asks Congress, LBJ

WILLIAM POLLOCK, president of the Textile Workers of America, called for revision of the National Labor Relations Act and for a presidential executive order denying federal contracts to companies that wilfully violate the act.

Pollock, an AFL-CIO vice president, in a network radio interview, proposed such means to stop large textile corporations, operating in the South, from avoiding compliance with findings of the National Labor Relations Board by keeping the cases in the courts.

The "Darlington case," as an example, has been in litigation for 11 years, Pollock pointed out. In this instance, the management of a Deering-Milliken plant in Darlington, S.C., threatened to close the mill if the union won an organizing election. The plant was closed in December 1956. Although the NLRB called the company action an unfair labor practice and the union has won every test in the courts, this case still has not been settled, Pollock said.

He cited another example, the J. P. Stevens Co., which has 72 plants mostly in the Carolinas. After TWUA attempts to organize in 1963, Pollock said that the NLRB found the company guilty in four cases of intimidation, coercion and discharge. Seventy-one workers, who were ordered reinstated with back pay plus 6 percent interest, have not been able to regain their jobs, Pollock said, despite the NLRB rulings and subsequent court order.

"IF THE BOARD finds a person has been discharged because of unfair labor practices, we think the company should be forced to immediately reinstate that worker in his job," said Pollock.

He pointed out that hearings on the need to strengthen the law will soon be held by a House Labor subcommittee, with Rep. Frank Thompson (D-N.J.), chairman.

The interview was on the AFL-CIO public service program, Labor News Conference, carried on the Mutual Broadcasting System. Reporters were Stanley Levey, labor correspondent for the Scripps-Howard Newspapers, and Alex Uhl, editor of Press Associates, Inc.

The Worker's Poet:

Sandburg's Heritage: 'The People, Yes'

By Harry Conn

THEY LAID him to rest here in the Blue Ridge hills that he loved. Carl Sandburg—worker, poet, historian, guitarist.

Words of tribute to him rang out from on high, from the White House, from the halls of learning, from the famous.

His father was an illiterate Swedish immigrant who worked as a railroad blacksmith in the yards of Galesburg, Ill. And he, himself, worked as a boomer on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy.

No matter how many jobs and how many honors came his way in later life he never lost his touch with the railroad worker. Years later he was to tell Rubin Levin, editor of "Labor," the railroad brotherhoods' newspaper, how long he had been a subscriber.

Harry Golden, in his biography of Sandburg, wrote:

"Lucy Robbins Lang, for many years private secretary to the late Samuel Gompers, told me that the early organizers of the American Federation of Labor carried 'Chicago' poems in their kits: 'At nearly every organizing meeting we had group singing followed by a reading of one of Sandburg's poems,' " she said.

In 1912 the Pressmen were locked out by the Chicago newspapers. The Chicago Daily Socialist was the only newspaper not affected and Sandburg went to Chicago to work for it. Chicago became his city:

"Hog Butcher of the World,
"Tool Maker, Stacker of Wheat,
"Player with Railroads and the Nation's Freight Handler;
"Stormy, husky, brawling,
"City of the Big Shoulders."

"Labor is beginning to realize its power," he told a 1908 Labor Day rally. "We no longer beg, we demand old-age pensions; we demand minimum wage; we demand industrial accident insurance; we demand unemployment insurance; and we demand the eight-hour day which must become the basic law of the land."

IN HIS YEARS as a newspaper man, Sandburg, usually covered labor stories. In 1917, he actually went on the AFL payroll and wrote first-hand stories out of the Middle West for the labor press.

He wrote of mill girls, of bricklayers, of steelworkers, of icemen, of auto workers, of soldiers, of farmers, of dancers, of machinists, of truck drivers, of builders:

"The silent litany of the workmen goes on—
"Speed, speed, we are makers of speed.
"We make the flying, crying motors,
"Clutches, brakes and axles,
"Gears, ignitions, accelerators,
"Spokes and springs and shock absorbers."

Sandburg understood hard work and what it took out of the workers. And he could express this understanding as no other. He said in "Mill Doors:"

"You never come back.
"I say good-by when I see you going in the door,
"The hopeless open doors that call and wait
"And take you then for—how many cents a day?
"How many cents for the sleepy eyes and fingers?
"I say good-by because I know they tap your wrists,
"In the dark, in the silence, day by day,
"And all the blood of you drop by drop,
"And you are old before you are young.
"You never come back."

Sandburg could feel for the great as he did for the worker. His six-volume work on Abraham Lincoln stands as a classic. On the 150th anniversary of Lincoln's birth, in 1959, he addressed a joint session of Congress. Twice he was awarded the Pulitzer Prize for literature.

Carl Sandburg remained a man of the people, best described in the title of his book: "The People, Yes." (PAI)

TEXTILE UNIONS win all the National Labor Relations Board and court case battles, but the war against them by the big textile giants never seems to end, Pres. William Pollock (center) of the Textile Workers Union of America told Stanley Levey of Scripps-Howard (left) and Alex Uhl of Press Associates on the AFL-CIO public service program, Labor News Conference, heard on the Mutual Broadcasting System.

DELEGATES PARADE with placards and banners at Retail Clerks convention in Miami Beach, Fla., in a demonstrative welcome to Vice Pres. Humphrey. Earlier the convention voted to start a fund to establish a Hubert Humphrey Library.

Retail Clerks' Convention Sets Goals for Bargaining Program

Bal Harbour, Fla.—Retail Clerks are determined to match their union's rapid membership growth with equal progress at the bargaining table.

The 1,000 delegates to the RCIA convention here greeted with applause — and a unanimous vote of approval — a collective bargaining report that included resolutions calling for:

- Equal wages and fringe benefits for part-time workers, who make up a large portion of the retail workforce.
- Total elimination of all differences in wages and benefits based on sex.
- Stepped-up efforts to negotiate reciprocity of pension funds so that workers who change employers within the retail field won't lose accumulated pension credits. The resolution said the "eventual goal" is nationwide reciprocity on pensions.
- "Serious consideration" for "a coordinated bargaining approach working toward uniformity as well as providing the smallest local union with the economic power of the largest."
- Continued improvement in negotiated health benefits, including preventive medical checkups, dental care and mental health services in localities which do not yet have them.

The convention called for federal and state legislation outlawing the use of so-called lie detectors in employment. It termed polygraph devices inaccurate, unreliable and "an affront to the dignity and integrity of employes."

A companion resolution urged legislation to bar employers from firing or disciplining workers because their pay has been garnisheed.

The union stressed the importance of political action "not only to pass good legislation but also to resist passage of bad legislation," including bills that would "destroy completely" the trade union movement.

An organizing report stressed the need for a "greater effort" in the department store field and said employes of military commissaries and post exchanges should be brought into the RCIA.

Salaries Increased

The convention unanimously voted pay raises for the RCIA's top officers, Pres. James A. Suffridge and Sec.-Treas. William W. Maguire. The salary for the president was boosted from $40,000 to $60,000 and the added $10,000 for Suffridge was raised to $15,000 for a total of $75,000 while he holds the office. The secretary-treasurer salary was raised from $30,000 to $42,500, with an additional $5,000 while Maguire holds the office.

RCIA officers are elected by referendum for four-year terms, and the next election is scheduled for 1968.

In just a few of the many convention speeches:

- Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz said the labor movement "has stood four-square for every single public interest proposition" during his term of office. He said that "more than any other institution in American life," unions have recognized "that one person is the same as another person and is entitled to the same opportunities."
- Sen. Ralph W. Yarborough (D-Tex.) said the RCIA has fought "not only for decent wages and working conditions, but to protect the consumers you serve" by supporting truth in packaging and lending legislation.
- Sen. Thomas H. Kuchel (R-Calif.) termed collective bargaining "a basic principle of a healthy economy and of a free society."
- Sen. Vance Hartke (D-Ind.) said the nation's "unfinished business" includes "its glutted cities, its crime, its poverty, its water and air pollution."
- Rep. Roman C. Pucinski (D-Ill.) said government data shows that increases in the minimum wage have been followed by more, not less, employment in the retail field. He termed the federal wage-hour law "a keystone of our economic system . . . the base on which this whole country has been building."
- Rep. Claude Pepper (D-Fla.) said union political support has made it possible for legislators to "vote for the people" and stay in office.
- Rep. Alvin E. O'Konski (R-Wis.) said the ovation the RCIA delegates gave Sec. of State Dean Rusk was "heartwarming" evidence that Americans are behind the nation's leaders.
- Rep. Richard S. Schweiker (R-Pa.) said his party "must make it very clear to the workingman" that it welcomes him "with actions and not just words" if the GOP is to win national elections.

Suffridge Hits Bid To Delay Pay Floor

Bal Harbour, Fla. — At a news conference during the Retail Clerks Convention, RCIA Pres. James A. Suffridge denounced the National Retail Merchants Association for asking Congress to delay implementing the $1.60 minimum wage.

The big store owners, suffridge said, "don't want their employes as effective citizens of the American community or as customers. They only see them as exploitable bodies."

He charged the large retailers with "sheer hypocracy," declaring:

"They can pay the $1.60. They should pay it. The $1.60 is still below a poverty wage. The working poor should not be required to subsidize the retail industry."

Rail Retirement Board Names Executive Officer

The Railroad Retirement Board has named Samuel Chmell as its new chief executive officer. He will direct the board's activities in the administration of the Railroad Retirement and Unemployment Insurance Acts.

Mergers Blamed:

Per Capita Rise Put To Guild Delegates

Ottawa, Ont.—Finances occupied the center of the stage as the Newspaper Guild opened its 34th annual convention here.

Meeting in Canada's capital city during the nation's centennial year, more than 200 delegates were faced with an international executive board recommendation that per capita payments be increased 10 cents to meet a budgetary deficit brought about largely by newspaper mergers.

Also before the convention was an IEB proposal that it be authorized to seek funds to continue the Guild's international affairs program from either private sources or the government.

ANG Sec.-Treas. Charles A. Perlik, Jr., in an opening day address, warned that the Guild's financial structure was in a "serious condition . . . unmatched in the past decade."

Reporting a $40,000 deficit during the past fiscal year and an impending deficit in the current year under the prevailing rate of per capita payments, Perlik declared:

"The reason is as plain as the nose on Jock Whitney's face: Suddenly, the loss of jobs and members through mergers, suspensions and the like has become too great for normal and regular financial growth to repair."

Since 1960, according to the IEB's report, 18 mergers and suspensions have cost the Guild 4,579 jobs—not including 100 lost in the merger of the Boston Herald and the Traveler last month after the report was prepared.

Board's Proposal

The board proposed that per capita payments, which were automatically increased 9.5 cents in May under a formula gearing them to the average top reporter minimum in Guild newspaper contracts, be increased an additional 10 cents for the next 10 months.

Continuation of the Guild's international affairs program with funds from either private foundations or the Agency for Intl. Development was urged by Executive Vice Pres. William J. Farson. The program has been operated on an interim basis since May with an emergency grant of $27,900 from the AFL-CIO Executive Council.

"The Guild is here today because other trade unions felt a moral obligation to assist their fellow workers to organize," Farson declared. "We feel that the Guild has a similar moral obligation to fellow newspaper workers to assist them in forming and improving their trade unions."

An IEB resolution submitted to the convention stipulated that any financial arrangement must be "completely open" and allow the program to "remain the Guild's program, subject to the direction of its convention and officers."

Hayden Bill Hit

ANG Pres. Arthur Rosenstock scored the Hayden bill, which would exempt the merger of so-called "failing newspapers" from the anti-trust laws, as a measure that would "protectively grease the skids" for more newspaper consolidations.

Rosenstock urged instead adoption of Guild-proposed legislation that would place barriers in the path of a newspaper's acquisition by a competitor.

It was Rosenstock's final address as Guild president. He announced last month that he would not seek re-election to the non-salaried post after serving for eight years, longer than any other president in ANG history.

As the convention began, the only announced candidate to succeed him was Vice President James B. Woods of St. Louis.

David Lewis, a member of Parliament and deputy national leader of the New Democratic Party, told the convention banquet that opposition to international unions in Canada is opposition to the labor movement, since the dismantling of across-the-border union ties would mean the destruction of the Canadian labor movement.

But he urged international unions to "devise ways and means that will give meaningful power to Canadian members to solve decisions that concern them in a Canadian way and in the spirit of the Canadian environment."

America, Labor Both Need 'More,' Humphrey Tells Union Gatherings

Miami Beach, Fla.—Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey put into trade union terms a philosophy of an America on the march, with each step forward viewed as a springboard for further progress.

He told delegates to the Retail Clerks and Longshoremen's conventions that neither the nation nor the labor movement can rest on past accomplishments.

Humphrey said it would be as unthinkable to stand pat on the achievements of medicare "when almost one third of our people have no regular access to doctors and dentists" as it would be for union negotiators to accept an employer's argument that there is no need for new benefits because "you had a good contract last time."

The United States "stands for improvement, for progress," Humphrey said. "Just like you, we constantly have to renegotiate a contract."

Both conventions reached peaks of enthusiasm in demonstrations greeting the vice president. The RCIA welcomed Humphrey with a sea of banners and placards and the news that it has opened a fund drive to build a Hubert Humphrey Library as a permanent home for his official and personal papers and records. The fund was launched with a $10,000 grant from the union's Active Ballot Club and will be augmented by contributions from locals.

At both conventions, Humphrey hammered away at the "tired people" who say America "cannot afford" further social progress, who "use the war in Viet Nam as their excuse for inaction on domestic issues."

The Administration, he said, "doesn't agree" with that reasoning.

National Goals Cited

"The one thing this country cannot afford is illiteracy and poverty and ignorance and disease and unemployment and joblessness and despair and hate—we cannot afford that," the vice president said.

"But we can afford to help each other. We can afford schools. We can afford teachers. We can afford to build jobs and to train men and women for those jobs. And if we do it, America will not be the poorer for it. It will be the richer."

He spoke feelingly of the need to match equal rights with equal opportunity, declaring: "We have laws to guarantee the right of everyone to be served in a restaurant without regard to race, but they do not guarantee several million Americans more than a starvation diet."

Humphrey said the nation needs "active, vigorous trade unions" to continue its progress.

He addressed himself "to the younger members of unions" telling them that they have "a special obligation."

Their wages and working conditions, Humphrey said, were made possible by the struggles of an earlier generation.

"Other people had to literally go to jail for what you have—had to fight on the streets for what you have," he added. "The struggle must go on and the unions must continue to grow. The unorganized need to be organized and the younger people must carry that torch."

At ILA Convention:

Slums Breed Riots, Hughes Warns U.S.

By David L. Perlman

Miami Beach, Fla.—New Jersey Gov. Richard J. Hughes warned a troubled nation that "there are other Newarks" and the violence and destruction that ripped the heart of that city's Negro slums could explode in other cities facing the same grave problems.

Only a few days after his speech, newspaper headlines were bearing out his prediction.

Hughes made his first out-of-state public appearance since the Newark outbreak at the Longshoremen's 75th anniversary convention, a biracial oasis with about an equal number of Negro and white delegates.

The New Jersey governor said the prompt use of police power is essential to "restore order" and protect "the lives and property of innocent Negroes and whites alike."

But he stressed that "the real villains" are "greed and indifference, and maybe all of us who are content in our complacency not to think too much and too hard about a situation until it is forcibly brought to our attention by tragic events."

"We are living in a time of unprecedented prosperity," Hughes added. "Yet trapped in the ghettos of our cities are vast numbers of people who cannot share in this abundance."

'Hopelessness, Futility'

"They cannot purchase the goods which are displayed before them in store windows and on television.

"They cannot break out of the ghettos. They live in hopelessness and futility and, for some, a deep resentment fills up which festers slowly until the criminals ignite it by the slightest spark."

It was a star-studded, diamond jubilee convention for the ILA, with Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey, Sec. of State Dean Rusk, Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and a galaxy of senators and congressmen addressing the delegates.

And in between the oratory, there was the bread-and-butter business of a union convention, including a major overhaul of the ILA constitution. A pre-convention constitution committee, named by Pres. Thomas W. Gleason nearly a year ago, submitted a series of proposals which were enacted by the delegates. One new section doubled the salaries of the principal officers, the president's to $40,000 and the secretary-treasurer's to $30,000.

The union's safety director, Joseph Leonard, told the delegates bluntly that longshoremen can't depend on government agencies to look after their on-the-job safety.

"Each day brings new safety hazards, new chemicals, new cargo equipment and packaging, new medical problems brought to light through research," Leonard said. "If we waited for government agencies to catch up with the new technology, we would wait too long for our members' safety."

Calling for strong safety clauses and joint labor-management safety committees in each port contract, Leonard reminded the delegates: "Management pays the compensation costs, but labor pays with their blood and bodies."

All officers were re-elected without opposition. Former ILA Pres. William V. Bradley, who had earlier announced he would seek to regain the ILA's top office, withdrew as a candidate shortly before the convention opened.

There was harmony—literally—on the closing afternoon of the convention.

Delegates had gathered to await the arrival of Humphrey. There was no further business to be acted on. A piano player went through a medley of tunes. Gleason hummed audibly into the microphone.

The Lighter Side

"Hey, Teddy, give us a song," a delegate called out.

He did, and the impromptu entertainment was on. A New York longshoreman followed with a sentimental song in Italian. The audience burst into applause. A Negro baritone was called back for encores. He stopped in the middle of a song when the Vice President's party was heard entering the hotel. but a secret service agent brought a message asking him to please continue. And not until he had finished did Humphrey enter and touch off a new round of cheers.

After the Vice President spoke, a "little gift" was unveiled by Gleason.

An astonished Humphrey exclaimed: "By cracky, a grandfather's clock for granddad."

And the ILA moved into its 76th year.

Ex-Goodrich Worker Named URW Counsel

60 Cents in Wage Increases Won In Pact at Almaden Grape Ranch

hour now, rising by 10 cents a year to $2 in the third contract year—the first $2 minimum for farm workers in any agreement, the union said.

● Overtime provisions, three paid holidays, an annual paid vacation equal to 2 percent of hours worked, three days funeral leave for a death in the family, jury duty pay, a full union shop, checkoff of union dues and UFWOC credit union deductions.

Major features of the new contract are a union hiring hall and a special benefit fund into which the employer has agreed to put 10 cents an hour per worker for health, welfare and hospitalization expenses.

Workers in the bargaining unit also are assured at least four hours' pay when called in and payment for "down" time when work is halted because of equipment failure.

The United Farm Workers Organizing Committee announced an end to the nationwide boycott of Perelli-Minetti grapes and other produce. The company has signed an agreement recognizing the union as bargaining agent for field workers.

UFWOC Chairman Cesar Chavez announced that the settlement was reached within three weeks after the union won exclusive bargaining rights in a cardcheck election conducted by the State Dept. of Industrial Relations.

The union negotiating committee was headed by UFWOC Vice Pres. Dolores Huerta with Irwin L. De-Shetler, assistant AFL-CIO regional director in Los Angeles, assisting.

The Almaden settlement came after the trail-blazing contract and an arbitration award covering 2,700 workers at California ranches of the DiGiorgio Corp., followed by other pacts with Schenley Industries and the bottlers of Christian Brothers wines and Novitiate wines.

Despite this progress, many growers in the Delano area and in Texas' Rio Grande Valley refuse to recognize the union or agree to an election. The union's only weapon in such cases is the strike, picket line and consumer boycott, Chavez said.

Nevertheless, field workers have given a warm response to the union's struggle to improve their conditions. A delegation from the big King ranch of DiGiorgio near Arven, Calif., came to Delano to present the union with $1,003 in cash, a goodwill offering of the workers out of backpay they collected from the arbitration award.

Further encouragement came in the announcement that the Perelli-Minetti Co., major West Coast grower, has signed an agreement to recognize UFWOC as exclusive bargaining agent for all its field workers. The signing followed several months of negotiation, Chavez said.

Next on the union agenda are preparations for representation elections for employes of the Gallo winery, said to be among the world's largest; the Paul Masson winery, that of Franzia Wines, and those of several smaller firms.

Union picket lines and consumer boycotts are still in effect in Texas, where LaCasita Farms and other growers continue to refuse union recognition or an election, the union reported.

Farm Union Dedicates Co-op Service Station

Delano, Calif.—Union members for 150 miles around drove here to help the United Farm Workers Organizing Committee celebrate a major milestone in its history—dedication of the first building owned by the union.

A representative of every union and of every civic group present stepped forward to put an adobe brick in the cornerstone of an auto service co-op on land the union owns about a mile out of town.

Farm workers themselves volunteered to help on the foundation and the red concrete floor under the supervision of Richard Chavez, a Carpenters' union member who gave up a paying job to speed construction of the service station, office and restrooms. Field workers who assist get credit for their time, just as if they had been on a UFWOC picket line.

Chavez is a brother of UFWOC Dir. Cesar Chavez, who spoke briefly, as did AFL-CIO Dir. of Organization William L. Kircher. Town businessmen are still hostile to the union, so concrete had to be trucked from a supplier 16 miles away, guests were told.

The celebration opened with a field Mass offered by the Rev. William Lewers, professor of law at Notre Dame University who leaves for Chile soon to direct a seminary for the Holy Cross fathers. It was followed by a rally of 3,500 field workers at the Kern County fair grounds in Bakersfield to demonstrate support for UFWOC efforts to organize the Giumarra Co., major supplier of fresh grapes to food chains like Safeway, Kroger, Food Fair and A & P. Management so far has refused to meet with the union.

In NLRB's Busiest Year:

AFL-CIO Affiliates Win 58% of Vote

The National Labor Relations Board received more new business and disposed of more old business in fiscal 1966 than in any other year in its history, it said in its 31st annual report.

Its total intake of 28,993 new cases established an all-time record: 15,933 unfair labor practice charges and 12,620 representation election petitions, plus 440 related petitions.

For the fourth successive year the NLRB conducted a record number of representation elections—8,103. AFL-CIO unions played a major role in establishing the record figures. They were on the ballot in 5,463 elections and won 3,170, or 58 percent.

The federation's Dept. of Organization reported that election participation and election victories in fiscal 1966 were at the highest level in AFL-CIO history, with the percentage of victories equaled only once before—in 1959.

The number of employes in bargaining units for which AFL-CIO unions received NLRB certification —244,877—was the highest for any full report year since merger in 1955.

The statistics continue to reflect the rising volume of organizing activity by AFL-CIO unions, and the fourth successive record-breaking year, Organization Dir. William L. Kircher said.

The 1966 report showed that affiliated unions filed 6,636 representation petitions—an increase of 334 over 1965, which had also set a new high mark, as had 1964.

'Unfair' Charges Rise

For the ninth year in a row, the unfair practice charges constituted a majority of new cases received: 15,993, or 55 percent of the total received in the year ended June 30, 1966—triple the number of charges filed only 10 years earlier.

The report noted that while most employers and unions observe the law peaceably the NLRB "still encounters pockets of resistance" to the law, enacted in 1935 to guarantee the right of workers to form unions and bargain collectively with their employers.

For the first time in several years, the number of unfair practice charges filed against employers declined, and those against unions increased. Those against employers dropped from 10,931 to 10,902; those against unions rose from 4,813 to 4,941.

While a record number of new cases flooded in, NLRB members and the staff were closing out a record-breaking total of pending cases—28,504 cases closed, including 15,587 unfair labor practice cases and 12,917 election cases, the report related.

Other highlights of the report:

- Election petitions set another record with 12,620 filed, a gain of 631 over fiscal 1965.
- The load of cases pending increased about 5.5 percent—from 8,911 to 9,400 at year's end—despite the record-breaking disposition of old business. These included 6,658 charges of unfair practices and 2,707 union representation cases.
- Trial examiners issued 867 decisions, a decrease of eight from the 1965 total. Regional offices settled 4,261 cases without need for trial examiner decisions, a gain of more than 11 percent.
- Despite the higher number of charges filed, median time required from filing of charge to complaint issuance decreased from 59 to 58 days.
- Amounts of back pay collected for employes also broke all previous records — $8.9 million. Some $4.5 million of this went to Kohler Co. employes, but the balance going to other workers also constituted a new record.
- NLRB members issued 1,586 decisions compared with 1,616 the year before. Regional directors issued 2,358 decisions, an increase of nearly 500.

Enforcement was directed in whole or in part in 79 percent of NLRB orders appealed to the federal courts.

Methodist Group Backs Hospital Strikers' Rights

Cleveland, O.—Methodist churchmen called on trustees of St. Luke's Hospital, a Methodist institution, to recognize the right of 400 striking employes to decide for themselves if they want union representation.

Delegates to the Northeast Ohio Conference of the church, meeting at Lakeside, O., voted 458-183 to urge St. Luke's trustees to ask the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service, or some similar agency acceptable to both sides, to help settle the strike of nurses' aides and other non-professional employes.

The strike, sanctioned by Building Service Employes Local 47, is in its 16th week.

The conference reaffirmed belief in the principle of collective bargaining outlined in the Methodist Discipline of 1964 as a "fair and just way of arriving at equitable wages, good working conditions and adequate health, vacation, insurance and retirement benefits."

It pledged aid in helping secure passage of legislation needed to "govern the relationship between union labor and non-profit hospitals." Ohio has no such law now.

The delegates voted to reaffirm a paragraph in the 1964 Methodist statement on church discipline declaring:

"We stand for the right of employes and employers alike to organize for collective bargaining, protection of both in the exercise of their right, the responsibility of both to bargain in good faith, and the obligation of both to work for the public good."

Hospital employes walked out Apr. 12 when trustees refused to recognize Local 47 or agree to a representation election. They have been picketing since that date.

In a newspaper advertisement July 24, the Cleveland AFL-CIO executive board directed an "appeal to the conscience of Cleveland and the trustees" to recognize the union and bargain with it after a secret ballot election.

The Cleveland Press noted in an editorial that trustees of Sunny Acres Hospital recently recognized the State, County & Municipal Employes after a strike.

Paper Industry Unions Press Merger Pact

work closely in the field of organization, Phillips and Tonelli said, adding that "wasteful practices and duplicated efforts can be eliminated not only in the interest of economy but also to serve the membership" better.

Merger talks began last year in the office of AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany. Merger of the two unions would result in creation of a 345,000-member organization, the announcement noted.

Phillips recalled that the UPP itself grew out of the 1957 merger of the Paper Makers, of the former AFL, and the Paperworkers, of the former CIO.

The merger proposals call for a new 23-member executive board with a president, executive vice president, treasurer and 10 vice presidents chosen from Pulp-Sulphite and an executive vice president, secretary and eight vice presidents from UPP. Phillips would be named president emeritus.

Ten area offices would be in the U.S. and two in Canada under the proposal, each with a staff and a vice president-director. The remaining six vice presidents would be designated either as department heads or assistant area directors.

Copper Strike Coordinating Body Formed

Denver—A national strike coordinating committee was established here by representatives of 20 unions with 37,000 members on strike against eight big copper, lead, zinc and silver firms.

The new top-level body was authorized to coordinate strike activities and help achieve the goals of the striking unions. They are the Steelworkers, Machinists, Operating Engineers, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Auto Workers, Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, Sheet Metal Workers, Iron Workers, Carpenters, Painters, Boilermakers, Bricklayers, Molders, Plumbers & Pipe-fitters, Blacksmiths, Teamsters, Railroad Trainmen, Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen, Railway Carmen, and the Office & Professional Employes.

Committee members agreed that no picketing lines will be withdrawn until a settlement satisfactory to every affected union is reached. Major unsettled issues that led to the July 15 walkout were wages, pensions and a cost-of-living escalator provision.

No appreciable progress was reported in negotiations that followed the strike. Companies involved are the Anaconda Co., Kennecott Copper Corp., Phelps Dodge Corp., American Smelting & Refining Co., Magma Copper Co., Inspiration Consolidated Copper Co., U.S. Metals Co. and Miami Copper Co.

Unionist Who 'Stood Up' Ordered Restored to Job

A worker who stands up to reply to a plant manager's anti-union speech at a "captive audience" meeting of employes cannot be fired for protesting when he's told to sit down.

That's the finding of a National Labor Relations Board panel—Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and Members Gerald A. Brown and Howard Jenkins, Jr.—in a case involving the Boaz Spinning Co., Boaz, Ala., and the Textile Workers Union of America.

On July 13, 1966, during a TWUA organizing drive, Boaz Mgr. Albert Pride gathered the employes to hear his attack on the union. He asked for questions when he finished his harangue, and R. C. Alexander, an employe, stood up.

"I want to tell you what the union can do," Alexander said. Pride ordered him to sit down. Alexander did, but then got to his feet again and made a remark comparing Pride with Cuban dictator Fidel Castro. Pride told him he was fired.

TWUA filed a complaint with the NLRB. Earlier this year, trial Examiner Eugene F. Frey upheld the firing.

In reversing this ruling, the board panel said that since Pride had opened the meeting to questions, he "unreasonably interfered" with Alexander's rights under the National Labor Relations Act "by ordering him to refrain from expressing his pro-union views, and then discharging him" for protesting the order.

House Panel to Probe Auto Insurance Abuses

The House Judiciary Committee laid the groundwork for a probe of the automobile insurance industry, including charges of discriminatory rates, arbitrary cancellations of policies and ineffective state regulation.

Rep. Emanuel Celler (D-N.Y.), chairman of both the full committee and its Antitrust subcommittee, ordered a 60-day staff study as a first step. Full public hearings are expected thereafter.

The investigation had been sought by Rep. Peter W. Rodino, Jr. (D-N.J.), and Rep. William T. Cahill (R-N.J.) in a joint letter to Celler. The bipartisan backing was underscored by Rep. William M. McCulloch (R-O.), ranking Republican on the committee, who joined with Celler and the two New Jersey congressmen at a news conference.

The AFL-CIO Executive Council early this year urged Congress to investigate auto insurance abuses and asked that the entire insurance industry be brought under federal regulation.

Celler said complaints that have poured in to the committee "show that a broad cross-section of the American people is gravely disturbed with practices of the automobile insurance industry."

He noted that Congress exempted the insurance industry from anti-trust laws some 20 years ago, leaving regulation to the states—and "very little has been done by Congress to ascertain how effectively the states have exercised this authority."

Rodino and Cahill noted that present rate practices often discriminate against motorists because of age, sex, race, occupation and economic background, "irrespective of individual driving records."

Investment Gains Ignored

Most state regulatory agencies, they charged, do not count the profits auto insurance firms make on investments of premium money in determining insurance rates.

One company's instructions to its agents, quoted at the news conference, required home office approval in writing before policies could be written for various categories.

The list included sailors, longshoremen, applicants in the entertainment or theatrical business, applicants who speak poor English, cafe society set, women living alone or with girl friends and the physically handicapped.

AIFLD Projects Involved:

House Passes Hike In Latin Aid Fund

The House approved a labor-backed bill to increase U.S. participation in the Inter-American Development Bank's Fund for Special Operations—a people-to-people low-cost loan program designed to improve living conditions in Latin America.

It passed the bill, 275-122, after defeating a motion to cut the U.S. contribution from the $300 million a year sought by Pres. Johnson to the current level of $250 million. The cutback was beaten, 217-185.

Participating Latin American nations have already agreed to increase their own contributions by 100 percent.

In a letter to all congressmen, AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller strongly urged approval of the increase and noted that 90 percent of the goods and services financed through U.S. funds are purchased in the United States.

He said the legislation was of particular importance to the AFL-CIO-supported American Institute for Free Labor Development which utilizes the funds for low-cost housing, vocational training schools and similar projects to bring "the fruits of the Alliance for Progress to the grassroots in Latin America."

The House economy bloc won a victory, however, by knocking out funds to complete planning of the Dickey-Lincoln hydroelectric power project on the St. John River in Maine.

The $1.6 million which would have completed planning for the project was deleted from a $4.5 billion public works appropriations bill by a 233-169 vote.

A Senate subcommittee approved a labor-backed bill that would strengthen the powers of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission to crack down on job discrimination against Negroes.

It would give the commission powers similar to that of the National Labor Relations Board, enabling it to issue cease-and-desist orders enforceable in federal courts. The subcommittee, headed by Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D-Pa.) sent the bill to the full Labor Committee.

Rep. Frank Thompson, Jr. (D-N.J.), whose House Labor subcommittee will open major hearings Aug. 1 on improvements in NLRB procedures and remedies for unfair labor practices, has introduced a bill that will be considered during the hearings.

It would speed up processing of discharge cases by delegating authority to trial examiners to decide cases, with review by the NLRB only when it chooses to intervene. It would require immediate reinstatement of workers pending court review except "good cause" can be shown for delaying action. The board would also be empowered to loan money to fired workers pending their reinstatement.

The Senate Labor Committee had before it a bill banning job discrimination because of age which has been approved by a subcommittee.

The AFL-CIO wired committee members urging them to approve the bill and to extend it to airline stewardesses "in the interest of justice and fair treatment." Some airlines ground stewardesses as "too old" at age 35.

Meany Renews Red Cross Role

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has accepted appointment for the third time as national vice chairman for labor of the Red Cross campaign for members and funds, to be held next year.

Meany was national vice chairman for labor during the 1962 and 1967 campaigns. In addition, he is serving his fourth term as a member of the volunteer ABC board of governors.

Labor Board Urged to Impose Back Pay on Defiant Companies

The National Labor Relations Board has the authority—and should use it to order a law-defying employer to pay his workers wages and fringe benefits they would have received except for management's refusal to bargain in good faith with a legally certified union.

This belief was expressed by the AFL-CIO in written and oral arguments presented at a special hearing.

Once an employer has been found guilty of refusal to bargain, the NLRB should order him to reimburse his workers for their losses, leaving the exact amount for determination at a supplemental hearing, as it does in the case of workers fired for engaging in union activities, the federation advised.

The five-member NLRB met July 12 and 13 to hear the views of labor and management representatives on whether or not the board has the power to remedy unlawful refusals to bargain and, if so, how the remedy should be calculated.

The board invited argument by unions and employers involved in four recent cases awaiting board rulings and from the AFL-CIO, the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, the National Association of Retail Merchants, the unaffiliated Teamsters, the National Association of Manufacturers, the NAACP Legal Defense & Educational Fund, Inc., and the Preston Products Co.

The four undecided cases involve Zinke's Foods, Inc., Beloit, Wis., and Retail Clerks Local 1401; Ex-Cello-O Corp., Elwood, Ind., and the Auto Workers; Herman Wilson Lumber Co., Monticello, Ark., and the Woodworkers; and Rasco Corp., Olympia, Wash., and RCIA Local 309.

In each case a board examiner ruled that the employer had refused to bargain in good faith.

Examiners Josephine Klein in the Zinke case and Owsley Vose in the Ex-Cell-O case recommended, in addition to the usual order to bargain, that the NLRB direct payment of retroactive compensation to workers who lost by employers' stalling.

AFL-CIO Gen. Counsel J. Albert Woll summarized the federation's position as follows.

- The present system tempts the rational man to break the law because both common sense and available data indicate that immediate collective bargaining "probably will result in a contract which raises an employer's wage bill."
- Defiance will "almost surely lead" to a delay of two or more years during which there will be no bargaining.
- This delay "provides the employer with a short-term saving if that is his desire and inevitably results in a weakening of the employes' desire for union representation."
- There is much for the employer to gain, and little if anything except lawyers' fees for him to lose if he refuses to start bargaining after a union wins an election and is certified to bargain.
- The board, in addition to requiring compensation for aggrieved employes, should also take steps to accord the union rights "over and above those it would have enjoyed had bargaining begun at the point the law requires."
- Illegal delay weakens the union, and it is the board's duty to insure that the union has a fair chance to overcome this disability.

The AFL-CIO brief made these additional points:

- Court rulings show that the law regards compensatory relief as appropriate for the victim of illegal conduct who has been deprived of a chance for an opportunity having economic value.
- The opportunity to bargain collectively is akin to the opportunity to earn profits in business free from illegal restraints, or to earn a living free from the perils caused by the negligent acts of another.

Illegal acts of an employer that impair this right should, therefore, be compensated in the same way and to the same extent as other acts depriving a person of such rights, Woll declared. He was joined in the brief by Robert C. Mayer, Laurence Gold, and Thomas E. Harris, associate general counsel for the AFL-CIO.

Board Holds Employer Responsible For Community's Anti-Union Drive

The National Labor Relations Board has ruled that businessmen of Eloy, Ariz., were jointly responsible with Henry I. Siegel, Inc., big clothing manufacturer, for making a fair representation election impossible in the community's major business enterprise.

The board voided a 1965 election lost by the Clothing Workers and ordered Siegel to bargain with the ACWA on contract terms, to stop making threats to turn the plant into a warehouse, and to eliminate from the company insurance plan a clause reading "All non-union, non-New York employes are eligible to participate in this plan."

The decision disagreed with a trial examiner's finding that Siegel was not responsible for a "beat the union" campaign launched by Eloy businessmen and was not obliged to disavow it. The NLRB ruled that the Siegel firm knew about the campaign and not only failed to disassociate itself from it, but actually took up and emphasized the theme that a union victory would turn the plant into a warehouse.

In its decision the board said "We do not quarrel with the examiner's view that Eloy businessmen sought to advance their own," rather than the management's, interests by combating the union.

What existed in Eloy, it concluded, was "an overlap of financial interests" which led both the management and the "citizens' committee" to "seek the same goal by the same means."

The case is "one of a class" combining the economic relationship of town and company with both groups engaging in parallel antiunion campaigns, the board observed, adding that the community's was "the more flagrant and coercive."

Siegel had an obligation, the board said, to "disassociate itself clearly from certain aspects of the community campaign; its failure to do so and its use of similar and sometimes identical appeals warrants a finding that it adopted and affirmed that campaign."

Examiner Upheld

The board agreed with Examiner Wallace E. Royster that another election would not remedy the unfair practices committed by management and its business friends. It ruled that the union had been designated as bargaining representative by 113 of the 182 employes in the bargaining unit at the time of the election, and that management destroyed the majority by threats that it would go out of business.

Siegel is a New York-based firm long on the union's "Do Not Patronize" list for clothing sold under the H.I.S. brand.

The Eloy plant was conceived in 1958 when businessmen formed the Eloy Development Corp., sold stock and accumulated $55,000 to make a down payment on 40 acres of land. With the aid of "some Arizona state officials," negotiations were undertaken with Siegel, who leased the plant and occupied it in 1964, according to the examiner.

The union began organizing in 1965, and local businessmen interested in the Development Corp. launched their anti-union campaign. This included the distribution of 1,500 handbill and a newspaper advertisement warning that the plant might become a warehouse if unionized, and reciting charges of violence elsewhere in Arizona. The company president made a speech opposing the union and four company floorladies spoke of reprisals if the union won, the board reported. It did not rule on the legality of the speech but found the "reprisal" talks unlawful.

Canada Shopcrafts Sign 3-Year Pact

Montreal — Canada's shopcraft unions and the nation's railroads prepared to sign a new three-year agreement here incorporating an arbitration board's award that union leaders termed "disappointing."

The award, which is binding, goes back to Jan. 1, 1966. From that date, it provides for a series of wage increases totaling 24 per cent, with the final 6 percent effective Jan. 1, 1968. The other increments, at 6 month intervals, are 4, 7, and 3 percent.

Additional increases for mechanics will bring the total for skilled workers to 28 percent. The award also includes improvements in bereavement leave, job stabilization, health-welfare, upgrading of certain mechanics, and rules changes.

Asks Aid for Riot Victims:

Meany Backs Stand Of Negro Leadership

majority" of whom oppose the rioting.

This does not mean, the Negro leaders stressed, that Negroes "should submit tamely to joblessness, inadequate housing, poor schooling, insult, humiliation and attack. It does require a redoubling of efforts through legitimate means to end these wrongs and disabilities."

Both the leadership statement and Meany's response bitterly criticized the House for having turned down a bill for a federal rat-control program.

It showed "an incredible indifference to hardships of the ghetto dwellers," the Negro leaders said.

And Meany denounced "the cheap humor and complete stupidity" shown by the congressmen who voted to kill the bill.

The full text of Meany's telegram to Randolph follows:

"The sober, thought-provoking statement issued by you, Mr. Wilkins, Mr. Young and Dr. King fully merits the support of all Americans. Let me assure you it is the position of the AFL-CIO.

"We will continue to push, with all the vigor at our command, for the adoption of legislation to meet the problems you outlined—to eliminate from the American scene disease, slums, unemployment, poor educational facilities and above all else, discrimination.

"As an item of first priority, America must aid the innocent victims of the rioters. Certainly they deserve, at the very least, the same help the government gives the victims of natural disasters. We urge Congress, as an immediate matter, to amend the necessary laws to give them this assistance.

"We say to the Congress: Now is not the time for the cheap humor and complete stupidity shown by those members of the House of Representatives who voted to kill the rat-control bill. Nor is now the time for a minority of the Senate Judiciary Committee to engage in a racially-inspired attack on the nomination of Thurgood Marshall to the United States Supreme Court. Now is the time for action and statesmanship by passing the poverty, housing, education and civil rights bills proposed by Pres. Johnson and restoring full funding for the Model Cities and rent supplement bills passed last year.

"My warm congratulations to you and your colleagues on a courageous, sensible statement."

Congressional Participation Urged for D.C.

The people of the District of Columbia "certainly are justified" in their desire for congressional representation, AFL-CIO Legislative Rep. F. Howard McGuigan told the House Judiciary Committee.

McGuigan spelled out for the committee organized labor's support for a proposed constitutional amendment which would give the District at least one representative in Congress.

"Here in this city whose population exceeds 800,000 people, citizens are deprived of one of the basic rights of citizenship, the right to elect representatives who share the responsibilities of government," he said.

"These citizens are subject to the responsibility of paying their taxes to the federal government. Certainly they are entitled to the privilege of voting for a representative who will participate in setting taxes and passing laws under which our federal government operates.

"Let me remind you also of the inequity in a congressional representation system which entitles six states with less population than the District of Columbia to have two congressmen each and which entitles five states with less population than the District of Columbia to have one representative in Congress."

Fire Fighters Urge Federal Protection

The Fire Fighters urged Pres. Johnson to support a bill now in Congress to make it a federal offense to interfere with fire fighters in the performance of their duties.

Fire Fighters Pres. William D. Buck and Vice Pres. Jack Bostick, head of the union's legislative committee, pointed out that some fire fighters have been killed during recent large-city riots, while others have been injured by gunfire and rocks.

This is a situation that "cannot be tolerated in our society" they said in letters to the President, Senators Mike Mansfield (D-Mont.) and Everett Dirksen (R-Ill.), House Speaker John McCormack (D-Mass.) and Representatives Carl Albert (D-Okla.) and Gerald Ford (R-Mich).

It's Bye-Bye Blackbirds, But Don't Bother the Rats

Federal funds should be used to curb blackbirds which eat farmers' crops, but not to eradicate rats which infest city slums, in the opinion of Rep. Delbert L. Latta (R-O.).

The Ohio Republican was floor leader of opponents of the rat control bill. He was asked during the debate—by Rep. Charles S. Joelson (D-N.J.)—how he could oppose rat control when he had earlier complained to an appropriations subcommittee that not enough federal funds were being spent on blackbird control.

Latta's reply: "Our American farmers are losing some $58 million a year in crops due to blackbird damage."

Joelson retorted grimly: "A billion dollars a year is being lost through rat damage."

But the House, which has supported funds to curb blackbirds, voted 207-176 not to take up the bill for rat control.

Pres. Johnson termed the House action "a cruel blow to the poor children of America." He urged the House to reverse its action, declaring:

"Every year, thousands of those children, many of them babies, are bitten by rats in their homes and tenements. Some are killed, many are disfigured for life."

Text of Statement by Negro Leaders

Following is the text of the statement issued by four prominent Negro leaders, A. Philip Randolph, Roy Wilkins, Whitney Young and Martin Luther King:

Developments in Newark, Detroit and other strife-torn cities make it clear that the primary victims of the riots are the Negro citizens. That they have grave grievances of long standing cannot be denied or minimized. That the riots have not contributed in any substantial measure to the eradication of these just complaints is by now obvious to all.

We are confident that the overwhelming majority of the Negro community joins us in opposition to violence in the streets. Who is without the necessities of life when the neighborhood stores are destroyed and looted? Whose children are without milk because deliveries cannot be made? Who loses wages because of a breakdown of transportation or destruction of the place of employment? Who are the dead, the injured and the imprisoned? It is the Negroes who pay and pay and pay, whether or not they are individually involved in the rioting. And for what?

Killing, arson, looting are criminal acts and should be dealt with as such. Equally guilty are those who incite, provoke and call specifically for such action. There is no injustice which justifies the present destruction of the Negro community and its people.

We who have fought so long and so hard to achieve justice for all Americans have consistently opposed violence as a means of redress. Riots have proved ineffective, disruptive and highly damaging to the Negro population, to the civil rights cause, and to the entire nation.

We call upon Negro citizens throughout the nation to forego the temptation to disregard the law. This does not mean that we should submit tamely to joblessness, inadequate housing, poor schooling, insult, humiliation and attack. It does require a redoubling of efforts through legitimate means to end these wrongs and disabilities.

We appeal not only to black Americans, but also to our fellow white citizens who are not blameless. The disabilities imposed upon Negro citizens are a century old. They remain because the white citizenry in general supports these restrictions.

The 90th Congress has exhibited an incredible indifference to hardships of ghetto dwellers. Only last week the House defeated a rat-control bill which would have enabled the cities to get rid of the rats which infest the slums.

And finally we support Pres. Johnson's call "upon all our people, black and white alike, in our cities to join in a determined program to maintain law and order, to condemn and to combat lawlessness in all its forms, and firmly to show by word and by deed that riots, looting and public disorder will just not be tolerated."

No one benefits under mob law. Let's end it now!

AFL-CIO Stresses Cities Crisis

neighborhood youth corps projects and special programs such as the training of trade unionists in the Appalachian region, in New England and in Pennsylvania "for active service in the war on poverty."

He praised the "courage and imagination" of OEO Dir. Sargent Shriver, spoke out strongly against proposals to dismember "the one federal agency that clearly speaks for the poor within the government," and told the committee:

"The important fact is that the anti-poverty effort is reaching the poor. If more is to be done, more money is essential. The proven programs should be extended. New programs should be developed to meet unmet needs. The Administration's request for $2.06 billion represents a small step forward. But it is not enough. In the face of 32 million persons living below the poverty level, this amount is woefully inadequate. The great need is to press the war on poverty with greater urgency on all fronts."

At Senate hearings, Biemiller denounced as a "cruel hoax" Republican proposals to encourage home ownership by low-income families through subsidizing part of the interest on homes built and sold by private enterprise.

He told Sen. Charles H. Percy (R-Ill.), chief sponsor of the plan, that he didn't question his good intentions. But he said few if any of the poor would be able to buy such homes, the "sweat equity" which contemplates poor families helping to build the homes they buy is unworkable and the money available for housing could be put to better use.

"We have already seen the House cut the funds for model cities from $400 million back to $150 million and eliminate entirely the funds for rent supplements," Biemiller said.

"Let the new friends of homes for lower income families first help us to finance existing programs as an evidence of good faith instead of voting to cut appropriations for them." After that, it would be in order to consider new home-owning plans.

Biemiller urged the Senate to pass the rat control bill the House refused to take up. He endorsed Administration proposals for expansion of Federal Housing Authority insurance programs, but strongly protested higher interest rates proposed for college housing loans and FHA multi-family mortgage insurance programs.

Stressing the need to rehabilitate the nation's cities, Biemiller said city-dwellers face death "by the diseases of poverty as surely as by the violence of riots."

The government's role in meeting the crisis of the cities, he urged, should be "to provide practical help so that people may find jobs and be trained for them, and get to them more easily, so that people may acquire decent homes in which to raise their families, and so that people can have the kind of environment and recreational opportunities that make life in these urban areas really worth living."

The alternative, he warned, is "grinding poverty or dreary ghettos or abiding terror."

Raftery Hits Guidelines on Billboard Advertising

Painters Pres. S. Frank Raftery accused the Commerce Dept. of "unfair" restrictions on billboard advertising under the Highway Beautification Act.

Raftery told a Senate subcommittee that restrictive guidelines issued by the Commerce Dept. "without question were in conflict with the expressed intent of Congress."

EEOC Revises Forms On Minority Job Data

The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission has made public requirements and regulations for reporting on minority participation in labor unions and in apprenticeship programs.

Separate forms will be distributed this fall. The apprenticeship form, co-sponsored by the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Apprenticeship & Training, must be filed by Sept. 30. The Union Labor Report must be turned in by Nov. 30.

The forms have been revised and improved upon since hearings at which the AFL-CIO protested that some of the original questions were unclear and unnecessary.

Form EEO-3 must be filed by local unions covered by the Civil Rights Act of 1964 with more than 100 members and by so-called "referral unions," or those which have hiring halls or referral arrangements with employers, as well as unions which have contracted to supply temporary employes or those hired for a specified job or period.

The information sought includes whether the membership numbers specified minority groups and women; the reasons for their exclusion where it exists; whether the local is segregated; a breakdown of membership, applicants for membership and applicants for referral to jobs by sex and minority membership, and whether contracts call for separate job classifications or separate seniority lines based on race, color or sex.

Apprenticeship records must be filed on Form EEO-2 by any employer with 50 or more workers and any union with a hiring hall or 50 or more members.

The Civil Rights Act requires them to maintain a list of all applicants for apprenticeship, including the applicant's sex and whether he is "Negro," "Spanish American," "Oriental, "American Indian" or "Others."

War Tax Backed 'With Reservations'

Meany Says 'Ability To Pay' is Key

By Duane Emme

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany expressed labor's support—with "certain reservations"—for Pres. Johnson's tax increase proposal to meet the costs of the Viet Nam war.

Meany agreed with the President's "sound concept that all America — not just her armed forces — must share in the sacrifice needed to defend freedom in Viet Nam."

But, he said, "sacrifice needs to be based on ability to sacrifice. Certainly some sectors of our economy can afford far more in tax increases and thus in sacrifice than others."

Meany added, that while the President had recognized "to a degree" the principle of ability to pay, "we do have certain reservations about some aspects" of the war tax plan. He said the federation would present its full views to Congress following a detailed study of the proposal.

He asserted that labor is "firmly convinced" the nation can meet its Viet Nam obligations "without halting or curtailing the vital domestic social reform programs which the Johnson Administration has launched."

The AFL-CIO, he declared, "will continue to fight for all these legislative programs—and for adequate appropriations to finance them — for they are an absolute essential to solving the manifold problems of our nation."

The President's three-point tax proposal, which he termed "the least painful way" to pay for the war and vital domestic programs, calls for:

- A temporary surcharge of 10 percent on both corporate and individual income taxes—four percentage points higher than Johnson had first proposed in a January message.
- A speed-up of corporate tax collections through steps to make all corporations current in their tax payments.
- Continuation of excise taxes into the "immediate future," postponing scheduled decreases in excise levies on automobiles and telephone service.

The President said the tax program is needed because the nation "now faces a number of hard and inescapable" facts for 1968:

Expenditures are likely to be $8.5 billion higher than the $135 billion estimated in January. Revenues are now estimated $7 billion

Social Security Measure Cleared for House Action

PRESIDENT'S ADVISORY COMMISSION on Civil Disorders hears from Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz as it begins its investigation into the cause and solutions of ghetto riots. At right foreground is Steelworkers Pres. I. W. Abel, one of the 11 commission members.

Committee Trims Hike To 12.5%

By David L. Perlman

The House Ways & Means Committee agreed on a 12.5 percent across-the-board increase in social security benefits in a whittled-down version of Pres. Johnson's legislative proposal.

The committee dumped the Administration proposal to extend medicare benefits to persons under 65 on the social security disability benefit rolls. It proposed, however, to ease the hardship for medicare beneficiaries whose doctors refuse to bill the medicare program. Patients could collect from medicare before instead of after they pay their doctor bills, under the new measure.

The committee went along with an Administration proposal to raise the ceilings on earnings of people drawing social security retirement benefits. But it imposed a tight income ceiling on eligibility for medicaid—the joint federal-state program which pays medical bills for low-income families.

The committee bill would raise the taxable wage base for social security—but not to the level sought by the Administration.

It has bipartisan sponsorship, with both Committee Chairman Wilbur D. Mills (D-Ark.) and Rep. John W. Byrnes (R-Wis.), ranking GOP member, putting their names on the bill.

House action is scheduled for mid-August, and passage is considered certain.

The bill is scheduled to reach the floor under a "no amendment rule." Opponents will have only one chance to tamper with it in the House, through a recommittal motion before the final vote. In effect,

Abel Named to Group:

White House Panel Opens Probe of Riots

Pres. Johnson drafted 11 prominent Americans to probe the outbreak of riots in Negro slum neighborhoods and seek the answer to the questions:

"Why did it happen?"

"What can be done to prevent it from happening again?"

Illinois Gov. Otto Kerner, a Democrat, is chairman of the new Special Advisory Commission on Civil Disorders. New York City Mayor John Lindsay, a Republican, is vice chairman.

Steelworkers Pres. I. W. Abel is a member of the bipartisan, biracial commission which will undertake the year-long study requested by the President.

Johnson told the commission at its first meeting that he wanted advice both on short-term measures and on long-range solutions to make the riots "only a sordid page in our history."

As the flames died down from gutted homes and businesses, both Johnson and Vice Pres. Humphrey prodded Congress to finance the Administration's programs to improve life in the cities.

"Despair and violence are bred by ignorance, discrimination, slums, poverty, disease, not enough jobs," Johnson said in a televised address to the nation.

He ripped into the majority of the House of Representatives which slashed funds for the Model Cities program by two-thirds and turned down his request "for $20 million to fight the pestilence of rats, rats which prowl in dark alleys and tenements and attack thousands of city children."

Surely, the President said, "a strong government that has spent millions to protect baby calves from worms" could afford "as much concern for baby boys and girls."

Johnson sharply condemned "the violent few" who touched off the destruction. But he condemned as well "the strange bookkeeping" of those who feel "we cannot afford

Labor Rallies Disaster Aid In Torn Cities

Labor's community services program — tested in hurricanes and strikes—is being mobilized to help the victims of riots, the "man-made disasters" that have left homes and workplaces in ruins.

In Detroit, union leaders and volunteers were organizing emergency shipments of food, milk and clothing while fires were still smouldering and snipers still being flushed out.

AFL-CIO Community Services Dir. Leo Perlis called on local community services representatives and committee chairmen in riot-ravaged cities to help meet the need for "food, shelter, clothing, medical care, legal aid, family counseling—and jobs."

Many of the victims, he said, are AFL-CIO members and their families but the "sole criterion" for help

Oklahoma 'Work' Drive Stirs Financing Uproar

Oklahoma City—Conflicting stories of the bankrolling of the unsuccessful 1964 campaign for a state "right-to-work" law have created a political uproar over a new attempt to ban the union shop in Oklahoma.

A Republican state senator, Richard Stansberry, started the furor by questioning the tax-exempt status of the Oklahoma City Chamber of Commerce. He said an official of the state "right-to-work" organization told him the chamber had donated $50,000 to the 1964 campaign.

In what local newspapers interpreted as a denial, the Oklahoma City chamber said it operated within the law and the State Chamber of Commerce said it had provided "time and people" but not organization cash for the "work" campaign.

But the board chairman of Oklahomans for the Right to Work, the group leading the 1964 campaign as well as the new one, said his organization had indeed received financial support from both the city and state chambers in 1964. He said he couldn't recall the amounts.

'Urban Coalition' Urges Attack Now on City Ills

A new "Urban Coalition" of religious, labor, business, civil rights and city government leaders called on the nation to give top priority to the "desperate condition" of the cities and the need for immediate remedies.

Four top union officials were among the founding group of 20 prominent Americans at a meeting chaired by Pittsburgh Mayor Joseph M. Barr. The group unanimously adopted a statement presented by Mayor John V. Lindsay of New York, which included a call for a federal "Emergency Work and Reconstruction program to provide new training programs and jobs for the unemployed."

The coalition announced that it will convene, later this month, a broad-based conference intended to bring together 1,000 leaders of American life in a concerted attack on city problems.

Private enterprise, as well as government, "must directly and vigorously involve itself in the crisis of

White House Board Pushes Rail Mediation

The five-member Presidential rail mediation board has launched "intensive" efforts to resolve the protracted wage dispute between six shopcraft unions and the nation's railroads.

The panel took up its mediating role after a week's negotiations between the parties produced "no appreciable progress" toward a settlement, according to Vice Pres. Thomas Ramsey of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, chief union negotiator.

Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.), chairman of the board, would not comment on reports of the negotiations received during a two-and-a-half hour meeting of the panel with union and carrier negotiators.

He said, however, that "I'm very encouraged in my feeling that we might be able to reach an agreement in 30 days. Both sides want to reach an agreement."

The law which created the board calls for 30 days of mediation, or until Aug. 16. If no settlement is reached in that time, the board will then hold formal hearings and issue settlement recommendations at the end of another 30 days.

If after a third 30-day period there is still no settlement, the board's recommendations will be imposed.

Board members, in addition to Morse, are AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, former Sen. Leverett Saltonstall (R-Mass.); Fred Kappel, retired head of American Telephone & Telegraph Co., and Theodore Kheel, a New York mediator.

Unions involved in the dispute, besides the IBEW, are the Railway Carmen, Machinists, Boilermakers, Sheet Metal Workers and Firemen & Oilers. They bargain jointly through the AFL-CIO Railway Employes' Dept.

THE OLD WELCOMES THE NEW: Arthur Rosenstock (left) of New York, who declined to run for a fifth two-year term as unpaid president of the Newspaper Guild, hands over the gavel to his successor, James B. Woods of St. Louis, following the latter's unanimous election at the ANG convention in Ottawa, Ont. Woods is state editor of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch; Rosenstock is New York Post librarian. Court Upholds Bylaw On Union Candidates

New York—The secretary of labor does not have the power under the Landrum-Griffin Act to tell unions what qualifications they can set up for candidates for paid offices, the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals here ruled.

"We must keep in mind," said the opinion written by Judge Paul R. Hays, "that the act did not purport to take away from labor unions the governance of their own internal affairs and hand that governance over either to the courts or to the secretary of labor."

Involved was a bylaw of Motel & Club Employes Local 6, a unit of the Hotel & Restaurant Employes, restricting candidacies for paid office to members who had served at least a year on the executive board or in the assembly.

Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz had filed suit in U.S. District Court to have an election set aside and asked an injunction to prevent the local from enforcing the bylaw. A group of insurgent members had complained that it tended to perpetuate incumbents in office.

District Judge Inzer B. Wyatt found the bylaw restrictive and unreasonable because it would allow only about 3 percent of the union's 26,000 members to run for office. He refused to set aside the election on the ground that there had been no evidence of fraud, but enjoined the use of the bylaw in future elections.

The appellate court wiped out the injunction, and found the bylaw reasonable.

"We are persuaded in the present case the secretary has trespassed upon an area of union governance which is left by the statute to the union's decision," it added.

'Not Surprising'

Local 6 has assets of more than $2.3 million as well as welfare, medical and pension funds with assets totaling more than $30 million. The opinion held that it is not obvious that every union must permit inexperienced or untrained rank-and-file members to administer its affairs.

"It does not seem to us," Hays wrote, "to be surprising that the union should hesitate to permit a cook or a waiter or a dishwasher, without any training or experience in the management of union affairs, to take on responsibility for the complex and difficult problems of administration of this union."

Judges Wilfred Feinberg and Edward J. Dimock concurred in the opinion.

The Justice Dept., it is expected, will appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court.

A number of other unions have comparable bylaws. Among them is the National Maritime Union, against which the Labor Dept. has filed a similar suit.

CONVENTION

San Juan, P. R.—The annual convention of the Puerto Rico AFL-CIO will be held Dec. 2-3 in the Hotel San Juan Darlington here.

Building Trades Project To Aid 160 D.C. Youths

About 160 disadvantaged youths will be given preparation for skilled construction jobs under a program sponsored by the Greater Washington, D.C., AFL-CIO and the Washington Building & Construction Trades Council.

Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz announced a $7,500 grant in federal funds to prepare detailed plans for the project, which will offer supervised work experience in low-income housing renovation and thus will yield benefits in two directions. A total of $300,000 to $400,000 in Manpower Development & Training Act funds will be spent over the first year, it is expected.

The trainees will be from 17 to 21 years old and will be recruited from areas in which the housing is to be restored.

Program Outlined

Their first six weeks, during which they will be paid a minimum of $56 a week, will involve a combination of motivation development, remedial education, skill development and work shop activity.

Efforts will be made to determine and develop a facility for a particular trade, but some sessions will include orientation to the building trades in general with discussions on trade unionism and apprenticeships.

The second phase, lasting 22 weeks, will include work experience in various crafts under the tutelage of union journeymen who will supervise four trainees each, as well as additional remedial education where necessary. The pay will rise to a $61.50 minimum during this period.

Classroom and workshop instruction will be given by instructor-counselors from the crafts, who also will move from job to job to encourage the trainees.

Upon completion of the training, the work of those who finish the program will be reviewed and those who qualify will be channeled into apprenticeships. The appropriate building trades joint apprenticeship committees have agreed to make every effort to accept them into existing programs, Pres. J. C. Turner of the local AFL-CIO and Exec. Sec. Joseph Curtice of the building trades council said.

The Laborers have agreed to make every effort to absorb those not qualified for apprenticeships.

The dwellings to be renovated include a number owned and occupied by low-income families eligible for grants up to a maximum of $1,500 under the Housing Act, and other houses owned or leased by non-profit corporations which are to be sold or leased to low-income families.

The Redevelopment Land Agency, the Housing Division of the District Dept. of Licenses & Inspections, and the Washington Institute for Employment Training, Inc., an Opportunities Industrialization Center, are cooperating with the union groups.

The program is patterned after a comparable experimental and demonstration project in Cincinnati, O., called PEPSY—Preparation & Employment Program for Special Youth—which has been successful in preparing disadvantaged young men for careers in construction.

Succeeds Rosenstock:

James Woods Voted New Guild President

Ottawa, Ont.—James B. Woods, Midwest regional vice president of the Newspaper Guild, was elected to succeed Pres. Arthur Rosenstock at the Guild's 34th annual convention here.

Rosenstock, whose eight years in the office constituted the longest period ever served by any Guild president, had declined to run for a fifth two-year term. He nominated Woods, who is state editor of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, and the latter was declared elected when the only other nominee, Murray Tate of Toronto, withdrew.

Rosenstock, in stepping down, was lauded as "the guardian of the rights of the rank and file" by Executive Vice Pres. William J. Farson, the Guild's chief executive officer.

Farson and Sec.-Treas. Charles A. Perlik, Jr., were re-elected without opposition, as were five incumbent vice presidents—Hugh H. Harrison of Seattle-Tacoma, Bernard W. Stein of New York, George M. Muldowney of the Guild's Wire Service Local, Robert D. Nordin of Vancouver-New Westminster and Barney Peterson of San Francisco-Oakland.

Four new vice presidents were also elected without opposition—Joe Holt Anderson, Jr., of Washington-Baltimore, Harry Ryan of New York, James McMahon of Detroit, and James H. White of Memphis.

Contests for three regional vice presidencies will be decided by referendum — Carl Pesavento of Wilkes-Barre versus Thomas Buckley of Pawtucket in the Northeast; Glen Ogilvie of Toronto versus Gilles Desjarlais of Canadian Wire Service in Canada, and Noel Wical of Cleveland versus Marshall W. Schiewe of Chicago in the Midwest.

The convention approved an international executive board recommendation for a special 10-cent increase in per capita payments for the next 10 months to meet a $19,000 general fund deficit. Five cents of the 10 will be rebated to locals starting next June, when normal per capita payments will be increased automatically under a formula tying them to the average wage for experienced reporters.

In a roll call vote following a heated debate, the delegates defeated a proposal to bar the acceptance of government funds to finance the Guild's international affairs program. The convention then went on to approve a resolution authorizing the executive board to accept open government funds, preferably from the Agency for Intl. Development, if money cannot be obtained from private sources.

The convention thanked the AFL-CIO for its interim financial support of the overseas program, which it said has stimulated newspapermen throughout the world "to look upon free and democratic trade unionism as the best instrument available for combatting and overcoming oppression, poverty and ignorance."

Organizing Pushed

The delegates voted to accelerate organizing efforts, recommending the appointment of an organizing director "as early as possible and feasible." The action authorized the appointment of a special committee drawn from the convention organizing, finance and collective-bargaining committees to formulate "an integrated program" to promote and finance organizing and collective bargaining.

The convention also called for stepped-up bargaining efforts, raising the Guild's wage goals to $315.50 a week for key editorial, advertising, circulation and business-office employes and at least $157.75 for all other adult classifications.

In other actions, the convention urged defeat of the Hayden bill to exempt so-called "failing newspapers" from antitrust laws and urged instead the adoption of legislation to require that a truly failing paper be offered at a fair market price to a purchaser committed to continuing independent publication before it could be sold to or merged with a competitor.

The delegates unanimously rejected an appeal by 58 New York Guild members fined for crossing picket lines during the Guild's 1965 strike at the New York Times.

Appeals Court Rules:

New Train Crews Must Use Firemen

The U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia has ruled that firemen must be used on yard and freight train crews set up after Mar. 31, 1966—the date on which a compulsory arbitration award expired.

That award for two years had permitted the railroads to eliminate many firemen's jobs in yard and freight service. It also opened the way for railroads to cut back on the size of train crews.

Since the award expired, its interpretation and the question of its continued effect have been the subject of many rounds of litigation, which operating rail unions contend carriers started to delay further bargaining.

In a supplementary ruling to a May 12 decision that railroads must bargain on jobs for firemen, a three-judge panel of the appeals court declared that all new runs are subject to the national diesel agreement of the Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen and its requirement of a fireman on each engine crew.

The panel also ruled that this agreement remains in full effect in all states that had "full crew" laws on Mar. 31, 1966, even though such laws may have been later repealed. Two states, Oregon and Washington, had repealed such laws in the interim.

BLF&E Pres. H. E. Gilbert praised the court's ruling as "a major victory in creating a significant number of new employment opportunities for firemen."

Gilbert declared that the decision reinforced his view that the only way to settle the issue of firemen on diesels "is at the bargaining table and not in court or before public boards."

"I hope," he said, "that as a result of this decision the carriers will now sit down and bargain with us—something that so far they have refused to do."

Further, Gilbert noted, the panel's call for firemen on diesels combined with its upholding of the "full crew" laws "takes from the carriers the automatic benefit of attrition that was continuing after the award expired."

One part of the ruling, involving attrition, went against the union. The panel decided that a railroad does not have to fill a job that it was entitled to abolish under the award, even if it hadn't got around to doing so until the award expired.

The union said this means that "some attrition" will continue unless it succeeds in winning new "manning rules," which are part of the Firemen's latest bargaining proposals.

The supplementary opinion was issued by Judges John A. Danaher, Walter Bastina, and Harold Leventhal. Attorneys for both sides weighed possible appeal of the case to the U.S. Supreme Court.

The same panel had, in its May order, strongly criticized rail managements for having "flatly refused" to bargain with the BLF&E and other operating unions after the award expired.

The judges then wrote that "the carriers refused to engage in any statutory bargaining whatever prior to the expiration date" of the award and had "breached their statutory duty under the Railway Labor Act. . . ."

They said they could "detect no glimmer of an intimation that the carriers were authorized to regard this as a two-year hiatus in their obligation to bargain."

In several areas, the panel also reversed "interpretations" of the award made by U.S. District Court Judge Alexander Holtzoff in Washington. He has handled all of the litigation growing out of the compulsory arbitration award on train crew sizes involving the Firemen, Railroad Trainmen, Conductors & Brakemen and the Switchmen.

Both opinions now go back to the lower court for implementation by a formal order.

"is human need."

He noted that AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has said that the nation's "first priority" should be assistance to "the innocent victims of the rioters," and strongly urged local leaders to:

- Convene local AFL-CIO community services committees "to determine needs and develop programs of assistance."
- Meet with representatives of both public and private social service agencies to coordinate programs.
- Recruit volunteers to work with victims of disasters through appropriate agencies.
- Involve disaster victims in the development of specific programs of assistance.
- Arrange for the use of union halls and facilities for counseling and referral service, collection and distribution depots, recreation purposes and training classes.
- Initiate, wherever needed, campaigns for collection of food, clothing and other supplies.
- Help locate jobs for those who are willing and able to work.

Help Pledged

Perlis promised that trained community service representatives will be available to help local committees develop effective programs.

In the Detroit area, the entire leadership of the Wayne County AFL-CIO, headed by Pres. Russell Leach, worked around the clock with church and other civic groups in an emergency relief program.

The union contingent, including AFL-CIO organizers assigned to the federation's regional office, was responsible for pickups of food, milk, clothing and other essentials donated by manufacturers, retailers and thousands of private citizens and delivery of the donations to the distribution centers.

The Inter-Faith Emergency Center was the headquarters for the community relief effort. Union and management officials, clergymen of different faiths, and private citizens from all sections of the city worked side by side on the program. Trucks and other vehicles were lent by auto manufacturers and many of the city's leading business firms. Several unions which had their own vehicles, also contributed trucks and drivers.

The County AFL-CIO also took the lead in setting up a labor committee to work with city officials on a massive clean-up campaign in the ghetto area. Auto Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther is chairman of the committee, which includes leaders of the building trades and other major union groups in the city.

The emergency program was continuing a week after the riots. At the same time, meetings were under way with other community and church groups to plan longer-range programs of rehabilitation.

Tentative plans call for union volunteers to carry out landscaping operations after gutted buildings are bulldozed down in areas which will be set aside for recreation.

Johnson Asks Tax Hike To Meet War Costs

lower than in January. These changes would result in a $23.6 billion deficit that could go still higher without a tax increase.

Taken together, the President said, his tax recommendations would raise $7.4 billion in fiscal 1968. The added revenues with control of expenditures could keep the deficit in a $14 to $18 billion range, he asserted.

As he announced his tax program, the President also authorized an increase of 45,000 in the number of troops to be sent to Viet Nam, bringing the total to 525,000.

He told newsmen at a White House briefing that defense spending in fiscal 1968 could exceed his January estimate by $4 billion.

Johnson asked that the 10 percent surcharge be retroactive to July 1 for corporations and become effective Oct. 1 for individuals. The increases would expire June 30, 1969, "or continue so long as the unusual expenditures" associated with the Viet Nam war are needed, the President said.

He stressed that "these are surcharges on taxes, not on incomes." His proposal he said, would mean that a family of four with $10,000 annual income would pay an added tax of $9.25 a month "at most." Those with incomes below that figure—3 out of every 4 families—would pay even less. An estimated 16 million taxpayers in the lowest income brackets would be exempt from the surcharge.

While the President pledged to keep down non-essential spending and urged Congress to do likewise, he emphasized that additional money must be spent on badly-needed social programs.

"We cannot now postpone—at a much higher economic and human cost later — the urgent task of making the streets of America safe from crime and chaos and rooting out the underlying causes of unrest and injustice in our land," he declared.

Johnson said that failure by Congress to meet the increased deficit by increasing taxes would pose "a clear and present danger to America's security and economic health."

Such inaction, he warned, would cause "brutally higher interest rates and tight money," spiraling inflation that would hit the poor and elderly the hardest and "an unequal and unjust distribution of the cost of supporting our men in Viet Nam."

The President said he had received no commitments from members of Congress on his proposal, but that he had consulted leaders on Capitol Hill. He said Rep. Wilbur Mills (D-Ark.), chairman of the House Ways & Means Committee, had indicated he would try to start hearings on the plan by Aug. 14.

NLRB Bars Raid Against 2 Unions

Detroit—The National Labor Relations Board's regional director here has rejected a move by the unaffiliated Intl. Society of Skilled Trades to raid skilled employes represented by the Auto Workers and Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

Dir. Jerome H. Brooks dismissed some 84 petitions for elections among various groupings of skilled workers at Chrysler, General Motors and Ford. He said ISST failed to meet NLRB's rule requiring "30 percent showing of interest" among employes involved.

Brooks also refused to issue a complaint on an ISST charge that the UAW violated the Taft-Hartley Act by bringing pressure on workers to spurn ISST. He said he found only five "widely scattered" incidents of conversations about ISST and the participants were not UAW "agents" and not creating any "atmosphere of fear."

Equal Rights Stressed At Apprentice Parley

Biloxi, Miss.—The federal government under the law and the AFL-CIO both are "seriously committed" to equal opportunity in apprenticeships for all youth regardless of race, creed or nationality, Dir. Don Slaiman of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights declared at the 19th Southern States Apprenticeship Conference here.

Several hundred local union officers, contractors and apprentices from a 10-state area attended the sessions.

Slaiman pointed out that the entry of a minority group youth into an apprenticeship program, especially when it comes to skilled jobs, "cannot be expected solely because of nondiscriminatory regulations."

Must Be Helped

A minority group youth, he continued, will not automatically apply for a job "even when the door is open," and in many cases "must be convinced" that the opportunity of applying for an opening actually exists.

"It is for this reason," Slaiman said, "that a number of government and private pilot programs in a number of cities have been successful in achieving the entry of an increasing number of Negroes and other minority apprentices in skilled trades programs where they were rarely found before."

Where efforts to recruit apprentices have not been made, he said, "we have seen very little government, even in areas where nondiscrimination has been guaranteed." A functioning apprentice information service contributes to a better community relationship, he observed, citing the service in Washington, which he said has placed more than 500 apprentices.

Pres. B. A. Gritta of the AFL-CIO Metal Trades Dept. told the conference that the nation's most valuable resource lies in the skills and abilities of a work force capable of meeting the changing and challenging requirements of industrial development in today's world.

Gritta said organized labor is cooperating to the fullest in federal programs to give new skills to American citizens, but "will not tolerate any splintering" of trades and crafts, or allow "any watering down of entrance requirements" for apprentices.

"We have vigorously opposed and will continue to oppose any interference by government in the administration of our joint apprentice programs," he said. "The place of government in apprenticeship lies in its promotion and not in its administration, which should be exclusively the responsibility of labor and management."

Administrator Hugh C. Murphy of the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Apprenticeship & Training presented certificates to 214 apprentices—many of them Negroes—for outstanding accomplishment.

A Job to Be Done

THE VIOLENCE that has wracked America's cities left in its wake hundreds of innocent victims as the flames and pillage consumed homes and belongings and destroyed work places.

Let there be no mistake about it, the riots—however man-made—constitute a disaster, and as AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has urged, the victims deserve "at the very least the same help the government gives the victims of natural disasters."

Pres. Johnson already has directed that food and medicines be supplied to the needy in the riot-torn areas and that low interest government loans be made available to small businesses and home-owners.

But government aid alone is not enough; voluntary agencies have a critical role to play in providing needed relief and overcoming despair among the riot victims.

The AFL-CIO's community services program, which in the past has channeled labor's aid to flood-ravaged and hurricane-tossed areas, now is responding to a new cry for help. It should have the support of all unions members in helping to meet basic needs for food, shelter and clothing and assuring that the futures of entire families are not buried in the ruins of the riots.

The relief and rehabilitation task to which the labor movement has committed itself won't be completed in a week, or in a month.

Beyond the immediate needs of hunger and homelessness, there is the urgent task of helping the ghetto victims to a better, more hopeful life.

Guidelines issued for AFL-CIO community services committees point the ways that unions and union members can move into action. Reports are that employers and unions, churches and civic organizations are working side by side in the emergency relief program.

If that cooperation continues over the months ahead, there is real hope that something better will rise out of the ashes.

The nation faces the huge task of erasing the physical and emotional scars of violence from our cities. Let's get on with the job.

An All-American

JOE NAMATH, star quarterback for the New York Jets, in his own way is helping to strengthen trade union solidarity.

Two years ago Namath was signed to a $400,000 contract by the Jets after completing his college football career at the University of Alabama. But he hasn't let this affluence dim the memory of harder times in Beaver Falls, Pa., where his father sweated in the steel mills.

When Namath reported to the Jets' training camp in Peekskill, N.Y., this year, it was picture-taking day and he was obviously in need of a haircut.

It was Monday, and barber shops were closed in Peekskill. Coach Weeb Ewbank, who likes his athletes short-cropped, arranged for a local barber to be brought in to give the haircut. As New York Times sports columnist William N. Wallace reported:

"The barber proved to be non-union and Namath balked.
" 'My father taught me never to go non-union,' said Joe."

So the pictures showed a shaggy-haired Namath. Next day he found a union barber and got the haircut.

You don't have to root for the Jets, if some other American Football League team is dear to your heart. But when you see Joe Namath on the field or on the television screen, give a good, long, trade union cheer.

'If You're My Friend, Who Needs Enemies?'

A Cardinal's Message:

'We Need to Probe Beneath...' To Remedy Ghetto Grievances

Following are excerpts from a pastoral letter by Patrick Cardinal O'Boyle read at all masses in the Washington Archdiocese on July 30.

OUR PRESIDENT spoke for all of us when he said, for all the world to hear, that "we have endured a week such as no nation should live through: a time of violence and tragedy." Now that the violence has subsided, some of use may be sorely tempted to throw up our hands in utter despair and to settle, in a mood of bitter hatred and cynical frustration, for an uncertain and uneasy stalemate, a state of permanent martial law. This would be a fatal mistake and one which would only compound the frightful tragedy.

We would be better advised to look for signs of progress and hope on the darkened horizon of urban America. For my own part, I see at least a glimmer of hope in the fact that so many Americans are now willing, perhaps for the first time, to examine their own conscience and to assume their own full share of responsibility.

Every right-minded citizen must concur with the solemn judgment of four of the nation's most respected Negro leaders that "killing, arson and looting are criminal acts and should be dealt with as such." [But] the President has warned us that we cannot be satisfied with "the uneasy calm of martial law" but must look for "a public order built on steady progress in meeting the needs of our people."

We need to probe beneath the violence and destruction of the recent riots and to try to understand their underlying causes. We must do everything within our power to remedy, without delay, the long-standing injustices and festering grievances which are the natural breeding ground of lawless rebellion.

We must come to realize that riots, however senseless they may be, are the frenzied cry of alienated people.

We must recognize and admit that we have not done many of the things that we should have been doing and have too often done things which we ought not to have been doing.

Our efforts to eliminate segregated slum housing have been feeble. Our programs of job training and job opportunities for unemployed Negroes has been far less than adequate. Our education system moves at a snail's pace in its faltering efforts to readjust to the rapidly changing situation in our urban centers.

Our programs of urban renewal have not been designed primarily to meet the needs of disadvantaged low income families. Too often these families have been the victims rather than the beneficiaries of urban renewal. Our welfare programs have too often been paternalistic, demeaning, inadequate and have weakened family life.

We have tolerated the commercial exploitation of ghetto residents by excessively high prices, inflated credit rates, and inferior products.

WE MUST now be prepared to pay the price of our religious convictions. As the President has pointed out. "This is not a time for angry reaction. It is a time for action, starting with legislative action to improve life in our cities."

We should immediately adopt certain priority measures designed to meet the immediate crisis. At the national level, we need, at the very minimum, dramatic and far-reaching improvements in the anti-poverty program, whatever the cost. We also need a far-reaching program of federal public works to provide employment for the great mass of unemployed Negro youth and a vastly expanded health and welfare program, together with an adequate program of rent supplements.

Here at the local level we need an adequate system of local self-government, an increased budget for our public schools, a Model Cities program and a substantial increase in the number of low and moderate income housing units.

All of these programs will cost money and may call for an increase of taxes. Let us not selfishly reject them for this reason and, above all, let us not use the costly war in Viet Nam as a feeble excuse for postponing action in Congress.

We are not faced with a choice between guns and butter—between the tragic war in Viet Nam and a vast program of domestic, social and economic reform. Whatever the cost of the war, we have no choice but to meet our responsibilities here at home. To refuse to do so in the name of the war would be a tragic distortion of the meaning of true patriotism.

The list of legislative reforms referred to above is not meant to be exhaustive, nor to suggest that legislation alone can be expected to solve the crisis. On the contrary, private initiative is absolutely indispensable. We appeal to the business community, to organized labor, realtors, investors and every other influential group in the private economy to begin to look for new and imaginative methods of helping.

'Don't Like to Be Slickered':

Faltering 'Right-to-Work' Drive Shows Oklahomans Are 'Sore'

By Walter L. Davis
Assistant COPE Director

TWO BASIC LESSONS learned from nine years on the "right-to-work" campaign trail:

1—For the labor movement, the fight against right-to-work is a treadmill to oblivion. No worker wins a raise. No legislative gains are made. Union funds are spent for the hollowest of victories.

2—For the right-to-workers, the issue is a fund-raiser's panacea. Since "right-to-work" was conclusively defeated in five statewide referendums in 1958, costly referendum campaigns have gone out of vogue. These days, the fund-raisers collect the money, pay themselves and engage in low-overhead, low-budget legislative fights.

"I've been busy in the "right-to-work" wars since 1958, when the Ohio labor movement defeated the issue by nearly a million votes.

I was on hand in Oklahoma in 1964 when a "right-to-work" constitutional amendment went down by 25,000 votes. I'm back on the scene in Oklahoma now where a new drive to get "right-to-work" on the ballot is sputtering.

The right-to-workers caught the Oklahoma labor movement with its defenses down in 1964. Labor had waged a long, bitter and expensive battle in the courts to disqualify the issue. When it was finally certified for the ballot, labor regrouped, scraped the bottom of its financial barrel and went out to register its members, tell its people what a phony issue "right-to-work" really was and then get out the vote.

The right-to-workers thought they had it locked up. The shock came when the labor vote showed up 100 percent solid and the minority groups, senior citizens and farmers joined to provide the ingredients of the 25,000-vote victory.

This year it's a different story in Oklahoma. The labor movement is ready. There is a great residue of sentiment against "right-to-work" all over the state. People are asking why they have to vote again on an issue already decided.

In addition, the right-to-workers are wallowing in trouble. They've put off the start of the petition drive three times now. They are losing key supporters and are having trouble raising money.

But the biggest factor in the Oklahoma fight has been the attitude of Republicans. They learned a key lesson from the 1964 contest for the U. S. Senate. Fred Harris, a popular but not too well known state legislator, was the Democratic opponent of Bud Wilkinson, the patron saint of Oklahoma football.

Harris opposed "right-to-work" from the start, was an articulate and staunch supporter of the labor movement. Wilkinson ducked all the way. While the "right-to-work" issue was on the ballot in the primary, labor's fervor carried into the general election and Wilkinson went down to defeat.

In the current campaign, the first Republican spokesman to speak out on the "right-to-work" issue was former Gov. Henry Bellmon. He took no position for or against the issue, but he did say a new drive so soon "seems untimely."

Then Jim Marty, who had been Republican chairman of Seminole County, followed Bellmon's statement with an extensive analysis of why "right-to-work" has been such bad medicine for Republicans.

His treatment is the most definitive Republican blast ever written against "right-to-work." He starts with the Republican disaster of 1958 when the GOP lost 13 Senate seats and 49 House seats, eight governorships and control of senates in eight state legislatures and of lower houses in nine.

Marty carefully lists the most outstanding statements against "right to work" by Republicans that year. One of the quotes came from Ray Bliss, now chairman of the Republican National Committee but then Ohio GOP chief: "The defeat of so many of our Ohio GOP candidates is directly attributable to placement of "right-to-work" on the Ohio ballot, I repeatedly warned proponents of this issue that this defeat would be the possible consequence. They chose to ignore my warnings."

Then the right-to-workers are hit by the analysis where it hurts most—on fund-raising: "The National Right to Work Committee and Oklahomans for Right to Work will do a very methodical job in the next few months of draining off immense amounts of Republican funds in order to finance another "right-to-work" petition and election campaign in the state. This is Republican money that could better be used by Republicans to elect Republicans in 1968."

Marty then makes three very astute observations about the current Oklahoma political scene:

- "The labor movement in Oklahoma learned a great deal from the campaign against right to work in 1964. It is already gearing up for an all-out fund-raising campaign. It will spend the money more wisely and get great mileage out of what has gone before.
- "There is a solid base of opposition to right to work still left over from the 1964 campaign.
- "Right-to-work has lost much of its acceptability. Too many super zealots, who rely on emotion and very little logic, have espoused the cause.

MARTY DOCUMENTS his story very well. But there is one detail that's missing.

It's the difference between the Oklahoma campaign of 1964 and the campaign this year. It's the basic reason why the right to workers are in such deep trouble.

People have simply caught on that "right-to-work" is a very shoddy business, shopworn and frayed at the edges. They've learned that those who espouse it are looking out for themselves. For the most part they are professional promoters interested in making a buck.

Look at the name: "Right-to-work." Doesn't mean what it says. Won't do what it promises. People don't like to be slickered. When they've been had by the tyranny of words, they get sore—and they stay sore.

Is "right-to-work" really dead in Oklahoma? Who knows? Ask the Oklahomans for Right to Work. They keep propping it up. After all, it is profitable. For them.

Faupl Emphasizes:

U.S. Workers Have Big Stake In Success of ILO Programs

AMERICAN workers have a vital stake in programs to raise living standards in other parts of the world, the U.S. worker delegate to the Intl. Labor Organization told a nationwide radio audience.

Rudolph Faupl, international representative for the Machinists, stressed that this is so because higher living standards elsewhere protect our standards, though they exceed ILO minimums.

Faupl said the ILO, a United Nations agency, has recently begun research into wages and working conditions of international or "multi-nation employers." This, he said, will help trade unions in the U.S. and elsewhere measure the conditions, productivity and profits of internationally-spread employers for use in bargaining.

He predicted that American labor will continue its active role in the ILO, despite recurring attempts of Communist bloc nations to fight their "ideological battles" there. Withdrawal would leave "the field wide open to the Communists and other totalitarian societies," he said.

"We believe that we ought to fight them as much as we can from the inside," he added.

FAUPL said that "technical assistance" to developing nations takes the major part of the ILO's budget. He said the ILO now has "approximately 1,500 experts throughout the world" assisting in the establishment of labor departments, vocational and management training programs, social security systems and other activities in developing manpower. He noted that during the 1930's, the ILO gave technical assistance to the United States in establishing Social Security.

Faupl was interviewed on Labor News Conference, the AFL-CIO public affairs broadcast, heard Tuesdays at 7:35 p.m., EDT, on the Mutual Radio Network. Questioning him were William Eaton, Washington correspondent for the Chicago Daily News, and Stanley Levey of the Scripps-Howard Newspapers.

SEN. CHARLES H. PERCY (R-Ill.) has introduced a housing bill that has had the enthusiastic support of his Republican colleagues, many of whom have never been noted for their housing votes in the past. The reason may be that the Percy plan seems to be a handsome way to get the political credit for a housing program that won't cost much and will look good—perhaps too good to be true.

The bill is supposed to open the way for low income families to own their own homes and do it within the framework of the free enterprise system. It also provides a way for federal government to recover its "subsidy" should the beneficiary families ever attain a more affluent status.

Obviously this has all the advantages of eating your cake and still having it. The poor get the house, the builder gets the profit and the government recovers its monetary support at some possible future date.

But the AFL-CIO has called the home ownership part of it a "hoax" and the "free enterprise" part of it simply not true.

Under the Percy bill, a nonprofit National Home Ownership Foundation is created. This would help local community organizations make plans for low cost housing for sale to community residents. It would obtain loans from a Home Ownership Fund and would return mortgages on the homes to repay the funds. The home buyer would be helped by the government to pay the mortgage interest through reduced interest rates. He could contribute his own labor as equity in the cost of his home and eventually repay the government for his low interest rate—3 percent—if his income rose sufficiently.

AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller, who had to admit that attacking a "home ownership" bill was like attacking motherhood, has told the Senate Banking & Currency Committee that the bill is not the answer to the housing problem and that the Senate instead ought to be addressing itself to the problem of providing adequate funds for the programs that are now in effect.

WHILE THE PERCY MEASURE is supposed to be for the benefit of poor people, it is largely out of their reach. Under it, a buyer would have to pay more than $100 a month to cover all necessary expenses for a $12,500 home and on the basis of one-fourth of income for home costs, this would call for a minimum income of $4,858 a year. This is far above the $3,000 income level that now marks poverty—or the level of people who need decent housing the most.

Again, the idea that the proposal can be called "private enterprise" is highly untenable. The bonds to be sold to provide the needed funds would do so under a federal repayment guarantee. The difference in interest to be charged to the home owner and paid to the bond purchaser would have to be paid by the government. Where is the famous "risk" that is supposed to mark private enterprise?

Finally, there is the arrangement under which the government would calculate the amount of low interest subsidy given each home purchaser. This would represent a government lien if the owner graduated to a higher income category.

Perhaps the most telling criticism of the Percy plan was made by Rep. Leonor Sullivan (D-Mo.), who bluntly called it a Madison Avenue product presented with such "hoopla and publicity" that it represented an apparent excuse "for not appropriating sufficient funds this year to carry out the housing laws we already have on the books."

Mrs. Sullivan pointed out that the House already has cut funds for Model Cities and eliminated funds for rent supplements. Funds for rat control also have been eliminated since then.

The Percy plan, which looks easy and painless, cannot possibly lead to an "instant" solution to a problem that has haunted the American people for decades. It is highly likely, in fact, to add to present frustration and disillusionment.

CONTINUED U.S. MEMBERSHIP in the Intl. Labor Organization is vital to prevention of a Communist takeover of the ILO, Rudolph Faupl (center), U.S. worker delegate to the United Nations agency, said on the AFL-CIO public service program, Labor News Conference. Coast Unions Set Joint Talks In Shipyards

Seattle—Eleven unions affiliated with the Pacific Coast Metal Trades District Council have agreed to pool their bargaining efforts on behalf of 30,000 employes of West Coast shipbuilding and ship repair firms.

The agreement should strengthen and stabilize collective bargaining between unions and shipyard employers, Pres. B. A. Gritta of the AFL-CIO Metal Trades Dept. said.

Shipyard union representatives met here to formalize their new bargaining procedures, then met with employers to sign an amended agreement resulting from settlement of an eight-month strike by electricians.

Under the amendment, unions signatory to a master agreement with the Pacific Coast Shipbuilders Association win an additional 15 cents an hour retroactive to July 1, and another 5 cents next Jan. 1. Included are the Boilermakers, Laborers, Metal Polishers, Molders, Operating Engineers, Painters, Sheet Metal Workers, and the Plumbers.

Members of the IBEW, Machinists and Carpenters signed separate agreements with the employers. When negotiations on a new contract start next year, all the unions will bargain through the Metal Trades Council and will have the right to sign separate pacts if they desire, Gritta said.

The council constitution provides that the next set of negotiations for shipyard workers will be conducted by the council executive board in one of three ports to be chosen by the joint negotiating committee and the employer representatives. The ports are Seattle, Portland, and the Bay area of San Francisco.

Glass Union Plays Host To British Study Team

Philadelphia—Glass and plastics plants in the United States are impressive and American hospitality is delightful, but baseball will never catch on in Great Britain, a delegation of British trade unionists concluded after a tour around the country.

The visitors are members of the General & Municipal Workers and came to the U.S. under an exchange program with the Glass Bottle Blowers. The program was set up a dozen years ago by GBBA Pres. Lee W. Minton, an AFL-CIO vice president, and leader of the British union. Under it, study teams visit each other's countries every other year.

The British unionists were accompanied by GBBA Vice Pres. J. Belton Warren and Francis M. Heston of the union staff as they visited glass container, fiber glass, plastic and television bulb plants in the East and Midwest.

They also saw a major league baseball game and returned a verdict of "too slow."

"There were small conferences all over the field for an hour before play began," a team spokesman said. "And why dress those fellows (the umpires) in black? It spoils the color on the field."

The hospitality they found everywhere reached its peak when a minor road accident disabled their car in the Midwest. A farmer walked down to the highway and invited them to his nearby house for cold drinks while they waited for other transportation, and the courteous investigation by the highway patrol left a good impression.

The trip included a tour of historic spots in Washington, where they were luncheon guests at the British Embassy, and an inspection of GBBA headquarters here, where they met union officers and staff personnel and were entertained at a luncheon.

Strong Safety Standards Urged for Gas Pipelines

Labor called for strong, enforceable federal safety standards for natural gas pipelines to protect workers and the public against death-dealing explosions.

AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller urged the Senate Commerce Committee to approve—with strengthening amendments—Pres. Johnson's request for a Natural Gas Pipeline Safety Act.

The Administration proposal authorizes the secretary of transportation to set federal standards for the safe transmission and distribution of natural gas over hundreds of thousands of miles of pipelines.

As Johnson said in a message to Congress early this year, "Natural gas is inherently dangerous when it is being transmitted. It travels through pipelines at enormous pressures. It is highly inflammable. When it burns it can reach temperatures as high as 2,500 degrees . . . Yet 22 states have no safety regulations, many of the remaining 28 states have weak or outmoded provisions."

Biemiller said labor has a two-fold concern for pipeline safety. He cited the thousands of workers employed in construction, operation and maintenance of natural gas pipelines and the fact that nearly half the deaths and injuries resulting from interstate gas pipeline failures involved non-employes.

"More and more pipe will be laid where more and more people live, work and travel," Biemiller stressed. "Each year more miles of pipeline will deteriorate from age, corrosion, failure in welds, inadequate design for high pressure systems, accidental puncture by farm, road building or other construction equipment."

Biemiller urged two improvements in the Administration bill. He said the secretary of transportation should be directed "not only to prescribe but to enforce the standards . . . with legal penalties for wilful violations."

He asked also that the standards "apply to all pipe in the ground, not merely new pipe being laid."

He quoted a government report that nearly 50 percent of pipeline failures involve systems that have been in the ground more than 20 years, and 82 percent were in pipe which had been underground more than five years.

Urging the need for federal regulation, Biemiller told the committee: "Six states—Texas, Louisiana, Ohio, Oklahoma, Mississippi and Illinois—account for about 43 percent of the nation's pipeline mileage. None of these has any safety regulation of their systems, either intrastate or interstate."

Andrew Johnson Fills IBEW Post

Andrew Johnson has been named a vice president of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, succeeding Joseph W. Liggett who died July 17. The appointment was made by IBEW Pres. Gordon M. Freeman with the approval of the union's executive board. The term expires in 1970.

Johnson has been on the IBEW's international staff since 1936, serving as an international representative for District 3, comprising the states of Delaware, New Jersey, New York and Pennsylvania. An IBEW member since 1920, he first joined the union's Local 5 in Pittsburgh.

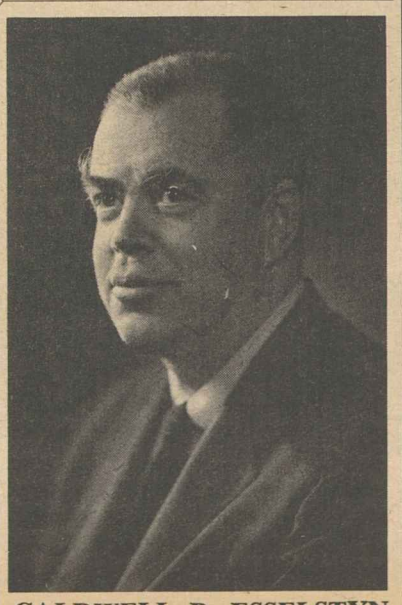
Dr. Esselstyn Appointed Consultant to AFL-CIO

Dr. Caldwell B. Esselstyn, former executive director of Detroit's labor-backed Community Health Association, has been named health consultant to the AFL-CIO.

Esselstyn, who recently became associate program coordinator in the New York Metropolitan Regional Medical Program, will serve the AFL-CIO on a part-time basis and will be available for consultation on all matters dealing with health programs.

A graduate of Yale University in 1925, he received his medical degree at the Columbia University College of Physicians & Surgeons in 1929 and served his internship at Presbyterian Hospital, New York City.

Since then he has had a broad career as a surgeon, consulting surgeon and teacher, and has been active in public health affairs. He is a director of the Group Health Association of America, was vice president from 1955 to 1960, president from 1960 to 1962, and chairman of the board from 1962 to 1964. He also is a member of the Yale University Football Advisory Committee.



CALDWELL B. ESSELSTYN

Shriver Asserts:

Poverty Workers Helped 'Cool' Riots

Anti-poverty Dir. Sargent Shriver spoke out eloquently and angrily at House hearings in an effort to save the Office of Economic Opportunity from being gutted.

Far from being instigators of riots, Shriver declared, thousands of neighborhood anti-poverty workers risked their lives and worked around the clock to "cool it" and restore peace.

Poverty and its ramifications dominated other congressional developments during the week.

Senate liberals made a strong but unsuccessful effort to restore heavy cuts in the budget for the Teacher Corps.

The House had denied funds for the program and the Senate Appropriations Committee recommended only $18.1 million of the $33 million sought by Pres. Johnson to send teams of specially trained teachers into poverty areas in cities which request their services.

A motion to appropriate the full $33 million was beaten, 45-43. Opposed were 24 Democrats and 21 Republicans; voting for the full amount were 32 Democrats and 11 Republicans.

The Senate voted unanimously, however, for a new two-year, $75 million program to provide emergency food and medical care for the nation's hungry poor.

The bill was the outgrowth of Senate hearings at which a team of doctors presented first-hand testimony of starvation among Mississippi Negroes after rapid mechanization of cotton fields deprived them of their meager livelihood as "field hands."

Stennis Changes Role

Mississippi Sen. John Stennis (D) first angrily protested the testimony as a slur on his state. But then he sponsored the bill to set up the fund for emergency aid "to prevent human suffering or loss of life" anywhere in the nation, and directing a nationwide study of the extent of hunger and malnutrition. With strong support from liberals combined with its conservative sponsorship, the bill was rushed through committee and Senate approval.

Charges that anti-poverty workers had helped touch off Negro rioting added drama to Shriver's appearance before the House Labor Committee in support of an extension of the anti-poverty program and in opposition to conservative demands that the OEO be dismembered and its programs either scrapped or turned over to other agencies.

Yes, Shriver conceded, six of the 12,128 paid poverty workers in the 27 cities where riots took place were among the 6,733 persons arrested in the disturbances.

But he quoted from police chiefs and city officials throughout the nation testimony that the neighborhood workers had "smothered, not fanned, the flames."

In the 27 riot-torn cities, Shriver said, the OEO had 491 neighborhood centers, most in ghetto areas.

"Not a single one was burned or looted," he said.

Discontent Stressed

The "combustibles that fire up a riot," Shriver declared, are "discontent with joblessness, discontent with money-hungry landlords and merchants, discontent with the raw differences between justice, health and convenience for the poor and the rest of America."

He stressed that "even if there were no riots," if the poor remained "quiet and uncomplaining," the conditions are "wrong socially, politically and morally."

The poverty program faces a close, bitter battle when the legislation reaches the House floor. It will be opposed by the same conservative coalition that has forced cutbacks in the Great Society program during this session of Congress.

Congressional leaders in effect abandoned any lingering hopes for an early adjournment. They agreed on a 10-day recess from Sept. 1 to Sept. 11—a longer-than-usual Labor Day breather indicating that the session will probably extend well into the autumn.

additional good teachers for the children of poverty or new efforts to house those that are most in need of housing."

Humphrey, in a speech to the nation's mayors, called on Congress to restore full funds to the Model Cities program. He said the "go slow, take it easy" attitude on Capitol Hill to the problem of the cities "aids and abets frustration in our urban slums."

The President appointed David Ginsburg, a Washington attorney with extensive government experience, as executive director of the special commission and a staff was being put together. The 11 commissioners, however, stressed that they will serve as a working body, with all members expected to attend all meetings.

Besides Kerner, Lindsay and Abel, the commissioners are: Sen. Edward W. Brooke (R-Mass.); Rep. James C. Corman (D-Calif.); Sen. Fred R. Harris (D-Okla.); Atlanta Police Chief Herbert Jenkins; Rep. William M. McCulloch (R-O.); Kentucky Commerce Commissioner Katherine Peden; Charles B. Thornton, board chairman of Litton Industries, and Roy Wilkins, executive director of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Broad Conference Planned:

CSA Parley Seeks Social Service Links

Avenues by which social services may be channeled to great numbers of people were explored by community service directors of international unions and central labor bodies at a conference with officials of government and voluntary agencies.

The session, designed as a preliminary forum for the clarification of current needs and available programs, was called by the AFL-CIO Community Services Activities. It will be followed by a more comprehensive meeting in January, CSA Dir. Leo A. Perlis announced.

The conference looked at a wide range of welfare activities and heard a series of discussions on how best to cooperate in research, training and service.

Dr. William Usdane, chief of the Vocational Rehabilitation Administration's Division of Research & Demonstrations, suggested means of working with CSA representatives "to prevent more Detroits."

VISTA Work Cited

Bruno Rantane, recruitment director for VISTA, noted that VISTA volunteers are assigned for emergencies such as earthquakes, floods and riots, and also have worked with migrant laborers and in poverty areas.

A number of possible projects which would be undertaken in cooperation with the AFL-CIO are being considered by the National Endowment for the Arts, Chairman Roger L. Stevens said. He noted that Pres. Herman D. Kenin of the Musicians, an AFL-CIO vice president, is a member of the council.

Stevens pointed out that West Germany has theaters, opera houses and symphonies in every major city, but the U.S. has done so little for the arts that 75 percent of the singers in Germany are Americans.

This country, he added, must not only assist the performing and other arts, but act to develop the peoples' enthusiasm.

Tom Cosgrove, chief labor liaison officer with the Office of Economic Opportunity, and Ben Zimmerman, chief of the OEO's Division of Community Services, reminded the conference that the war on poverty is being waged under a continuing resolution and that Congress still has to approve its continuation.

Dr. Allen Levinson, director of the Division of Mental Health Services in the National Institute of Mental Health, advocated community mental health centers to replace state hospitals because they are closer to the home of the patient, who thus need not be separated from family, community or job.

Dir. Terence Carroll of the National Institute of Rehabilitation & Health said that unions are one of the best means of getting communities and agencies together.

"They are good catalysts," he said. "Through them we can get the most impact with a minimal expenditure of funds."

Alcoholism Discussed

Pres. Brinkley Smithers of the Christopher D. Smithers Foundation, reported that the foundation has a 60 percent recovery rate from alcoholism. Labor and management cooperation is necessary, he said, to cure the 5 million alcoholics in the United States who still have jobs. So far, said Dr. Thomas Plaut, assistant chief of the National Center for Prevention & Control of Alcoholism, the family agencies "have been dragging their feet" in meeting the problems of alcoholism.

Howard Frazier, director for field operations of the President's Committee on Consumer Interests, said a national conference Sept. 22 will discuss areas where the AFL-CIO and the committee can work more effectively. He said he hoped to see consumer education conferences set up in every state, and he lauded state AFL-CIO central bodies and unions for what they had done in this field and in consumer legislation.

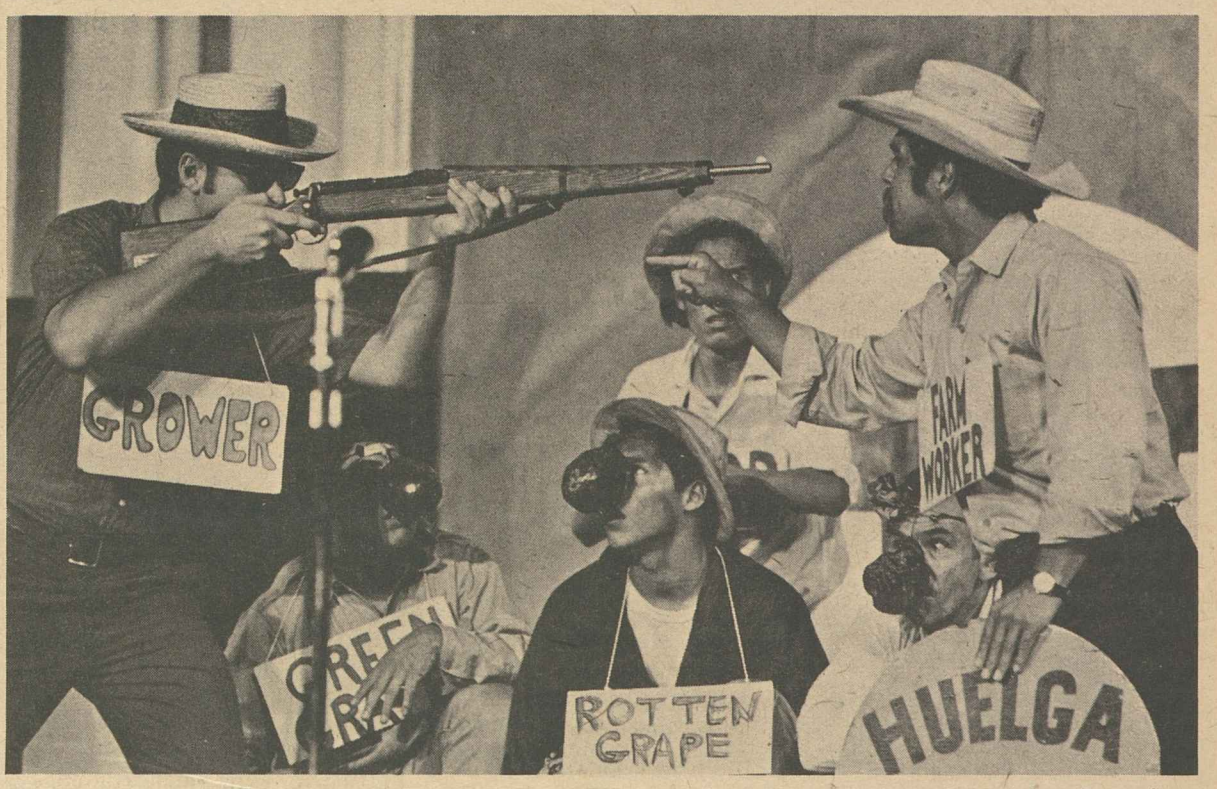
Virginia Burns of the Health, Education & Welfare Dept. talked about juvenile delinquency prevention programs, and Robert Mulligan, assistant chief of U.S. Education, Innovative Centers Branch, noted that programs handled through his office had to be under the supervision of local boards of education.

PROJECTS in cooperation with the AFL-CIO are being considered by the National Endowment for the Arts, Chairman Roger Stevens (right) told an AFL-CIO Community Services Activities conference in Washington. With him are CSA Dir. Leo A. Perlis (left) and AFL-CIO Public Relations Dir. Albert J. Zack.

Winpisinger Named For IAM Vacancy

William Winpisinger, a former grand lodge representative, has been elected a vice president of the Machinists by the IAM's executive council. He fills the unexpired term of Joseph W. Ramsey, who recently retired. The term expires June 30, 1969.

Winpisinger has served on the union's staff in Washington since 1955, first as assistant airline coordinator and more recently as automotive coordinator. He joined the union in Cleveland in 1947 and held a number of offices in IAM Local 1363 there prior to coming to Washington.



TEATRO CAMPESINO, the theater developed by the United Farm Workers Organizing Committee on the picket lines and in the fields around Delano, Calif., gave a performance at Howard University in Washington that captivated an audience of students, union members and government officials. At its conclusion AFL-CIO Organization Dir. William L. Kircher (top) gave a summary of the union's recent gains with Luis Valdez, originator of the theater, at his right and Luis' brother, Danny, on his left. In skit below, grower (left) attempts to drive Luis Valdez (right), a striking farm worker, from his property because he is trying to persuade the unaware strikebreaker (rear) to join the walkout instead of harvesting the assorted "grapes" (seated).

Economic Needs of Musicians Held Critical to Nation's Cultural Boom

Lenox, Mass.—The economic welfare of musicians is a critical element in maintaining the high quality of musical performances as the nation's "cultural boom" progresses, Pres. Herman D. Kenin of the Musicians warned at the Tanglewood Symposium here.

Kenin declared at a panel discussion on economic and community support for the arts that the best hope for economic stability is through the development of new audiences. But, he added:

"Unless there is increased support for the arts, and for music—and unless it is forthcoming quickly—a great many promising talents may be discouraged from continuing their music studies.

"There exists now a shortage of qualified unstrumentalists, a shortage which will continue, unless more than is presently being done to encourage talented youngsters is undertaken."

Despite the nation's economic and cultural boom, Kenin said, the "economic plight" of the performing artist is "almost as desperate as it has ever been."

"I'm sure that all of you are familiar with the great economic handicaps under which symphony orchestra members live," he said.

"They do not earn, in our society, a wage comparable to their skill, or to the hours that they work. A vast number of them are forced to teach, or to hold several jobs, in order to make ends meet.

"There is a great difference between a symphony performed by one of our nation's leading orchestras and the same composition as performed by a high school orchestra. The composition, the notes are the same. But what we hear, what we experience, is vastly different."

Kenin outlined two AFM programs—one broadens the musician's economic opportunities and at the same time seeks to create new audiences for live music; the second attempts to ease the shortage of qualified musicians.

The first program is the Music Performance Trust Funds, which with its predecessor, the union's Recording & Transcription Fund, since 1945 has paid out more than $76 million in salaries to musicians for presentations open to the public without charge, he said.

New Audiences Created

"Beyond that," Kenin pointed out, "these activities provide audiences throughout the country with the opportunity to attend, free, live performances. As music lovers, you all know that there is a perhaps indefinable, but no less real, difference between a live and a recorded performance. . . . These performances help to build audiences. And that, I believe, is of major importance to us all."

He declared that each time live music is heard, "a new audience is indoctrinated." If funds from government, foundations or firms stimulate an interest in music for both future professionals and the audiences of today and tomorrow, "then they have been successfully utilized," he asserted.

The second AFM program, Kenin said, is the Congress of Strings, which was undertaken because the shortage of skilled performers was particularly acute among string instrumentalists.

It has enabled 100 teen-age instrumentalists in past years to receive eight weeks of instruction and performance each summer under the direction of some of the country's finest string players and conductors, he said. The program has been enlarged this year due to a grant from the Rockefeller Foundation, he added.

"After only eight years," Kenin said, "the Congress of Strings has provided at least one regular performer for every major symphony in the United States and Canada. And, of course, dozens upon dozens of members for smaller organizations."

Labor Film Festival Draws 60 Entries

Montreal, Que.—Some 60 entries have been received for the fifth Intl. Labor Film Festival, to be held here Aug. 11-15.

Prizes will be awarded in five categories—labor, social and economic, safety and accident prevention, welfare, and social studies and education. Fred Terselius, Swedish labor film specialist, heads the 10-member jury.

Whittled-Down Version:

Social Security Bill Set for House Vote

the bill can be weakened but not improved.

The measure will be wide open for amendments, however, in the Senate Finance Committee and when it reaches the Senate floor.

Johnson had asked an increase of at least 15 percent for all persons on the social security rolls —a request endorsed by the AFL-CIO as "a significant down payment" on a needed 50 percent benefit rise.

The President had also proposed raising the minimum social security benefit from the present $44 for an individual to $70 and from $66 for a couple over 65 to $105. Johnson also asked that persons with at least 25 years of covered employment be guaranteed at least $100 for an individual and $150 for a couple.

The principal Republican substitute bill called for only an 8 percent increase in benefits, plus a cost-of-living escalator for the future.

The Ways & Means Committee compromise bill would raise benefits by 12.5 percent for some 20.5 million persons on the social security rolls. The 2.5 million persons now receiving minimum benefits would be raised to $50 for an individual and $75 for a couple.

The House committee discarded one labor-opposed provision of the Administration bill—a proposal to make social security and railroad retirement benefits subject to taxation as part of a change in tax policies for persons over 65.

The proposed income ceiling on medicaid would be a particular blow at moderate-income families in New York and a few other states which took the position that a family need not be destitute in order to receive government help in paying medical bills that otherwise would leave them heavily in debt.

At present, states set their own income ceilings for medicaid and New York permits assistance to a family of four with an income up to $6,000 a year. The Administration proposed to put an income limit of one and one-half times the maximum allowed under state law for eligibility for cash welfare assistance. The committee went beyond this, setting an income ceiling starting in 1968 of 150 percent of the welfare level and dropping over two years to one and one-third times the welfare criterion. In New York, this would limit eligibility to families with incomes of $3,900 or less after July 1, 1970.

States which adopt medicaid programs for the first time will be immediately bound by the 1970 income level limitation.

The committee retained some of the welfare reforms urged by the Administration. But it dropped a proposal that states be required to pay benefits at least equal to the amount the state itself determines is necessary for minimum subsistence.

It also adopted a harsh "get them off relief" approach, making job training compulsory for all welfare recipients, including mothers with small children.

The higher social security benefits proposed by Johnson would have been paid for largely by raising the wage base on which workers and employers pay social security taxes.

Three-Step Hike Rejected

The President had asked for a three-step increase from the present $6,600 ceiling—to $7,800 in 1968, to $9,000 in 1970 and to $10,800 in 1974. The AFL-CIO strongly supported this, noting that the percentage of wages covered has shrunk greatly over the year, resulting in maximum benefits far below pre-retirement earnings for most workers.

Instead the committee voted a single increase in the wage base—to $7,600. With only minor adjustments in the tax rate, this will pay for the benefits added by the committee bill. But it would hold down future expansion of benefits if the social security program is continued on a matching worker-employer tax basis. It also holds down both the retirement benefits and insurance protection for higher-paid workers, since benefits are based on the amount of wages subject to social security tax.

Coalition Asks Joint Attack On Urban Ills

the cities by a commitment to investment, job training and hiring," the founding group declared.

It said it would "proceed immediately" to promote "Earn and Learn Centers" in the nation's cities to provide job training and jobs. The centers, it suggested, "might well be the joint venture of business, labor and local government."

Union officials taking part in the founding meeting were AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller, representing Pres. George Meany, Steelworkers Pres. I. W. Abel, Auto Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther, and Sec. Joseph D. Keenan of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

The coalition urged Congress to "move without delay on urban problems," declaring:

"The country can wait no longer for model cities, anti-poverty, housing, education and job training legislation."

It said lawlessness cannot be tolerated, but warned against a reaction to "acts committed by a small fraction of the population of the country's ghettos" blinding the nation to the cities' urgent needs.

"The sickness of the cities, including civic disorder within them, is the responsibility of the whole of America," the group said. "Therefore it is the responsibility of every American to join in the creation of a new political, social, economic and moral climate which will make possible the breaking up of the vicious cycle of the ghetto."

PARCHMENT SCROLL was presented to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany by graduates of the American Institute for Free Labor Development's first resident course for social projects and was accepted by Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler. The presentation was made for the class by Pedro Pena Fana (right) of the Dominican Republic, with an assist from AIFLD Administrator William C. Doherty, Jr. (second from right). At left is Charles R. Burrows, country director in the State Dept.'s Office of Central American Affairs and the graduation luncheon speaker.

Workers Pick N.Y. Hotel Unit At 4 YWCAs

New York — Workers at four YWCAs here—West Side, Morgan Hall, Tatham House and Studio Club—have voted, 137 to 27, for the AFL-CIO New York Hotel & Motel Trades Council as their bargaining agent.

Council leaders said the election victory would encourage workers in other non-profit institutions and spur an organizing drive now going on at four YMCAs. The vote was supervised by the American Arbitration Association.

The council also thanked other organizations for strong support of the YWCA campaign, including union taxi drivers who helped "bring out" the vote, the Teachers and the New York City Central Labor Council.

The victory was a second big breakthrough in organizing Ys. The first came last November when Hotel & Restaurant Workers' Local 6 won an election to represent more than 200 workers at Sloane House YMCA.

The election result at West Side was particularly gratifying, the council said, because that facility was once the privately-owned Capitol Hotel and its employes were organized. The unit was lost when the YWCA took it over, because non-profit institutions were then excused from having to comply with the labor law.

Venezuelan Envoy Hails AIFLD Goals

The labor movements of both the United States and the Latin American countries must demonstrate their political consciousness "under pain of becoming marginal," Venezuelan Ambassador Enrique Tejera-Paris told new graduates of the American Institute for Free Labor Development.

The ambassador addressed a class of 26 trade unionists from 14 Latin American countries and one from the United States completing the AIFLD's first program for social projects and cooperative training.

Tejera-Paris urged the students to strive to make their countries better places for their children through a great program of "welcoming the young."

"Trade union leaders," he declared, "should be examples to the young by showing a selfless, responsible political attitude."

He also hailed the AIFLD, saying its support by the AFL-CIO and the international unions "is entirely justified by its teachings and by the bonds of friendship that it ties with our leaders."

Luis Alberto Saenz, assistant to the AIFLD program director in Ecuador, responding for the class, praised the "unlimited scope and broad vision" of the program.

New Middle Class

"The workers, the very backbone of the nations," he added, "are emerging from their centuries-old predicament and forming a strong and vigorous middle class. They will have the right to think and to live, to produce and to enjoy the fruits of their labor.

Saenz pledged that he and his classmates will return to their native lands determined to "fight until we definitely achieve the fulfillment of the aspirations of our working classes."

AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Paul Hall, who presented the diplomas, reminded the class that the labor movement is an international brotherhood of workers. The AIFLD's programs to help Latin American union members build strong, democratic unions, he said, are typical of the "constructive work which democracy does in contrast to the destructive programs promoted by communism."

At the graduation luncheon Charles R. Burrows, country director in the Office of Central American Affairs in the State Dept., asked the students to take back with them the idea that both labor and management benefit when their relations are harmonious.

He said the efforts of responsible union leaders in Honduras, where he formerly was U.S. ambassador, "amply demonstrated the benefits of harmonious labor-management relations."

On behalf of the class, Pedro Pena Fana of the Dominican Republic presented a parchment scroll to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany which was accepted for him by AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler. William C. Doherty, Jr., administrator of the institute, was presented with a hat made in Ecuador.

IUE Controls On District 3 Left in Effect

Newark—After listening to more than four hours of argument, Judge James A. Coolahan of U.S. District Court here denied an application for a temporary injunction seeking to end an administratorship the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers had placed on their New York-New Jersey district.

The request for a temporary injunction was sought by Milton Weihrauch and Joseph Iozzi, president and treasurer, respectively, of IUE District 3. They had been found by the union to have "put the union's funds to use for their own personal benefit."

Weihrauch and Iozzi were present in court but refused to take the stand. Earlier, they had declined to appear before IUE's investigating board.

In leaving the union's sanctions intact, Coolahan said: "If the charges against Weihrauch are true, it would be both inequitable and an insult to the integrity of the court to put the fox back into the chicken coop."

Labor Urges Curbs to End Employer Anti-Union Acts

76.2 Million Employed:

Jobless Rate Dips After 3-Month Rise

The recent job recovery continued in July, pushing employment to a record high and edging the nation's jobless rate down to 3.9 percent, the Labor Dept. reported.

The special good news in the job picture is that the employment increases have almost completely absorbed the floodtide of young summer jobseekers.

But any good news for the sluggish manufacturing sector was further off. Factory employment totaled 19.1 million, down 300,000 from its January peak, the Labor Dept. said, adding:

"Despite this decrease, indicators of future activity point to a strengthening of demand. New orders in manufacturing, which recovered sharply in May, moved up further in June. Retail sales have picked up recently, but the inventory-sales ratio remains high."

Total employment rose by 800,000 over the month to 76.2 million in July, a record for any month. The increase was about 340,000 more than expected.

Non-farm payroll employment moved up to 70.6 million, seasonally adjusted. The Labor Dept. pointed out that the extra-seasonal rise of more than 200,000 in July followed the greater-than-seasonal increase of 250,000 in June.

On the jobless side of the picture, the decline from June's 4 percent put the key seasonally adjusted rate back in the 3.5 to 3.9 percent range of the past 18 months.

The June to July decline halted a string of three straight increases in the rate. It had moved from 3.6

Mediators Spur Talks In Copper

Salt Lake City—A special team of federal mediators was assigned to get stalled copper strike talks moving again at the request of the governors of five Western states.

Dir. William E. Simkin of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service announced that Disputes Dir. Walter Maggiolo, FM&CS Staff Rep. Dan Edwards, and Prof. James J. Healy, Harvard University, met with the governors of Arizona, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico and Utah at their request.

No Real Bargaining

The governors acted after hearing a report from union negotiators at a recent governors' conference here that there has been no real bargaining before or after the July 15 walkout of 37,000 nonferrous industry workers. The state executives then called for White House and Labor Dept. intervention to get

D.C. Government Plan Cleared by Wide Vote

Pres. Johnson's plan for a major reorganization of the District of Columbia's government—the first reform in 93 years—swept through the House by a surprisingly strong 244-to-160 vote to become effective Aug. 11.

The proposal, backed by labor, calls for replacing the District's three commissioners with a single commissioner and a nine-member council.

It is not the "home rule" bill long sought by District residents, since the President will appoint the commissioner and the nine-member Council, and Congress will retain its control over the District's affairs. However, the President stressed that the reorganization will increase participation of citizens in their government and he pledged to appoint officials who are "broadly representative."

The Administration's victory came when the House defeated a disapproval resolution. There was no opposition in the Senate.

Prior to the vote, the President appealed to the House for strong bipartisan support of his plan. The AFL-CIO also sent letters to all House members urging a "no" vote on the disapproval resolution.

The plan earlier had won 26-to-4 approval in the House Government Operations Committee. But Republicans and southern Democrats on the House District Committee—which has long held a grip on the District—sought to torpedo it. A close vote had been expected.

The President's appeal, in a letter

Biemiller Asks Strong Law:

House Urged to Plug Holes in Credit Bill

A stronger "truth-in-lending" bill than the measure enacted by the Senate, with the loopholes plugged up, was urged by AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller at a hearing before the House Subcommittee on Consumer Affairs.

Pleas for a tough law also were made by Betty Furness, Pres. Johnson's adviser on consumer matters; Under Sec. of the Treasury Joseph W. Barr, and former Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D-Ill.), who led the seven-year fight for a full disclosure act that the Senate passed, in weakened form, after he had been defeated for re-election.

In giving organized labor's views to the subcommittee, Biemiller endorsed, with some qualifications, the bill sponsored by the chairman, Rep. Leonor K. Sullivan (D-Mo.).

Mrs. Sullivan's proposal includes a requirement for full disclosure of true interest rates on revolving charge accounts, a rapidly-growing source of credit, and on other items cut from the Senate bill, including first mortgages, and retail transactions on which credit charges are less than $10.

Biemiller and Douglas both suggested that Mrs. Sullivan's proposals for an 18 percent limit on annual interest rates and a federal prohibition of the garnisheeing of wages be held up for the present.

The AFL-CIO spokesman recommended that the subjects be included in investigations by a National Commission on Consumer Finance which her bill would set up. He noted that the President has called for a special study of wage garnishment by the Justice Dept. in cooperation with the Labor Dept. and the Office of Economic Opportunity.

"In view of the widespread use of consumer credit and its increasing volume," Biemiller said, "there is ample reason to insist that at the very least and as the first order of business, consumers be given elementary information on what this credit costs them, in terms they can understand."

The rates now are not disclosed at all or are given in some form

Asks Action In Congress On NLRA

By Eugene A. Kelly

The AFL-CIO urged Congress to shore up the National Labor Relations Act to protect workers against employers engaging in wholesale lawbreaking to smash organizing attempts.

"Flagrant employer abuse of the federal laws will continue as long as remedies remain inadequate—no more than a slap on the wrist," AFL-CIO Dir. of Organization William L. Kircher told a Special House Labor subcommittee.

Pollock Cites Flaws

Pres. William Pollock of the Textile Workers Union of America charged that weaknesses in the labor act abandon workers to the mercy of ruthless employers.

He called for remedies that would provide sharper teeth for more effective law enforcement, speed up National Labor Relations Board procedures and restore to workers their "right to organize and bargain collectively—free from the fear of discharge, intimidation and coercion by employers" and community leaders.

Pollock, Kircher and James M. Pierce of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. sketched in the major outlines of labor's disenchantment with the law and its time-consuming enforcement processes. First-person experiences were related by eight of the more than 300 employes fired by J. P. Stevens & Co., big Carolina textile chain, for wearing union buttons or otherwise exercis-

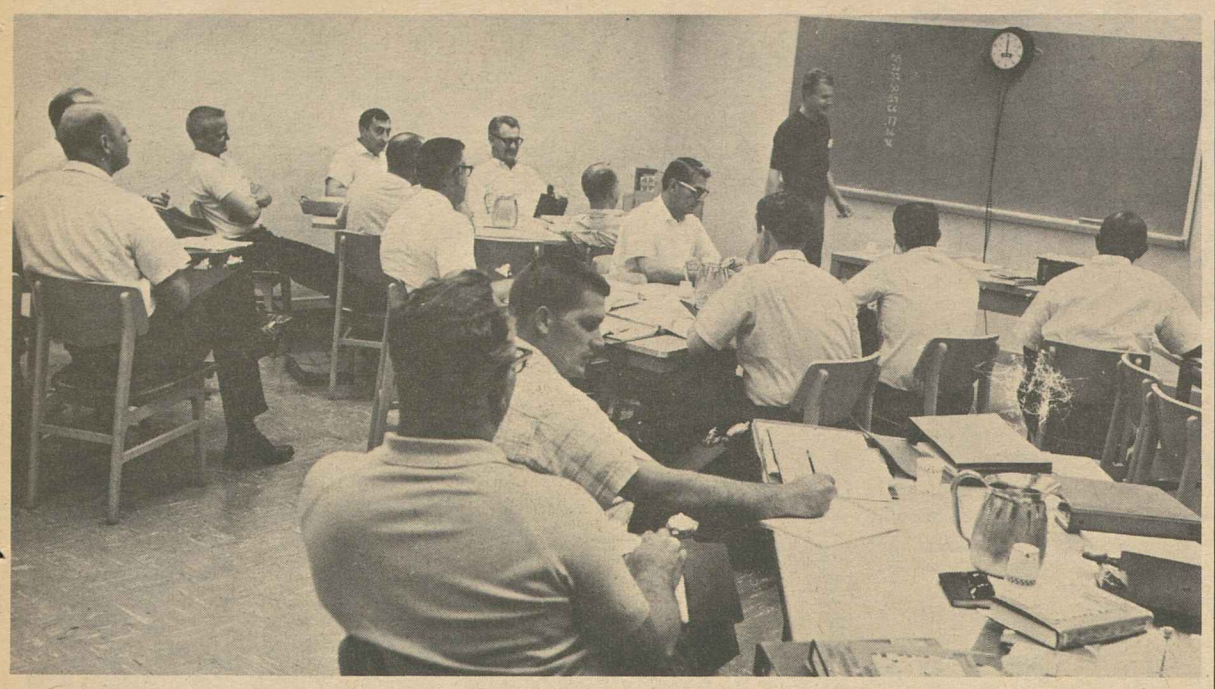
Witness Fired; Thompson Asks Justice Dept. Probe

Chairman Frank Thompson of a Special House Labor subcommittee announced that he will ask the Justice Dept. to investigate the report of a Rock Hill, S. C., textile worker that she lost her $1-an-hour job with a Rock Hill nursing home for asking time off to testify at subcommittee hearings into employer abuse of the labor law.

Mrs. Doris Hicklin, mother of a soldier serving in Viet Nam, came anyway to tell how she was fired by J. P. Stevens & Co. in 1963 for joining the Textile Workers Union of America, how she took a job as a nurse's aide because she is the sole support of her family; and how she enrolled in a course at York County Hospital to improve her knowledge of nursing care.

The nursing home told her not to come back when she asked for an unpaid leave to tell her story in Washington, and the hospital dropped her from the course in an area where nursing help is desperately needed, she testified.

Thompson said he will ask the U.S. attorney general to seek the full penalty of the law against intimidating a congressional witness if the charges are substantiated.



STAFF MEMBERS from AFL-CIO unions give their attention to a problem in setting incentive work standards as part of classroom work during the Union Industrial Engineering Institutes held at the University of Wisconsin at Madison. The instructor at the blackboard is Richard Humphreys, assistant to the president of the Allied Industrial Workers. The Institutes were jointly sponsored by the University and the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research.

Engineering Institutes Graduate 60 Staffers

Madison, Wis.—Sixty staff members from 19 AFL-CIO unions received certificates from the University of Wisconsin's School for Workers here at the close of the 10th annual Union Industrial Engineer Institutes.

The latest graduates brought to more than 600 the total number of representatives from unions who have attended the institutes since they began in 1957, according to the sponsoring School for Workers and the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research.

Participants attended classes during the day and then did "homework" that included preparing arbitration cases and doing research into court and National Labor Relations Board decisions.

Subjects studied were the establishment of work standards, job evaluation and related problems and collective bargaining as it applies to work measurement problems. Practical work was done at the university's machine shop facilities.

The institutes' faculty was headed by Dr. Malcom Gotterer of the business graduate school at Pennsylvania State University, Dr. George Hagglund and Prof. Norris Tibbetts of the University of Wisconsin's School for Workers, and Bertram Gottlieb, AFL-CIO industrial engineer.

Other instructors were Prof. Russell Allen of Michigan State University; Dick Humphreys, assistant to the president, Allied Industrial Workers; Kermit Mead, engineering department, Auto Workers; John Zalusky, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers research department; Richard Perry, School for Workers; Fred Simon, engineering representative, Auto Workers and Bernard King, a Syracuse, N.Y. attorney.

Institutes Praised

Gottlieb described the institutes as "providing one of the best means of study for skilled union members concerned with industrial engineering and its relationship to collective bargaining."

He cited earlier action taken by Pres. P. L. Siemiller of the Machinists in "earnestly" recommending the institutes to IAM staff representatives.

Siemiller announced that the institutes are so "well adapted to IAM needs" that the union no longer includes similar courses in its own leadership schools.

Grants Made to Set Up 2 Local Press Councils

Two experiments in press-community relations have been given support by the Mellett Fund for a Free & Responsible Press, Pres. Ben H. Bagdikian announced.

The fund has awarded $16,250 to Dr. William L. Rivers, of the Leland Stanford University Dept. of Communication, for a project that will establish, administer and report on community press councils in Bend, Ore., and Redwood City, Calif.

The councils will be composed of community representatives who regularly will discuss press performance with the publishers of the local newspapers. Several different procedures will be tried in an effort to determine the best way to develop a fruitful dialogue between a community and its newspaper.

Cooperating are Raymond L. Spangler, publisher of the Redwood City Tribune, and Robert W. Chandler, publisher of the Bend Bulletin. The Tribune, in a city with 60,000 population, has 21,000 circulation. The Bulletin has 7,800 circulation in a city of 12,000 population.

The Mellett fund was created by the late Lowell Mellett, newspaper editor and columnist, who left a bequest to the Newspaper Guild to finance a study of methods of encouraging responsible performance by the press without chopping away at established press freedom. The ANG established the fund as an independent non-profit corporation to administer the bequest.

Bagdikian said the project is aimed at providing knowledge "that will help others in this country establish in their own communities a continuing, critical and creative relationship between newspapers and readers, without infringing on editorial independence."

"It is our hope that this will be a genuine dialogue," he added, "with community representatives learning more about the problems and values of community newspapers as well as providing a unique channel for publishers to hear from their communities."

AFL-CIO Updates Publications List

A new listing of AFL-CIO publications containing the material on a wide number of subjects is now available from the federation.

The listing contains brief descriptions and prices on about 50 current publications ranging from leaflets to books as well as information on reprints available from the AFL-CIO American Federationist.

Copies of the Publications List are available without cost from the AFL-CIO Pamphlet Division, 815 16th Street, N. W., Washington, D. C. 20006.

UAW Slates Strike Votes At GM Plants

Detroit—Strike authorization votes will be taken the week of Aug. 20 at 163 General Motors Corp. locations, the Auto Workers announced in letters to local union presidents.

The union's 415,000 members at GM will be asked to approve a proposal giving union negotiators the authority to call a strike if a satisfactory contract is not reached in negotiations now going on. The action is customarily taken in contract bargaining with the auto industry, the UAW said.

GM management's attitude at the bargaining table to date is "solidly negative," UAW Vice Pres. Leonard Woodcock said in a report to local leaders describing the strike authorization vote.

Management "has to be made to understand," Woodcock wrote, that negotiations which began July 10 must produce a substantial wage increase for all GM workers based on GM's "fantastic productivity and profitability"; an additional increase to bring skilled trades workers a wage comparable to that of "outside" skilled workers; an improvement factor level in excess of the present 2.8 percent; a wage inequity fund to "finish the job begun in 1964," when current contracts were signed; preservation of the living-cost escalator principle, and elimination of the wage gap giving Canadian workers less than Americans.

Rutgers Program Offers Degree in Labor Studies

New Brunswick, N.J.—New Jersey residents will be able to specialize in the study of the labor movement while earning a bachelor's degree under a new program to be instituted at the University College division of Rutgers University.

Assail Rangers' Role:

Texas Convention Aids Farm Strikers

Fort Worth, Tex.—The Texas AFL-CIO raised $5,000 for the United Farm Workers Organizing Committee at its annual convention here and presented it to UFWOC Dir. Cesar Chavez as the delegates condemned Gov. John B. Connally's handling of farm labor pickets and called for the abolition of the Texas Rangers.

Convention delegates did their bit for the embattled farm workers by adding an extra $5 to each registration fee. The money was turned over to Chavez, who told the delegates: "We're going to stay in the Rio Grande Valley until we win."

UFWOC, chartered last year by the AFL-CIO, has been picketing South Texas growers for more than a year in a campaign for union recognition and a living wage. Texas labor has been strongly supporting UFWOC efforts and has called on Connally to keep the Rangers in their proper role as impartial police and not as allies of union-busting growers.

Chavez was introduced to the convention by AFL-CIO Dir. of Organization William L. Kircher, who stressed the need for grassroots leadership in organizing farm workers. In Delano, Calif., Kircher related, "I saw them do things that I would never have thought of—and I've been a professional organizer for 25 years." Among them he listed El Teatro Campesino, the farm workers' theater.

Chavez praised the Texas AFL-CIO and its leaders for their aid to farm workers and especially for the speed with which they responded when protest strikes began in the Rio Grande Valley.

"You were fast to help," he said, "not just because of your spirit of trade union solidarity, but also because you have a living tradition, and a record, of working toward the solidification of working people of this state into your great movement."

Labor's past efforts on behalf of the Mexican-American community "assured us of your immediate help in our struggle," Chavez said. He added:

"I call upon every Mexican-American worker who is a union member to recognize that while his union is the best place for him to struggle for improved wages and conditions, the union and the union hall is also the best place to join forces with his union brothers to fight for the social betterment and cultural improvement of his family and his community."

Kircher reported that AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany was the first witness before the Senate's Migratory Labor subcommittee when it resumed in Washington the hearings it had begun in Rio Grande City, Tex. Urging extension of the National Labor Relations Act to field workers, Meany said the "law of the jungle" is the only law in areas of Texas where growers and state police work hand in hand to smash union organizing attempts.

Rangers Condemned

The resolution asking disbandment of the Texas Rangers, was introduced by the state AFL-CIO's Mexican-American Affairs Committee, cited the campaign of arrests and harassment conducted by the Rangers against the striking farm workers.

The convention welcomed Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey, who told the delegates that "the violence that has erupted in many of our cities is an historic challenge to the democratic process" that the American labor movement "knows how to face."

Humphrey listed jobs, education, training and retraining, decent low-cost housing, convenient mass transit, crime control, recreational facilities and health services as necessary to the prevention of future riots.

Earlier the delegates had urged in a resolution that all unions end any remaining racial discrimination and strike down racial barriers to membership where they existed.

The newly-created Urban Affairs Committee won adoption of a resolution calling for "a national re-evaluation . . . to bring about changes within the framework of democratic society that will eliminate the causes" of rioting. "These tragedies resulted because the victims of poverty have lost hope and have been exploited for decades," the resolution asserted.

Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz, who spoke to the convention a day earlier, said "there are some situations in which there are not two sides." He listed the elimination of poverty as one of them.

TV Criticized

On the first day of the convention Sen. Ralph Yarborough (D-Tex.) condemned excessive TV coverage of "Black Power" advocates as being at least partly to blame for the rioting.

Wirtz also called this a factor, adding "the more outrageous these men get, the more time is given them on the TV news programs."

A new scholarship program for Texas students, as outlined by Harold Tate, education and research director of the state AFL-CIO, will be carried out in cooperation with state conferences of eight to ten non-union as well as union members.

A Family Action development program recommended by Rosa Walker, the state federation's women's director, also was adopted. It would carry the federation's Women's Activities Dept. a step further by trying to get the whole union family interested in political action and legislation.

The delegates also went on record as favoring "liquor-by-the-drink" over the bar, and parimutuel horse racing. Both are outlawed in Texas and have been hot issues in recent sessions of the legislature.

The convention gave the officers authority to ask the national AFL-CIO convention to place Hemisfair '68, the world's fair which will open next year in San Antonio, Tex., on the "unfair list" unless a dispute between members of the Amalgamated Transit Union and the city administration can be worked out.

AFL-CIO Regional Dir. Nicholas Kurko introduced some 50 international union officers and representatives who were at the convention.

"The most successful convention we've ever had," Pres. H. S. Hank Brown summed up as the convention floor cleared after Vice Pres. Humphrey cut the first slice out of an eight-foot-high cake marking the third anniversary of his nomination for vice president.

Council on Aging Post Goes to Jack Ossofsky

New York—Jack Ossofsky, former director of the Retirement & Community Services Dept. of the Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Employes Dist. 65, has been named associate director of the National Council on the Aging.

For the past two years Ossofsky has been in charge of projects the NCOA conducts for the Office of Economic Opportunity.

Labor Urges Curb on Anti-Union Acts

Employer Violations Show Need For Effective NLRA Remedies

ing their lawful rights.

Kircher was the leadoff witness as the subcommittee headed by Rep. Frank Thompson (D-N.J.) opened hearings into the workings of the labor law first enacted in 1935, amended by the Taft-Hartley Act in 1947 and amended again by the Landrum-Griffin Act in 1959.

Kircher told the subcommittee that the NLRA was hailed as labor's Bill of Rights when first enacted and that the dream turned into a reality for many when they came under the protection of a union contract. But for many others the dream of the law's protections has "turned into a nightmare," he said.

Many employers accept the concept of union representation after a check of cards by a neutral citizen but certain employers demand a secret ballot election conducted by the NLRB. About the latter Kircher testified:

"My experience indicates that employers do not seek secret ballot elections to ascertain the uncoerced desires of their employes. Rather they seek them to gain time to destroy the union."

He said his office recently completed a study of 495 NLRB elections held from Mar. 1, 1966, through Aug. 30, 1967, in every area of the United States, every type of industry and every kind of employe — the "largest statistical sampling ever done, to our knowledge."

94% Opposed

The study of elections involving AFL-CIO unions and the national organizing staff showed that employers actively campaigned against the union is 94 percent of the 495 campaigns.

In the 6 percent of elections in which the employer did not campaign, the union won 28 out of 29 and tied the 29th. The victory margin in the 28 elections was better than two to one, the study showed.

Employes who signed authorization cards in these elections averaged 65 percent, but the victory margin averaged 71 percent, Kircher said.

"It is obvious that unless an employer engages in a course of action to change the thinking of his employes, the percentage of employes who will support a union in a secret ballot election will equal or exceed the percentage who have signed cards," he testified.

"It should be apparent, then, why those 94 percent of employers refused to recognize the union and demanded an election. They wished to give themselves time to 'persuade' the employes that they did not really mean what they said when they signed the cards in the first place."

All but a few of the employers who seek elections, ostensibly to determine if their employes really want the union, "end up conducting an anti-union campaign before that election," Kircher told the subcommittee.

70% Captives

The study also indicated the lengths to which some employers will go to defeat the union in the fact that 70 percent of the hostile employers gave captive audience speeches, he said.

"In other words," Kircher observed, "70 percent of all employers who opposed the union were willing to halt production to do it. . . . It is a rare occasion indeed when an employer allows the union equal time to respond, or allows the union any access whatever to the plant grounds."

During fiscal 1966 the NLRB reported that 8,103 elections were conducted and 10,902 unfair labor practice charges were filed against employers. During the same period, Kircher told the congressmen, 1,936 formal complaints were issued by NLRB regional offices—85 percent of them against employers.

But "this represents only the part of the iceberg above the surface," the witness said. He noted that the complaint figure "does not include the great number of unfair practice charges filed but settled" before a complaint issues, and the significant number of unfair practice charges not filed because "the experience of the union organizers has led them to conclude that the type of remedy they would get after two or three years of litigation is just a waste of time."

It is natural for workers to want union organization, Kircher observed, "because unionism and the collective bargaining process enable them to increase their wages and obtain that dignity and self-respect which comes with job security."

To overcome these natural tendencies the employer must "create an essentially unnatural atmosphere" whose ingredients are "nearly always fear, suspicion, division and hatred," he said.

Employers are not reluctant to create this atmosphere even though they violate the law "because they know" the penalties they will incur are "similar in effect to a slingshot used against a charging elephant," he declared. Unless something more than a slingshot is found, the elephant will continue charging his prey, he said.

Kircher asked a remedy also against the type of community campaign conducted by small-town and rural businessmen who join forces to bring in a runaway industry and then consider it their "God-sent mission to keep the union out," Kircher said, citing union experiences in Kosciusko, Forest and Tupelo, Miss.

The most heinous of all law violations is blacklisting—the most primitive of all unfair labor practices, he declared.

Pollock charged in his testimony that an anti-union conspiracy, spearheaded by large textile corporations, "feeds upon the numerous deficiencies and inequities" of the law.

He cited the cases of 550 Darlington Mfg. Co. workers "who have been waiting 11 years for a remedy after being liquidated out of their jobs" for voting for a union.

He also recalled 105 employes illegally discharged by J. P. Stevens & Co. four years ago as prime examples not only of justice delayed and denied "but of justice strangled by the shortcomings of the law."

Pollock urged denial of federal contracts to employers who "deliberately and repeatedly violate" the law; double or triple damages against chronic lawbreakers; immediate reinstatement of a victimized worker when the NLRB has confirmed an improper discharge; criminal penalties against employers who discriminate against workers filing charges or giving testimany, and a number of other specific safeguards for employes.

EMPLOYER ABUSES of National Labor Relations Act have changed dreams of many workers for economic freedom into nightmares, AFL-CIO Organization Dir. William L. Kircher and other witnesses told Special House Labor subcommittee at hearings conducted by Rep. Frank Thompson (D-N.J.) into workings of labor act. Thompson (right) is subcommittee chairman.

Rail Shopcrafts' Board Spurs Settlement Effort

The five-member Presidential rail mediation board pressed further efforts to resolve the 14-month dispute between six shopcraft unions and the nation's railroads. The board has expressed hopes for a voluntary settlement that would eliminate the need to impose one.

Panel members conferred individually with negotiators for the unions and management, and the full board again met with representatives of both sides last week.

Under the law which created the board, the first 30-day mediation period expires Aug. 16. If a settlement is not reached before then, the board will begin holding formal hearings and issue settlement recommendations at the end of another 30 days.

If after a third 30-day period there is still no settlement, the board's recommendations will become mandatory.

Unions involved in the dispute are the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Railway Carmen, Machinists, Boilermakers, Sheet Metal Workers and Firemen & Oilers. They bargain jointly through the AFL-CIO Railway Employes Dept.

In another development, the Railway Labor Executives' Association, made up of 23 unions, thanked the AFL-CIO for aiding rail labor in its hard but unsuccessful fight to head off the compulsory arbitration law.

In a resolution, RLEA voiced its "deep appreciation and gratitude" for assistance from AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller, the Maritime Trades Dept. and "literally hundreds" of federation affiliates.

RLEA Chairman G. E. Leighty wrote Meany expressing the Association's "heartfelt thanks for your leadership" in opposing the anti-strike law when it was before Congress and in rallying others to the shopmen's cause.

"Although we did not win, I know that this country's railroaders will be forever grateful for your efforts," Leighty said. "This is the kind of leadership they appreciate."

Special Mediation Team Assigned To Assist Talks in Copper Strike

the parties back to the bargaining table.

The mediation team confined its efforts to labor and management representatives at Kennecott Copper Corp., largest of the domestic copper producers. As a result, negotiators held one meeting and scheduled another. Talks at the other seven companies were largely recessed, subject to further recall.

The Steelworkers and 19 other unions with members on the picket lines reported that coordinated bargaining committees met with no response at abbreviated meetings with negotiators for the Anaconda Co. and the American Smelting & Refining Co.

A union strike bulletin reported that a July 28 negotiating session with Anaconda in Butte, Mont., ended with management showing no more interest in serious bargaining than it had in previous sessions.

Anaconda "refused to change its original offer and maintained that negotiations . . . were locked into an industry-wide decision," Co-Chairman Barney Rask said for the all-union committee.

Denying a management charge that the committee has no authority to make decisions, Rask said the committee "not only has the authority but is ready to bargain" as soon as company negotiators show willingness to broaden their offer and negotiate in good faith.

Union negotiators also met with Kennecott at management's request before the special federal mediation team was named, but reported no movement from the company's previous position. At American Smelting, a July 26 meeting also ended in deadlock, the union bulletin said. Management there has produced no counterproposal to date and will make none "until union proposals have been reduced to a point that suits the company," the unions said.

Major unsettled issues that led to the strike are wages, improved pensions, and a living-cost escalator

Union bargainers at Anaconda gave management a wage comparison showing that underground miners at Butte, Mont., got $21.43 a day under the most recent contract compared with $23.88 a day for local grocery clerks, $24.41 for milk driver-salesmen, $25.80 for retail and wholesale parts employes.

Journeymen electricians at Anaconda earned $23.50 per shift as against $29.92 at the Montana Power Co. and $33.20 for building trades electricians.

"In short, all Anaconda workers are underpaid," the unions charged. Company officials refused to accept the wage comparisons, saying the process was like "comparing apples and oranges" because "company pay rates cannot be compared with any others."

As union picket lines remained solid, a fabricating subsidiary of one strikebound firm — Phelps Dodge Copper Products Corp. — raised the price of all fabricated products to be shipped in September, except copper rod, by three cents a pound to meet the "premium prices" it said it must pay.

The striking unions are the Machinists, Operating Engineers, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Auto Workers, the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, Sheet Metal Workers, Iron Workers, Carpenters, Painters, Boilermakers, Bricklayers, Molders, Plumbers & Pipefitters, Blacksmiths, Teamsters, Railroad Trainmen, Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen, Railway Carmen, the Office & Professional Employes and the USWA.

Stove Workers Open Boycott Of Magic Chef

The AFL-CIO Union Label and Service Trades Dept. has asked all-out labor support for a consumer boycott of products made by Magic Chef Pan Pacific Division at the City of Industry, Calif. The "Don't Buy" campaign was asked by the Stove Workers against that company division only because of its antiunion tactics, Dept. Sec.-Treas. Joseph Lewis said.

The union won a National Labor Relations Board election at the City of Industry plant 17 months ago. It has been unable to get an acceptable contract because of company stalling and efforts to dissipate the union's majority status, according to Sec.-Treas. Edwin F. Kaiser of the stove union.

UNION MEETING in South Viet Nam shows workers listening to a report—with gestures—by an officer of the Confederation of Vietnamese Workers (CVT). The federation is a vigorous and effective trade union center maintaining a friendly relationship with the labor movements of the free world, according to a report by Emil Lindahl of the Agency for Intl. Development, who is a member of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

Viet Nam Unions Seen Stronger Despite War, Communist Terror

South Viet Nam has an effective labor movement which is gradually gaining strength and health despite the war and Communist terror in the streets, an American unionist reported at a Washington briefing.

Emil Lindahl of the Agency for Intl. Development said the Confederation of Vietnamese Workers (CVT) is the only force for nationalism that crosses all lines to bind the country together yet is not subservient to the government or the regime.

Lindahl, home on leave after three years in Viet Nam, is a long-time member of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers. He once was president of the former Long Island Industrial Union Council.

CVT unions, he reported, represent more than 250,000 workers—tenant farmers, plantation workers, fishermen, transport workers and textile workers. They function with admirable democracy in most areas, despite wartime difficulties, and negotiate contracts not inferior to some U.S. pacts, Lindahl said in a 90-minute report backed by slides and movies.

"You may have read a lot about the bombing of innocent villagers but very little about murder in the cities by Communist assassins," Lindahl said. "More than 980 civilians were assassinated in the first four months of this year alone—some of them average workers and union members."

This was "premeditated terror" by Viet Cong agents or sympathizers, designed to prevent the government from functioning, he said.

Lindahl charged that there has been a "lack of balanced reporting about the so-called immorality of bombing as against this kind of killing."

Myopic Vision

Discussing working conditions in Viet Nam, he deplored the tendency of too many Americans to look through their own eyes, colored by their own experiences, at other countries "just entering the Twentieth Century."

In Saigon, he said, visitors may see 10,000 men and women working on the docks. They do not realize that very few work full time because there are only 3,000 full-time jobs. Pay is low—the equivalent of about 75 cents a day for women—and living costs are high.

Workers are being trained on the docks by members of the AFL-CIO Longshoremen, who deserve respect for trying to do a "first class job," the AID man said. A novelty imported by the Americans is a dock cafeteria for the barefoot workers who seldom before could count on a nourishing meal.

The CVT is headed by Tran Quoc Bouu, a Buddhist who has been president for 18 years. Its secretary-treasurer is a Catholic, and its locals consist of all classes of citizens, Buddhists, Catholics, farmers, sailors, laborers, Cambodians, island locals, urban locals and many others, Lindahl reported.

Besides negotiating contracts and pursuing worker grievances, the unions offer a social welfare program in centers handy to membership concentrations.

American unions have helped mightily, Lindahl said. The Machinists raised more than $5,000 to help pay for a union cooperative center. The Auto Workers provided medical supplies and the Steelworkers shipped food supplies. German unions helped also through the Intl. Metalworkers Federation, according to Rudolph Faupl of the IAM.

School Course On Technology Gets IBEW Aid

Staff personnel of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers are helping prepare textbook material and visual aids for the electrical aspects of a new industrial technology course to be initiated in some junior high schools this fall.

IBEW Pres. Gordon M. Freeman pledged full cooperation in the project and announced the union will finance the production of a 30-minute color film showing the part electricity and electrical workers play in daily life.

The program is based on a new concept and will replace the old "shop course" in the schools where it is introduced. It will seek to inform students about the technological world they live in, with stress on the steps and processes involved in building a modern city.

A team of educators from Ohio State University and the University of Illinois, under Dr. Edward R. Towers of OSU, has been working for two years under a federal grant to develop the program. Towers has asked for help from unions, especially those in the building field.

CHECKING PLANS for the electrical section of the new Industrial Technology course to be offered this year for the first time in many junior high schools are Pres. Gordon M. Freeman (left) of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and Dr. Edward R. Towers of Ohio State University, who had asked labor's aid in developing instructional materials. The IBEW is financing for the course a 30-minute color film on the electrician's work.

Cites 'Obvious Fallacies':

Economist Debunks R-T-W Propaganda

A Texas economics professor has exploded some statistics used by "right-to-work" proponents to contend that "work" states have had faster rates of economic growth than other states.

In the August issue of the American Federationist, the AFL-CIO magazine, Prof. Sam B. Barton of North Texas State University charges that the figures "involve obvious fallacies" both in logic and fact. His article is titled "The Economic Myth of 'Right-to-Work' Laws."

Besides debunking the "right-to-work" statistics, Barton supplements them with some of his own, which he says brings out a more meaningful comparison between states that ban the union shop and those that don't.

'Work' Data Faulty

Barton attacks National Right to Work Committee figures purporting to show faster rates of economic growth for "work" states on a number of grounds.

He points out that they "violate an elementary principle of statistical tables in omitting the gross quantities from which the rates of increase are computed."

When these "quantities" are included, Barton notes, the "propaganda value" of the argument is weakened because the comparative smallness of the base, in the case of "right-to-work" states, "tends to inflate relatively small volume increases into relatively large rate increases."

Barton finds that the "more rapid rates of increase in 'work' states preceded 1947, the year when Taft-Hartley's Section 14(b) and most of the 'right-to-work' laws were passed."

"Surely," he adds, "the supporters of 'right-to-work' laws would not have us believe that such legislation accounts for rates of growth advantages that existed even before such laws were invented."

In his figures, Barton shows that:

- "Most of the 'work' states are poor." In 1963, 15 of the 18 "right-to-work" states ranked below the national median in per capita income. Their general standing was no better in 1963 than in 1947.
- "There is little, if any, evidence to support the assumption that 'work' legislation had any substantial effect on income standing."
- The comparison made by the committee between "work" states and "other" states was "basically regional comparisons between newer and older industrial areas" ignoring political, technological and resource factors that also account for differences in rate growths.

Barton also finds that "right to work" states are the same states that use a number of "devices" to attract industry, such as "tax subsidies, free plants, low wages and anti-union laws."

None of the "work" states, he notes, has a minimum wage law approaching federal standards, only five have fair employment practice laws, and old-age pensions and unemployment benefits are "sub-standard" in most of the "work" states.

Barton grants that "right to work" and the "other devices" attract industry but says it is "less certain" whether they contribute to the wealth of a state and the income of its people.

"For example," he concludes, "Mississippi, one of the most aggressive practitioners of this policy for the past three decades, remains, as it was at the beginning, lowest in the nation in per capita income."

Gas Company Charged With 'Reprisal' Lockout

Pres. A. F. Grospiron of the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers has charged Laclede Gas Co. of St. Louis with locking out 300 of its workers in reprisal for testimony given before Congress by an OCAW business agent in St. Louis.

The charge was made in a telegram sent to Sen. Warren Magnuson (D-Wash.), chairman of a subcommittee which recently held hearings on a bill to provide federal safety standards for natural gas pipelines.

Grospiron's wire set forth these facts:

- Contracts between Laclede and two OCAW locals, numbers 5-6 and 5-194, expired at midnight July 31 without a settlement in negotiations. Bargaining continued on a day-to-day basis.
- On Aug. 2, Robert Tibbs, local 5-6 business agent, testified before the subcommittee "regarding numerous unsafe conditions" in gas pipelines under St. Louis streets. (His testimony had been set for May but was delayed by request of the subcommittee.)
- On Aug. 3, Federal Mediator Chandler Fizer asked the firm and union to extend their contracts even though their dispute was still unsettled. The union agreed; Laclede refused. Even so, OCAW asked its members to continue working, without a contract.
- The following morning, Aug. 4, some 300 members of local 5-6 employed in the street department of Laclede found themselves locked out of their jobs.

"The work of this department," Grospiron said, "is to lay gas mains, replace with new pipe old mains which are dangerously corroded, and detect and repair gas leaks which cannot be repaired by emergency crews.

"We are advised that the company is receiving numerous reports of gas leaks, but it continues to attempt to operate with 300 men locked out."

In summary, Grospiron said:

"OCAW charges that Laclede has gravely endangered the lives and property of the people of St. Louis and suburbs, has used improper pressure tactics against the union, has retaliated against the exercise of good citizenship by Tibbs, and has shown contempt for the Senate by intimidation of a witness.

"We urge investigation of this matter by the subcommittee, on an emergency basis, and we respectfully suggest that you contact appropriate authorities in the executive department with a view to restoring safety in St. Louis immediately."

James Martin Heads URW Western District

Akron, O.—The appointment of James S. Martin as director of the Rubber Workers District 5, covering 11 western states with headquarters in Los Angeles, has been announced by URW Pres. Peter Bommarito. He succeeds Floyd Gartrell, who recently retired.

SELF EDUCATED, Samuel Gompers studied at home and in the shop, where he read aloud to his fellow cigar makers, thus developing his oratorical ability and stamina. The boy is played by Alan Howard; his mother is Sylvia Davis.

DURING BITTER STRIKE, young Gompers, played by Larry Robinson, learns that he is to become a father, one of rare occasions when he was at loss for words. Sophie Gompers is Claudette Nevins.

TV Special Focuses on Sam Gompers

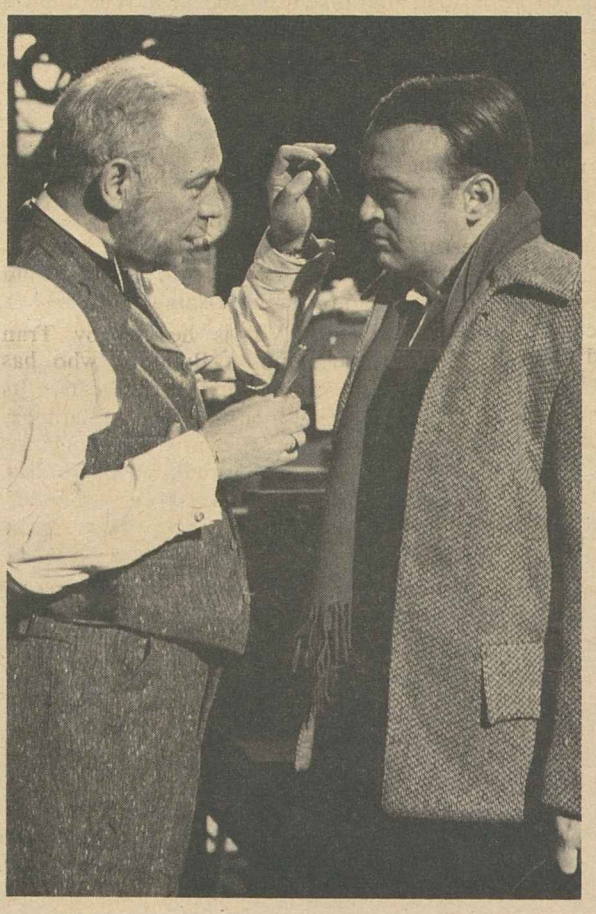
An immigrant youth in the New York slums of a century ago, Samuel Gompers embraced trade unionism as the means of escape for himself and his fellow workers from poverty, disease, starvation and ignorance.

A fiery orator and a born leader, he brought strength and militancy to the ranks of his union of cigarmakers and infused this zeal among the unionists around him. In 1881, under his leadership, the first federation of American unions was born and he served as its president for more than 40 years.

During the 1967 Labor Day period, more than 100 television stations will feature a half-hour public service dramatization of Gompers' career in "The Liquid Fire," produced under the auspices of the George Meany Foundation in conjunction with the Jewish Theological Seminary in New York.

In addition to pioneering new economic gains, Gompers' efforts helped bring about much of the early social legislation, which included child labor laws, workmen's compensation, the eight-hour day and other standards of American life.

During World War I Gompers was an important international figure. Though a pacifist, he helped to rally American and allied workers behind the democracies. After the war he was an architect in the creation of the Intl. Labor Organization, the worldwide organization that functions today as a specialized agency of the United Nations in seeking to raise workers' standards. Always internationally-minded, at the time of his death in 1924 Gompers was seeking to establish a Pan-American Federation of Labor.



A LEADER OF WORKERS, he is shown here rejecting bribe offer by cigar manufacturer (Rudy Bond) during his local's strike. At right, he acknowledges cheers upon election as first president of organized labor. The role of Gompers is portrayed by Leon Janney.

CONSTANT STRUGGLES beset the labor movement then, too. Gompers here is consoled by associate (Douglas Watson). For many years he was the sole full-time representative of the American Federation of Labor.

GOMPERS' EFFORTS in behalf of Latin American workers helped bring citizenship and union rights to Puerto Rico, for which he is thanked by Senor Iglesias, played by Luis Van Rooten.

Ghetto of the Mind

MEMBERS of the conservative coalition in the House who laughed and joked at the idea of using federal funds to protect children from rats have demonstrated a new shocking callousness and blindness on the crisis in the cities.

The government, they contend, should cut back sharply on its efforts to salvage the cities and relieve poverty so as not to reward the rioters and rioting.

Police, troops and curfews may be needed to keep the peace when violence erupts. But the festering decay that has gone neglected for so long cannot be contained behind barricades. It must be rooted out without delay.

The needed programs are barely under way, but the conservative coalition is hacking away to cut them back to the point of complete ineffectualness.

The tragedy is that many of the congressmen who vote against the programs to save the cities appear to be sincerely convinced that they are reflecting the sentiments of their constituents. We cannot believe that this is so, that Americans will turn away from the battle against poverty.

But there is a real problem. In the words of Sargent Shriver there is a "terrible isolation" of the affluent in the nation, those who live in relative comfort and security, from the poor in the cities. This isolation, says Shriver, breeds "distrust and hatred."

And, he continues, along with the physical ghetto of the city slum "there is another kind of ghetto—an interior ghetto of the mind where we seal off parts of democracy that don't suit us, where we box off our obligations to justice and shut out our commitments to fairness."

This "ghetto of the mind" must not and cannot be allowed to go unchallenged. And the first place to mount that challenge is in Congress where the solutions to many of the ills of the cities must be fashioned.

The Whole Truth

THE URGENT NEED for a strong "truth-in-lending" law was underscored in some rather startling figures presented to the House subcommittee holding hearings on the Senate-passed measure.

In 1966 American consumer debt, excluding mortgages, totaled $95 billion on which consumers paid credit charges of $13 billion.

The need for a law that gives the consumer the basic information on how much he is paying for credit and at what interest rate seems beyond debate in terms of the enormous amount of money involved.

The Senate measure, while a landmark in the long struggle to enact "truth-in-lending" legislation, has some weaknesses that should be corrected in the House. First mortgage loans—probably the biggest credit transaction that most families are involved in—revolving charge accounts in department stores and finance charges under $10 were excluded from the disclosure provisions of the Senate measure and should be restored in the House.

With a $13 billion stake in the nation's credit business, consumers have an absolute right to know clearly and simply how much they are paying for what.

'The Work Is There to Be Done':

O'Hara Bill Seeks Million Jobs As 'Essential Answer' to Riots

The following remarks were made on the House floor by Rep. James G. O'Hara (D-Mich.) on introduction of his bill to provide a million new jobs a year for persons now unemployed or seriously underemployed.

A FEW DAYS AGO the House of Representatives passed, by an overwhelming margin, a bill designed to assist law enforcement officers in coping with the outward symptoms of what I referred to during the debate as America's most serious crisis since the Civil War. That bill contained, among other provisions, a generous authorization for funds to train such officers in combatting riots.

But attacking the symptoms of a major cancer in the body politic is only part of the job—and the easier and more superficial part, at that. Now we must turn to the other part of the job—the eradication of the root causes of civil unrest.

The Congress and the President have been working together, along with dedicated state and local officials in every part of the nation, to strike at the causes of the dangerous sense of irrelevance that makes strangers in a strange land of so many of our fellow Americans. This sense of irrelevance, I suggest, is a deeper wound to the human soul than segregation or discrimination or poverty—though it adds to the pain of each of these.

When a whole technology is changing, as our is; when the entire industrial pattern is being revolutionized, as ours is, when the strength and willingness to work that was all that many Americans could bring to the market place is no longer a sufficient commodity with which to earn a living; then people begin to wonder what they exist for, and whether they have any meaning as individuals in the economy and in the society. When they feel this way, they lose any sense of identity and they are easy prey to the first demagogue who comes along.

Americans are a complex people, and our needs are complex. But the basic need of any human being is a purpose—a function to fulfill—a job to do. Jobs are not the whole answer to the problems that are facing our society, but they are an essential answer. And while the agenda of our society does not end with the goal of full employment, it most surely begins there.

To achieve the goal of full employment—a goal to which the Congress and the nation have been pledged since the landmark Employment Act of 1946—a large number of my House colleagues and I have proposed legislation to provide a program of jobs for people willing and able to work. This bill calls for a massive investment in the form of grants to federal, state and local government agencies and to private non-profit organizations, to help them bear the cost of providing a million new jobs a year to people who are now unemployed or seriously underemployed. The bill does not specify the kinds of jobs that can be offered, but it clearly envisages what I could call "entrance jobs"—jobs in urban improvement, jobs as teachers' aides, hospital aides, jobs on reforestation projects, jobs which the economy needs, and which the unemployed need, but jobs which do not now exist. The bill further provides that such jobs will be offered subject to a brief but essential set of standards guaranteeing that the men and women who are offered these jobs will be paid at a level high enough to sustain human dignity and under the protections which other working people take for granted.

I CAN HEAR IT SAID that this is a vast "make-work" bill. That is not the case. The work is there to be done, and there are vast areas in which the nation desperately needs the services of its unemployed. This is a "make-job" program to fill the unfilled and the dangerous gap between what the country and its people need and what is presently available in the way of jobs.

I will not exaggerate the claims for this legislation. I believe the passage of this bill will not solve all our problems. It will not forever and immediately erase unemployment, nor will it bring within the first week of its operation a total sense of belonging—a full realization of relevance to every American who today feels he does not have anything to offer this society. But it is a beginning and an ambitious beginning.

The Employment Act, as I mentioned, pledged us to a national policy "for assuring full employment." That was 21 years ago and many Americans are still unable to find work. The time has come, I think, to redeem that pledge.

Kircher Testifies:

Employer Demand for Election Sure Signal of Anti-Union Drive

The following is excerpted from the testimony of AFL-CIO Organization Dir. William L. Kircher before the Special Labor subcommittee of the House Labor Committee on a bill to increase the effectiveness of remedies under the National Labor Relations Act.

I WOULD LIKE very much to come before you today and report that the employer who accepts unionization and allows his employes to make a free and uncoerced decision as to whether they want union representation is in the vast majority. It would be in the public interest if this were true, for the acceptance of unionism has proven to be a wise business decision because an atmosphere of hostility in the organizing campaign is carried over into the collective bargaining relationship.

I regret very much that that is not the case. Ninety-four percent of all employers who seek NLRB elections, ostensibly to determine whether their employes really want the union, end up conducting an anti-union campaign before that election. Some indications of the lengths to which these employers will go in their attempts to defeat the union in the election is indicated by the methods of communication they use to do it.

We found from our study that 70 percent of all the employers who opposed the union gave captive audience speeches. A captive audience speech is one given during production time by the plant superintendent or other agent of the employer. In other words, 70 percent of all employers who opposed the union were willing to halt production to do it. In case there is any lingering doubt in your minds, let me indicate that it is a rare occasion indeed when an employer allows the union equal time to respond or allows the union any access whatever to the plant grounds.

Perhaps even more significant from an organizing point of view is the timing of these speeches. We conducted a special examination of the speeches given during the past four months and found that 50 percent of them were given within the last 72 hours before the election. Thus they were timed to have their greatest impact and to prevent the union from utilizing other slower means of communication to respond. As a matter of fact, 7 percent of these speeches were given in the last 24 hours before the election. This is a violation of the board's election regulations, but this rather clear rule does not seem to have much impact on 7 percent of the employers.

We realize, of course, that not every employer speech and not every action taken by the employer is an unfair labor practice. But to give you an idea of how often employers violate the National Labor Relations Act we need but turn to the annual report of the NLRB for fiscal 1966. In that period, 8,103 elections were held, and in the same period 10,902 unfair labor practice charges were filed against the employers. During that period 1,936 formal complaints were issued by regional offices of the NLRB. Eighty-five percent of them were issued against employers. But this represents only the part of the "iceberg above the surface."

This figure on complaints does not include the great number of unfair labor practice charges filed against employers which are settled before a complaint is issued. In addition, none of these figures reflects the significant unknown number of unfair labor practices committed by employers which are not filed with the NLRB because the experience of the union organizers involved has led them to conclude that the type of remedy which they would get after two or three years of litigation is just a waste of time. Finally, an indication of the trend of employer attitude toward union organizing campaigns is given by the fact that the number of unfair labor practice charges for fiscal 1966 represents an increase of 80 percent over the same category eight years ago.

OUR STUDY is also helpful in analyzing the effect of unfair labor practices on the results of elections. In the 495 elections unions won 52 percent. But when unfair labor practice activity was involved that figure was considerably reduced. Thus, when the elections occurred subsequent to firings, layoffs or demotions, unions only won 43 percent; finally, when the employer had increased wages prior to the election, unions won 37 percent. The lesson seems apparent: An employer increases his chances of defeating the union when he commits unfair labor practices.

It is very natural for workers to unionize because unionism and the collective bargaining process enable them to increase their wages and obtain dignity and self respect which comes with job security. To overcome these natural tendencies the employer must create an essentially unnatural atmosphere. The ingredients of that unnatural atmosphere are nearly always fear, suspicion, division and hatred. Employers are not reluctant to create this atmosphere even though they violate the law by doing so because they know that the sanctions they will incur are similar in effect to a slingshot used against a charging elephant. Unless something more than a slingshot is found, that elephant will continue charging. The conclusion is obvious. To combat elephantile employer unfair labor practices we need better weapons.

Hit Communists:

Indonesian Union Head Urges Support for South Vietnamese

DARIUS MARPAUNG, president of the Indonesian Christian Workers Union, declared in a national radio interview that Indonesia had been "brainwashed by the Communists for many years," but that he hoped to persuade his government to break relations with North Viet Nam and recognize South Viet Nam.

He said that his recent visit to South Viet Nam, where he had consulted with Tran Quoc Buu, president of the Confederation of Vietnamese Trade Unions, had convinced him of the necessity of supporting the South Vietnamese in their fight to preserve independence.

"The Communists in our country, before they were ousted in a coup d'etat, told us that South Viet Nam is just a puppet of the United States and that the National Liberation Front, the Viet Cong, is a patriotic movement," he reported on the AFL-CIO public service program, Labor News Conference, heard on the Mutual Broadcasting System.

Marpaung said he had learned that the Viet Cong "is purely a Communist terrorist organization and the National Liberation Front is purely a political arm of the Lao Dong, the Communist Party of North Viet Nam."

APPEARING on the same program was Harry Goldberg, AFL-CIO international affairs representative, who served in Indonesia for several years as a representative of the AFL Free Trade Union Committee and more recently represented the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions there.

Goldberg said that some Indonesian generals had told him: "We are very glad the Americans are in Viet Nam. We have an example there of a definite stand against a Communist takeover. What happened there encouraged us to the coup d'etat when the Communists tried to take over here."

Reporters on the program were Richard Dudman, Washington correspondent for the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, and Harry Conn, editor of Press Associates, Inc.

ORGANIZED LABOR in the United States has long sought the friendship of the American farmer. In some cases this friendship has been reciprocated; in others it has been curtly rejected by men who would rather make the farmer and the industrial worker enemies instead of friends.

The relationship between organized labor and the National Farmers Union is an example of close cooperation. In recent years, the relationship between labor and the National Grange has improved. The Grange—long representative of the "family farmer"—has become more moderate in its stand on matters of deep concern to workers.

But the stubborn holdout has been and continues to be the American Farm Bureau Federation. This powerful organization has been a persistent and implacable enemy of organized labor and the great social and economic programs of the past 35 years.

A defender of "right-to-work," the Farm Bureau again showed its colors recently when its representative appeared before a Senate committee and opposed the right of farm workers to organize under the protection of the National Labor Relations Act.

Its political, social and economic philosophy as revealed in its conventions' resolutions is a hodge podge of free enterprise, the sacredness of property rights, decentralization of government, limited Supreme Court power, support for the Dirksen amendment which would upset the "one man-one vote" decision of the Supreme Court.

In labor-management relations, the story is clear. The Farm Bureau supports "right-to-work" laws on the state level; opposes industrywide collective bargaining; would prohibit strikes in public service and in agriculture "during a critical period of production or harvesting;" seeks "more effective remedies" against secondary boycotts, "featherbedding," recognition and organizational picketing; wants punishment authority taken away from the National Labor Relations Board and given to the courts; opposes "any increase in the minimum wage and the extension of coverage to additional groups;" deplores "efforts to reduce the length of the work week either by legislative action or labor-management negotiations;" and would limit federal regulation of farm labor.

FAR FROM the dirt farmer, the Farm Bureau had its roots in a Chamber of Commerce. It was created as a "bureau" of the Binghamton, N.Y., Chamber of Commerce in 1909. Its original financial support came from the Binghamton Chamber of Commerce, the Delaware, Lackawanna & Hudson Railroad and extension funds from the U.S. Dept. of Agriculture.

County agents became Farm Bureau representatives and as such held semi-official status enabling them both to recruit new members and, above all, to exercise a dominant influence on the thinking of farmers in their areas. Only in recent years have the official ties between the Dept. of Agriculture and the Farm Bureau been cut so that county agents no longer are Farm Bureau employes.

With its headquarters in Chicago, the Farm Bureau has a large professional staff to handle its "farm" interests and most of all its business interests.

Its leaders have been highly conservative and one of them, at least, Allan B. Kline, is a trustee of Americans for Constitutional Action, a right-wing group headed by retired Adm. Ben Moreell.

In "Who's Behind Our Farm Policy," published in 1959, Wesley McCune wrote that the Farm Bureau was "conceived by businessmen, born in a Chamber of Commerce, nurtured on funds from industry and has never completely left its home and parents."

That statement is still true. Ever since its founding some 60 years ago, the American Farm Bureau Federation has managed to avoid the same kind of scrutiny that has been directed against many other segments of American life. Perhaps the time has now come for that scrutiny to be made.

How to Buy:

Happiness May Be a White Pill But the FTC Is Sort of Doubtful

By Sidney Margolius

YOU ARE ABOUT to lose some of your most exciting, suspenseful TV commercials, like the one showing the woman who beats up her kid, husband and neighbors because somebody slammed a door. Then she swallows a brand-name aspirin tablet and loves everybody again. Happiness in a little white pill.

You no longer even may get to see diagrams of your interior plumbing showing how a brand-name aspirin speeds through your pipes while old slow-pokey crawls along.

The Federal Trade Commission, with due deliberation, has just said what we've been telling you for years. You might as well buy the 15-cent private-brand aspirins offered by co-ops, department stores and many drug stores, instead of paying 69 cents to $1.39 and even more for advertised brands, sometimes with a few secondary ingredients added.

Now the FTC is about a propose a rule, if the brand-name aspirin packagers can't convince it otherwise. It will bar claims of effectiveness or safety which contradict or exceed statements on the label. Sometimes the aspirin advertisers make claims on TV which they don't dare make on their package labels.

What ran the aspirin packagers afoul of the FTC is the lengths they have been going to in advertising uses for aspirin. Aspirin is merely a mild pain-reliever. But the ads have suggested, or hinted broadly, that aspirin and related compounds should be taken for "irritability," "jittery nerves" and "tension."

Other "objectionable" claims for analgesics (pain relievers) noted by the FDA include such conditions as influenza, lumbago, migraine, neuritis, sciatica, sleeplessness and tension headaches. The FDA feels that such conditions cannot be diagnosed by a layman and are too serious to risk treatment without a doctor's care.

The FTC and Bristol-Meyers Co., manufacturers of Bufferin, currently are in dispute over Bufferin's claims for its possible usefulness for arthritis as shown in a medical study.

The FTC previously had complained about Bufferin's insistent assertions that its additional ingredient (an antacid) prevented stomach upsets. FTC-sponsored research found that there was no significant difference in frequency of stomach upset between the two ordinary aspirin brands in the test and Bufferin.

All that Bufferin has over aspirin, for its much higher price, is the added antacid. If you really suffer stomach upset when taking aspirin, all you need do is take it with a pinch of a common antacid like soda bicarb or magnesium sulfate, and presto! you're buffered. Or drink a full glass of water when taking aspirin to help guard against upset. Or private brands of buffered aspirin are available at half the price.

PRODUCTS like Anacin and Excedrin, which have "a combination of ingredients your doctor recommends," cost about twice as much as ordinary brand-name aspirin, and actually 10 times the price of private-brand aspirin. Such combination products are usually about two-thirds aspirin plus an additional pain-reliever like phenacetin, plus a little caffeine.

More new variations of aspirin are appearing on the market. These include new time-released aspirins like Measurin, Norgesic, Stendin and Relay. The FDA has questioned the claims made by these products on the grounds that the clinical investigation reports on which the claims were based were incomplete or otherwise faulty. (Some of the people reported by an outside clinical investigator as receiving Stendin during the clinical trials actually were deceased, the FDA said.)

Another new pain reliever advertised in the women's magazines is Vanquish, with two of everything: "two pain relievers . . . plus two buffering agents . . . plus the fifth ingredient." But the ads do not say what any of the ingredients are, a notable instance of "advertising by omission" that characterizes such medicine advertising.

A related case of aspirin-phenacetin-caffeine combined with another ingredient and sold under a brand name is Coriciden, a widely-used decongestant pill. The other ingredient is an antihistamine. While the antihistamine is a genuine medical ingredient often prescribed by doctors, the price under the advertised name is $1.53 for 24 tablets.

Pharmacists can buy a comparable product under the generic name of chlorpheniramine maleate with APC for $5 per 1000 tablets, or a half-cent apiece. Thus the actual wholesale value is about 12 cents for 24 tablets. At retail, comparable private-brand combinations of antihistamine, aspirin, phenacetin and caffeine sell for as little as $1.50 per 100 tablets.

As we used to say in the old days, don't take any wooden nickels.

From Soup to Nonsense:

A Wandering Sense of Direction Holds Interesting Possibilities

By Jane Goodsell

I WAS TICKLED to read that Lillian Hellman has such a poor sense of direction she frequently gets lost on her own grounds and can't find her way back home. Lillian Hellman is an eminent playwright who twice won the New York Drama Critics' Circle Award, and I think that proves she is no dimwit. I find it consoling to share my affliction with someone of Miss Hellman's mentality.

Actually, I've never got lost on my own property (it's a 50x100 lot) but I do often become confused in places that don't pose directional problems for most people. In doctors' offices, for example, when I can't find the exit. And restaurants. Just last week on a return trip from the ladies' room, I had to hail a waiter to shepherd me back to my table.

My mother, from whom I inherit my deficiency (she can get lost in a ladies' room), welcomed me back with sympathetic clucking.

But my husband, who has an absolutely uncanny sense of direction and is, therefore, a lot less tolerant, remarked sarcastically that I should have sprinkled breadcrumbs like Hansel and Gretel to guide me back to my starting point.

THE WAY he looks at it, I'm always getting lost because I am dreamy and inattentive and he never gets lost because he's alert and vigilant. Which is just plain ridiculous. The reason he doesn't get lost is that he has a sense of direction.

Having spent a good part of my life in a state of geographical bewilderment, I've found it therapeutic to collect case histories of brainy individuals similarly nonplussed.

One that I particularly cherish was related by Fred Friendly, president of CBS News, who resigned a while back. Mr. Friendly, having delivered a ringing denunciation of his network's news policies and addressed an ultimatum to his boss, strode dramatically out the door of the boss's office . . . and into the coat closet.

Now that's the sort of thing that is always happening to me. But in this case, it didn't. It happened to him. And Mr. Friendly is brilliant.

Union Scholarships Open College Doors

SCHOLARSHIP AID to help young men and women meet the expenses of college educations is being awarded by an increasing number of AFL-CIO affiliates.

Most of the awards at the international union level are earmarked for the sons and daughters of members, but the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers has presented scholarships to help four young journeyman members study for degrees in the field of electrical engineering.

Winners of awards of $2,500 a year for four years, good at any accredited engineering school of the winner's choice, were:

James L. Harrison, Local 779, Columbus, Ga.; Douglas E. Hefner, Local 32, Lima, O.; Robert L. Jack, Local 332, San Jose, Calif., and Davis M. Shackleton, Local 1547, Anchorage, Alaska.

The National Maritime Union has awarded scholarships worth $2,500 a year for the four college years to nine children of members. The winners were selected by an independent panel of educators under the chairmanship of Dr. John T. Dunlop of Harvard University on the basis of competition administered for the union by the Educational Testing Service. Chosen were:

Ernesto Bachiller, New York, son of Ernesto Bachiller, who sails as a chief cook; Jose DeJesus, New York, whose father, Jose, is a merchant seaman; Otto F. McNab, Arabi, La., son of Robert O. McNab, a seaman; Candice L. Connor, New Orleans, daughter of James J. Connor, a seaman; Cheryl Margaret Francis, New Orleans, daughter of Albert Felix Francis, Jr., a seaman.

Also, John Chaiken, Springfield, Mass., whose father, Arthur Chaiken, is a fireman-watertender; Christine L. Compston, Portland, Me., daughter of William T. Compston, a baker on passenger vessels; Sandra Gayle Daws, Port Arthur, Tex., whose stepfather, Ben C. Gann, Jr., is a seaman, and Helene M. Bolden, Bryn Mawr, Pa., daughter of Edgar Bolden, a fireman-watertender.

Awards by Seafarers

The children of five members of the Seafarers have been picked by a committee of prominent educators for awards totaling $6,000 for the four years of college. They are:

Bronwyn M. Adams, daughter of Edgar Adams, Jr., Bayou Vista, La.; Anthony J. Calister, son of Raymond Calister, Brooklyn, N.Y.; Lisa Ann Cresci, granddaughter and dependent of Peter Gonzales, Jamaica, N.Y.; Philip E. Shrimpton, son of Jack (Aussie) Shrimpton, Lexington, Ky., and George S. Thurmer, son of George B. Thurmer, Oliver Springs, Tenn.

Twelve four-year scholarships worth $1,000 a year for four years have been awarded by the Machinists to 11 children of members and one member. The winners were picked by a committee of educators from among 1,400 applications which were limited by the union to the children of members and members themselves under 35 years of age.

The member-winner is George Callender, Jr., 23, of Ocean Springs, Miss., who belongs to IAM Local 1133 at the Ingalls Shipbuilding Corp., Pascagoula. He will attend Jackson County College, Gautier, Miss., and continue working at Ingalls.

The remaining winners:

Daniel Bauwens, Omaha, Neb., son of Bernard H. Bauwens of Local 1826; Clifford Butzin, Peru, Ind., son of Otto Butzin, Local 2069; Joan DiGiacobbe, Wilmington, Del., daughter of Attilio DiGiacobbe, Local 1284; Thomas P. Foley, Jr., Dover, N.H., son of Thomas Foley, Local 634; Patricia C. Hannigan, Balboa, C.Z., daughter of Joseph Hannigan, Local 699.

More Winners Named

Also, Stephanie Hernandez, Citrus Heights, Calif., daughter of Mike Hernandez, Local 1209; David S. Kemper, Vancouver, Wash., son of Eugene Kemper, Local 1374; Susan Mathews, Green Bay, Wis., daughter of Robert Mathews, Local 501; Barbara E. Richardson, Wichita, Kan., daughter of Lloyd Richardson, Local 733; David Snizek, Chicopee, Mass., son of Chester Snizek, Local 1746, and Leonore Uebelher, Alexandria, Va., daughter of Rudolph Uebelher, Local 1759.

The Glass Bottle Blowers, whose scholarship fund is supported chiefly by voluntary contributions from members, have presented awards to two children of members—Linda M. Skuse, Milpitas, Calif., daughter of Arthur R. Skuse, Local 262; and Randolph Shrider, Glenford, O., whose father, Walter R. Shrider, is employed by the Central Silica Co., a sand-producing firm.

Edward L. Wheatley Scholarships of $500 for each of four years of college study have been awarded by the Operative Potters to three children of members selected on the basis of regional competitive examinations. The scholarships honor the union's international president.

The winners are Thomas P. Gallagher, Trenton, N. J., son of Thomas P. Gallagher; Kathleen Ann Wilson, Tiffin, O., daughter of Recording Sec. Harold Wilson of Local 7, and Peggy Thyra Harding, El Sobrante, Calif., daughter of Leroy C. Harding.

James E. Jones Named To Labor Dept. Post

James E. Jones, Jr., a veteran Labor Dept. lawyer and a former staff member of the Pulp-Sulphite Workers, has been named associate solicitor in the Division of Labor Relations & Civil Rights, Sec. W. Willard Wirtz announced.

Biemiller Asks Strong Law:

House Urged to Plug Holes in Credit Bill

other than as true annual percentages, he stressed.

"The consumer is hurt in two ways," Biemiller went on. "First, he cannot readily compare the costs of competing credit offers. Second, he is led to believe that credit costs are lower than they actually are. Rates are quoted in ways that imply that they are very low, and to give the impression that they are annual rates when they are not. . . .

"In no other field of lending does such disorder and confusion prevail. Business borrowers from banks and other financial institutions would not put up with the flim-flam in credit cost quotations that is defended as appropriate and even necessary in the consumer market.

"Surveys have amply demonstrated that few consumers have any real knowledge of how much they pay for installment credit, and especially what they are paying in terms of annual interest."

Biemiller pointed out that in 1966 interest on consumer debt, including installment credit, totaled $12.7 billion. He cited a 1960 study which showed that installment purchasers who thought they were paying an average of 8.3 percent interest actually were paying 23.2 percent, and added:

"Whatever the mysteries of consumer credit financing, there is little mystery about why consumer borrowers know so little about its costs. They are concealed behind a curtain of indecipherable statistics, a curtain that's pure gold on the side of the lender."

He hailed Mrs. Sullivan's bill for its inclusion of annual rates of charge on first mortgages (defined as covering such extras as points). The AFL-CIO, he said, thinks it important that home-buyers have a clear understanding of the dollar costs on long-term loans—usually the largest debt a family contracts.

Labor can see "no excuse," he went on, for the Senate bill's exclusion of retail deals on which finance charges are less than $10. The exemption, he maintained, creates "a wide potential for evasion," and would make the inclusion of revolving credit meaningless.

Biemiller supported Mrs. Sullivan's plan to require that the term "finance charge" include all items the buyer must pay as a condition of purchasing on credit and for which he would not be charged if he paid cash.

Douglas said it was "nonsense" for department stores and other profferers of credit cards to maintain they cannot tell customers the true annual interest rate because the calculation would be too complicated.

"The rate now charged is 1.5 percent a month on the amount due at the beginning of a monthly billing period," he said. "In spite of all the hair-splitting, this is the equivalent of 18 percent a year, and there is no legitimate reason for not quoting this rate alongside and with the monthly rate. . . .

"Why shouldn't a housewife know that her credit is costing her 18 percent a year? Perhaps she could borrow somewhere else at a cheaper rate."

Miss Furness, in approving the restoration of the provisos dropped from the Senate bill, said the mere introduction of the legislation testifies that the public has decided to assert its rights.

Consumers, once a "placid lot resigned to maltreatment, oblivious of injustice, and fatalistic about the way they were treated in the market-place," she said, are now "demanding standards that will differentiate between the fraudulent and the fair, between the legally permissible and the ethically wrong."

Barr specifically urged that Senate exemption of first mortgage rates and credit transactions involving less than $10 in finance charges be restored to the bill.

He and Biemiller expressed agreement with Mrs. Sullivan's proposal to end deception in advertising of credit and financing, a matter the Senate did not consider.

Cement Workers Win Pattern Hike

Chicago—An eight-week strike of nearly 1,000 members of the Cement Workers ended the reluctance of Universal-Atlas Div. of United States Steel Corp. to accept an industry 'pattern' pact.

Management agreed to terms at a joint meeting here and the strikers returned to work. The pattern includes wage hikes of 35.5 cents an hour spread over two years; improved vacation, holiday and premium pay; layoff notice, makeup pay for service with the military reserve, and other improvements.

The agreement covers plants at Hudson, N. Y., Northampton, Pa., Leeds, Ala., Independence, Kan., and Waco, Tex. At the newly automated plant in Hannibal, Mo., a catch-up raise of 48 cents an hour was negotiated, union Pres. Felix C. Jones said.

LEADERS OF SEVEN UNIONS comprising the Stone, Glass & Clay Coordinating Committee, meeting in Washington, hear William Wright, left foreground, of the U.S. Tariff Commission, explain tariff cuts on stone, glass and clay products resulting from Kennedy round trade talks. The union leaders also explored the possibility of joint organizing, research and bargaining programs.

Stone, Glass Unions Cite Tariff Cut Impact

Seven AFL-CIO unions have warned that tariff reductions resulting from trade talks between the U.S. and other nations will have "serious economic impact" on stone, glass and clay industries.

The unions comprise the Stone, Glass & Clay Coordinating Committee. They issued their warning following a Washington meeting at which the "Kennedy round" of trade negotiations was a main item for discussion.

Pres. Lee W. Minton of the Glass Bottle Blowers, committee chairman, said: "For labor to oppose fair trade in this day and age would be utter stupidity, but to be oblivious of problems that tragically affect and disrupt industries, employment, and community life is equally the same."

Minton pointed out that the labor movement supported the Trade Expansion Act of 1962 but with the understanding that consideration would be given to industries and employment that might be injured by future trade negotiations.

In the stone, glass and clay industries, he said tariff concessions and "dumping actions" by foreign competitors are having a harsh affect "and this consideration has not been provided."

The committee also discussed other mutual problems affecting the stone, glass and clay industries, including ways in which the unions might coordinate organizing drives, collective bargaining efforts and research programs.

Union presidents leading their delegations at the meeting, besides Minton, were: Felix C. Jones, Cement, Lime & Gypsum Workers; George Parker, Flint Glass Workers; Paul Pelfrey, Brick & Clay Workers; Ralph Reiser, Glass & Ceramic Workers; and E. L. Wheatley, Potters.

Veteran Coast Unionist Robert S. Ash Retires

Oakland, Calif.—Robert S. Ash, who directed Oakland's general strike in 1946 and who has long been in the forefront of labor's wars on poverty and discrimination, retired as executive secretary-treasurer of the Alameda County AFL-CIO, on his 60th birthday, after 24 years of service.

More than 1,000 persons, including many whom he helped win public office, paid tribute to him at a testimonial dinner during which Oakland Fire Fighters Local 55 presented him with a chief's white helmet and declared him an "honorary fireman."

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany sent a message saying "you leave the trade union ranks with my personal regrets but with my very best wishes for a long and carefree retirement."

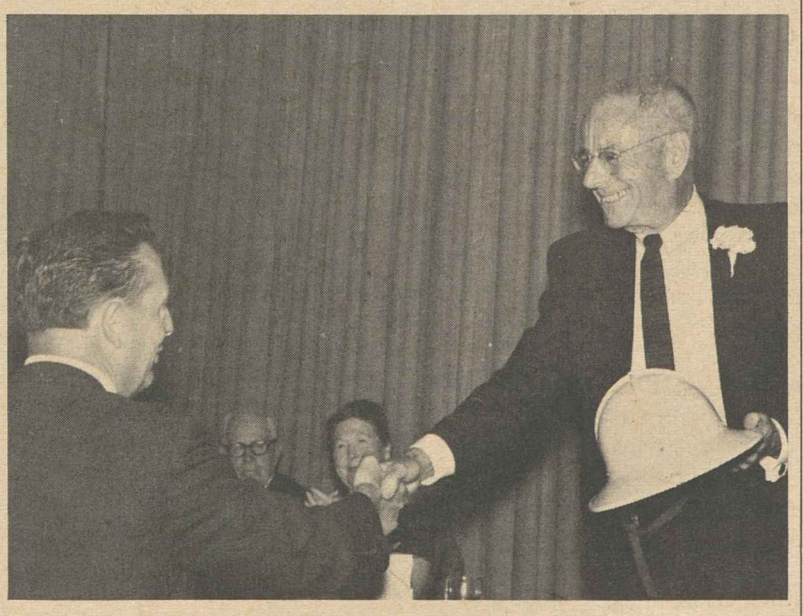
Meany said he is well aware that labor's effectiveness depends in great measure on the job done in central bodies by workers like Ash. He added: "The hours have been long, the work hard . . . and the kind words all too few."

Ash got into the labor movement in 1934, joining the Machinists as an apprentice auto mechanic. Three years later he led organization of a garage employes' local of the Teamsters, and in 1943 he was elected secretary of the local central body.

The victorious two-day general strike was touched off when Oakland authorities reneged on a promise that police would not escort trucks through Retail Clerks' picket lines at two struck department stores. Everything was closed down except vital utilities and a few neighborhood groceries until city fathers reinstated their pledge.

Ash developed the council-sponsored Work Experience & Training Program which has been fitting minority and disadvantaged youth with skills since 1965, with 1,000 trainees the goal for 1967. The program, first financed by the Office of Economic Opportunity and now by the Neighborhood Youth Corps, gets its teacher and director from union ranks.

A Teamsters' delegate when he took the AFL-CIO post, Ash was expelled in 1947 in a dispute with former Pres. Dave Beck of that union, which in turn was expelled by the AFL-CIO in 1957 because of corruption in its leadership. He has since been a member of RCIA Local 870. In addition he has been a vice president of the State AFL-CIO since 1946 and a member of the State Personnel Board since 1959.



FIRE CHIEF'S HAT was presented to Robert S. Ash (right) when he retired after 24 years as executive secretary-treasurer of the Alameda County, Calif., AFL-CIO by Mike Anthony of Oakland Fire Fighters Local 55. Over Anthony's shoulder can be seen Rep. George P. Miller (D-Calif.).

Strike-Won Benefits Pay Reagan's Bill

Santa Monica, Calif.—The health and welfare plan won by the Screen Actors Guild after a bitter strike in 1960 will pay the bill for Gov. Ronald Reagan's gall bladder operation, the union said.

Reagan, in St. John's Hospital here, also had a small growth removed from his lower lip. He is eligible for union-won hospitalization because his movie industry income in the past 12 months—basically residual payments for re-showings of "Death Valley Days"—was at least $1,000.

Franklyn Nofziger, the California Republican's press secretary, said Reagan was covered "wholly or partly" by the SAG plan.

Fire Fighters Offer Reward In Riot Attacks

The Fire Fighters have announced the union will pay a reward of $1,000 for information leading to the conviction of anyone who causes the death or permanent disabling of one of its members while he is on duty during a riot or civil insurrection.

Pres. William D. Buck and Sec.-Treas. A. E. Albertoni said the offer applies to each member killed or disabled during a specific incident. They noted that several IAFF members have been injured and some killed in disorders of recent months.

"Fire fighting in the best of circumstances is a very hazardous occupation that annually takes a heavy toll in injury and death," Buck said. "It is intolerable when the normal hazard is increased by attacks and gunfire from irresponsible, riotous citizens.

"As the union that has worked to improve the conditions of fire fighters for nearly 50 years, we feel that our rewards may help the law enforcement procedures and thus help protect our members when they are working in the line of duty."

Bricklayers Pact Sets Age, Lifting Guarantees

Kingston, Ont.—At least one of every five men hired will be aged 55 or over under a contract that ended a seven-day strike by Bricklayers Local 10 against the Kingston Builders' Exchange.

Unionists Tour National Forest Job Corps Site

Pagosa Springs, Colo. — Union officers, civic leaders and area officials climbed deep into the heart of the San Juan Mountains to take a look at the Pagosa Springs Conservation Job Corps Center near here—and liked what they saw.

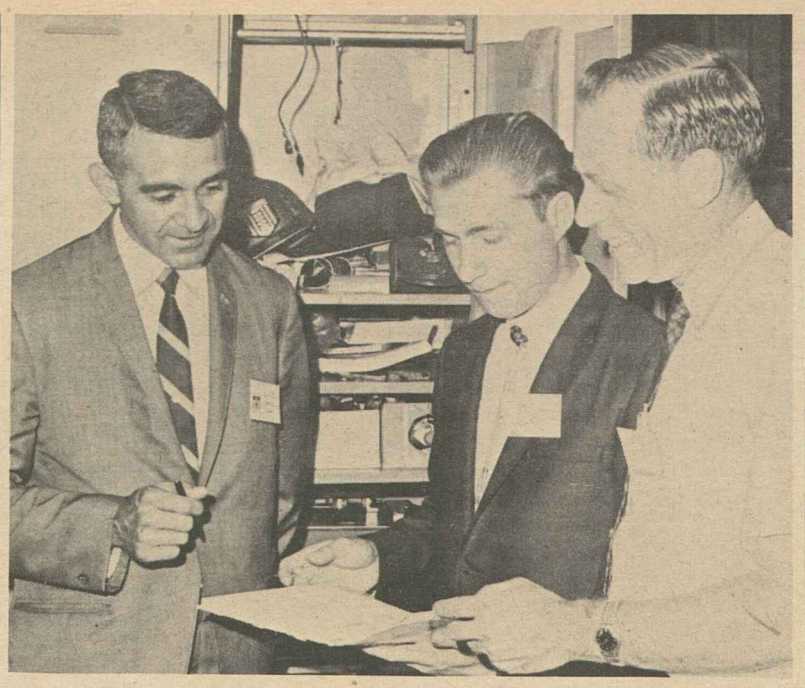
"Drink in what is being done at this Job Corps center, communicate face-to-face with the corpsmen," Pres. Herrick S. Roth of the Colorado AFL-CIO urged the union leaders. "Relate to your membership at home what you have experienced here. We can't afford any more Detroits; what we see here might be the answer for many of the youth of our nation."

Sam Martinez, special assistant to Gov. John Love (R-Colo.), hailed the corpsmen for their contribution to the state and expressed the hope that Colorado will have made a contribution to their lives by the time they are graduated.

The center, which is administered by the San Juan National Forest, U.S. Forest Service, and the State AFL-CIO were co-hosts for the visit.

Mark Reimers, center director, said the corpsmen did $163,000 worth of productive work last year in the national forest and at the center itself.

The center has a capacity of 112 corpsmen and offers a program of basic education and work-vocational skills and social development.



LABOR AND CIVIC LEADERS who visited the Pagosa Springs, Colo., Conservation Job Corps Center were welcomed by Pres. Herrick Roth (right) of the Colorado AFL-CIO and guided through the area by Tom Copeland (center) and other corpsmen. Sam Martinez (left), special assistant to Gov. John Love (R-Colo.), congratulated the corpsmen for their contributions to the state.

NMU School Upgrades 1,000 Seamen in Year

New York—The National Maritime Union's upgrading and retraining program in its first year prepared 1,074 unlicensed seamen for skilled jobs—most of them aboard new types of automated vessels.

The Coast Guard gave the graduates a total of 1,946 endorsements, it added.

The report was made public by NMU Pres. Joseph Curran as chairman of the board of trustees of the NMU Pension & Welfare Plan, which administers the program.

It showed that the school—located in its own building—graduated 305 deck-engine mechanics and engine-men, newly-created ratings on automated vessels.

In addition, it turned out 378 junior and refrigerator engineers and 14 machinists, ratings which are in short supply; 245 able seamen, 425 firemen-watertenders and oilers, and 271 in the various service and culinary skills.

Training in preparation for examinations for deck and engineer officer licenses was completed by another 23 unlicensed seamen. This phase of the program was discontinued when the NMU-affiliated Marine Officers and other officer unions inaugurated their own programs.

"The old days when seaman had to learn by doing produced a great body of skilled men for American flag ships," Curran said. "But as ships move into the computer age, a seaman must know more and learn it faster.

"Our school is making it possible. It has also helped to fill shortages of skilled ratings in the present emergency created by the Viet Nam situation and the closing of the Suez Canal.

"The school is doing a fine job on all counts. What it needs, however, is what the nation needs—a positive, long-range maritime policy for the national strength and benefits that will stem from a strong American merchant marine manned by skilled, loyal American seamen."

The program includes courses in 22 shipboard ratings covering all unlicensed categories and is under the direction of Capt. Harry A. Clark. It is financed by employers under NMU contracts and by grants approved by the New York State Education Dept. in accordance with the federal Manpower Development & Training Act.

Board and lodging at the school are free. Trainees in addition get a $160 a month subsistence allowance.

Jack Howard Appointed Deputy Manpower Chief

Jack Howard, first administrator of the Neighborhood Youth Corps and since last March head of the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Work Programs, has been named deputy administrator of the Manpower Administration.

A former San Francisco newspaperman and a one-time vice president of the Newspaper Guild, Howard has held several key manpower posts since joining the agency early in 1963. Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz in announcing the appointment said the move was intended to give additional impetus to the overall federal manpower program.

Howard will be a top assistant to Sec. of Labor for Manpower Stanley H. Ruttenberg.

"He will play a most strategic role in carrying out Pres. Johnson's call for better coordination of federal efforts to prepare the disadvantaged for employment," Wirtz said.

He said Howard will direct programs involving more than one bureau, such as the new Concentrated Employment Program, the manpower program under Model Cities, and manpower programs in the One Stop Multi-purpose Neighborhood Centers program.

Howard will be succeeded in the Bureau of Work Programs post by Mark Battle, veteran manpower and social work specialist who has been deputy administrator since the bureau was created in March.

Odell Gets USES Post

Wirtz also announced the appointment of Charles E. Odell, formerly director of the Auto Workers Older & Retired Workers Dept., as director of the U.S. Employment Service.

Odell has been special assistant to the USES director since April 1966. He succeeds Frank H. Cassell, who is returning to an executive post with the Inland Steel Co. Odell has been a key figure in developing and implementing the new Human Resources Development Program.

'Tight-Money' Danger Cited By Haggerty

Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. has warned of the danger of another round of "tight money" in commenting on Pres. Johnson's tax proposal.

Haggerty praised AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany for taking "a sound and commendable position" on the proposal for a 10 percent surcharge on personal and corporate income taxes, excepting only lowest-income persons.

Principle 'Sound'

Haggerty said "certainly there can be no reasonable dispute with the sound principle" that every American, not just the armed forces, must share in the sacrifice to defend South Viet Nam, "especially if that sacrifice recognizes the ability to pay additional taxes."

The President is "properly concerned" about the danger of spiraling inflation and higher interest rates, Haggerty said, adding:

"Many citizens, particularly in the building and construction trades and industry, are also concerned about the development of another 'tight-money' situation which had such damaging effects last year.

"This consideration must be carefully weighed in the enactment of any new fiscal measures, for the need to build and rebuild the cities of America demands very high priority."

76.2 Million Employed:

Jobless Rate Dips After 3-Month Rise

percent in March to 3.7 percent in April, 3.8 percent in May and 4 percent in June. A year ago the rate was also 3.9 percent.

There were 3.3 million persons unemployed in July, with the total dropping as expected by nearly 400,000. The July jobless total was about 200,000 higher than a year ago.

The summer youth situation was dealt with in some detail. The massive influx of youngsters into the labor force each summer causes annual apprehension over whether so many can be employed so quickly. But apparently the advance in economic activity and special efforts succeeded for the second straight summer.

This is how the Labor Dept. summarized the situation:

"A total of 12.5 million 16 to 21 year-olds were working or seeking work in the summer of 1967 (June-July average), This was an over-the-year rise of 500,000 and an increase of 1.9 million from the 1964 summer level.

"Population expansion in this age group (the youngsters born in the years following World War II) accounts for a large part of the 1964-67 labor force growth. At the same time, there has been a steady rise in youth labor force participation rates—from 60.7 percent of the civilian population in June and July 1964 to 65.1 percent in the summer of 1967."

Negro, White Rates Up

The Labor Dept. noted that the participation rates have moved up strongly—by 4.4 percent—for both white and Negro youths in this period.

Compared to last summer, employment of 16 to 21 year-olds rose by about 400,000 to 10.8 million. The service-producing sector, up 300,000, produced most of these jobs, the report said. The goods-producing industries showed no change in youth employment over the year, in contrast with a 400,000 increase between the summers of 1965 and 1966.

About 175,000 more 16 to 21 year-olds worked for federal, state and local governments this June and July than in the same months last year. Over the 1964-67 period, government employment of youth nearly doubled going from 600,000 to nearly 1.2 million.

"The 1966-67 summer employment pickup for youth just about matched their labor force expansion, leaving unemployment virtually unchanged," the Labor Dept. said.

It pointed out that the jobless rate for youth has been 13.4 percent, close to last summer's 13.5 percent, and that both are well below the June-July averages of 16.4 percent in 1964 and 15.2 percent in 1965. The jobless rate for white youth was about 12 percent in 1966 and 1967, compared to about 25 percent for Negro youth.

The job gains by industry showed that the biggest pickups came in government and miscellaneous services.

Factory Jobs Down

In manufacturing, there was a loss of 42,000 jobs, seasonally adjusted. The production worker total was down by 57,000.

The Labor Dept. said losses of 35,000 in transportation equipment and 20,000 in apparel offset gains elsewhere. The drop in transportation equipment jobs was tied to shipbuilding strikes and an early auto model changeover. The gain of 25,000 in electrical equipment was traced mainly to the return to work of those on strike a month earlier.

Contract construction jobs increased by 33,000 more than seasonally in July to an adjusted total of 3.2 million. The rise was reportedly a reflection of the return to work of persons on strike in June. The construction job total in the past five months has been well below the levels of a year ago, the Labor Dept. noted.

On hours and earnings, the Labor Dept. said the factory workweek averaged 40.3 hours in July, down seven-tenths of 1 percent from a year earlier. Hourly earnings stood at $2.81, unchanged from June but up 10 cents or 3.7 percent over the year. Weekly earnings totaled $113.24, a rise of only 1.9 percent over the year due to the drop in hours.

The workweek for non-supervisory employes on private nonfarm payrolls averaged 38.4 hours in July, down six-tenths of 1 percent from a year ago. Earnings for these 45 million workers averaged $2.66 an hour and $102.14 a week, up 10 cents and $2.30, respectively, over the year.

3-Year Pact Resolves Colt Firearms Walkout

Hartford, Conn.—Firearms makers stayed on strike against Colt Industries, Inc., for 37 days until 1,800 members of Auto Workers Local 376 won contract improvements they had been unable to get in two previous settlements.

Local Pres. Harold Conroy said members were so determined to reject another substandard contract that they struck just before the two-week vacation period and stayed out three additional weeks to win an acceptable settlement.

Members ratified a three-year agreement offering wage boosts of 38 to 69 cents an hour, improved health benefits, and settlement of some 20 long-disputed non-economic issues.

The new contract provides wage increases of 17-29 cents this year, 11-18 cents next year and 10-22 cents the third year; an extra half-holiday this year and another next year for a total of 10; three weeks' vacation after 10 years, four weeks after 20; a better cost-of-living escalator, jury duty pay, third shift bonus, and improved pensions for present and future retirees.

Management agreed to pick up the full cost of insurance for employes—$5.91 a month—and to add coverage for dependents. Also it agreed to increase group life insurance and Blue Cross coverage and to upgrade nine jobs in the bargaining units at Hartford and West Hartford.

The dispute was settled after sessions with the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service and in local bargaining. Colt plants produce rifles for the armed services but 40 percent of production is for both private and police buyers, Conroy said.

UNION MEETING in South Viet Nam shows workers listening to a report—with gestures—by an officer of the Confederation of Vietnamese Workers (CVT). The federation is a vigorous and effective trade union center maintaining a friendly relationship with the labor movements of the free world, according to a report by Emil Lindahl of the Agency for Intl. Development, who is a member of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

Viet Nam Unions Seen Stronger Despite War, Communist Terror

South Viet Nam has an effective labor movement which is gradually gaining strength and health despite the war and Communist terror in the streets, an American unionist reported at a Washington briefing.

Emil Lindahl of the Agency for Intl. Development said the Confederation of Vietnamese Workers (CVT) is the only force for nationalism that crosses all lines to bind the country together yet is not subservient to the government or the regime.

Lindahl, home on leave after three years in Viet Nam, is a long-time member of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers. He once was president of the former Long Island Industrial Union Council.

CVT unions, he reported, represent more than 250,000 workers—tenant farmers, plantation workers, fishermen, transport workers and textile workers. They function with admirable democracy in most areas, despite wartime difficulties, and negotiate contracts not inferior to some U.S. pacts, Lindahl said in a 90-minute report backed by slides and movies.

"You may have read a lot about the bombing of innocent villagers but very little about murder in the cities by Communist assassins," Lindahl said. "More than 980 civilians were assassinated in the first four months of this year alone—some of them average workers and union members."

This was "premeditated terror" by Viet Cong agents or sympathizers, designed to prevent the government from functioning, he said.

Lindahl charged that there has been a "lack of balanced reporting about the so-called immorality of bombing as against this kind of killing."

Myopic Vision

Discussing working conditions in Viet Nam, he deplored the tendency of too many Americans to look through their own eyes, colored by their own experiences, at other countries "just entering the Twentieth Century."

In Saigon, he said, visitors may see 10,000 men and women working on the docks. They do not realize that very few work full time because there are only 3,000 full-time jobs. Pay is low—the equivalent of about 75 cents a day for women—and living costs are high.

Workers are being trained on the docks by members of the AFL-CIO Longshoremen, who deserve respect for trying to do a "first class job," the AID man said. A novelty imported by the Americans is a dock cafeteria for the barefoot workers who seldom before could count on a nourishing meal.

The CVT is headed by Tran Quoc Bouu, a Buddhist who has been president for 18 years. Its secretary-treasurer is a Catholic, and its locals consist of all classes of citizens, Buddhists, Catholics, farmers, sailors, laborers, Cambodians, island locals, urban locals and many others, Lindahl reported.

Besides negotiating contracts and pursuing worker grievances, the unions offer a social welfare program in centers handy to membership concentrations.

American unions have helped mightily, Lindahl said. The Machinists raised more than $5,000 to help pay for a union cooperative center. The Auto Workers provided medical supplies and the Steelworkers shipped food supplies. German unions helped also through the Intl. Metalworkers Federation, according to Rudolph Faupl of the IAM.

School Course On Technology Gets IBEW Aid

Staff personnel of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers are helping prepare textbook material and visual aids for the electrical aspects of a new industrial technology course to be initiated in some junior high schools this fall.

IBEW Pres. Gordon M. Freeman pledged full cooperation in the project and announced the union will finance the production of a 30-minute color film showing the part electricity and electrical workers play in daily life.

The program is based on a new concept and will replace the old "shop course" in the schools where it is introduced. It will seek to inform students about the technological world they live in, with stress on the steps and processes involved in building a modern city.

A team of educators from Ohio State University and the University of Illinois, under Dr. Edward R. Towers of OSU, has been working for two years under a federal grant to develop the program. Towers has asked for help from unions, especially those in the building field.

CHECKING PLANS for the electrical section of the new Industrial Technology course to be offered this year for the first time in many junior high schools are Pres. Gordon M. Freeman (left) of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and Dr. Edward R. Towers of Ohio State University, who had asked labor's aid in developing instructional materials. The IBEW is financing for the course a 30-minute color film on the electrician's work.

Cites 'Obvious Fallacies':

Economist Debunks R-T-W Propaganda

A Texas economics professor has exploded some statistics used by "right-to-work" proponents to contend that "work" states have had faster rates of economic growth than other states.

In the August issue of the American Federationist, the AFL-CIO magazine, Prof. Sam B. Barton of North Texas State University charges that the figures "involve obvious fallacies" both in logic and fact. His article is titled "The Economic Myth of 'Right-to-Work' Laws."

Besides debunking the "right-to-work" statistics, Barton supplements them with some of his own, which he says brings out a more meaningful comparison between states that ban the union shop and those that don't.

'Work' Data Faulty

Barton attacks National Right to Work Committee figures purporting to show faster rates of economic growth for "work" states on a number of grounds.

He points out that they "violate an elementary principle of statistical tables in omitting the gross quantities from which the rates of increase are computed."

When these "quantities" are included, Barton notes, the "propaganda value" of the argument is weakened because the comparative smallness of the base, in the case of "right-to-work" states, "tends to inflate relatively small volume increases into relatively large rate increases."

Barton finds that the "more rapid rates of increase in 'work' states preceded 1947, the year when Taft-Hartley's Section 14(b) and most of the 'right-to-work' laws were passed."

"Surely," he adds, "the supporters of 'right-to-work' laws would not have us believe that such legislation accounts for rates of growth advantages that existed even before such laws were invented."

In his figures, Barton shows that:

- "Most of the 'work' states are poor." In 1963, 15 of the 18 "right-to-work" states ranked below the national median in per capita income. Their general standing was no better in 1963 than in 1947.
- "There is little, if any, evidence to support the assumption that 'work' legislation had any substantial effect on income standing."
- The comparison made by the committee between "work" states and "other" states was "basically regional comparisons between newer and older industrial areas" ignoring political, technological and resource factors that also account for differences in rate growths.

Barton also finds that "right to work" states are the same states that use a number of "devices" to attract industry, such as "tax subsidies, free plants, low wages and anti-union laws."

None of the "work" states, he notes, has a minimum wage law approaching federal standards, only five have fair employment practice laws, and old-age pensions and unemployment benefits are "sub-standard" in most of the "work" states.

Barton grants that "right to work" and the "other devices" attract industry but says it is "less certain" whether they contribute to the wealth of a state and the income of its people.

"For example," he concludes, "Mississippi, one of the most aggressive practitioners of this policy for the past three decades, remains, as it was at the beginning, lowest in the nation in per capita income."

Gas Company Charged With 'Reprisal' Lockout

Pres. A. F. Grospiron of the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers has charged Laclede Gas Co. of St. Louis with locking out 300 of its workers in reprisal for testimony given before Congress by an OCAW business agent in St. Louis.

The charge was made in a telegram sent to Sen. Warren Magnuson (D-Wash.), chairman of a subcommittee which recently held hearings on a bill to provide federal safety standards for natural gas pipelines.

Grospiron's wire set forth these facts:

- Contracts between Laclede and two OCAW locals, numbers 5-6 and 5-194, expired at midnight July 31 without a settlement in negotiations. Bargaining continued on a day-to-day basis.
- On Aug. 2, Robert Tibbs, local 5-6 business agent, testified before the subcommittee "regarding numerous unsafe conditions" in gas pipelines under St. Louis streets. (His testimony had been set for May but was delayed by request of the subcommittee.)
- On Aug. 3, Federal Mediator Chandler Fizer asked the firm and union to extend their contracts even though their dispute was still unsettled. The union agreed; Laclede refused. Even so, OCAW asked its members to continue working, without a contract.
- The following morning, Aug. 4, some 300 members of local 5-6 employed in the street department of Laclede found themselves locked out of their jobs.

"The work of this department," Grospiron said, "is to lay gas mains, replace with new pipe old mains which are dangerously corroded, and detect and repair gas leaks which cannot be repaired by emergency crews.

"We are advised that the company is receiving numerous reports of gas leaks, but it continues to attempt to operate with 300 men locked out."

In summary, Grospiron said:

"OCAW charges that Laclede has gravely endangered the lives and property of the people of St. Louis and suburbs, has used improper pressure tactics against the union, has retaliated against the exercise of good citizenship by Tibbs, and has shown contempt for the Senate by intimidation of a witness.

"We urge investigation of this matter by the subcommittee, on an emergency basis, and we respectfully suggest that you contact appropriate authorities in the executive department with a view to restoring safety in St. Louis immediately."

James Martin Heads URW Western District

Akron, O.—The appointment of James S. Martin as director of the Rubber Workers District 5, covering 11 western states with headquarters in Los Angeles, has been announced by URW Pres. Peter Bommarito. He succeeds Floyd Gartrell, who recently retired.

President's Plan Effective Aug. 11:

Strong House Vote Clears Reform of D.C. Government to Speaker John W. McCormack (D-Mass.), emphasized that "what is at stake is good government in the capital that belongs to all of us."

Johnson described his plan as a "long-awaited chance" to replace Washington's "jerry-built" government of the 1870's with "a new government for the new problems of the 1960's."

"Time and opportunity will not wait," he declared. "We must not lose the chance we have now."

AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller wrote House members that it was time to replace the "divided and confused" authority of the present District government with the Administration's plan of "broadened citizen representation and participation."

Voting against disapproval and in effect for the President's plan were 180 Democrats and 64 Republicans. Favoring the move to kill the plan were 110 Republicans and 50 Democrats.

After the vote, Johnson said he "has begun an intensive search for a good executive" to fill the commissioner post.

"I am proud of this moment and grateful for the action taken by the House for the benefit of the District and our country," he said.

The Administration suffered a setback in another area as the House virtually rewrote the President's crime-control bill.

Controls to States

A coalition of Republicans and southern Democrats tacked on amendments that turned over to the states the new controls which the Administration wanted in the hands of the Justice Dept.

The House "uprising" refused to heed warnings by Administration supporters that the states lack the means and knowledge to cope with crimes and riots. The legislation goes to the Senate where a move will be made to restore it to original form.

On several other fronts, Administration-backed legislation moved ahead:

- A Senate Labor subcommittee tentatively approved almost all of the Administration's anti-poverty program. The bill still must clear the full committee and will be subject to amendment on the floor. The program also faces a bitter fight in the House where conservatives have engaged in continuous attacks on the Office of Economic Opportunity.
- The House Public Works Committee reported a bill to revise and extend the Appalachian Regional Development Act. It authorizes an appropriation of $220 million for the period ending June 30, 1969. This is $53 million less than the amount provided in the Senate-passed bill.

Both measures contain safeguards urged by the AFL-CIO to guard against plant-piracy by the states and encouragement to "runaway" employers.

- The Administration's campaign disclosure bill, requiring across-the-board reporting of money contributed and spent during campaigns for federal office, was cleared by the Senate Rules Committee. If approved by Congress, it would represent the first updating of the Corrupt Practices Act since 1925.

In another development, a House Agriculture subcommittee weakened an Administration bill to expand federal meat inspection standards as it rejected a provision to extend federal jurisdiction over slaughter of meat sold within a state's borders.

The bill as approved would require meat processors to register with the Agriculture Dept., maintain full records and permit federal inspectors access both to these records and their plants.

Rep. Thomas S. Foley (D-Wash.), a subcommittee member, said the measure "fails to close the serious gap in the federal law which is the principal source of contaminated meat." He said he would seek action in the full committee and on the floor if necessary to put "teeth" back into the legislation.

William Lucas (left) of AFTE Local 9, representing professional employes of the National Aeronautics & Space Agency. Congress Urged to Bar Job Bias Based on Age

Age discrimination in hiring and employment has doomed millions of Americans 45 or older to permanent joblessness and poverty, Exec. Dir. William R. Hutton of the National Council of Senior Citizens charged before the House Labor subcommittee.

He called for a congressional review of all federal employment and training programs to determine the number of older men and women benefiting from them. It would show, he predicted, that no more than 11 percent of those enrolled are 45 or older and that "less than 3 percent" are 50 or over—although half of those who have been unemployed for six months or longer are 45 or older.

Hutton testified in support of bills to outlaw age discrimination in hiring and employment sponsored by Chairman Carl D. Perkins (D-Ky.) of the House Education & Labor Committee and Chairman John H. Dent (D-Pa.) of the Labor subcommittee.

He said the NCSC can get no information that any great number of the elderly are benefiting under the Concentrated Employment Program (CEP) being operated in 19 cities.

"The Washington program recently held an orientation session for a large group of which the oldest enrollee was 28." he said. "We strongly suspect that CEP programs outside Washington are no more concerned about training the elderly than the Washington CEP administrators are."

Hutton suggested that Congress consider making it mandatory "to recruit 25 or 30 percent of all trainees" for federal programs "from the unemployed who are 45 or older."

In view of recent outbreaks in the slum areas of major cities, he said, it is "understandable" that emphasis be placed on job training for young people.

"The elderly may not have had a part in these outbreaks but surely it must be difficult for them to hold younger members of their families together and keep them out of violence," he added, "when age discrimination in hiring and employment has kept them living from hand-to-month, incapable of supporting a decent standard of family life."

Farm Union Picked At Gallo Vineyards

Fresno, Calif.—The AFL-CIO United Farm Workers Organizing Committee scored its seventh victory in the California vineyards at Gallo Wineries here, winning unanimous backing in a card-check.

All of the 100 workers now working in the fields authorized UFWOC as their bargaining agent in the card-check. The labor force will grow to 800 workers at harvest time.

Meetings on a contract to cover the company's workers will start immediately.

N.Y. Unionists to Study Crisis in Urban Areas

New York—The problems of urban growth facing metropolitan New York will be studied by union members under a three-year pilot program to be conducted by more than 30 unions and the local office of the New York State School of Industrial & Labor Relations at Cornell University.

The program will be financed by a three-year $175,000 grant from the Ford Foundation, a $40,000 federal grant under the Higher Education Act, the allocation of funds by the Cornell unit and contributions from participating unions.

It includes seminars and courses with union members on such problems as water and air pollution, transport, housing, education, recreation and civil rights. Some union members will gain first-hand experience about what has been, can be and should be done to solve the complexities of urban growth by working in public and private social agencies.

An urban affairs coordinator as part of the project will help unions keep informed of what is being done by governmental bodies that deal with the city's problems so they can take action if they wish.

The program allows for a two-way approach to meeting urban programs, said Mrs. Betty Goetz Lall, the field director.

"In the first place," she said, "the financing of urban programs requires citizen support, and obviously the public wants to know how its taxes are being used to improve conditions.

"Secondly, the public not only has to support the programs but in the long run must express its needs in the designing of programs."

She pointed out that since union members are concentrated in cities, "they have a vital stake in urban life."

"Union members and their families," she added, "are often the victims of city deterioration, poor housing conditions, inadequate public transportation to jobs, and the lack of space for recreation."

A council made up of union officers and members of the Cornell faculty will help guide the program.

CWA, Phone Firm Join In Drive for Youth Jobs

A "jobs now" program that will open up immediate employment to "disadvantaged and under-qualified" persons in the Washington metropolitan area has been initiated under an agreement between the Communications Workers and the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co.

The program is directed specifically to those who have been stranded in the labor market because of under-education and lack of skills, the union and the company said. Those to be hired, it is expected, will not be able to meet normal hiring standards and will be given "special and exceptional consideration" by management and their fellow-workers during the early part of their service.

They will undergo a probationary period of not more than a year during which some contract provisions will not apply to them in order, the memorandum says, "to help solve a social problem considered by both the company and the union to be of paramount importance to the welfare of the Washington community."

The exceptions are spelled out in the memorandum. The union agreed not to use their application by the company as the basis for a claim of contract violation "or as establishing or tending to establish a precedent which should be applied to any other employe not hired in connection with the program."

The trainees will be eligible for union membership. After the probationary period they will receive the same treatment as other employes and will be covered by all clauses of the union contract.

Pioneer Program

CWA Pres. Joseph A. Beirne called it "particularly appropriate" that the program, the first of its kind in the telephone industry, should start in the nation's capital.

"The company has been admirably cooperative," he said. "It is our mutual hope that many other employers in this area and around the country will follow suit by lowering their normal hiring qualifications to give incentive to many who have known nothing but frustration, despair and under-employment.

"Similar agreements across the country could mean as many as 5,000 jobs in the Bell Telephone System for people who have lost out in the search for employment."

The project grew out of the Washington Concentrated Employment Program, part of the nation-wide search for jobs for those with limited qualifications sponsored by the Johnson Administration and being actively promoted by Vice Pres. Humphrey.

West Coast Airline Unit Ratifies Pact

Chicago—Members of the Air Line Employes have overwhelmingly ratified a new agreement on West Coast Airlines that provides average wage increases of 30.5 percent over three years. The vote was 299 to 9.

The settlement was reached after more than seven months of negotiations, mediation efforts by the National Mediation Board and an eight-day strike.

ALEA Pres. Victor J. Herbert said the new pact provides some of "the greatest gains ever negotiated for passenger service employes" on airlines. He also praised other workers for honoring ALEA's picket lines through a six-state area.

In addition to the wage benefits, the agreement calls for improvements in holidays, vacations, sick leave, travel allowance, accident and health insurance, shift premiums, and a new severance pay clause.

Meany Urges Senate Plug Gaps in Social Security Bill

Full Labor Support Set In Copper

The strike of 40,000 workers against eight major copper processing firms has the full support of the AFL-CIO, Pres. George Meany said in a statement asserting that the struggle is "one in which every union member has a stake."

"We are committed both to the principle of coordinated bargaining and to the achievement of justice for workers who have been denied it far too long." Meany said.

"We stand ready to exert whatever efforts are necessary to win this struggle, and we call upon all our affiliated unions to do the same."

Though negotiations on new contracts "nominally" began last May, most companies consented to meet only two or three times in 75 days with union committees representing the Steelworkers and locals of 18 other international unions, the statement pointed out.

"Some challenged the right of the workers to choose their own bargaining committees. None made realistic counteroffers to the union proposals. In a referendum, the workers voted by a margin of 92 percent to strike. After a fruitless two week extension of the old contracts," they walked out July 15, the statement continued.

Meany stressed that the unions are "seeking to win fair wages and working conditions in an industry where they are notoriously inadequate."

This year for the first time, he noted, unions joined together in a coordinated effort, after years of "destructive inter-union rivalry which served only to depress job conditions as the employers played off one union against the others."

Broadcasts Listed For Labor Day

AFL-CIO leaders will make major Labor Day speeches on the four nationwide radio networks on Monday, Sept. 4. The schedule:

Vice Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, ABC, 7:15 p.m.; Vice Pres. I. W. Abel, CBS, 7:35 p.m.; Vice Pres. Paul Hall, Mutual, 9:15 p.m.; Pres. George Meany, NBC, 10:45 p.m.

None have been reinstated since their firing in 1964 and all have been blacklisted by area employers, they said.

First-Person Testimony:

Workers Describe Firings, Intimidation

By Eugene A. Kelly

Workers from American mills and factories came to the Capitol to tell in their own words the methods their employers use to prevent them from doing what the law says they are free to do—organize into unions of their own choosing without unlawful interference.

As one witness told the Special House Subcommittee on Labor, it was a story of "discrimination, coercion, intimidation, surveillance, threats, company and community interference and massive illegal discharges."

The intimidation and the discharges are still occurring, another witness testified, "this week and last week and every week" despite the law and the courts.

As the witnesses left the stand, some in tears, Rep. William D. Ford (D-Mich.) observed that "even union people wouldn't believe that this is still happening" unless they can read the testimony. It is, he added, "like something out of Alice in Wonderland" to hear of events in sections of the nation that have been "totally cut off from what has been happening for the last 25 years in this country."

Subcommittee Chairman Frank Thompson (D-N.J.) scheduled additional public hearings until all who want to testify are heard. Thompson's invitation to appear was rejected by Pres. Robert T. Stevens of J. P. Stevens & Co., Inc., big government textile contractor which has fired more than 500 workers to

Says House Action Falls Short of Need

By Duane Emme

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany urged the Senate to "fill the gaps and correct defects" in the House-passed social security bill, a whittled-down version of the program Pres. Johnson sent to Congress.

"While the House improved the act, it certainly hasn't improved it enough . . . millions of social security recipients and the poorest Americans barely existing on public assistance have a right to expect more than the House voted," Meany declared.

The House approved its bill by a 414 to 3 vote under a rule barring amendments—a fact, Meany said, that puts it "clearly up to the Senate to update the bill and make it a sound downpayment on a modern social security law which the AFL-CIO supports."

The House bill would raise benefits by 12.5 percent for some 20.5 million persons on the social security rolls. The 2.5 million persons now receiving minimum benefits would be raised to $50 monthly for an individual and $75 for a couple.

The President has asked an increase of at least 15 percent for all persons on the rolls. He proposed raising the minimum benefit from the present $44 for an individual to $70 and from $66 for a couple over 65 to $105.

He also proposed that persons with at least 25 years of covered employment be guaranteed at least $100 for an individual and $150 for a couple.

Meany said the 12.5 percent increase "would still leave in dire want large numbers of social security recipients." The President's proposals for minimum benefits and a 15 per cent increase "would come closer to meeting the minimal needs of a large number of Americans," he added.

LBJ Spurs Congress to Aid Cities

Pres. Johnson has prodded Congress to restore funds cut from his model cities program and speed action on 22 other measures aimed at meeting the crisis in the nation's ghettos.

In a letter to Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield, the President said, "It has long been apparent that the health of our nation can be no better than the health of our cities. Surely not a single American can doubt this any longer, after the tragic events of this summer."

He stressed that the nation can no longer be satisfied with "business as usual" when cities face so many critical problems.

"These problems," he added, "demand the best that an enlightened nation can plan, and the most that an affluent nation can afford."

Mansfield read the letter to the Senate and then urged Congress to respond to the President's plea by passing "without delay" the Administration's proposals to help cities cure their ills.

The model cities proposal, authorized by Congress last year, provides funds for cities with compre-

Labor Bids Senate Build School Aid, Reject Crippling Block Grant Plan

An amendment-riddled federal aid to education bill passed by the House threatens "the very fabric" of the nation's education system, the AFL-CIO warned in testimony before a Senate Labor subcommittee.

Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller urged the Senate to reject House amendments to the Elementary & Secondary Education Act and instead pass Administration-proposed amendments that "build upon successful programs we already have."

The Administration bill, sponsored by Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.) subcommittee chairman, authorizes $3.5 billion in federal funds and strengthens a number of provisions of the act passed in 1965.

In the House, Administration forces, aided by some Republican votes, defeated an amendment by Rep. Albert H. Quie (R-Minn.) that would have abolished direct federal grants to school districts for programs to aid the education of children from low-income families. The money would have been handed over to the states.

But the House did adopt a series of amendments by Rep. Edith Green (D-Ore.) that applied the "states rights" approach to other sections of the Administration legislation.

One amendment turns over to the states the entire program of developing new teaching techniques —carrying 15 percent of federal school aid funds. Another takes money allocated to the U.S. Office of Education for interstate activities and turns it over to the states.

Fact-Finding Hearings Set By Rail Board

The special Presidential board scheduled formal hearings into the protracted wage dispute between six shopcraft unions and the nation's railroads after failing to get a settlement in 30 days of mediating efforts.

The law creating the board called for mediation until Aug. 16. Since no agreement was reached by then, the board now becomes a fact-finding panel for 30 days. At the end of that period it will issue settlement recommendations.

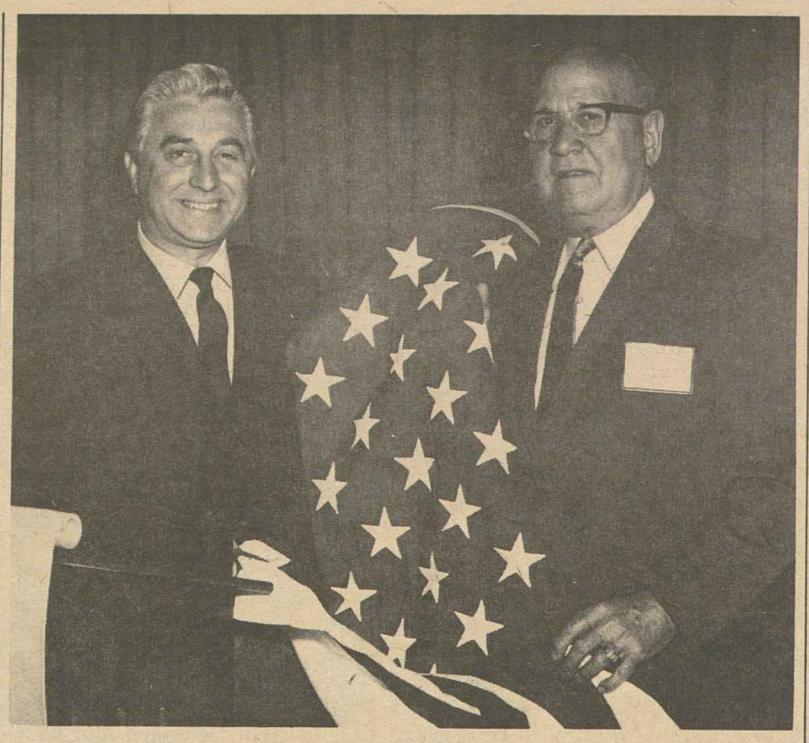
If after a third 30-day period, there is still no settlement, the board's recommendations will be imposed and will remain in effect until the parties reach a contract agreement or until Jan. 1, 1969, at the latest.

After a final round of meetings between the panel and both sides proved fruitless, Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.) board chairman, said "we've gone as far as we can go in recommending compromises" under the law.

Formal hearings were set to start in Washington on Aug. 23.

Board members in addition to Morse are AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, former Sen. Leverett Saltonstall (R-Mass); Fred Kappel, retired head of American Telephone & Telegraph Co., and Theodore Kheel, a New York mediator.

Unions involved in the dispute are the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Railway Carmen, Machinists, Boilermakers, Sheet Metal Workers and Firemen & Oilers. They bargain jointly through the AFL-CIO Railway Employes' Dept.



A U.S. FLAG that flew over the Capitol in Washington was presented to Pres. Jesse Clark (right) of the Railroad Signalmen by Rep. Roman C. Pucinski (D-Ill.). Pucinski made the presentation before addressing the Signalmen's convention in Chicago.

Signalmen Told Skills Assure Future of Jobs

Chicago—Rail signal employes have a bright future in their industry because there is and will continue to be an "increasing demand" for their skills, Pres. Jesse Clark of the Railroad Signalmen told the union's convention here.

Clark spoke at the opening session of the Signalmen's week-long 37th regular convention, attended by more than 200 delegates representing members on railroads throughout the U.S. and Canada.

The convention tackled a heavy agenda of business that included an appraisal of gains made since the 1964 convention, "guidelines" for future collective bargaining, updating of the union's constitution, and election of union officers.

Clark described the complex new railroad signal equipment as functioning like the different parts of human anatomy. "Every part and every movement depends on the proper function of the other, and if one fails the entire system stops," he said.

He said the skills required by signal employes in maintaining this equipment "become so important and produce so much good" that the industry "is now, and will continue to be seeking those who are qualified in our profession."

He stressed that signalmen "must give of their own time" for training courses to meet the highly technical requirements. "That is why we are endeavoring to have training programs provided by employers," he added.

Clark observed that the union has made strong gains in wages and benefits for its members in recent years even though "many railroad officials fail or refuse to recognize the importance of our skills."

Pucinski Speaks

Rep. Roman C. Pucinski (D-Ill.), a main convention speaker, praised the labor movement as "one of the keystones" to the nation's progress.

America's economic strength, Pucinski observed, "rests on the ability of working men and women, through their elected representatives, to sit down at the bargaining table and carve out a greater share of the bounty of this nation."

"Every despot the world has known," he declared, "first destroyed the labor movement, because unions represent the hopes and aspirations of the common man."

Other speakers at opening sessions included all three top members of the Railroad Retirement Board: Chairman Howard Habermyer; carrier representative Thomas Healey and labor representative A. E. Lyon. Lyon is a former president of the Signalmen.

Perlis Elected Hospital Trustee

Denver, Colo.—AFL-CIO Community Services Dir. Leo Perlis ha been elected a trustee of the National Jewish Hospital here, a leading center for research and treatment of chronic respiratory diseases.

UGW Convention Urges Stepped-Up Organizing

St. Louis, Mo.—Stepped-up efforts to organize non-union plants were pressed by delegates to the 28th convention of the United Garment Workers in a unanimously adopted resolution that urged all local unions to cooperate in communitywide membership campaigns.

The 140 delegates, representing some 65,000 members, proposed that each local set up an organizing committee and that the committees coordinate their efforts to build up the union in their home areas.

The resolution, which originated in the executive board, warned that "employers now have readily available the services of firms or individuals specializing in union-busting."

"They call themselves labor consultants," it added. "They devise and help carry out complete anti-union programs."

Other resolutions called for the 30-hour week with no cut in pay; a $2 per hour minimum wage; repeal of Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act; higher unemployment compensation and workmen's compensation standards; equal pay for equal work, and state and city laws prohibiting the use of professional strikebreakers.

The delegates also condemned the anti-union tactics of the Kingsport, Tenn., Press; endorsed the situs picketing bill and the efforts of the AFL-CIO Executive Council in opposition to compulsory arbitration.

Sec.-Treas. Joseph Lewis of the AFL-CIO Union Label & Service Trades Dept. urged the purchase of only those products that carry the union label, citing the benefits to union members, employers under union contract and the labor movement itself.

Pres. Edmund P. Tobin of the Union Labor Life Insurance Co. discussed the growth of the firm he heads. J. Albert Woll, the union's general counsel, reported on recent Supreme Court decisions and their effect on the labor movement. Pres. John I. Rollings of the Missouri AFL-CIO described the successful fight to keep a so-called "right-to-work" law off the Missouri statute books.

Pres. Joseph P. McCurdy, Sec.-Treas. Catherine C. Peters, Auditor Rose Masler and all members of the executive board were re-elected to new five-year terms. McCurdy and Miss Peters were given salary increases to $18,500 a year each—their first raises in 10 years.

Union Leaders Join Mediation Advisory Panel

Pres. Johnson has named Sec.-Treas. Walter J. Burke of the Steelworkers and Pres. Hunter P. Wharton of the Operating Engineers to the National Labor-Management Panel. They replace Pres. John H. Lyons of the Iron Workers and Marvin J. Miller, former assistant to the USWA president.

The 12-member panel was provided for in the National Labor Relations Act to advise Dir. William E. Simkin of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service on methods of improving industrial peace.

Four other representatives of labor and six of business have continuing terms. From labor they are Pres. Anthony J. DeAndrade of the Printing Pressmen; Thomas E. Harris, AFL-CIO associate general counsel; Pres. H. S. Hank Brown of the Texas AFL-CIO; and Irving J. Bluestone, administrative assistant to Auto Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

By Constitutional Session:

'Bill of Rights' Set For N. Y. Labor

Albany, N.Y.—A labor "bill of rights" was approved by the New York State Constitutional Convention as part of the state's modernized basic law.

No other state constitution has a proposition like it, according to State AFL-CIO Pres. Raymond P. Corbett, a convention delegate who tendered it.

Although only 20 lines long, it has "the full potential of becoming one of the most cherished landmarks in the history of this state and nation," Corbett said in an address before the vote.

The proposal, once it clears remaining adoption procedures, would provide that:

- "It shall be the policy of the state to foster and promote the general welfare and to establish a firm basis of economic security for the people of the state."
- "To implement the state's commitment to the economic security and dignity of the people, a system of workmen's compensation and means of protection against the hazards of unemployment and disability and against loss or inadequacy of income and employment opportunities may be provided by law."
- "No person shall be denied employment nor the right to join a labor organization of his choice on the grounds of race, color or creed, or because of sex, age or handicap where otherwise capable and competent."
- "Labor of human beings is not a commodity nor an article of commerce and shall never be so considered or construed."
- "The state shall secure the right of employes to organize and to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing."
- "No laborer, workman or mechanic, in the employ of a contractor or subcontractor engaged in the performance of any public work, shall be paid less than the rate of wages prevailing in the same trade or occupation in the locality within the state where such public work is to be situated, fabricated or erected."

The vote came after an uninterrupted eight-hour convention session marked by debates and roll call decisions on a number of issues.

Public Employes Rebuffed

A voice vote, despite vigorous efforts by liberal delegates, defeated an amendment Corbett offered to give constitutional status to the right to bargain collectively by public employes, employes of nonprofit organizations and farm workers.

The convention decision is rooted in the 1964 State AFL-CIO convention, at which delegates approved a resolution, "For a Labor Bill of Rights," which prompted meetings, conferences, studies and negotiations leading to the action here.

Corbett warned that even if the "bill of rights" is adopted by the voters, "a major task of implementing all sections of this labor bill of rights lies ahead, calling for a maximum united effort of not only union members, but all those concerned with advancing and improving the conditions of fellow workers in all walks of life."

Under convention procedure the proposition now goes to the Committee on Style & Arrangement, which may make changes in the language but not the substance. Then it is returned to the floor for a final vote, and finally to the Committee on Presentation which decides if it goes before the voters in November as a unit or in sections.

Constitution Updated By Virginia AFL-CIO

Norfolk, Va.—Twenty-five amendments modernizing the constitution of the Virginia AFL-CIO were passed by delegates to the 12th annual convention.

The changes cut the number of executive offices from three to two, eliminating the full-time post of vice president.

A broadscale resolution on consumer affairs called on Gov. Mills E. Godwin, Jr., to order an investigation to determine if the State Corporation Commission is really protecting consumers from the utilities it is supposed to regulate.

The resolution in addition urged the establishment of a new State Dept. of Consumer Protection and endorsed the new Virginia Citizens' Consumer Council, on which organized labor is represented.

Other resolutions supported the armed forces in Viet Nam and called for increased support for COPE, an improved vocational rehabilitation program and stepped-up activities for occupational and highway safety.

Sen. Edmund S. Muskie (D-Me.), introduced by his Virginia colleague, Sen. William B. Spong (D), discussed air and water pollution and warned that in some states, "a new discriminatory alliance" has been formed by suburban and rural areas to the detriment of central cities.

He urged that labor "continue to help make the American dream come true for those who haven't been able to get their feet on the first rung of the ladder."

AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, discussing urban disorders and rioting, warned of population pressures in slum areas.

Other speakers included COPE Dir. Alexander E. Barkan; W. Pat Jennings, clerk of the House and a former Virginia congressman; Paul A. Askew, assistant to the president of the Operating Engineers, and Commissioner William H. Heartwell, Jr., of the Virginia Employment Service.

Julian F. Carper, who has been acting president, was elected president and Sec.-Treas. Brewster Snow was re-elected, both without opposition. Elected first vice president was Bus. Mgr. Fred R. Conner of Plumbers Local 540, Newport News. Carper and Snow were voted salary increases to $10,000, up from $9,500 for the former and $9,250 for the latter.

Swift Canadian Pact Cuts Women's Pay Lag

Burlington, Ont.—A start on ending wage differentials between men and women doing equal work was made in a new three-year contract between the Packinghouse Workers and Niagara Finest Poultry (Swift Canadian) calling for a basic rate of $2.20 an hour for both sexes. Total gains by the 80 workers were estimated at from 67 to 97 cents an hour.

Strike in 17th Week:

Brick Union Battles Stevens-Style Firm

Greensboro, N.C.—A small but determined band of workers are in their 17th week of a bitter strike here against an employer who has been described as "every bit as anti-union as the J. P. Stevens & Co. textile chain."

The strike, involving 86 members of the Brick & Clay Workers, is against four plants of Boren Clay Products Co., a firm with brick and clay plants all through the South.

The description of the company's management came from Pres. Paul Pelfrey of the Brick & Clay Workers. He called for a boycott against Boren's bricks and clay pipe which are shipped into areas of the Midwest and Atlantic Seaboard.

Pelfrey charged that Orton Boren, head of the chain, is "in the same class as J. P. Stevens and other sophisticated outlaws" in the South and elsewhere "who deliberately violate the laws of the country to defeat the legitimate rights of workers to choose a union and have it bargain for them."

The union won overwhelmingly in a National Labor Relations Board representation election held at the four plants here back in June 1966.

9-Month Stall

For the next nine months, the union sought in vain to negotiate an initial contract, Pelfrey reported. It asked for a 20-cent-an-hour raise, a pension plan, an insurance program, vacation and holiday benefits and a dues checkoff.

During the talks the company refused to offer workers "one cent in wage increases," even though wages in many cases were as low as $1.40 an hour, Pelfrey said.

The firm's only offer, he reported, was a pension plan, which the union rejected as "completely inadequate."

Last March, the workers voted overwhelmingly to strike. Management tried to get individual workers to remain on the job on the promise of a wage increase, but no offer was made through the union, it said. The strike began March 20.

Pelfrey said the Boren plants have since launched intensive campaigns to hire strikebreakers and are now operating at about one-third capacity. Nevertheless, the striking union members "are solidly continuing the walkout," he said.

He charged that Boren officials and supervisors "kept up a constant harassment of local union officers and yard stewards" while the negotiations were on and that this has continued during the strike.

In developments leading up to the strike, Pelfrey reported, the union's local president was pressured until he quit his job. He was replaced on the job by a Negro employe, who was paid 30 cents an hour less for performing the same work as the former local president, who is white.

The Negro, a staunch unionist, is a member of the local's negotiating committee and a strike leader.

The union has cited this example of wage discrimination in unfair labor practice charges filed with the NLRB.

At one point during its anti-union campaign, Pelfrey reported, Boren hired a public relations firm to try to turn the workers against the union. The campaign made use of a man who posed as a leader in the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The local NAACP exposed the man as having no connection at all with the organization. Further, the NAACP has announced its "fullest support" for the strike and its members and leaders have joined workers on picket lines, Pelfrey said.

FIVE WITNESSES wait to testify before Special House Subcommittee on Labor about widespread law violations by textile employers. Left to right, Richard and Margaret Lenier, on strike since May 4 at Whiteville, N.C., plant of National Spinning Co.; Lucy Munce, fired worker who was reinstated, then joined strike over stalled negotiations; Pres. William Pollock of the Textile Workers Union of America, and Sue Batson, president of a TWUA local in Wilmington, N.C.

Workers Tell of Fear Campaigns Waged by Anti-Union Employers

date and has refused to reinstate any of them while it appeals lower court rulings to the Supreme Court.

Union witnesses included Robert Starnes, assistant AFL-CIO regional director for Mississippi and Louisiana, who read into the record details of widespread community interference with unions and workers; Organizer Claude Davis of the Molders, who told of being beaten by an employer in Tuppers Plains, O., when he went to the plant to seek reinstatement of five workers fired for joining the union.

Other union representatives also gave evidence supporting their belief that the law against employer harassment of union members should be given "real sharp teeth." But the most moving testimony came from rank-and-file workers.

With tears in her eyes, Mrs. Doris Hicklin of Rock Hill, S.C., mother of a soldier now serving in Viet Nam, told in soft accents how she was fired by J. P. Stevens & Co. for wearing a union button in the plant where she had worked seven years until 1964.

"I was called into the office and told to take off the button. This I refused to do," she said. Mrs. Hicklin has no job now because she was fired from her last two jobs—a report Thompson referred to the Justice Dept. for investigation of possible witness intimidation.

Workers 'Enslaved'

Shirley Hobbs of Roanoke Rapids, N.C., said she was fired by Stevens management after joining the Textile Workers. So was her husband. Of her experiences Mrs. Hobbs said "Lincoln freed the slaves but J. P. Stevens enslaves his workers with fear, blackballing and work overloads."

Lillian Hux told how she worked three days at the Roanoke Rapids plant and was fired after a union organizer handed her a leaflet.

"Someone told me to get rid of it, quick. There wasn't any trash basket handy so I handed it to my cousin who was due to go off duty. Her supervisor saw her put it into her purse and I was fired for interfering with another employe. Then they fired my cousin too," she said.

"I haven't worked since," said the witness, the mother of two children. Sobbing, she cried "J. P. Stevens has denied me my rights as an American," and rushed from the hearing room.

A solemn witness was Jess Cudd, Whitmire, S. C., who worked 50 years for the Stevens firm and was discharged for joining TWUA. Worse than firing, he said, was management's attempt to get him to help "run out of town" his son, also fired for joining the union.

He said: "They come to me and say 'Mr. Cudd, how come you don't adopt that boy's two children and you could make about as much out of it as you could in the mill by getting social security and run him out of town?' "

Cudd's story previously led a National Labor Relations Board trial examiner to cite the incident as a "horrible example" of employer callousness. The Cudds were among 71 fired Stevens employes that the NLRB, and two federal courts, ordered reinstated with backpay to 1964.

Four committee witnesses came from Hartwell, Ga., to relate how they took part in an attack on union handbillers at the Monroe Auto Equipment Co. plant in 1963. One quoted a company foreman as telling workers "it might mean your job if you don't run them off."

The union men were attacked by 50 employes who poured outside the plant to manhandle them and burn their handbills and leaflets. The union lost one election there, won a second one but still is fighting for recognition, the committee was told.

Ray Smithhart of the Rubber Workers said he was arrested in Mississippi for passing out handbills, jailed and fined $10 by the mayor of Ripley, Miss. In Tupelo, Miss., his car was riddled by buckshot but he himself was not hit.

James M. Pierce of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept., wrapped up his experiences with Stevens Co. by calling it a "story of firings and discrimination."

"Fighting unions in the South is big business," he testified. Naming several law firms that specialize in combatting unions, he said retention of these firms "automatically means a campaign of fear, community interference, massive discharges, delays and no contract.

"I can assure you there is no stigma attached" to labor law violations in the South, Pierce said. "In fact, the labor law violator is a hero . . . wined and dined."

AFL-CIO Urges Senate To Restore Aid Slashes

The AFL-CIO made a strong appeal to the Senate, as debate opened on the Administration's foreign aid proposals, to restore "severe reductions" made by the Foreign Relations Committee.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany stressed that labor looks with "deep dismay" on the cuts because they threaten "an unselfish effort by the United States, sustained for more than 20 years, to preserve and strengthen human freedom throughout the world."

In a letter to all senators, Meany added that "we in the AFL-CIO have supported that effort from the beginning, and as Americans we are proud of our country for having conceived it."

Meany's appeal "not to allow these cuts to stand" was issued as Administration supporters introduced amendments on the Senate floor to reinstate the funds sought by the President.

The Administration asked for a foreign aid authorization of $3.46 billion for the current fiscal year. The committee cut this by nearly $737 million to $2.72 billion. The amount earmarked for economic aid—$2.78 billion—was slashed to $2.25 billion, a $531 million reduction.

Included in the cuts were reductions in funds sought for development loans, technical and supporting assistance and the Alliance for Progress—the program to bolster the economy of poor Latin American nations.

One amendment adopted early in the debate restored the 75 percent maximum investment guarantee the government provides for U.S. firms investing in underdeveloped nations. The committee had lowered the ceiling to 50 percent.

Meany emphasized that labor has "tried to do our share" by sponsoring projects to strengthen free unions and advance housing, occupational training, credit unions, workers banks and other programs in developing nations.

"Many of these endeavors have been supported in part by federal funds, and therefore would suffer from their reduction," he warned.

He said labor has no quarrel with provisions "to make sure that foreign aid funds are wisely allocated and efficiently spent." But, he continued, "the cuts imposed by the committee are not aimed at waste but at the [foreign aid] program itself."

"In these times," Meany asserted, "neither fear nor foolishness should guide the public hand. The needs are glaring and the means to meet the worst of them are at America's disposal."

He criticized those who "falsely seek to justify" cutbacks in foreign aid "with the claim that America's domestic needs dictate a reversal in our concern for the rest of the world."

The nation "can and must" meet the need for aiding other nations because it will help to determine their freedom, Meany said, adding that "America can remain free and secure only in a world where freedom is secure."

Magee Spreads Red Carpet— But Union Wins

Bloomsburg, Pa.—Management's offer of a $16 basket of fruit for every Magee Carpet Co. worker who showed up to vote helped spur a capacity turnout for a National Labor Relations Board election. But it brought another result also—the union won the election, 605-565.

The Textile Workers Union of America credited the victory to a "courageous" committee of workers, who stood firm for two years against hostile management actions, including one firing and six suspensions. Also figuring in the victory, the union said, was employe resentment of a management attempt to deprive laidoff workers of unemployment insurance.

When the NLRB ordered the workers reinstated, TWUA ran an advertisement in a local paper quoting the trial examiner's findings. Management appealed, saying the union had "poisoned the atmosphere" for the election.

The carpet firm also charged that a contract with an unaffiliated union was a bar to an election. It lost that round also.

Labor Backs 20 in Runoff In Mississippi

Jackson, Miss.—Twenty candidates supported by the Mississippi AFL-CIO will try a second time to win a spot on the general election ballot in the state's Aug. 29 runoff Democratic primary.

The state's COPE had endorsed 65 candidates in statewide or legislative district races of whom 26 were elected in the primary. The state organization made no endorsements in the race for governor or lieutenant governor.

The Aug. 29 election will pit State Treas. William Winter against Rep. John Bell Williams for the gubernatorial nomination.

Of the 54 COPE-supported candidates for the state legislature, 19 were elected and 17 gained enough votes to qualify for the runoff.

In the first primary 74 Negroes ran for office on the county or precinct level of whom 15 were elected and 19 made the runoff primary.

Joblessness and Riots

ONE OF THE MAJOR ingredients of the unrest and violence that have swept the nation's cities this summer is unemployment. In a nation that reported 76.2 million of its citizens employed last month and a jobless rate of 3.9 percent, the grim fact of unemployment seems out of place. But in the Negro areas of the nation's cities it is a very real and hard fact of life.

The same report that disclosed record employment in July contained also figures showing the impact of joblessness of Negroes and whites.

While 35 out of every 1,000 white workers were searching for a job, more than twice as many Negroes, 72 out of every 1,000 were in the same fix, and given patterns of hiring and discrimination, their outlook was much more than twice as bleak.

For the youngsters in the 16 to 21 age bracket, who reportedly were deeply involved in the violent outbreaks, the comparative figures were even worse.

The unemployment rate for white youngsters was 11.8 percent; for Negroes, 24.8 percent.

When one out of every four young Negroes between the ages of 16 and 21 is out looking for a non-existent job in a period of rising expectations and hope, there is on hand a major ingredient of violence and unrest.

A LOOK BEHIND the raw unemployment figures reveals some of the whys. Employment is expanding most rapidly in the services and in public employment at all governmental levels. It is growing in the white collar area while remaining steady or declining in manufacturing, transportation and construction.

Negro employment in the growth areas is minimal due to employer hiring practices, inbred patterns of political discrimination in public jobs and other factors. The growth areas are where the jobs must come from and yet Negro workers are not getting them in anything resembling a fair proportion.

The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission has released some preliminary studies showing that Negroes and Spanish-speaking Americans, the nation's two largest minority groups, hold fewer jobs in terms of their numbers in the population and are concentrated in the lowest-paying jobs.

If Negro unemployment is to be reduced and decent-paying jobs made available to them, it is obvious that hiring policies must yield to economic realities and moral responsibilities, particularly in the areas of growing unemployment.

But it takes more than hiring practices. Government policies that will provide in meaningful terms the jobs that spell a full-employment economy, the training that will prepare minorities who have suffered a century of discrimination for the jobs of the mid-20th Century, the education and housing that are vital ingredients in a decent life and a decent standard of living—all these are necessary to a solution.

As long as the outrageously high level of Negro unemployment persists the threat to a peaceful and orderly society remains very much alive.

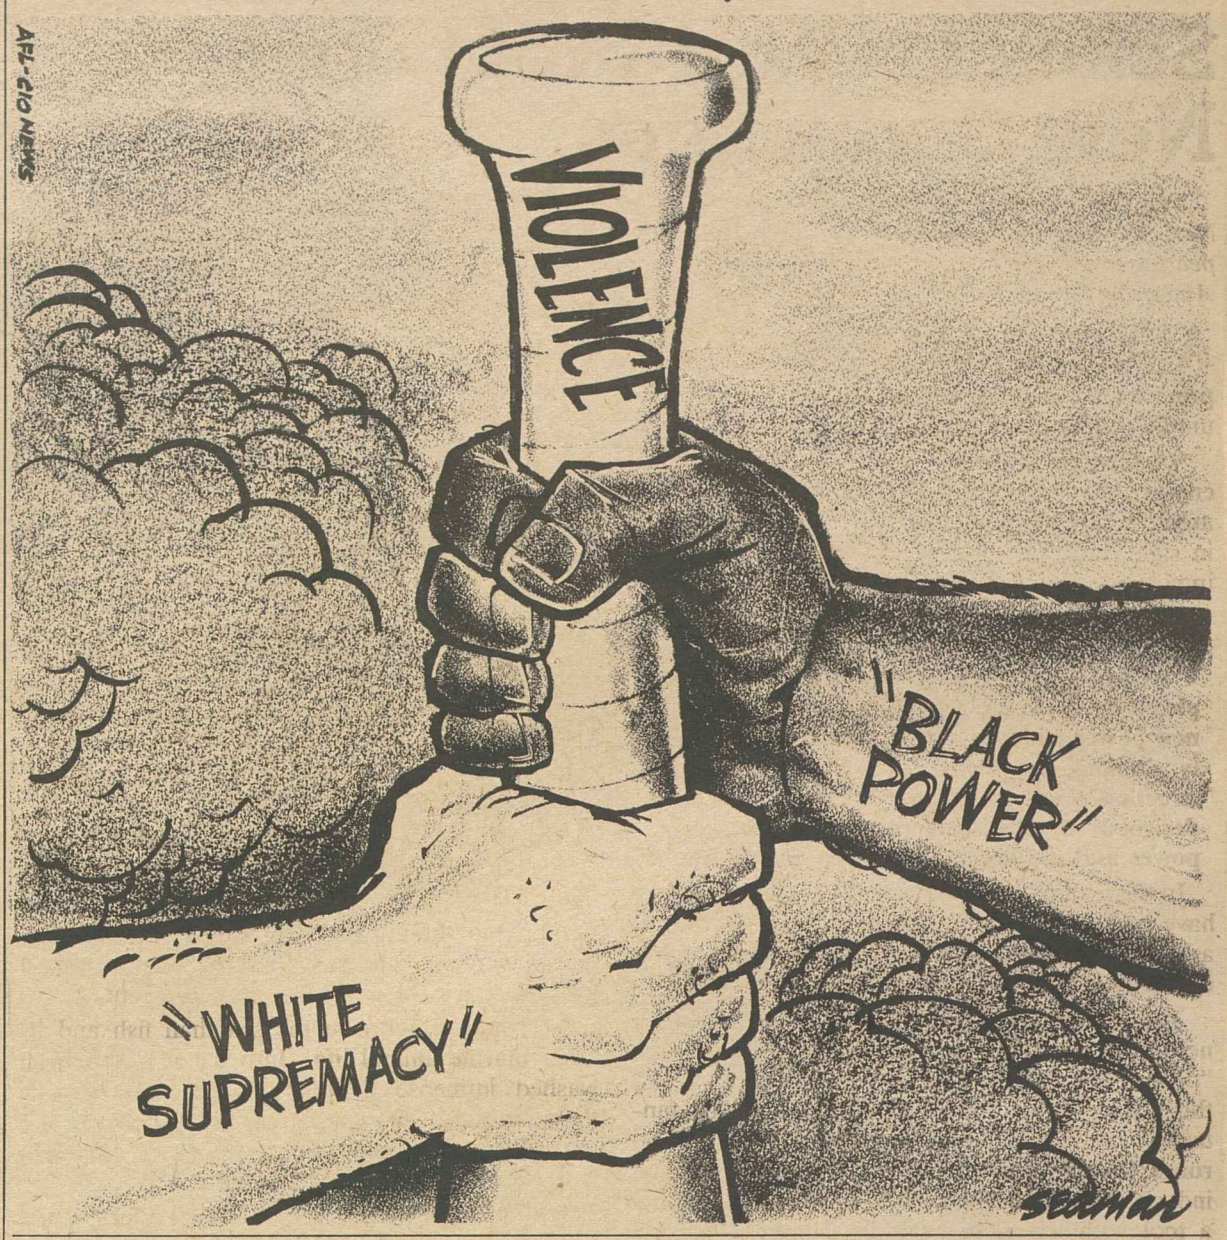
The Game Nobody Wins



Repeat of '64?:

New GOP Donnybrook Looms Over '68 Presidential Nominee

The following is excerpted from "Memo from Cope," published by the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education.

IS HISTORY REPEATING itself in the Republican Party?

Will its structure, its policies and its purse-strings again be controlled by ultra-conservatives?

Gradually the answers to these questions are taking form as separate bits and pieces fall into a related whole. They point to another bitter intra-party struggle like the one that convulsed the GOP in 1964.

Certainly, all the evidence points to the fact the yahoos of the right within the party are spoiling for battle with its more moderate elements. And whether he wants them or not, the one man around whom they seem likely to collect is California Gov. Ronald Reagan.

Some of the particulars are these:

● The grip the right wing gained over the 400,000-member National Young Republicans in 1964 has been strengthened. In their recent convention, Young GOPs overwhelmingly elected as their president an ultra-conservative backed by their elders in the former Goldwater camp. In certain of their convention actions, they as much as told more moderate national party leadership to go paddle a canoe.

● The National Federation of Republican Women suffered through an unladylike campaign for their presidency that drove a deep wedge into the group. Though an ultra-rightist candidate was defeated, the victor is herself extremely conservative, a Goldwater supporter in 1964 and presently an apparent backer of Reagan.

It would be a mistake to write off the battles within these two groups as unrelated to the larger question of who will be the 1968 GOP presidential nominee. Leadership in the Young GOP and in the women's group brings some influence over national GOP policy, and indeed is a port of entry to party leadership itself.

Equally important, the battles within these groups often are "mini-wars," initial skirmishes pointing to larger battles with higher stakes in the national convention.

● Emerging as the most popular national figure—next to Goldwater at least—among Young Republicans at their recent convention was Reagan. He stood them on their ears with just the kind of speech they want to hear, simplified solutions to complex problems. Though more cautious about what he says and how he says it than Goldwater ever was, Reagan's line remains reminiscient of the 1964 presidential nominee's.

● Increasingly finding their way into print in relation to all the elbowing going on within the GOP and its subsidiaries are names closely linked with the 1964 Goldwater drive.

Among them:

F. Clifton White, who masterminded the Draft Goldwater movement.

William Rusher of "National Review" magazine, the most articulate and thoughtful of the rightist journals.

Sen. John Tower of Texas who, according to the Washington Post, has been promoting favorite-son candidates in many states. The reason for this could be to prevent an early lock on the convention by a candidate opposed by the ex-Goldwater camp.

White and Rusher designate themselves as "responsible conservatives" to divorce themselves from the wilder elements of the right. But it was the wilder elements that took over the Goldwater campaign in 1964 once the "responsibles" had captured the nomination for Goldwater. Reportedly, the White-Rusher-Tower team hopes to prevent a repeat.

A FINAL ELEMENT in the gathering storm is Reagan himself. Washington Post Columnist David Broder has written that many key Republicans are predicting there will be a Reagan organization fielded to battle for the GOP nomination. Perhaps, he said, there will be a national Draft Reagan Committee in business by fall, headed by Clifton White. (A Reagan draft group already has set up in Colorado, led by a millionaire right-winger.) Broder reports rumors that a "Reagan political summit" already has been held and that White has met with key Reagan aides.

It is obviously too early for anyone to say who the GOP nominee will be in 1968. It appears, in any event, that a repeat of the 1964 experience may be in store. The "responsible conservatives" and their less responsible brothers seem to be warming up for a Donnybrook with more moderate elements in the party. They seem to be behind Reagan as the logical heir to Goldwater and they appear to view "Reaganism" as an acceptable—if less startlingly stated—extension of Goldwaterism.

'Tomorrow's New Worlds':

Science's Vast Frontiers Pose New Challenges for Mankind

The following is excerpted from "Tomorrow's New Worlds," an article by Alexander Uhl appearing in the August 1967 issue of the AFL-CIO American Federationist.

ASTOUNDING as have been man's triumphs during the past thousands of years, the future promises still mightier triumphs. With these triumphs will come a world challenging all of us.

While development of peaceful uses of atomic energy has been disappointingly slow in some areas, it now appears that a real breakthrough is in sight and that the next decade will see highly important advances. There are now 15 atomic energy plants in various parts of the country which are actually producing electrical power.

At least a dozen power plants will be completed by 1970, after which time the increase in new power plants is expected to progress rapidly. Among the plants now in process of construction is one in southern California which is designed for the dual purpose of producing power and the desalinization of sea water.

In the medical and industrial fields, great strides have been made in the use of isotopes as tracers, as curative agents, as preservatives and as highly efficient instruments for research.

Yet close behind atomic energy is pressing a new source of energy—the laser beam—the "death ray" of the comic strips for a generation, the concentrated beam of light, the "light fantastic" that can vaporize any object, make metal run like water, crush rock, drill tiny holes through industrial diamonds, yet so flexible it has become a tool with which to perform the most delicate operations upon the eye.

For skilled workers, and that means many millions of union workers, the laser beam already has become a tool whose potential is unlimited. Laser —Light Amplification for Stimulated Emission of Radiation—is different from ordinary light. Instead of having varying wave lengths, the laser beam's ray are combined in a steady stream.

More and more vital to any common solutions to the worldwide problems of tomorrow will be the communications systems that evolve in the future. Already there have been startling changes in our time—the shift from hand-manipulated telegraphic keys to automatic printers, the development of radio-telephony that has made it possible for the human voice to be carried from one part of the world to the other—the orbiting of Telstar . . .

The news will be sped by satellite to a far greater degree than now. News will be gathered and transmitted from obscure corners of the world; news and picture copy will go to newspapers far more quickly than now, while newspapers will be able to send facsimiles of type to outlying plants for reproduction.

Telephone experts predict electronic developments that will enable the forgetful housewife to turn off the oven when she's halfway downtown and turn it on again on her way home.

Yet the challenging developments of the future are not restricted to the mysteries of exotic science. There are also great challenges in down-to-earth fields. They are part of the great days of exploration that apparently were completed with the discoveries of the North and South Poles.

THERE IS ANOTHER PART of the earth that still holds immense mysteries and possibilities for man and his civilization—the depth of the sea and the sea itself.

As the world's population soars and starvation becomes a literal possibility for millions of people, the sea offers a rich potential not only in mineral and oil wealth, but in food itself. The world's fisheries have long been vital in meeting the needs for animal proteins.

Today's fishing boats are designed by computers, equipped with automated instruments, find shoals of fish by sonar and echo sounders, use electrical currents to jar shrimp out of the mud so that they can be netted.

Plankton, the inexhaustible supply of one-celled marine animals that provides the basic food of fish, has yet to be utilized to its full extent.

But there is more in the sea than fish and its other marine animal life. Into the sea have been washed immense deposits of minerals that lie there waiting to be exploited. Oil deposits under the seas already have been tapped and immense reserves in all probability are still there.

But far from being satisfied with exploration of the ocean's bottoms, man also seeks to pierce the very crust of the earth, only three miles thick under the sea depths as compared with 40 miles on land. Project Mohole has proved that test holes can be drilled in the earth's mantles.

Nor is Mohole the only effort in this direction. There is enormous thermal energy in "hot spots" on the earth's surface.

Willingness, even eagerness, to accept the challenges of the future, rather than fear, must be the watchword of a vigorous people. Already there are signs that men are groping towards solutions.

In the field of religion, the ecumenism movement is a clear sign that millions of Christians, long torn by bitter and apparently unsolvable rivalries, are seeking accommodation among themselves as an answer to possible chaos.

In the field of science, scores of scientists are asking themselves what they have to contribute to man outside the precincts of their laboratories.

In the field of social relations, we shall have to live up to the promise of an equalitarian society that shares equally with all its people the vast social progress that today's society makes possible.

The labor movement is one of the potent factors in the development of such a future.

Davis Reports:

Worker Education Advancing In Scope, Size, Effectiveness

WORKER EDUCATION in the United States is growing in scope, size and effectiveness, an AFL-CIO spokesman reported in a network radio interview.

"We have seen real changes of community attitudes" and "activation of programs as a result —a direct result—of labor education in the community," Walter G. Davis, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education, noted on Labor News Conference.

Davis said that this year unionists are studying subjects ranging from shop steward training and collective bargaining to "how to be more active in community action projects," at more than 150 union-sponsored schools and institutes, most of them held on university campuses. Enrollment is expected to top 15,000.

Subjects taught at the union schools are "designed to improve the skills and abilities of these people with respect to the manner in which they represent the members of their organization," Davis said, noting that they "spread through the whole area of concern of the labor movement."

He pointed out that many of the students represent their unions in collective bargaining sessions. There has been a "step-up in the education of management people," with executives brushing-up on new processes, economic trends and developments and other subjects, he said.

"We think that our people must keep abreast or a step ahead of their counterparts in industry in the areas they deal in," he emphasized.

DAVIS SAID that while the labor schools are conducted for trade unionists, "there is really no restriction" that would bar employer representatives from the sessions.

"We are quite objective," he said, and "we aren't saying anything that we wouldn't want management to hear." He said that university faculty members often attend the courses and serve as instructors when union staff personnel is unavailable.

Reporters questioning Davis on Labor News Conference, aired Tuesdays at 7:35 p.m., EDT, on the Mutual Radio Network were Murray Seeger of Newsweek magazine and Lee Cohn of the Washington Evening Star.

PRES. JOHNSON'S proposal for a 10 percent income surtax to pay for the Viet Nam war and head off a possible inflationary spiral has raised a number of vital questions, not the least of which is its potential effect on the principle of "ability to pay," long a major tenet in progressive tax philosophy.

The President proposed a straight boost across the board for incomes above the $5,000 level. The lowest income brackets will not be hit. Nevertheless, the across-the-board approach to incomes above the $5,000 level would seem to breach the "ability-to-pay" principle.

He also proposed the same 10 percent surtax for both personal incomes and corporations, again bypassing the "ability-to-pay" principle. While it is true the corporations must start paying the boost three months earlier than individuals, the 10 percent will be the same for individuals and corporations next year, so that the "across-the-board" character of the boost is fundamentally preserved.

Under the President's proposal the lower brackets that are affected will pay proportionately less than the upper brackets since the surtax will apply only to their lower original tax. But important in terms of the progressive tax "ability to pay" principle is the fact that the President's proposals call for the same 10 percent surtax on the taxes of both the individual and the corporation.

It is long since the wage earner was favored over the dividend coupon clipper in our tax laws. Nevertheless, there is a real jolt in the suggestion that corporations which have been making huge profits over the past few years—a considerable part of it due to Viet Nam—should be asked to make no greater sacrifice proportionately than the wage earner.

A SIMPLE WAY to determine which sectors of the economy "can afford far more tax increases" is to look at the statistics on national income, especially as they reflect compensation for workers and profits for stockholders.

The July Survey of Current Business, published by the Commerce Dept., tells the story. Latest revised figures are from 1963 through 1966.

- During that period compensation for employes in all industry went up 27.7 percent. Profits—after taxes—went up 49 percent.
- Compensation for employes in manufacturing went up 31.5 percent. Profits after taxes for manufacturing went up 60 percent.
- Compensation for employes in transportation, including the supposedly poor railroads, went up 20 percent. Profits after taxes for these same segments of the transportation industry went up 89 percent.
- Compensation for employes in contract construction went up 31.4 percent. Profits after taxes went up a huge 128 percent.
- Compensation for employes in the service industries such as hotels, automobile services, motion pictures and professional services went up 30 percent while profits after taxes went up a staggering 138 percent.

In the face of such discrepancies in the compensation of workers and in the profits after taxes that have been earned by business and industry during the past four years, there can be little doubt that there is a wide disparity in the "ability to sacrifice."

A 10 percent across-the-board surtax boost scarcely takes into account that disparity which will have to be studied by Congress before final action is taken.

GROWING IN SCOPE and size, union-sponsored worker education is producing solid results, AFL-CIO Education Dir. Walter G. Davis (center) told Lee Cohn (left) of the Washington Evening Star and Murray Seeger of Newsweek magazine on Labor News Conference. The AFL-CIO produced public service interview is broadcast Tuesdays at 7:35 p.m., EDT, on the Mutual Radio Network.

MERGER AGREEMENT that united Musicians Locals 161 and 710 in Washington into new Local 161-710 was drawn up by (from left) Vice Pres. Edwin L. McDermon, Sec. Otis Ducker and Pres. Louis H. Aikens of Local 710 and Pres. Sam Jack Kaufman, Sec. J. Martin Emerson, Board Member Bob D'Arcy and Treas. Raymond J. Woods of Local 161.

House Passes Curbs On Rights Violators

The House, by a 326 to 93 vote, passed a labor-supported bill to make it a federal crime to harm or intimidate anyone lawfully exercising federally-protected civil rights.

Passage followed two days of heated debate. The bill now goes to the Senate, where a similar measure died last year in the face of a threatened filibuster.

The bill would provide federal penalties up to 10 years in prison and a $10,000 fine, or a maximum punishment of life imprisonment if death resulted, for deliberate interference with anyone exercising specified federal or constitutional rights.

Other Penalties

It also specifies lesser penalties ranging up to $1,000 and one year in prison for various kinds of interference or threats.

The specified rights include voting, registering to vote, campaigning, enrolling in or attending any public school or public college, seeking employment, serving on a jury, using interstate transportation, partaking of public accommodations and participating in peaceful assembly in pursuit of federal rights.

In the course of the debate, a number of amendments were offered. One would give the bill's protection to policemen and firemen performing their duties in areas of rioting or civil disturbance.

Another would prohibit the bill from being used to protect anyone from prosecution under a previous-passed House bill making it a federal crime to use interstate facilities to incite a riot.

Rep. Emanuel Celler (D-N.Y.), chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, led the fight for passage, warning that "violence against those who seek civil rights is as wrong as riot violence."

On the final vote, 165 Democrats and 161 Republicans voted for the bill. Opposed were 68 Democrats and 25 Republicans.

Margolius Cites Need For 'Truth-in-Lending'

The "truth-in-lending" bill is the "real bill of rights for consumers" and would benefit business and the nation as well, Consumer Columnist Sidney Margolius testified before the House Consumer Affairs subcommittee.

"Its passage would be the first real step yet taken," he said, "toward eliminating some of the worst and most unnecessary evils that have plagued American families in modern times."

Margolius, whose column appears in 105 labor, consumer co-op, credit union and other publications including the AFL-CIO News, limited his testimony to the consumer credit and loan aspects of the bill. He told a series of "horror stories" about unwary purchasers who had been duped into ironclad credit purchase agreements for shoddy merchandise at inflated prices.

"Family money losses arising from high-pressure credit selling today have become a serious national problem," he said, "damaging not only the families themselves, but causing a diversion of family resources that is helping to frustrate vital family and national goals such as advanced education, better housing and the anti-poverty program.

"Never before have there been so many pressures on the public to buy on installments and to borrow money; never before have so many families used credit so extensively; never have they paid as high rates for it, and never have they been subjected to as many deceptions stemming from obsolete state credit laws which were originally designed to protect sellers and lenders, not buyers, and which some unscrupulous sellers have learned to use for outright deception."

Margolius specifically called for a requirement that the true annual interest rates on revolving credit be disclosed. While this type accounts for only 5 percent of all credit, it is the fastest-growing kind and its exclusion from the bill "would leave a very large loophole," he declared.

He also urged the inclusion of debts on which the finance charge is $10 or less.

Factory Turnover Remains Stable

Major indicators of factory labor turnover—new hire, quit and layoff rates—were unchanged between May and June, the Labor Dept. reported. However, after seasonal adjustment, the June rates were the second most favorable for the month since 1953, it added.

The rates for June, seasonally adjusted, were as follows: New hires, 3.2 per 100 employes; quits, 2.2 per 100 employes, and layoff, 1.1 per 100 employes.

D.C. Musicians Merge White, Negro Locals

White and Negro locals of the Musicians in Washington, D.C., have merged in what AFM Pres. Herman D. Kenin hailed as a major step in the union's continuing campaign to end racial segregation.

The unity of Local 161, made up of white musicians, and Negro Local 710 ended 45 years of dual operation in Washington, and was the result of more than two years of negotiations.

J. Martin Emerson, secretary of the old Local 161 and of the new Local 161-710 and an AFM executive board member, called the merger "a giant step forward, from an economic and social point of view, for all professional musicians in the Washington area," who will have "better representation and work opportunities."

Emerson, Pres. Sam Jack Kaufman and Treas. Raymond J. Wood of Local 161 retained their offices in Local 161-710. Pres. Louis H. Aikens of Local 710 was elected administrative vice president of the new local; Vice Pres. Edwin L. McDermon became assistant to Kaufman, and Sec. Otis Ducker was named business agent.

The merger followed closely similar action by white and Negro locals in Norfolk, Va., and prompted Kenin to express appreciation for the job being done by the AFM Civil Rights Dept., under the direction of President Emeritus James C. Petrillo.

Enforcement Lags:

$76 Million Found In Wage Chiseling

The Labor Dept.'s wage-hour and public contracts divisions recovered $27 million of $76 million in wage underpayments in fiscal 1967, the department reported.

The $76 million represented wage chiseling—some of it deliberate—from the pay envelopes of 368,000 workers divided as follows: 139,000 who were paid less than the minimum wage set by the Fair Labor Standards Act; 288,000 who did not receive overtime due at time and a half; 6,000 not paid equal wages for equal work, and 3,500 not paid the prevailing wage under the McNamara-O'Hara Service Contracts Act.

The underpayments discovered by investigators are below the record totals of previous years, according to the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research.

It attributed the decline not to fewer violations but to the fact that "wage and hour investigators spent more time on informational aspects of the new Fair Labor Standards Act amendments" and less on plant investigations.

In 1966, investigators uncovered $90 million in underpayments to 430,000 workers. About a third of the total was recovered.

When amendments supported by labor took effect last Feb. 1, the AFL-CIO launched its own program to seek out violations and called on the Congress to grant Pres. Johnson's request for more wage-hour inspectors.

Federation Pres. George Meany urged the President to "make sure that both employers and the administrators of this law know that you intend to have fair labor standards for all—in fact as well as in name."

The new amendments increased the number of covered workers by nearly 30 percent and the number of establishments to be checked by nearly 60 percent.

The enforcement problem was pointed up by Clarence T. Lundquist, Labor Dept. wage-hour administrator, who warned when the law went into effect that even if he could add 175 investigators to his staff of 1,000, the division would not be able to inspect as large a proportion of firms as it did last year, when only about half the violators were caught.

Enforcement problems are always greater following a change in the law, Lundquist pointed out, and the government must depend more than ever before on violations being called to its attention.

Law Changed

The department's wage-hour report for fiscal 1967 includes violations uncovered during seven months of the old minimums and five months of the new. On Feb.1 the minimum wage for more than 32 million previously covered workers rose from $1.25 to $1.40 an hour, and more than 9 million additional workers were covered for the first time.

Labor central bodies across the country have offered their services to all workers—union members or not—in the drive to enforce the law against chiseling or careless employers.

Johnson Names Stulberg To Consumer Council

Pres. Louis Stulberg of the Ladies' Garment Workers has been appointed by Pres. Johnson to a new 12-member Consumer Advisory Council.

Announcing establishment of the council, the President cited nine major bills benefiting consumers he has recommended to the 90th Congress, ranging from Truth-in-Lending and the wholesale meat bill to the Mutual Fund Reform bill, and added:

"The Consumer Advisory Council will add new strength and direction to the great purposes which these laws support. The council will recommend still further ways in which the government of all the people can protect all the people."

'Consumer Interest'

Johnson declared that "in a very special way, the public interest is the consumer interest—the interest of all of us."

The past three years, he added, "have seen the greatest advances in the nation's history on behalf of the the American consumer," with the enactment of laws that "touch the life of every American citizen, no matter what his income or his station in life."

Betty Furness, the President's special assistant for consumer affairs, is the council's executive secretary. Atty. Gen. Bronson C. La Follette of Wisconsin is chairman.

Other members are Chairman Robert J. McEwen of the Dept. of Economics at Boston College; Dir. William J. Pierce of the University of Michigan Legislative Research Center; Corwin D. Edwards, economics professor at the University of Oregon; Gen. Mgr. Richard H. Grant of the Pease Air Force Base Federal Credit Union, Portsmouth, N.H.

Also, State Treas. Gerald A. Lamb of Connecticut; William L. Lanier, Metter, Ga., state executive director of the Agricultural Stabilization & Conservation Service; Mrs. Mary L. Bailey, Austin, Tex., housewife; former Sen. Maurine B. Neuberger of Oregon, now living in Washington, chairman of the Citizens' Advisory Council on the Status of Women; Mrs. Otrie Taylor, Los Angeles, neighborhood aid participant for neighborhood aid projects in Watts, and Louise Gentry, assistant dean for resident education at Pennsylvania State University.

Meany on Social Security:

House Bill Scored For Defects, Gaps

The House bill dropped an Administration proposal to extend medicare benefits to persons under 65 on social security disability benefit rolls. It included, however, a new feature whereby patients could collect from medicare before instead of after they pay their doctor bills.

Meany termed this an "improvement" but he deplored the House failure to extend medicare to the disabled. Also, he noted, "the bill does practically nothing to control rapidly escalating hospital charges and doctor fees paid under medicare."

The measure adopted by the House would make minor changes in the tax rate paid by employers, workers and the self-employed, and base the levy on the first $7,600 of annual earnings instead of the present $6,600. This would pay for the benefits provided in the bill but hold down future expansion.

LBJ's Proposal

The President had asked for a three-step increase in the ceiling—to $7,800 in 1968, to $9,000 in 1970 and to $10,800 in 1974.

The House bill imposed a tight income ceiling on eligibility for medicaid—the joint federal state program that pays medical bills for low income families. The ceiling starting in 1968 would be one and one-half times the maximum earnings allowed under state laws for eligibility for cash welfare assistance. This would drop over two years to one and one-third times the welfare criterion.

Meany said this would "deprive hundreds of thousands of the needy and medically needy from required medical care they cannot afford to pay for out of their meager incomes."

He attacked "glaring deficiencies" in the House bill in the public assistance field, particularly a provision that would make job training compulsory for all welfare recipients, including mothers with small children.

He pointed out that "financial support would not be assured for needy children whose parents are removed from public assistance" and that "the bill does nothing to raise shockingly low assistance payments standards" that are currently below minimum-needs standards set by the states themselves.

Meany also said labor objects to the failure of the House to transfer the community work and training program to the Labor Dept. "as the President wisely recommended."

The department, Meany said, "has developed the skill, the knowledge and the machinery for effectively training those who have been marginally equipped to enter the labor market."

He said the House bill "nowhere near meets the long-range objectives of the AFL-CIO for a social security act that will truly meet all of America's needs."

To meet those "objectives," he added, the AFL-CIO will urge the Senate to:

- Raise the minimum benefit level to $70 for a single person and $105 for a couple, and increase all other benefits by at least 15 percent. This would make possible the over-all 20 percent increase in social security benefit payments the president has recommended.
- Finance the benefit improvements by raising the ceiling on taxable earnings by steps from the present $6,600 to $10,000.
- Extend Medicare coverage to the disabled.
- Establish reasonable controls on "unduly high" hospital charges and physician fees paid under medicare.
- Assure that medicaid is available to the needy and the medically needy whose limited incomes cannot pay for adequate health care.
- Improve present "appallingly inadequate" public assistance payments and assure adequate day-care for children whose mothers participate in training programs.
- Strengthen rather than weaken the possibility of poor families remaining together by requiring states to make assistance available where the father is in the home until he can obtain work for which he is qualified.
- Transfer administration of community work and training to the Dept. of Labor with adequate safeguards including requirements for payment of prevailing wages and in no case less than the applicable minimum wage.

Copper Strike Pledged Labor's Solid Support

Wages, pensions and living-cost escalator provisions are unsettled issues in the strike against the Anaconda Co., Kennecott Copper Corp., Phelps Dodge Corp., American Smelting & Refining Co., Magma Copper Co., Inspiration Consolidated Copper Co., U. S. Metals Co. and Miami Copper Co.

No meetings on the national issues have been held since July 28 but Anaconda agreed to a suggestion by Montana Gov. Tim M. Babcock (R) for a bargaining session Aug. 23 at Butte. Babcock and other western governors called both sides to the dispute into a meeting and urged them to resume bargaining.

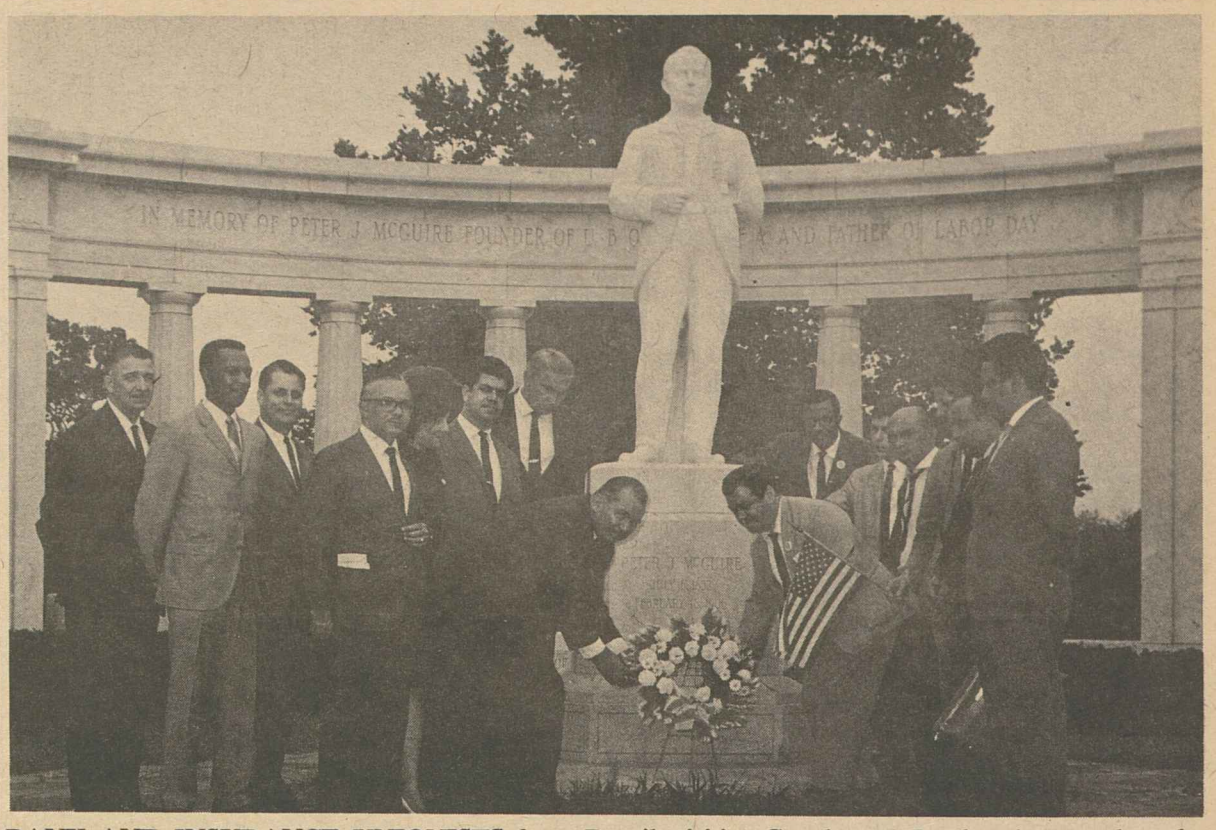
Many local issues could be settled, the unions told the governor, before agreement is reached on national issues.

Meanwhile, other nonferrous industry local unions are walking out as their contracts expire. The latest is Local 983, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, at a key Anaconda Wire & Cable Co. plant at Muskegon, Mich.

The strike began Aug. 16 after 60 days of meetings during which management made no offer on wages. It did however, file a $1 million damage suit when union members refused to work overtime to pile up surplus wire, the union said. The local was the 10th IBEW unit to go out in the current strike.

In Hastings-on-Hudson, N. Y., striking Local 404 of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers filed unfair practice charges against Anaconda, accusing the company of illegally canceling insurance coverage of 850 strikers.

Besides the USWA, IBEW and the IUE, the striking unions include the Machinists, Operating Engineers, Auto Workers, Sheet Metal Workers, Iron Workers, Carpenters, Painters, Boilermakers, Bricklayers, Molders, Plumbers and Pipefitters, Blacksmiths, Teamsters, Railroad Trainmen, Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen, Railway Carmen and the Office & Professional Employes.



BANK AND INSURANCE UNIONISTS from Brazil, visiting Camden, N. J., placed a wreath at the grave of Peter J. McGuire, founder of Labor Day, in nearby Arlington Cemetery, Pennsauken, N. J. The leader of the delegation, Paulo Zimmerman (right), is assisted by Pres. Joseph J. McComb of the Camden County AFL-CIO.

Joint Labor, United Fund Drives Mark 25th Year of Cooperation

The silver anniversary of labor partcipation in the united way of financing and administering social services is being marked this year by the AFL-CIO and the United Community Funds & Councils of America.

The now-accepted common effort developed out of a wartime agreement on joint campaign cooperation at a time when fund-raising appeared headed for chaos. It was signed Aug. 17, 1942, by Community Chests & Councils, Inc., predecessor of the UCFCA; the CIO Committee for American & Allied War Relief, and the AFL United Nations Relief Committee.

AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, who is president of the UCFCA, said the agreement signed 25 years ago "paved the way to active labor participation in community affairs in an organized and disciplined way."

Beirne, president of the Communications Workers, is chairman of the AFL-CIO Community Services Committee.

"Both as citizens and as trade unionists, we rejected separatism and accepted integration," he added. "By joining forces with the rest of the community in fund-raising and in the development of programs and services, we not only contributed to the strength of the united fund and labor movements but to the community and its citizens as a whole."

The original agreement provided for labor representation on the boards and committees of boards and agencies, that solicitation for funds be organized jointly by union and employer representatives with all pledges voluntary and coercion prohibited, and that local union war relief committees be recognized and incorporated into local War Chest campaigns.

How this cooperation has grown over the years was detailed by AFL-CIO Community Services Dir. Leo A. Perlis, who cited as its fruits "both measurable and immeasurable benefits which have accrued to the whole community."

"Before the agreement there was not a single labor man on the staff of any community chest anywhere," he recalled. "Today there are 160 full-time AFL-CIO community service representatives in 110 industrial communities.

"Twenty-five years ago there was not a single union counselor. Now there are 65,000 union counselors.

"Twenty-five years ago labor contributed only a few thousand dollars to local chests. In the past three annual campaigns, employes in AFL-CIO organized plants contributed almost half a billion dollars.

"In 1941 there were a handful of labor people on the boards and committees of community agencies. Today there are 75,000 union men and women serving on the policy-making bodies of these agencies—many of them as officers."

Perlis emphasized that whereas prior to the agreement strikers could expect no help from any community agency, voluntary or public, today thousands of agencies offer their services "as a matter of course and on the basis of need regardless of the cause of that need."

"As a result of this agreement," he continued, "united fund agencies benefited from labor participation, including the Boy Scouts, 20 percent of whose local leaders are AFL-CIO members; and the Red Cross blood banks, one-third of whose blood comes from AFL-CIO members.

Agencies Strengthened

"What cannot be readily measured but what is discernible, nevertheless, is the wholesome climate which this labor participation has brought about in many communities—wholesome in terms of agencies which are now more representative of the people and more responsive to people's needs."

The AFL-CIO was congratulated on the anniversary by UCFCA Exec. Dir. Lyman Ford, who declared that the united way "has been immeasurably strengthened by splendid support from organized labor for the last 25 years."

"I am happy," he said, "to pay tribute to my predecessors at UCFCA and to the leaders of organized labor a quarter-century ago who developed this constructive partnership. It has paid rich dividends in communities all over the land.

"The most significant aspect of the development is that organized labor has successfully organized its interest and involvement in community affairs. This has included intelligent assumption of responsibility as well as pressure for improved community services."

Asks Full Funding:

President Asks Fast Action On Programs to Help Cities

hensive plans to rehabilitate entire neighborhoods. It covers transportation, health services, recreation, child care services and other programs as well as housing.

The Administration seeks an appropriation of $662 million, but the House recently slashed the request to $237 million. In his letter to Mansfield, the President urged that "this request be restored in full."

Action Promised

Sen. John Sparkman (D-Ala.), chairman of the Housing subcommittee, quickly promised the President his unit would speed action to report the model cities bill, as well as a rent supplement program.

The latter was also on the President's list of programs that must be adequately funded if the nation is to assure "the safety and well-being of our cities and the citizens who live in them."

In all, Johnson listed 23 programs dealing with municipal problems that have been before Congress "since the beginning of this session." Among them are anti-poverty, civil rights, urban renewal, rat extermination and mental health programs, the Manpower Development & Training Act and the Elementary & Secondary Education Act.

In another development, the Administration sent its three top fiscal officials before the House Ways & Means Committee in support of its proposal for a 10 percent surcharge on income and corporation taxes.

Testifying as lead-off witnesses as the committee opened hearings were Treasury Sec. Henry H. Fowler, Budget Director Charles L. Schultze and Gardner Ackley, chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers.

Leaders of government unions expressed strong disappointment over the President's veto of a bill extending life insurance coverage for federal employes and increasing from 33 to 40 percent the government's contribution to the insurance system.

Johnson said the bill "places too heavy a burden" on the taxpayers and added that "we dare not divert our resources for unnecessary demands when there are more critical needs which urgently require our support."

Chairman E. C. Hallbeck of the AFL-CIO Government Employes Council said federal workers "are keenly disappointed" over the veto, particularly since the bill had been "compromised" to meet objections to an insurance benefits bill the president vetoed last year.

"Federal employes may well wonder what has happened to the Government's avowed role as an enlightened employer interested in providing conditions comparable with experience prevailing in the private sector," Hallbeck concluded.

In other Congressional developments:

- The Senate Poverty subcommittee approved the $2.06 billion asked by Pres. Johnson for the war on poverty for fiscal 1968, added $148 million for other anti-poverty programs and tacked on a $3 billion emergency program to provide jobs in slum areas and help riot-damaged businesses to re-establish themselves.
- The House Agriculture Committee approved a weakened version of an Administration bill to expand federal meat inspection standards, omitting coverage of meat slaughtered and sold within a state's borders.

Representatives Thomas S. Foley (D-Wash.) and Neal Smith (D-Iowa) said they would seek floor passage of a substitute requiring inspection of all plants with a gross volume of $250,000 or more, whether or not they ship across state lines.

- The House Commerce Committee approved a bill to create a public television corporation to promote educational and cultural broadcasts. The measure differs from the Senate-passed bill, principally in setting a $9 million limit on authorizations for any one year.
- The Senate Banking Committee voted out a bill to provide federally subsidized flood insurance. Under the measure, the Housing & Urban Development Dept. could set "reasonable rates" for flood areas. Home owners in many flood-prone areas are presently unable to buy commercial insurance.

COMMUNITY Health Care Center planned by the Greater New Haven (Conn.) AFL-CIO moved a step nearer when Gov. John N. Dempsey (D) signed enabling legislation passed by the legislature despite opposition from organized physicians and dentists. Witnesses to the signing are Pres. Vincent J. Sirabella of the local AFL-CIO and Chairman Ruth W. Greenberg of its Health Committee.

Senate Urged to Bolster Present School Aid Plan

A third strikes the Teachers Corps authorization from the bill. The fate of that program now depends upon its inclusion in a college aid bill.

The House also adopted an amendment by Rep. L. H. Fountain (D-N.C.) that would curb federal procedures enacted in 1966 for use against school districts not in compliance with the Civil Rights Act's provisions for desegregation.

Biemiller told the subcommittee that the "impulsive and hastily put together formulas" for block grants to states now contained in the House bill would "diminish the education opportunities of low-income children who need help the most."

"It would, to say the least," he added, "be a peculiar response to the dangerous wave of unrest which has swept across the nation to blunt the effect of a major program that can help to eliminate the causes of that unrest."

He stressed that the danger lies in the fact that most state departments of education are "ill-prepared to assume the responsibilities" the House amendments give them, whereas the direct working relationship between school districts and the federal government has proved successful.

The present law, Biemiller said, "was carefully formulated legislation which for the first time provided a way out of an impasse." Experience has shown that it "endangers neither local control of education nor separation of church and state."

The House bill "could destroy the entire balance that made it possible to resolve the conflicting demands on federal aid," he declared.

Biemiller said the Fountain amendment to prevent the government from holding up funds to segregated school districts "would encourage and in effect subsidize continued defiance of the law by recalcitrant" segregationists.

To illustrate how badly the government needs the right to maintain pressure for school integration, Biemiller cited the recent report of the U.S. Civil Rights Commission that in 1967—13 years after the Supreme Court decision declaring segregated schools unconstitutional—75 percent of the Negro children in Southern and border states still attend all-Negro schools.

Biemiller praised the Senate bill's provisions for "long-range planning" to utilize properly the many and varied educational plans included in civil rights, anti-poverty, vocational training and other federal programs.

By contrast, he emphasized, the House bill would "cancel out a program which is making a major contribution to the improvement of American education."

CONVENTION

Reno, Nev.—The 1967 convention of the Nevada AFL-CIO will be held Sept. 8-10 at the Lake Tahoe Hotel, Incline Village.

Senators Praise AFL-CIO For Stands on Education

The AFL-CIO, and its legislative director Andrew J. Biemiller, won high praise from two members of the Senate Labor Committee for its fight on behalf of education legislation.

Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.) told Biemiller as he was about to testify once more for improved aid to education legislation "that this committee owes to Mr. Biemiller a debt of gratitude for the help he has been to the committee in the presentation of the AFL-CIO point of view on education legislation for the past several years."

"All you have to do is look at the testimony that was given from year to year and the legislation that has finally passed and you cannot deny the influence that the AFL-CIO and Mr. Biemiller have had on our legislation. And rightly so, because in this legislation we are seeking to be of assistance to, really, millions of boys and girls who come from the homes of the workers of this country. Too frequently the children of the workers of this country represent a group of children who are in dire need for improvement in the school districts of our great industrial centers."

Sen. Ralph Yarborough (D-Tex.) strongly seconded Morse's remarks and called attention to the support given by the AFL-CIO and Biemiller to the Cold War GI bill. The AFL-CIO, said Yarborough, "was in the forefront" of the fight and "helped us pass it in the Senate. . . . It was the biggest, the only real big organization in America supporting that legislation."

1,000 to Plan Attack On Urban Problems

AFL-CIO Vice Pres. A. Philip Randolph has been named co-chairman of an all-day Emergency Convocation of 1,000 leaders in American life to mobilize the nation's private and public resources in a concerted attack on urban problems.

Sponsoring the convocation on Aug. 24 in Washington is a newly-formed Urban Coalition of national leaders in business and the professions, labor, local government, religion, and the civil rights movement. Andrew Heiskell of Time, Inc. will preside with Randolph.

Its members include AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Vice Presidents I. W. Abel, Joseph D. Keenan and David Sullivan and Auto Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

The convocation is expected to take action on three Urban Coalition proposals dealing with a major expansion of private-sector programs to provide jobs and training for the hard-core poor, legislation to establish a federal emergency work program to employ and train hard-core unemployed and a long-range program to break up the cycle of ghetto life through the physical and social reconstruction of the cities.

Congress Next

Proposals adopted at the convocation will be presented to congressional leaders of both parties.

In calling the Aug. 24 meeting, the coalition adopted a statement of purpose pledging its members to "publicly commit themselves to programs enabling the disadvantaged minorities to share in all of the benefits of our society."

Other members include Archbishop John F. Dearden, president of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops; Dr. Arthur Flemming, president of the National Council of Churches; Henry Ford, II, chairman of the Ford Motor Co.; the Rev. Martin Luther King, president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference; David Rockefeller, president of the Chase Manhattan Bank; Roy Wilkins, executive director of the NAACP, and Whitney Young, Jr., executive director of the National Urban League.

The coalition also includes Mayors Ivan Allen, Jr. of Atlanta; Joseph Barr of Pittsburgh; Jerome P. Cavanagh of Detroit; John F. Collins of Boston; Richard J. Daley of Chicago; Milton Graham of Phoenix; John V. Lindsay of New York; Arthur Naftalin of Minneapolis and James H. J. Tate of Philadelphia.

ACWA Vice President Named College Trustee

Poughkeepsie, N. Y. — Brother Linus R. Foy, president of Marist College here, has announced the appointment as a lay trustee of Vice Pres. Charles J. Garrahan of the Clothing Workers, manager of the ACWA Shirt & Leisurewear Joint Board in New York. The college gave him a "Contemporary American" award last March.

Film Festival Awards Won By U.S. Unions

Montreal—Two American labor films won awards at the Intl. Labor Film Festival here in the category dealing with trade union subjects.

The Clothing Workers' film "The Inheritors" won second place in the category and "Huelga," the story of the farm workers struggle for economic justice, took third place. First place went to a Canadian film "Do Not Fold," which also won the grand prize of the festival.

"The Inheritors" also won a first place award for the film having the most artistic merit.

Awards for films in six categories went to West Germany, Sweden and Israel in addition to the U.S. and Canada.

The festival was held in conjunction with the first world conference on workers education sponsored by the ICFTU which opened in Montreal this week.

Emergency Jobs Sought in City Crisis

Unions Join Demand for U.S. Action

An "Emergency Convocation" of 1,000 prominent Americans called on the government to develop plans to put "at least 1 million of the presently unemployed into productive work at the earliest possible moment."

The call for the "crash" jobs program was part of commitments by the representatives of labor, business, religion, civil rights groups and local government to press action that will "end once and for all the shame of poverty amid affluence."

The convocation in Washington was sponsored by the "Urban Coalition," a group formed during the height of recent riots to give "top priority" to the ghetto-crisis and the desperate needs of urban areas.

Its members include AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, Steelworkers Pres. I. W. Abel, Auto Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther, Building Service Employes Pres. David Sullivan, and Sec. Joseph D. Keenan of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

Meany pledged the AFL-CIO's "full partnership" in the coalition and its complete support for the objectives set forth in the convocation's statement of "principles, goals and commitments."

Asks Follow-Through

He and two other labor speakers —Keenan and Reuther, in speeches to the convocation coupled their full backing with pleas for "follow-through" action by the coalition and a warning that its job would not be an easy one.

Pres. A. Philip Randolph of the Sleeping Car Porters was co-chairman of the all-day convocation, and presented the statement to the meeting. Andrew Heiskell, chairman of Urban America, Inc., was the other co-chairman.

The statement, in addition to its emphasis on a government program to create jobs, sought a "massive and concerted drive" by the private sector of the economy to bring employment, housing and education to the urban poor.

The convocation proposed new job-training courses, "earn and learn centers" to be set up in ghettos as joint labor-business-government ventures, greater capital investment in rebuilding slums and close cooperation with and help for public agencies.

It asked Congress to "move without delay on urban programs." It stressed: "The country can wait no longer for measures that have too long been denied the people of the cities and nation as a whole." It

Meany Calls for Tax Bill Based on Equal Sacrifice

LABOR'S STRONG support for fair housing, its bid for a more equitable tax bill and its partnership in the Urban Coalition to deal with the crisis in the cities all were voiced last week by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany in testimony before two congressional committees and an emergency conference.

Supports Increase With Key Changes

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told Congress that labor agrees with Pres. Johnson on the need for a tax increase but firmly opposes his way of applying it.

Testifying before the House Ways & Means Committee, Meany backed higher taxes in both principle and practice. An increase, he said, would be in keeping with the tradition of equality of sacrifice in the defense of freedom; would finance the rising costs of the Viet Nam war while still allowing for continued domestic progress, and would reduce the "dangers of tight money, very high interest rates and an unbalanced economic advance."

But "equality of sacrifice should be based on ability to sacrifice," he said, and the Administration's proposals recognize this precept "only to a minor degree."

The federation president called for three major changes in the Administration bill:

- A surtax rate on corporations "at least twice as great as on individuals."
- A lump-sum deduction for individual and family taxpayers in calculating their surtax, aimed at strengthening the principle of ability to pay.
- A plan for applying the war tax rate to income not now subject to regular income tax because of loopholes.

$8-$13 Billion Yield

Compared to the Administration's estimate of about $9 billion return from its proposals of a 10 percent surtax on individuals and corporations in a year's time, Meany said the AFL-CIO alternatives would yield about $8 billion if based on a 6 percent surtax on individuals and 12 percent on corporations, and about $13.4 billion at rates of 10 percent and 20 percent, respectively.

Meany offered these arguments in support of the proposed changes:

Corporations—Restoration of the 7 percent credit for new business investment this year has given corporations a $2 billion annual tax cut. Despite a minor decline in very high corporate profits since late 1966, they show a rise of 74.5 percent after taxes since 1960. Dividend payments have soared more than 69 percent in the same span. But total wage and salary outlays have gone up only 54 percent, reflecting higher employment as well as higher individual incomes.

After-tax take-home pay of a factory worker with three dependents rose only 24 percent, and in terms of buying power, a mere 11 percent during the 6.5 year period. A double-rate tax on corporations is clearly justified.

Special deduction—The Admin-

AFL-CIO Backs Bill:

Labor Stresses Need For Fair Housing

Fair housing is "absolutely essential to the realistic achievement" of desegregated schools and equal opportunity, the AFL-CIO told Congress.

Federation Pres. George Meany expressed labor's "complete accord" with the measure introduced by Sen. Walter F. Mondale (D-Minn.) in hearings before a Senate Housing subcommittee.

He supported the objectives also of bills to end discrimination by banks, mortgage agencies and other private lending institutions.

Open housing legislation, he said, is "extremely important" and is much more than "picking up a few loose ends left over from the Civil Rights Act of 1964."

Dealing with the question of segregated neighborhoods and their segregated schools, Meany declared it had long been the objective of the labor movement to attack segregation in housing. He cited labor support for state and local fair housing laws and the discrimination-free housing projects sponsored by unions.

"The experience of the labor movement," he said, "proves that integrated housing works; that people of different races can live in harmony as neighbors." He assailed also the "ancient superstition perpetuated by far too many unscrupulous real estate agents" that neighborhood standards decline when Negro families move in.

The superstitions about property values and neighborhood standards are "simply not true," Meany asserted, citing a number of in-depth studies made over a period of years. The fears, he

Taxpayers Foot Union Busting Bill

A House Labor subcommittee heard new evidence of illegal, union-smashing tactics by employers who claim as tax-exempt business expenses the vast sums they spend to prevent workers from organizing.

The witnesses were union officers and rank-and-file members who testified from personal experience to the firings, intimidation and wholesale law-breaking of powerful, prosperous corporations.

Cited as "horrible examples" of extended law violations were the policies of the Winn-Dixie Stores, Inc., with 18,000 employes in a chain of 750 food markets, and the Rutter-Rex Mfg. Co., still winning government contract awards despite a 10-year record of defying the labor law.

Winn-Dixie management, which includes a leading officer of the National Right to Work Committee, "opposes unions with an almost pathologic intensity," Vice Pres. Roy E. Scheurich of the Meat Cutters told the subcommittee at hearings called to pinpoint ways in which the Na-

Wage Gains Average 5% in New Contracts

Union contract settlements provided wage gains averaging 5 percent, or 14.5 cents an hour, for 2 million U.S. workers in the first half of 1967, the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics said in a preliminary report on wage developments.

In manufacturing, the median increase was 5.4 percent and in nonmanufacturing 5 percent, compared with 4.2 and 5 percent increases negotiated by unions a year earlier.

This year's settlements covered 10 million workers, more than twice the number affected in 1966's first half, the BLS reported. Other findings:

- Increases won for the full life of the contract averaged 4.3 percent a year, up from 3.9 percent for the full year 1966.
- The median wage and benefit package increase in the new contracts amounted to 4.9 percent a year, compared with 4.5 percent in 1966, adjusted after assuming that changes will go into effect at equal intervals over the full term of the agreements.
- Considering wage rates separately from fringe benefits, increases during the full life of the contract will average 4.3 percent of straight-time average hourly

Foreign Aid Cut Sharply In Congress

Congressional budget-cutters hacked at the nation's foreign aid program, overriding Administration and labor pleas that the dollars spent to promote economic growth and political freedom in the world are necessary for America's own security.

The Senate cut $836 million from the Administration budget request in approving a $2.6 billion authorization bill — a ceiling on money which must be appropriated later in separate legislation.

It went beyond cuts made by its Foreign Relations Committee to delete an additional $100 million

At OCAW Convention:

Aiding Poor Termed Key Issue for Labor

By Duane Emme

New York City—One of the great tasks facing labor today is to make sure that America "does not walk off and leave the poor," Pres. A. F. Grospiron of the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers told the union's convention here.

"We must never forget that the real business of this union is to elevate the dignity of man," he declared. "Whenever we quit fighting for the underdog, we have no right to survive."

Grospiron's challenge, advanced in a "state of the union" message, also emerged in addresses delivered to opening sessions by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey.

More than 800 delegates, representing nearly 175,000 workers, tackled a heavy agenda calling for action on constitutional changes and more than a score of major resolutions, plus election of officers. The convention also was to act on proposals to raise per capita dues and strengthen OCAW's defense fund.

'Guaranteed' Jobs

Grospiron stressed that labor's battle for "the poor and oppressed" must center on demands for improved education, the elimination of all discrimination, slum clearance and "guaranteed" jobs for all who seek them.

"Our union," he continued, "must try harder to organize . . . where the poor work. We must try harder to negotiate training programs to upgrade skills. We must involve ourselves in good community programs."

He cited "substantial progress" made by OCAW in contracts negotiated in the past two years. But, he added, the industries where the union has representation have "compounded their profits."

Meany traced labor's past legislative efforts that led to medicare, education, minimum wage and civil rights measures. He described current efforts to secure strong improvements in social security, an equitable tax bill and "open housing" legislation.

He stressed that labor "has never deviated one iota" from its support for civil rights proposals even though such support has been used by southern employers in an attempt to sway white workers' emotions and turn them against unions.

"We advocate equality for Negroes not only in the South but everywhere, not only in access to schools but also in getting jobs," Meany said.

In an attack on the recent action by Congress that imposed compulsory arbitration of the rail shopcrafts' dispute, Meany emphasized that rail management had refused to bargain simply because "it was sure" Congress would not permit a strike.

He warned that the legislation may be the forerunner to similar action by Congress against workers in other industries whenever there is a claim that strikes must be banned in the public interest.

If such is the case, Meany said, labor will have to campaign for public ownership in such industries. When a business claims that it cannot be struck because of the public interest, then it "should be taken out of private hands and put in the hands of the public," Meany asserted.

Meany saluted OCAW for a "splendid" record of accomplishment in the face of difficulties. He also praised the contributions of Ray Davidson, the union's publicity director, in heading the Intl. Labor Press Association for the past two years.

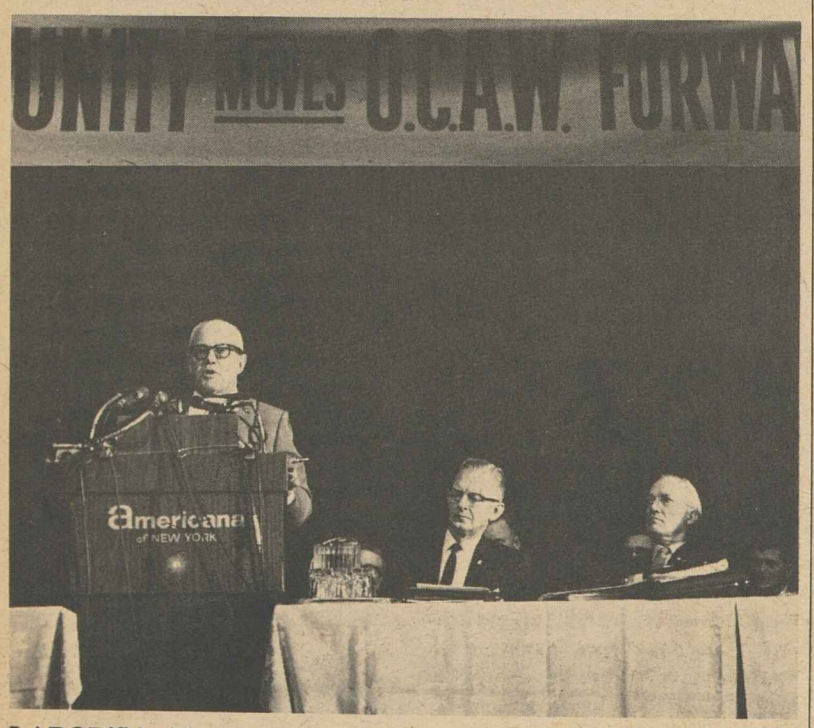
Grospiron said that Meany's address proved that labor's main objectives "change little" over the years, even though methods of achieving goals may change. He said OCAW intends to speak up on issues but always "within the mainstream of the labor movement."

Humphrey appealed for labor's support in helping the Administration get Congress to act on model cities funds, rent supplements and more than a dozen other measures "to root out the conditions of the slums."

He said unions have a chance to help those who have been "left out," adding—"I don't mean only those who have been left out of unions. I mean those who have been left out of jobs, training and housing; left out of the America you have done so much to build."

The nation, Humphrey said, must be willing "to pay the price" needed—in dollars and perseverance — to eliminate the "malignancy" of slums and "build the kind of society where riots, hatred and lawlessness will become things of the past."

The Vice President was introduced by Rep. Joseph E. Karth (D-Minn.), a long-time friend. Karth also is a former leader in the OCAW.



LABOR'S legislative aims in Congress were spelled out by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany in an address to the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers' biennial convention in New York City. Seated, from the left, are OCAW Pres. A. F. Grospiron and Sec.-Treas. B. J. Schafer.

MANAGEMENT ATTITUDES in the "education industry" are improving because of the "responsible militancy" of teachers in organizing and bargaining, AFL-CIO Organization Dir. William L. Kircher tells the American Federation of Teachers' convention.

AFT Urged to Help Rebuild School System

A call for the rebuilding of the American educational system and enforcement of federal standards "below which no school system would be permitted to fall" in qualifying for federal aid to education was sounded by Pres. Charles Cogen of the American Federation of Teachers at the union's 51st annual convention.

Calling on teachers to "accept their share of responsibility for meeting the critical needs" of U.S. schools, Cogen urged Pres. Johnson to "convene a national educational strategy conference" of 500 to 1,000 of the "most influential, creative and determined people" and to charge the conference with responsibility for producing a master plan for education, including specific details and a timetable for accomplishment.

Cogen reported that AFT membership has grown to more than 140,000—another new high mark, up by 15,000 in one year, by 27 percent in two years—and that union ranks are continuing to grow as more local unions are chartered—103 in the last year.

Major business before the convention included the adoption of priorities for future organizing and collective bargaining strategy, and financing the union's growth.

Theodore Kheel of New York City was named chairman of the AFT's new public review board. The board will hear member grievances as a final step in internal union democracy. The other members are Rabbi Jacob Weinstein, Chicago; Rev. Mortimer H. Gavin, S.J., Boston; Prof. John P. Linn, University of Denver, and Napoleon B. Johnson II, of the National Urban League.

Other speakers at opening sessions included AFT Sec.-Treas. Robert G. Porter; Assistant Pres. Gus Tyler, of the Ladies' Garment Workers; Dir. Richard Graham of the Teachers Corps, AFL-CIO Dir. of Organization William L. Kircher and Asst. Dir. of Education John A. Sessions.

The annual luncheon meeting of the Union Teacher Press Association featured presentation of awards for excellence to publications of AFT locals in New York City, Washington, Milwaukee, Boston, Fraser, Mich., and San Francisco. Members elected Oscar Weil of the Illinois AFT as president and heard Public Relations Dir. Lee White of the Communications Workers report on the labor press in a changing society.

In his "state of the union" report, Cogen called attention to the rapid growth of the union "not in any sense of smug satisfaction but only to point out the significance" of that progress that "teachers want to do things for themselves; they want the freedom and the power to control their own professional destiny."

Teachers and the AFT are coming of age "and we demand our due place in the national educational policy-making process," the AFT leader declared.

Noting that the convention met at a "fateful" time, Cogen asked "what can this national union of teachers do to impress upon our government and the American people the extreme urgency of the hour?"

School Needs Stressed

It would be an over-statement, he declared, to assert that "if the people of Detroit, or Newark, or Milwaukee or a dozen other cities had good schools, there would have been no riots this summer." But the "rebuilding, reformation and revitalization" of American education is "probably the most important need in the general reconstruction of American society."

He warned of major crises ahead as New York, Detroit, Baltimore and a "host of smaller communities" reach the critical stage in negotiations for new contracts. Calling for full union support of these teachers, he said union members in the three major school systems "are not willing to go back in September" unless smaller classes, more special teachers and more counseling services are made available "to make teaching more effective."

The convention was attended by more than 1,000 delegates. The only election contest this year was for AFL-CIO convention delegates.

Strike Authorized At Swift Co. Plants

Chicago—Locals of the Packinghouse Workers have voted seven to one to authorize their negotiators to call a strike at Swift & Co. unless a contract is in effect by Aug. 1.

UPWA President Ralph Helstein said that contract talks have lagged mainly because the nation's largest meat packing firm refuses to end wage differentials for workers in its southern plants. Swift plants in the South pay from 85 cents to $1 an hour less than in the North.

UPWA has reached agreement on new contracts with all major packers.

Copper Strike Support Voted By Utah Labor

Salt Lake City, Utah—Massive support for striking mine and refinery employes in the copper industry, coupled with a demand for more realistic taxation of the employers, was voted unanimously by the Utah AFL-CIO at its convention here.

About 8,000 of the strikers live and work in Utah—most of them members of the Steelworkers and employes of the Kennecott Copper Co.

The delegates called for a revised tax system for Kennecott so it will not be in the position of profiting because of the walkout. The tax is based on production every third year and applies also to the following two years. This year it will be set on the basis of production limited by the strike. The same levy would apply in 1968 and 1969, when production presumably will be larger.

The convention also demanded an increase in the state's natural resource severance tax, collected when metallic ores, oil, etc., are removed from the ground and which is lower in Utah than in the other major mining states.

In other actions, the convention:

- Voted full support to the Johnson Administration in its fight on poverty and for the war in Viet Nam.
- Urged Congress to enact legislation aimed at halting runaway price rises and the other evils of inflation.
- Opposed compulsory arbitration.
- Asked expanded vocational rehabilitation programs at both national and state levels.
- Strongly protested rising medical costs.

Pres. C. E. Burger and Vice Pres. A. A. Phon were re-elected, as were Board Members Elmer Jenkins, Ruth Clark, John Kirkland, E. E. Goodsen, H. B. Egbert, Milton E. Saathoff, Dora M. Davis and Oscar Hansen. Newly elected to the executive board were Alvin W. Joseph, I. Jay Neeley and John E. Dolinar, with one position to be filled later.

Sec.-Treas. Ormond Konkle continues in the second year of his two-year term.

Firm Denied Advance Look At NLRB Data

San Juan, Puerto Rico—The new "public information" section of the Administrative Procedure Act does not compel the National Labor Relations Board to make board documents available until after a witness has testified, the U.S. District Court here has ruled.

In a first decision since the new section took effect July 4, Chief Judge Hiram R. Cancio dismissed a petition by Barceloneta Shoe Corp. for an order compelling the NLRB to make available "statements or evidence" received by the board's regional director in investigating a charge by the Packinghouse Workers of company unfair practices.

The judge pointed out that criminal law enforcement agencies are not required to produce statements of witnesses until after the witness has testified.

Cancio also agreed with the board that the material sought by Barceloneta is exempt from disclosure because it is of "privileged or confidential nature." He added:

"It cannot be denied that if disclosure . . . is allowed, persons interviewed by board agents . . . will not be as cooperative as they are now."

Proposes 3 Major Changes:

Meany Backs Tax Increase Tied to Ability-to-Pay Plan

istration proposal to exempt from the surtax families with less than $2,000 taxable income and individuals with less than $1,000 is not adequate to approach the principle of ability to pay.

"For example, under the Administration's proposal, a family of four with a taxable income of $1,999—gross income of about $4,990—would pay its regular tax of $290. It would pay no surcharge. Another family of four with a taxable income of $2,001—gross income of slightly over $5,000—would be required to pay its regular tax of slightly over $290 plus the 10 percent surtax, or $29. For the extra $2 of taxable income, it would be required to pay $29 in additional taxes. This is clearly unfair.

"Moreover, this proposal also fails to give sufficient recognition to the ability to pay principle as one moves up the income scale.

Families with incomes of $6,000 or $10,000 would pay the same 10 percent surcharge on their total tax liabilities as families with incomes of over $1 million.

"In addition, the proposal fails to recognize that the after-tax weekly take-home pay of most groups of wage and salary earners has increased only slightly in the last two years. The weekly take-home pay of the average factory worker, with three dependents, was $100.39 in June—only 62¢ per week greater than in June 1966 and $3.40 greater than in June 1965."

$300 Deduction Asked

The plan can be made much fairer, Meany said, by allowing each family filing a joint return to subtract $300 from its tax liability before calculating the surtax. That is, a family paying $300 or less in regular taxes would pay no surtax. A family paying $600 would pay surtax on $300, and so on. For individual returns, a $150 deduction was suggested.

Excluded income—"Tax loopholes of special privilege for wealthy families and corporations are numerous and notorious," including the exclusion for tax purposes of half of capital gains and income from tax-exempt state and local bonds, as well as depletion allowances.

While structural tax reform is not the present issue, the special circumstances surrounding the surtax proposal justifies the application of a tax, at the surtax rate, to excluded income in the above categories, after a "generous deduction."

"On the personal income side, we propose that the taxpayer list his income from these three categories, deduct a generous $10,000 and apply the same tax rate as the surtax on the remainder, if any.

"With a deduction of $10,000 per tax return, moderate-income taxpayers would be exempted from the tax on excluded income. Moreover, the tax rate would be much lower than the regular tax rates. Yet a significant portion of excluded income would be subjected to some taxation and additional federal revenue would be raised at a time when it is needed.

"On the corporate side, we recommend a similar listing of those categories of excluded income, a very generous deduction of $25,000 and application of the same tax rate as the surtax to the remainder.

"The deduction of as much as $25,000 would exclude small corporations, and most medium-sized corporations as well. However, it would subject the excluded income of wealthier corporations to a low tax rate—much lower than the 48% on reported income.

"This proposal seems to us to be simple, clear and direct. It is not structural reform of the detailed problems in our tax system. But it would raise additional revenue, as part of a war tax, by applying a degree of taxation to the large sums that are now excluded from the income tax."

LEADERS from all segments of American life, meeting at an Emergency Convocation, adopted a program for rejuvenating America's cities. Pres. A. Philip Randolph of the Sleeping Car Porters, convocation co-chairman, reads the statement.

Labor, Urban Coalition Ask Million New Jobs

singled out the need for civil rights legislation, an "adequately funded" Model Cities program, anti-poverty, housing, education and job-training.

It appealed to all citizens to join in the creation of a new political, social, economic and moral climate that will break "the vicious cycle of the ghetto." It added: "The sickness of the cities . . . is the responsibility of the whole of America."

A steering committee for the convocation met with congressional leaders to press action on legislative proposals.

Meany said the "key need" in solving urban problems is "jobs at good wages for all." He praised the convocation for recognizing this, adding: "We have stressed this basic truth time after time; we have related it to every phase of social progress, from civil rights to education."

He pointed out that all of the needs set forth in the statement were "identified, exposed and urged" by labor in the past. "This is said," he added, "merely to emphasize the wide gulf between a statement of principles and their implementation."

"We must all go forth from here, not merely with a program, but with a determination to fight harder for it, on every front, than ever before," Meany concluded.

Keenan told the convocation the "ugly events of this and recent summers" tragically illustrate that "we cannot delay a moment longer." He said: "Jobs are needed now. Decent housing is needed now. And equal access to both is needed now."

He expressed "delight" that business, labor and civil rights groups are now joined through the coalition in "working together to help our cities and their people."

Reuther similarily welcomed the coalition. He noted that he and Henry Ford II, a member of the convocation steering committee, are locked in a labor dispute "but on the same side of the table this time."

The crisis of the cities has been created "by the indifference and apathy of a great number of citizens," Reuther declared. "The test of this unity will be what we do to translate the words into action."

Labor leaders were named to head two of five "task forces" set up by the convocation. Sullivan heads a committee on private employment, while Reuther and Keenan are co-chairmen of a reconstruction investment-urban redevelopment committee. Committees will prepare and submit reports in their respective fields.

Airline Unions Of Hemisphere Slate Parley

Delegates from airline unions in 20 Western Hemisphere nations will examine common problems at the first Inter-American Air Transport Conference to be held Oct. 16-20 in Mexico City under the sponsorship of the Intl. Transport-workers Federation.

A tentative agenda was drawn up at a recent planning meeting in Washington chaired by Intl. Rep. Rudy Faupl of the Machinists. The presidents of U.S. unions affiliated with the ITF are being invited to head their delegations.

Topics expected to be covered include international cooperation and reciprocal assistance between airline unions, skill improvement, licensing, safety, technological unemployment, subcontracting, company unions, organizing, mergers, route expansion and related matters.

Invitations have been sent unions in the United States, Canada, Mexico, Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Peru, Bolivia, Uruguay, Ecuador, Colombia, Venezuela, Nicaragua, Honduras, Guatemala, Panama, Dominican Republic, Trinidad, Jamaica and Barbados.

The IAM, Transport Workers and Railway-Airline Clerks are contributing $6,000 each to help Latin American delegations attend the meeting.

Labor Stresses Need For Fair Housing Law said, are "drummed up by reactionaries, racists and real estate profiteers."

He noted that in testifying on civil rights legislation in the past, the AFL-CIO said that "an equal right to be served in a hotel or restaurant was an empty right to a man without money. We said that an equal opportunity on the job was meaningless when there were no jobs to be had. And so it is with housing."

A law to establish the right of every American to rent or buy any living quarters he wants and can afford is clearly necessary, he commented. "But to have meaning . . . open housing must go hand in hand with enough housing and housing available at a price level workers can afford."

Reviewing the history of low-cost public housing, the AFL-CIO president noted that all the units built in the past 30 years could house only 605,000 families and that "there are 11 million families whose incomes are below the top limits for public housing tenants."

A massive effort in both private and public housing is "essential," he said, and federal projects must fill the gap if private efforts fall short.

The bill before the committee must be accompanied by a "bold, broad and imaginative program to provide enough housing—adequate housing for all Americans, of all races and all levels of income."

Mondale, in a statement opening the hearings, said that "to temporize on the elimination of housing discrimination will be to choose apartheid. Our only real choice is to face the issue squarely and decide now that Americans will in fact live together and not separately."

Attorney General Ramsey Clark voiced strong support for the measure, declaring that it neither invades the privacy of the home or the individual nor is it "forced housing." It will eliminate "widespread forced housing," Clark pointed out, where racial minorities are "barred from residential areas and confined to the ghetto and other segregated areas."

Garland Ashcraft, Early ANG Leader

Bloomfield, Ind.—Funeral services were held here for Garland Ashcraft, Newspaper Guild pioneer who died after a long illness in Marion, Ind., Veterans Hospital. He was 69.

Ashcraft was a Cleveland Press reporter who was given Card No. 1 in Guild Local 1 for his leadership in helping organize that local and the ANG. He was ANG's first treasurer, in 1935, and served as a vice president from 1936 to 1938.

Bias in Housing Ads Corrupts Post's Policy

The handling of real estate advertising dripping "with discrimination" in many of the nation's newspapers symbolizes an ailment "that corrupts newspapers with the loftiest editorial principles," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany pointed out in his testimony supporting fair housing legislation.

He cited the Washington Post, which has editorially supported fair housing and reported developments in the field fairly and accurately but which refuses to set up a standard barring advertising from its real estate section that does not guarantee that the property or housing is available without discrimination.

Meany said he wrote the Post proposing such a standard and that although the paper publishes many letters critical of its policies it failed to publish this one. Instead the Post replied to Meany by letter that his proposed standard would be "an abuse of both the authority and responsibility that a free press possesses in the fields of news and advertising."

Meany said that in the past, "by the moral standards of the publishing industry," the Post had taken an "advanced position" by rejecting real estate advertising labelled "white only" or "colored only." But, he noted, the display sections of the paper "drip with discrimination."

The Post has every legal right to pursue "this devious course under present law," Meany commented, adding: "We do think that the readers of the Washington Post, which applies lofty standards to the conduct of others, are entitled to know what standards it sets for itself."

Firms Up Dividends Despite Dip in Profits

Dividends were paid at an annual rate of $19.2 billion in the first quarter of 1967 and $20.1 billion for the second quarter, according to a Commerce Dept. report, despite a dip in profits during the first three months of the year.

Appeals Court Reverses NLRB 'Weep' Film Rule

A U.S. Circut Court of Appeals has ruled that the National Labor Relations Board failed to prove that an employer who showed the anti-union film "And Women Must Weep" was guilty of a threat of reprisal or force in so doing.

Neither the board nor the trial examiner who called the film showing unlawful, the court said, ever came to grips with the real issue—whether the showing constituted a threat of reprisal or force, or a promise of benefit to the employes. The ruling was issued by a three-judge panel of the 5th U.S. Circuit court seated in New Orleans.

The judges did, however, upheld the board in finding the employer—the Southwire Co. of Carrollton, Ga.—guilty of firing three employes for union activity, and threatening another employe who was actively supporting the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

The court held that the reasons stated by the examiner for his "Weep" decision were inadequate. While "the film is highly emotional," it said, no limitation on the employer's right to free speech can be sustained under the law unless his conduct was threatening.

Plumbers, Pipe Fitters School Told Craft Skills Key to Strong Union

Lafayette, Ind. — Excellence in craftsmanship is the foundation of union strength and a prerequisite is the selection of superior candidates for apprenticeship.

These points were stressed by Harold S. Vincent, superintendent-emeritus of Milwaukee public schools; Pres. Peter T. Schoemann of the Plumbers & Pipe Fitters, and other speakers during the union's 14th annual apprentice and instructor training course at Purdue University.

Largest of the sessions, held for the last 14 years through the joint efforts of the union, Purdue and industry, the courses were attended by a record 775 plumbing, pipe fitter and sprinkler fitter instructors.

Simultaneously, 112 apprentices from 47 states and six Canada provinces competed for $5,250 cash and additional bonus prizes in the three categories.

In the pursuit of excellence in craftsmanship, Vincent told the annual awards dinner audience, five conditions are involved. These are standards of admission to the craft, standards of proficiency to be reached by the end of the apprenticeship period, an instructional program designed to make it possible for the apprentice to reach established standards of proficiency, the incorporation of certain motivational factors and provision for keeping up with new developments in the craft.

Critics Answered

"I am not unaware of the criticism, directed from time to time, to many of the crafts with respect to entrance requirements," Vincent said. "I might say that in my own field of education there have been problems which have called forth destructive as well as constructive criticism.

"On balance, however, I would certainly agree with Pres. Schoemann when he says that 'we are trying to safeguard the time-tested standards of qualifications for apprentice and journeyman membership.'"

Vincent asserted that on the basis of his observation the union's program for apprentices "is the best in the world." He said it uses some of the finest text books he ever had seen and some of the best visual aids ever produced for teaching purposes.

Schoemann said that "the high calling and the vocation of the United Association is to be a union of excellent craftsmen."

"The three cardinal principles upon which everything else is founded in the UA are organization, continuous training and the protection of our work jurisdiction," he continued.

"But a great big assumption underlying those three cardinal principles is that we do the job we are supposed to do and that we do it to perfection. In the long run, we will not be able to protect our work jurisdiction if our work is slipshod."

In the plumber competition, Thomas D. Saunders of Kansas City, Mo., won the $1,000 first prize. Gerald Barrett of Rockaway Beach, N.Y., was second, and won $500, while the $250 third prize went to Larry F. King of Houston, Tex.

Other Awards

The steamfitter-pipe fitter apprentice contest top prize was captured by James E. Barks, Jr., of Newtown Square, Pa. Second prize went to Edward Haydin, Jr., of Hartford, Wis., and the third award to Matthew Sherock, Jr., of Garden City, Mich.

In the sprinkler-fitter competition, Charles A. Moore of Somerville, N.J., won top prize. John McNab, Renton, Wash., was second and James R. Beveridge, Aurora, Ill., third prize.

Sec.-Treas. Martin J. Ward and Assistant Pres. John J. McCartin also praised the instructor training program and apprentice contest, thanking the individuals outside the UA who help make it the "world's best."

Joseph P. Corcoran is director of the UA training department of apprentices and journeymen and the Purdue program is under his supervision.

Lack of D.C. Home Rule Held 'National Disgrace'

Baltimore—A "relentless" drive by unions to bring Washington, D.C., residents the full right to vote and govern themselves was called for by delegates to the Maryland State-District of Columbia AFL-CIO convention here.

A "home rule" resolution termed it a "national disgrace" that D.C. residents should be denied the right to vote except for President and Vice President.

The resolution called upon the American people "not to tolerate such a situation" in a democracy where the right to vote is "a hallmark of liberty." It appealed to Congress to reject "past obstructionist tactics" that have blocked "home rule."

The 500 delegates, representing 200,000 unionists in Maryland and the District, also adopted more than a score of other resolutions, heard from a number of speakers and elected officers.

Key resolutions backed the Administration's Viet Nam policies, urged support for federal anti-poverty programs, called for stepped-up integration of public schools and advocated the banning of lie-detector tests in employment.

Authority Backed

Another resolution asked for the creation of a "modified Federal valley authority," patterned after the Tennessee Valley Authority, to develop and protect the Potomac River and its tributaries.

The convention also passed a resolution setting up a civil rights conference of Maryland and District unions which will meet each year between conventions to discuss such issues as jobs, housing, education, equal employment and voting rights.

Sen. Daniel Brewster (D-Md.) called upon the delegates to prod members of Congress to appropriate adequate funds to solve critical urban problems. "Our society is far too affluent to permit filthy slum conditions to exist," Brewster emphasized.

William E. Pollard of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights urged close cooperation between unions and Negroes seeking equal rights because they "have the same enemies and fight for the same things —decent homes, jobs and working conditions."

Dir. James Nelson of the AFL-CIO Appalachia Council brought delegates up to date on the work of the council in training unionists in the development of anti-poverty programs in the Appalachia area. The council was set up three years ago by AFL-CIO affiliates in 11 states, including Maryland.

Amos Eiran, a labor attache with the Israeli Embassy, delivered an address in which he hailed the "close ties which exist between labor in Israel and America."

The convention re-elected Pres. Charles A. Della for a third two-year term. He was unopposed. Andrew M. Lewis, a member of the Glass Workers, was elected secretary-treasurer. He defeated the incumbent, Harry Brill.

Culver Windsor of Baltimore and J. C. Turner of Washington were re-elected first and second vice presidents, respectively, without opposition.

Jesse Clark Retires:

C. J. Chamberlain Heads Signalmen

Chicago—C. J. Chamberlain was unanimously elected president of the Railroad Signalmen at the 37th convention here, succeeding Jesse Clark, who retired after heading the union for more than 22 years.

Chamberlain has been secretary-treasurer of the union for the past six years. He had previously been a grand lodge representative and had worked for some 20 years for the Chicago & North Western Railway as a signal maintainer.

Clark had been president of the Signalmen longer than any previous president.

Also, announcing his retirement at the convention was Vice Pres. Representative Carl K. Fields, the union's legislative representative. B. H. Steuerwald, who was re-elected as a vice president, will fill the post Fields had held in Washington.

Paul T. Drummond was elected secretary-treasurer to succeed Chamberlain, defeating W. D. Best, a grand lodge representative. Drummond had been a vice president for the past four years and before that was editor of the Signalmen's Journal, the union's monthly publication.

Other officers elected were: C. S. Chandler, T. H. Gregg and Gerald Orndorff, all incumbent vice presidents; M. B. Frye as vice president succeeding Drummond; R. T. Bates as vice president succeeding Steuerwald in Denver; and H. A. Stockdale, grand lodge representative for Canada.

The delegates at the convention voted to make permanent a $2 monthly assessment which had been originally voted as a temporary assessment at the Montreal convention in 1964, and was to expire on Dec. 31, 1967.

Several important revisions were made in the union's constitution. These included provisions that:

- A majority of general chairmen must ratify all national agreements before they are signed.
- National Section Six (bargaining) notices must first be submitted to the general chairman by mail for approval by a majority before they are served on carrier representatives.
- The amount of per capita, provided under the constitution, for the Signalman's Journal shall be increased from 45 cents to 60 cents per quarter.
- All subordinate lodges, in the nomination and/or election of officers and grievance committee members, must vote by secret, mailed ballots.
- A group of signalmen can call a strike only after a majority vote by secret, mail ballot.

One resolution passed by the convention amended the union's health and welfare plan to extend the coverage for retired employes and their families, to improve coverage for all employes to meet the ever-increasing costs of medical and hospital care, and to include eye and dental care.

Another supported legislation which would amend the railroad retirement act to increase retirement benefits as well as unemployment and sickness benefits.

Randolph Rips Anti-Semitism Of SNCC

New York—The anti-semitism voiced by the Student Non-violent Coordinating Committee in a recent issue of its newsletter is merely "another pathetic attempt by a small fringe group to substitute outrageous statements for program," Pres. A. Philip Randolph of the Sleeping Car Porters and Exec. Dir. Bayard Rustin of the A. Philip Randolph Institute have charged.

Expressing themselves as "appalled and distressed," they declared the article "reflects a complete divorce from the opinions and aspirations" of most Negroes, who are "profoundly aware and appreciative" of Jewish contributions to their struggle for freedom and equality.

"A statement so filled with anti-semitic venom," said Rustin and Randolph, who also is an AFL-CIO vice president, "can only be interpreted as an attempt to divert national attention away from the problems of jobs, housing and education, as well as an attempt to divide the growing alliance of labor, liberal religious and civil rights forces.

"This country is passing through a period of deep crisis, and we are confident that all men of good will —and Jews in particular—will dismiss the efforts of a small group to create an atmosphere of hatred, and will join forces to destroy the conditions which have bred frustration and despair, and which have given rise to upheavals in our cities.

". . . Anti-semitism and race hatred have always destroyed those who have attempted to manipulate them."

NEW PRESIDENT of Railroad Signalmen, C. J. Chamberlain, right, is congratulated by Jesse Clark, who retired after heading the union for 22 years. Center is Paul T. Drummond, elected to succeed Chamberlain as secretary-treasurer.

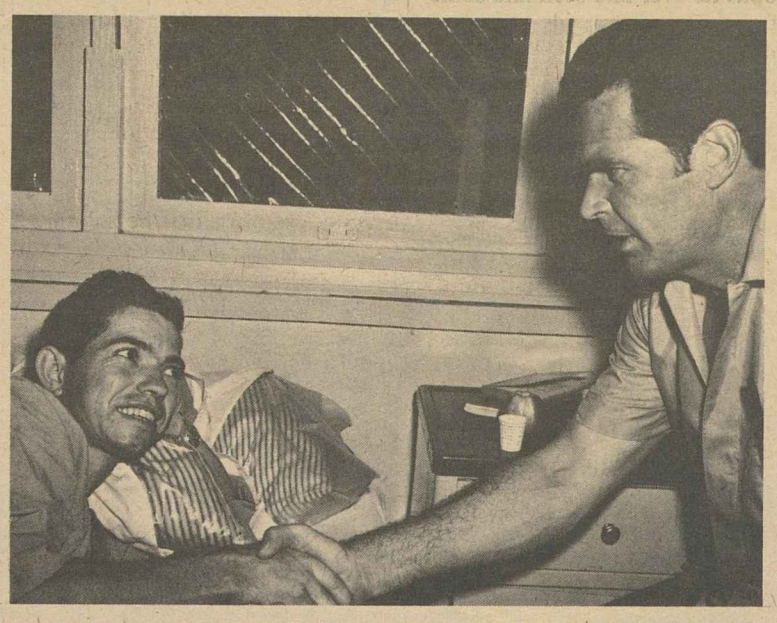
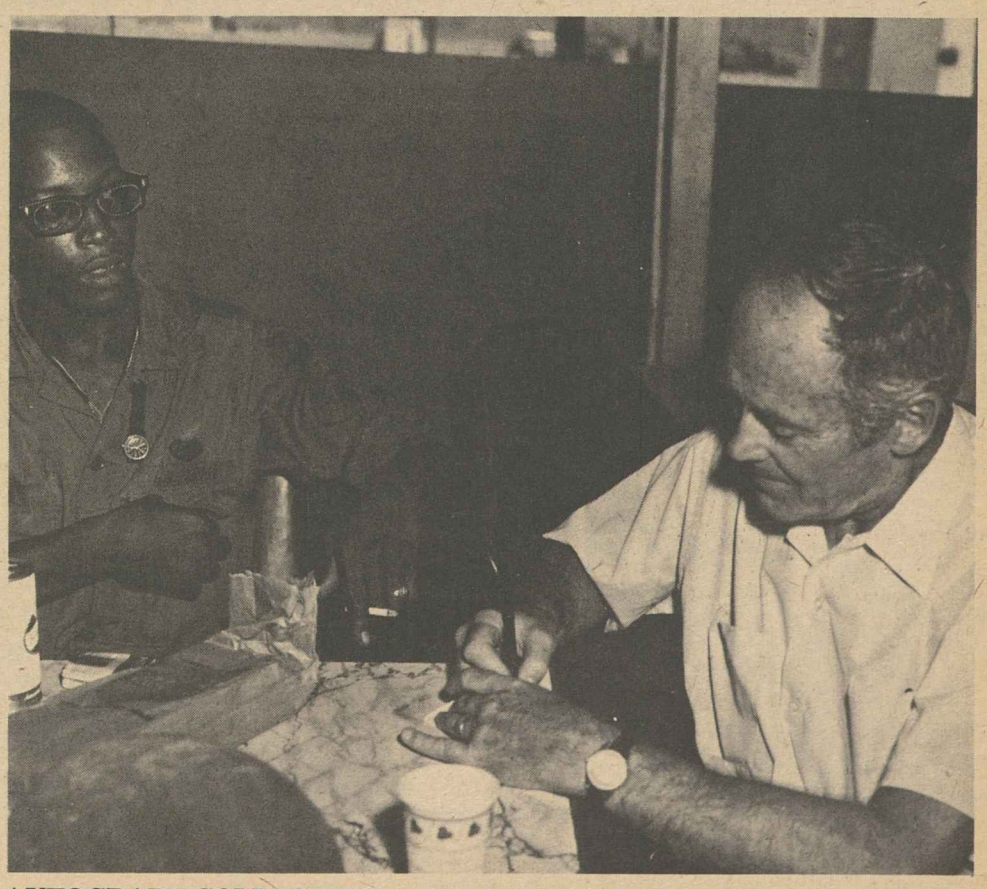
Union Entertainers Come to Viet Nam

Members of AFL-CIO unions in the movie and television industries are doing in Viet Nam just what they have done in past wars—entertaining the men who come out of the jungle after laying their lives on the line in combat. Nearly every day for the past two years the great and the unknown of the amusement world, through the USO-Hollywood Overseas Committee, have taken their acts, or just their hands to be shaken, to the men of all services. They have travelled Viet Nam's length and breadth, have entertained as few as 10 and as many as 10,000 at a clip. Actor George Chandler heads the HOC, which sends two types of entertainment. One is the handshaking tour on which an important star, a member of the Screen Actors Guild, moves about doing just that. The other is the variety unit, usually made up of musicians, singers and dancers who perform in camps, bases and hospitals and spend their off-time chatting. The trips run from 17 to 24 days, but Actress Martha Raye (left) has spent more than three months bringing home a little closer to the fighting men. Screen Actor James Garner (below), in a field hospital at Tan Son Nhut, meets Lieut. Emmett M. Dixson, Traskwood, Ark., a green beret fighter.



FROM SCREEN to boondocks: Movie Actor Hugh O'Brien found friends eager to chat with him even in the remote parts of Viet Nam and despite the tropical rain that dampened everything but spirits.

PROBABLY Lynn Marta (left) and Mittie Lawrence (right) never dreamed they'd wow 'em in a place as remote as Pleiku, Viet Nam, with the Jimmy Boyd (center) Show, but here they are doing it—and obviously enjoying themselves.



AUTOGRAPH COLLECTING is a standard pastime for the men in Viet Nam, and Sp4 Willie J. Simms, Atlanta, Ga., was happy to get that of Henry Fonda. The scene is the enlisted men's club at II Field Force Viet Nam.

Too Little For Too Few

WHAT'S WRONG with the House-passed social security bill? The omnibus measure provides too little for too few who have the greatest need.

The AFL-CIO has tagged eight major areas of the bill that must be improved in the Senate to meet the long-range objectives of organized labor, Federation Pres. George Meany said in commenting on the House bill. The Senate should:

1. Raise the minimum benefit level to $70 for a single person and $105 for a couple, and increase all other benefits by at least 15 percent. This would make possible the over-all 20 percent increase in social security benefit payments the President has recommended.

2. Finance the benefit improvements by an increase in the earnings level, on which both contributions and benefits are determined, by steps from the present $6,600 to $10,800.

3. Extend Medicare coverage to the disabled.

4. Establish reasonable controls on unduly high hospital charges and physician fees paid under Medicare.

5. Assure that Medicaid is available to the needy and the medically needy whose limited incomes cannot pay for adequate health care.

6. Improve present appallingly inadequate public assistance payments and assure adequate day-care for children of families receiving assistance in which the mother is participating in training programs.

7. Strengthen rather than weaken the possibility of poor families remaining together by requiring states to make assistance available where the father is in the home until he can obtain work for which he is qualified.

8. Transfer administration of community work and training to the Dept. of Labor with provision of adequate safeguards for those assigned to this program, including requirement of payment of prevailing wages and in no case less than the applicable minimum wage.

Turning Back the Clock

SENATE REPUBLICAN LEADER Everett McKinley Dirksen has introduced a bill, with 29 co-sponsors, to take wage-hour law coverage away from more than 1 million retail store employes and prevent another million workers from coming under the law's protection in 1969.

Dirksen says he is trying to protect low-paid workers who will lose their jobs because employers can't afford to pay the minimum wage.

The facts, reported by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, are that retail employment has gone up in the months since wage-hour coverage was expanded—to 300,000 more than the same period a year ago. And the rate of increase was greatest for the low-wage segment of the industry.

Dirksen is parroting the discredited argument employers have used to oppose every increase in the minimum wage. It is perhaps less valid today than in the past. His latest attempt to turn the clock back is nothing but an outrageous bid to deny the lowest paid workers a limited bit of progress toward a better life.

At Congressional Hearings:

Fear, Firing, Blacklisting Used Against South's Textile Workers

Case histories on union-busting by the J. P. Stevens & Co. textile chain are being spread on the record of the House Labor Committee at its current hearings. Here are some excerpts. The questioning is by Rep. Frank Thompson (D-N.J.), subcommittee chairman. James Pierce is a union representative working on the Stevens campaign.

Jess Cudd: Mr. Chairman, me and my son worked in the Whitmire plant 50 years. I worked 50 years and he worked from 1949 to 1963. He went to the Army and came back and went to work about 1961. The union come along throwing out leaflets and we joined the union. He didn't last very long. It went on and they got to beating on me roughly, every little thing they would come to me about it. They come to me and say, "Mr. Cudd, how come you don't adopt that boy's two children and you could make about as much out of it as you could in the mill by getting Social Security and run him out of town."

Mr. Thompson: How long have you been unemployed?

Mr. Cudd: I can't get a job.

Mr. Thompson: You have tried?

Mr. Cudd: I was fired Jan. 2, 1964.

Mr. Pierce: Jess went to work in the textile mill when he was nine years old and in this particular mill when he was 11. He worked over 50 years and only had two write-ups and he was fired immediately on joining the union.

Mrs. Shirley Hobbs: My husband and I went to work for J. P. Stevens and worked for them about three years. Then he went in the Navy and since then he worked about 10 years. We were discharged. He was discharged Oct. 22 and I was discharged Oct. 9, 1963. After he was discharged he got a job with Overnight which lasted one day. He was blackballed.

Before that we talked, both he and I, to the manager of the Overnight there and he was pleased to get my husband to go to work for him but after he was blackballed he was told he couldn't use him. He had gotten a call from Charlotte from somebody and just couldn't use him. After that he couldn't find work anywhere so he went to Richmond. He had to drive about 200 miles every day to get to his work and I had to drive about 40 miles back and forth to work. We have had it hard.

This I would like to say: Lincoln freed the slaves but J. P. Stevens has certainly enslaved his workers with fear, blackballing them and overwork loads.

Mr. Thompson: Why were you fired? Tell us what kind of work you did.

Mrs. Hobbs: I was a napkin inspector.

Mr. Thompson: What did you do? How many napkins did you inspect a day?

Mrs. Hobbs: I don't know; production was about 3,000.

Mr. Thompson: What did you do with them?

Mrs. Hobbs: Counted them, shaded them, removed rags, gave back repairs to the sewers, counted them, piled them up and put them on the buggy.

Mr. Thompson: Did you do something wrong in your job?

Mrs. Hobbs: Yes, for about three years I counted okay and then after they got the letter I couldn't count.

Mr. Thompson: How many mistakes did you make?

Mrs. Hobbs: One in a bundle, two in another.

Mr. Thompson: One? Tell us about it.

Mrs. Hobbs: I had to count them and put 100 to a bundle and tie it up.

Mr. Thompson: You did 3,000 a day?

Mrs. Hobbs: More than that.

Mr. Thompson: You inspected them and put them in bundles?

Mrs. Hobbs: Yes.

Mr. Thompson: Tell us what happened.

Mrs. Hobbs: On the day of my discharge my forelady came up and started counting the bundle, one was missing.

Mr. Thompson: There was 99 in the bundle?

Mrs. Hobbs: Yes. Just before 12 she came back again and two were missing. Then I went to Mrs. Griffin's office and out the door I went.

Mr. Thompson: How long was this after you joined the union?

Mrs. Hobbs: A matter of two weeks, I would say.

Mr. Thompson: Had you ever made any other mistakes like missing three out of several thousand?

Mrs. Hobbs: I am not saying I didn't make mistakes because you can't stand there all day counting napkins and not make a mistake, but I made no more mistakes than the other inspectors did.

Mr. Pierce: Shirley attended a union meeting on Oct. 6 in Charlotte. Her name was sent in to the company on Oct. 6 and she was fired Oct. 9.

Gardner Voices Concern:

Neediest Children Seen Victims Of Welfare Program Curbs

The following is excerpted from remarks by John W. Gardner, Secretary of Health, Education & Welfare, to a meeting of state and regional welfare and rehabilitation officials in Washington, D. C.

THE SOCIAL SECURITY BILL provides for a new kind of focus on the family as a total entity. We think this can be all to the good.

First, the states would be required to develop a comprehensive plan for each family and to review it frequently. Second, the states would be required to provide work and training programs for welfare recipients deemed "appropriate" for employment. And third, the states would have to provide greatly enlarged day care and homemaker services for employed mothers in the Aid for Dependent Children program.

The comprehensive plan drawn up for each family would be based on an evaluation of the potentialities for employment of family members over 16 who are not in school, the health and educational and training needs they might have, and the welfare of the children.

If the evaluations are well and carefully done, if their goals are broader than the achievement of employment alone, and if the resulting plans are realistically and imaginatively laid, many families now on public assistance will find new hope, new confidence, new stability, and a new opportunity to become productive and participating—with all the increase in personal satisfaction and happiness that goes with it.

With respect to employment, we have had encouraging successes. Based on the work-experience programs that have been operating for a couple of years, we have every reason to believe that there are many more individuals who want to be and can be trained and employed.

It is perfectly obvious that not all mothers would wish to, or should, or could, work full-time, or perhaps even part-time. But the unknown number who wish to, or should, or could, ought to have that chance.

THUS FAR, participation in the work-experience programs has been entirely voluntary, though attractive incentives have been offered. The proposed legislation would make participation a condition for receiving assistance for those determined to be appropriate for work or training. But the bill provides that a recipient of public assistance may refuse such work-training for "good cause," and the existing law allows an individual to appeal any decision to the state agency. I have asked my staff to develop criteria for the administration of these provisions that will ensure protection of the rights of the individual. I am deeply concerned that those rights be preserved.

But what really matters is what happens to each family, and for all practical purposes that will be decided elsewhere, not in Washington. A mother might appear to be a good candidate for work and training on several grounds, yet special circumstances might make it desirable for her to delay entrance into the program.

If determinations are made according to rigid formulas inflexibly applied, if lack of imagination and foresight characterize action at the decision level, then the result can only be grief for the individuals and families involved and defeat of the purposes of the program, which are to strengthen the family and move it toward independence.

The work-training projects offer great opportunities, but like all opportunities, they must be exploited with wisdom as well as energy. At the very minimum, we must be sure that we are not preparing candidates for non-existent jobs. To stir expectations and then be unable to pay off is both immoral and foolish—and again, destructive of the ends of the program.

The provisions for day care also offer great potentialities for enriched educational and play programs that would enhance the youngsters' chances for healthy intellectual and emotional growth.

There is also, however, a debit side to the proposed legislation from our point of view. We feel that some of it would have the effect of defeating or weakening the overall purposes of the bill.

The legislation rightly places great emphasis on the work and training programs. Yet it deleted the Administration provision that would make it mandatory upon the states to pay full need, as defined by each state itself, to public assistance recipients, and to reprice such standards each year. Most states' definitions of full need are far from prodigal. I will recommend to the Senate the reinstatement of these provisions which were included in the Administration proposal.

Something we did not ask for and did get was the ceiling which was placed on the aid for dependent children program. The proportion of children on the rolls because of the absence or desertion of a parent would be frozen as of the proportion obtaining in January of this year. I will recommend to the Senate deletion of the provision.

The federal government would be foreclosed from sharing in the support of children whose condition is precisely the same as that of children already being assisted. The states would be encouraged—virtually forced—to establish even more restrictive eligibility requirements, or else to lower the already inadequate support being paid.

I do not believe that children should have to pay for the shortcomings and inequities of the society into which they are born. I do not believe that children should have to pay for the real or supposed sins of their parents. And I think it would be shortsighted of a society to produce, by its neglect, a group of future citizens very likely to be unproductive and characterized by bitterness and alienation.

AFL-CIO Urges House to Plug Truth-in-Lending Bill Loophole

AN AFL-CIO spokesman urged the House to plug the revolving credit account loophole in the Truth-in-Lending bill.

Already the fastest-growing form of consumer credit, the impact of revolving accounts will take a "tremendous leap" in the next few years, AFL-CIO Legislative Rep. James F. Doherty predicted.

Testimony from the American Bankers Association and others before the Special House Subcommittee on Consumer Affairs has shown that within five years, half of all credit business in the United States will be on a revolving basis, he noted.

"There is no reason why this segment of the credit economy should be exempt from a truth-in-lending law," he declared on Labor News Conference, a nationwide radio interview aired Tuesdays at 7:35 p.m. EDT on the Mutual Broadcasting System.

Doherty said that enactment of a strong truth-in-lending law is particularly important to low-income families.

"The poor always pay more," he said, "and are more susceptible to the higher interest rate purveyors of credit than other people."

A STUDY by the special subcommittee, he said, had confirmed that some firms make more money from their credit and time payment sales than they do from profits on the goods they are selling. He said that some merchants in poorer districts encourage credit accounts as an additional income source.

Truth-in-lending, Doherty emphasized, is based on the principle of disclosure—to help consumers determine the cheapest sources of credit and how to obtain it. "The whole idea of this bill," he declared, "is to put a private competition, free enterprise aspect into the credit market."

Questioning Doherty were Nan Robertson, of the New York Times' Washington bureau, and Neil Gilbride, labor correspondent for the Associated Press.

Washington Window

By Press Associates, Inc.

IN THE WAKE of the devastating ghetto riots across the country this summer a recent report by the U.S. Census Bureau throws some significant light on the problem.

It shows that 41 percent of the non-white population of this country was classed as "poor" or poverty-stricken in 1966.

The classification "poor" needs explanation. According to the Census Bureau formula, a woman, 65 or older and living alone, would be labeled "poor" if she earned $1,559 or less during 1966. The formula ranges up to a non-farm family of seven or more which would be classed as "poor" if it had an income of $5,440 or less.

In contrast to the 41 percent non-white poor in 1966, there were 15 percent white poor.

Poverty among both white and non-white groups has eased since 1959. In that year it was 55 percent for the non-whites and 22 percent for the whites. Proportionately, whites have been able to climb out of the poverty level at a faster pace than Negroes.

In actual numbers, the number of poor non-whites dropped from 11 million to 10 million during the seven-year period. The white poor declined from 20 million to 12 million.

Underlying all this is the fact that unemployment among Negroes is twice that of white workers and the median earnings of Negro men are about half of the median earnings of white men. This disproportion has remained largely unchanged for the last 30 years.

In June of this year the Commissioner of Labor Statistics reported that two-thirds of all Negroes are still employed in semi-skilled, unskilled and service jobs.

Recently, Howard Jenkins, Jr., Negro member of the National Labor Relations Board, spoke to an Urban League meeting in Colorado Springs, Col., and noted these statistics.

He talked about the "frustrations" of the Negro which, he said, "are derived from a realization at long last that an unbelievably high percentage of urban Negro families are trapped in a vicious circle that begins with and ends with job discrimination."

"The victims of the system," he added, "need no statistical reports or studies by committees of experts to define their problem."

IT IS OFTEN pointed out that individual Negroes are able to climb out of this economic cycle but Jenkins notes how they are still faced with frequently insurmountable problems.

"The Negro lawyer," he says, "whose clientele and professional growth and, indeed his very office location, are limited by his race, shares that sense of injustice rooted in job discrimination.

"The Negro physician, denied hospital privileges, membership on health boards, excluded from participation in planning public health facilities in his city, shares that sense of injustice.

"The Negro businessman, treated by the banks as a curiosity, excluded from commercial credit channels, totally ignored by the Chamber of Commerce, isolated from the money-making opportunities, shares that sense of injustice.

"The Negro teacher, having won his Ph.D. the hard way, who finds few facilities willing to accept him, striving to maintain his academic equilibrium in a butcher and beaver world, shares that sense of injustice.

"The employe in private industry, be he in plant or office, learns quickly the roadblocks to advancement and, though he sees an occasional Negro in a supervisory or minor executive position, he, too, shares that sense of injustice rooted in job discrimination."

There is little question, as Jenkins acknowledges, that the vast array of job and civil rights programs set up by the federal government have contributed to the progress made to date. Obviously, much more is needed.

"Let the Negro men in the cities go to work," says Jenkins, "let them feel the dignity of being productive, let them assume their rightful places as family supporter and family head, let them raise up sons who look not to a welfare worker or the postman with a relief check, but to their father who supports them with his adequate earnings."

TRUTH-IN-LENDING bill before the House should be bolstered by extending coverage to revolving credit accounts, AFL-CIO Legislative Rep. James F. Doherty (center) urged on Labor News Conference. Questioning him on the public service interview aired on the Mutual Radio Network were Neil Gilbride of the Associated Press and Nan Robertson of the New York Times.

How To Buy:

'Instant' Foods Digest Easily—The Cost Is Hard To Swallow

By Sidney Margolius

NEW INSTANT FOOD products are coming on the market faster than this column can digest them. Not that there's much to digest, since some of the ingredients are artificial. But the price is hard to swallow.

Ordinary milk is expensive enough for working families this year. It's typically 26 to 30 cents a quart depending on where you live and where you buy it, and even more in some areas.

But now food processors have learned how to package inexpensive milk powder, add flavoring and a few synthetic vitamins, in some cases, thickeners, and sell these products at high prices as "Instant Breakfast," "Diet Milk," "Carnation Slender," "Great Shakes," and of course, our old friends Metrecal and Sego.

The "instant breakfasts" and "diet milks" can be even more expensive for what you get. What you do get is shown in the list of ingredients on the package. In the case of one brand of "diet milk" selling for 89 cents for five one-pint envelopes, you are getting the equivalent of 20 cents worth of dry skim milk with added vitamins and flavoring. You can reconstitute ordinary dry non-fat milk powder by mixing with water for only 4 cents a pint compared to 18 cents a pint for "Diet Milk."

Similarly, one of the leading brands of "instant breakfast"—a dry powder you mix with whole milk—again is merely nonfat dry milk, sugar, thickeners, egg yolk solids, artificial flower and added vitamins. If you buy some of the flavored varieties, you actually get sugar as the leading ingredient.

For this combination you pay at the rate of $1.10 to $1.65 a pound. That's what a box of six envelopes weighing 7.2 ounces comes to, at the 59 to 75 cents charged by various stores.

The claim is that the "Instant Breakfast" powder makes milk a meal. But you get more protein—the expensive nutrient—in a breakfast of a glass of reconstituted non-fat milk, one egg and a slice or two of bread, at a cost of 8 to 9 cents, than in "Instant Breakfast" with the added milk at a cost of 18 cents.

You can be fooled by some of the nonmenclature of ingredients if you aren't sharp. "Carnation Instant Breakfast" lists as one of its main ingredients "sucrose". That, of course, is merely the chemical name of ordinary sugar.

Similarly in "Great Shakes" the leading ingredient is sugar, followed by malted milk, cocoa and various thickeners and flavorings.

You can also buy already-prepared milk shakes (By Mr. Borden) for your kids. At 17 cents for 10 ounces, this comes to 53 cents a quart for milk, with added sugar, thickeners and artificial flavor.

You even have to consider what you are really getting when you pay an extra or premium price for "richer" or "extra rich" milks. Mary Gullberg, home economist at the Berkeley, Calif., Co-ops, points out that small differences in milk, the amount of butterfat or even in the protein value often are not nutritionally significant.

YOU CAN'T GET away from the fact that ordinary nonfat milk powder, at a cost of 8 to 10 cents a quart when reconstituted, is probably the single best buy to use as a basis for flavored milk drinks for children, and "diet milk" for yourself. It's also a simple, inexpensive way to add protein value to regular milk, soups, baked desserts, cakes, cookies, meat patties and loaf casseroles and other dishes.

Margarine, too, which began as a low-cost alternative, now can cost almost as much as butter merely with variations in ingredients and texture.

The basic margarine, which must meet a federal standard, starts out as low as 18-19 cents a pound for supermarket own brands. With the addition of part-liquid corn oil or safflower oil for those concerned with cholesterol, and sometimes of dry milk to provide more of the taste of "the high-price spread," deluxe soft margarines have gone all the way to 39 to 49 cents.

There even now is a "diet" margarine which costs almost three times as much as ordinary margarine, although the leading ingredient is water, which makes it lower in calories.

At 47 cents a pound for a product which is 50 percent water, you are really paying for the margarine in "diet margarine" at the rate of 94 cents a pound. You can achieve the same effect by using half the amount of ordinary margarine on your bread and taking a sip of water with each bite. If you like, hold this combination in your mouth for a moment before swallowing so it blends together thoroughly.

Humphrey Proposals:

Labor's Help Sought To Prevent Dropouts

By Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey

YOUNGSTERS who drop out of school do not disappear. They are still there—right in your community.

You can find the majority of them in low-income neighborhoods. Some are delinquents. Others are jobless. Many are on welfare.

There are few options open to young people who drop out of school. In many cases, they have no marketable skill, and cannot read, write, or count well enough to make it on a job.

Some dropouts do make it up the ladder to a good job with good pay—but most don't. They end up in dead-end jobs with low incomes and little chance for advancement.

I can think of no one better qualified to help these young people stay in school than the working men and women of America.

You have seen first-hand how job opportunities can vanish overnight because of automation.

When this change occurs, it is difficult enough to make the switch to a new job when you have years of working experience. But, if you have neither working experience nor an education, it is almost impossible.

MORE THAN 900,000 young Americans will drop out of school this fall—unless they get help.

Here's what you can do:

- Encourage the local schools to start work-study apprentice programs, and give the schools the benefit of your experience in planning those programs.
- Establish a Labor Counseling Service for actual dropouts and potential dropouts to encourage these youngsters to stay in school or go back to school. You can work with the schools to identify these youngsters and then assign a union member to counsel the youth on the importance of an education. Help him find a part-time job if he needs one to stay in school.
- If you find that many youngsters in your community drop out of school because they find it uninteresting, work with the school to better meet the needs of its students.
- Provide part-time jobs in union offices for young people who need to stay in school.
- Make union manpower and resources available for community Stay-in-School campaign projects.
- Ask your fellow union members to join you in taking a personal interest in these youths. Give these young people the pat on the back or the helping hand they need. Let them know someone cares about them and their future.

Pensions Ruled Subject To Contract Arbitration

The California Supreme Court ordered a meat packing firm to submit a pension grievance to arbitration, even though details of the firm's pension plan are not spelled out in the basic union-management contract.

Because a separate pension agreement does not provide arbitration of an eligibility claim, the Cudahy Packing Co. refused to arbitrate a grievance brought by Local 229 of the Meat Cutters.

A trial judge upheld the company but the state Supreme Court ruled 6-1 in favor of the union's position that a reference to pensions in the basic contract brought the retirement program under the arbitration clause of the contract.

The court said the governing doctrine is that any doubt about a union's right to arbitrate a grievance should be resolved in favor of arbitration.

"Because arbitration substitutes for economic warfare the peaceful adjudication of disputes," the California jurists said, "courts do not congeal arbitration provisions into fixed molds."

USS Gompers Crew Expresses Thanks

The officers and men of the USS Samuel Gompers have expressed "our profound appreciation" to Pres. George Meany for the silver service the AFL-CIO presented to the ship when it was commissioned on July 1.

Capt. Harry Risch, Jr., the commanding officer, in a letter of thanks to Meany described the service as "extraordinarily handsome" and "a most fitting tribute to the founder of the AFL, for whom the ship is named." It is now displayed in a position of honor, he said, "and will be the source of a great deal of pleasure and pride in the years ahead."

Montana Labor Marks Gains In Legislature

Helena, Mont.—The last session of the Montana legislature was one of the "best ever," Montana AFL-CIO officers reported at the state convention here.

Pres. Joe Crosswhite and Executive Sec. James S. Umber reported that the legislature raised workmen's compensation benefits, gave hospital nurses the right to bargain collectively with management, improved retirement allowances for state employes and authorized salary increases for police and firemen in Montana communities—all labor-supported measures.

With labor's backing the legislators also headed off "right to work" legislation, blocked a state sales tax urged by the state administration, gave the state labor commissioner more power to enforce safety laws, and made other improvements in state laws.

The convention voted its full backing for the current strike of 9,000 Montana smeltermen and craftsmen against the Anaconda Co. and other major suppliers of copper, zinc and lead and criticized the employers for balking a settlement with 40,000 members of the Steelworkers and 18 other unions.

Vice Pres. John M. Miller and the two top officers were re-elected for two-year terms along with four incumbent board members. Richard McCreanor of the Laborers in Helena and Joseph Meyer of the Retail Clerks, Great Falls, won seats on the board from Lyle Johnson and John Evanko.

The delegates updated the state AFL-CIO constitution, gave the executive board authority to raise the salary of the executive secretary from $200 a week to a top of $250, and authorized the appointment of committees to seek closer relationships with rural electric associations and other cooperative groups.

In other actions, the convention endorsed Pres. Johnson's "war on poverty" program and the American defense posture in Viet Nam; opposed cutbacks on spending for domestic programs; and called for regulation of insurance industry practices in canceling policies suddenly and raising rates indiscriminately.

Rail Union Publicist Takes Federal Post

Cleveland, O.—William E. Loftus resigned as public relations director of the Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen to become a senior public affairs analyst on the staff of A. S. Lang, federal railroad administrator.

Loftus graduated from the Kent State University journalism school in 1951 and worked for United Press Intl. until starting work with the BLF&E in 1957.

Delegates Appointed To TUC Convention

Pres. William J. Pachler of the Utility Workers and Pres. Jerry Wurf of the State, County & Municipal Employes have been named AFL-CIO fraternal delegates to the 99th convention of the British Trades Union Congress, Pres. George Meany announced.

The week-long session will open Sept. 4 in Brighton. Its work will include planning for the TUC centenary, to be observed in 1968.

Unionists Get Close-Up Of Histadrut Activities

Fifteen American trade unionists got a first hand look at the operations of Histadrut, the Israeli labor federation, and the battlefronts of the recent war.

The group, representing eight U.S. unions, was based at the Afro-Asian Institute in Tel Aviv, but branched out to all of the major cities and regions of Israel for meetings with local officials and Histadrut officials, and for visits to plants and factories.

In Nazareth, they met with George Sa'ad, Arab president of the city's labor council, for an intensive discussion of conditions of the Arab workers who have been part of the state of Israel since its inception in 1948.

In Tel Aviv, the three-week trade union leadership seminar included a series of discussions with the chief officers of Histadrut, who expressed deep appreciation for the support given Israel by the American labor movement in the war crisis in June.

Visits to recent battlefronts included the Syrian Heights, Gaza, Old Jerusalem and the West Bank of the Jordan River. In the Syrian Heights, where the group was among the first observers other than Israeli soldiers, vast amounts of fire-blackened tanks, trucks and other war equipment, mostly of Russian manufacture, dotted the landscape.

The seminar, fourth annual such event sponsored by Histadrut, was arranged by the American Trade Union Council for Histadrut. The Israeli director of the seminar was Jeremiah Haggai of Histadrut. Leader of the American group was Lester Zosel, director of international affairs for the Railway Clerks.

Others who participated in the seminar were: George Caudelle, business manager of the Atlanta Building and Construction Trades Council; Dolores Dickman, Colorado state director of women's activities for COPE; Ike Gordon, manager, Allentown-Reading District Council, ILGWU; Auda Romine, secretary-treasurer, Local 500, Meat Cutters, Cleveland; Harry Oitzer, business representative, Philadelphia Joint Board, ILGWU; Emil Rosenberg, field representative, American Trade Union Council for Histadrut; Vito Sciacca, South Jersey-Philadelphia Joint Board, ILGWU; Alex Sharp, area supervisor, District 6, Steelworkers, Ontario, Canada; Kenneth Shaw and Daniel Sullivan, both vice presidents, Railway Clerks; Sam Tancreto, secretary-treasurer, Boston Joint Board, Amalgamated Clothing Workers; Gilbert Teitel, president, Allegheny County Labor Council, Pennsylvania; Isidore Weisgal, representative, California Joint Board, Amalgamated Clothing Workers; and Bernard Stephens, director of publications for the State, County & Municipal Employes district council in New York.

Organize and Educate, N. Y. Conference Urged

Southampton, N. Y.—Organizing the unorganized and establishing better channels of communication with those workers who are already union members were the twin concerns of a four-day conference sponsored by the Education Committee of the New York City AFL-CIO. Over 80 members of three dozen New York City unions attended the conference at Southampton College on Long Island. It was the fourth and largest annual summer school sponsored by the council.

Central Labor Council Pres. Harry Van Arsdale, Jr., urged the students, most of whom were full time organizers, union representatives and local officers, to make full use of what they learned at the conference by driving home the union's political and economic message to members and by helping to organize the many low-paid workers who are still outside of the union movement.

Van Arsdale and Edward Haines, assistant director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Organization, both described the current organizing drive among farm workers, and students planned ways in which New York City union members could aid the efforts of farm workers to win union recognition.

Dr. Aurelia Toyer, research director of the New York City Dept. of Labor, opened the conference with a description of "Who Are New York City's Workers," and Frank McGrath, Area 10 COPE Director, discussed the attitudes of union members as revealed by the Kraft survey.

Several sessions followed on methods of improving communications with union membership. Jack Sessions, staff representative of the AFL-CIO Education Dept., Steven Remsen, education director of the Textile Workers Union of America, and Irving Stern, of Local 342 of the Meat Cutters, discussing union communication, suggested that membership meetings are no longer adequate to serve as the sole means of communication between members and officers.

The group discussed the need for more informal education programs and also the potential uses of such media as the press, radio and television as ways of better reaching the union members.

In a closing session, Gus Tyler, assistant president of the Ladies' Garment Workers, predicted that despite the increase of industrial automation, the labor movement will continue to grow, especially among farm workers and professional workers. Teachers, government workers, professional workers and service workers are rapidly moving toward full collective bargaining, Tyler told the conference.

Among other speakers at the conference were Newspaper Guildsman Austin Perlow of the Long Island Press, Joseph Mazer, counsel of New York City's Office of Labor Relations, and Daniel Nelson, research director for Dist. Council 37 of the State, County and Municipal Employes.

Worldwide Problem:

Schools Inadequate, ICFTU Parley Told

Montreal, Que.—Formal schooling is lagging behind the needs of the times in every country, Assistant Gen. Sec. Herbert A. Tulatz of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions told trade union educators from nations throughout the free world.

"We cannot find a single country where there is not a sizeable job still to be done before the official school systems are adapted to the permanent educational needs of democratic societies in the technological age," he declared.

"Teaching should be oriented towards the social realities of today."

Tulatz, the ICFTU's director of educational activities, gave the keynote speech at the opening session of the first ICFTU World Conference on Education in the Trade Union Movement.

Some 200 delegates from more than 50 nations were present for the opening of the 10-day parley, many of them from developing countries.

Participants included educators on the staffs of ICFTU affiliates, university personnel working in labor education, and representatives of governmental and intergovernmental bodies, including the Intl. Labor Organization.

Tulatz said that the biggest gaps in vocational education have been found in the developing countries, partly because the schools under colonial rule tended to disregard it.

"The result is," he added, "that many young school-leavers in those countries strive only to get clerical jobs, although the national need is for skilled farmers and workers."

He urged flexible union organizing techniques to cope with the changing composition of the labor force. Problems, he said, include integrating into the labor movement white collar workers "without traditional trade union ties," and attracting the younger generation of workers.

Exec. Vice Pres. Joe Morris of the Canadian Labor Congress, in welcoming the delegates, said they had met not only to discuss labor educational programs, "but also to explore ways of opening educational opportunities to the entire populations of both developing and industrialized societies."

Daily Round Tables

Supplementing the general sessions were daily round table working groups on trade unions and education, practical problems, social and economic demands, and manpower planning. Delegates quickly found that they faced similar problems everywhere.

The world would not have to worry so much about the population explosion if it stopped wasting its human and natural resources, Kalman Kaplansky, Canadian ILO director and former international affairs director for the CLC, said in calling full utilization of such resources "the most important, most pressing and most decisive issue of our time."

In trying to raise world educational standards, he said, the United Nations—of which the ILO is a part—is faced with "a legacy of generations of illiteracy, ignorance and social backwardness, a legacy of generations of oppression, colonial, political and racial," that has given the world 800 million men and women who cannot read or write.

He predicted that the introduction of "truly revolutionary" educational methods in the next 10 years, including greater use of television and radio, will "greatly speed the process of economic growth and the enhancement of human dignity."

New Objectives

Vice Pres. Bernard Tacke of the West German Trade Union Federation (DGB) urged union educators to concern themselves with "the professional training of the worker and his political education, in response to the duties of the trade unions for the maintenance of free democratic principles."

Union educators, he said, in addition face the job of training future generations of local and national leaders and of increasing workers' solidarity and communal spirit.

Delegates Mourn Anti-Castro Martyr

Montreal, Que. — Delegates to the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions labor education conference here stood for a minute of silence in memory of Francesco Aguierre, one of the first Cuban labor leaders jailed by the Castro regime, who died recently in Havana's Principe prison.

Aguierre headed the Food Workers Union, which built the former Havana-Hilton Hotel, and the democratic Cuban Workers Confederation (CTC). One of the founders of the ICFTU, he was arrested five years ago and sentenced to 10 years in prison.

Death Benefit Assures Funds For Education

New York — The children of members of Flint Glass Workers Local 1002 who have died since Jan. 1, 1966, are assured of completion of their education under an Education Scholarship Program approved by the directors of the Corning Glass Works.

The plan, financed entirely by the company, is believed the only one of its kind in U.S. industry. The only condition is five years of service before the parent's death.

Financial support for children in secondary schools—basically Grades 7 through 12—is $400 a year for each year begun after age 12 and before age 18. Total payments for secondary school years are limited to $2,400 per child.

For college students, payments up to $2,000 a year will be made to help cover the cost of tuition, board, room, fees and similar charges. Total payments are limited to $8,000 per child; no payment is made for any academic year starting after the student reaches the age of 28, and no provision is made for graduate study.

Credit Union Body Cites 1967 Growth

Madison, Wis.—The number of credit unions in the United States increased by 677 to 22,796 in the year ended last Dec. 31, according to preliminary estimates by Credit Union Intl., formerly the Credit Union National Association.

Membership rose from 16.7 million to 18 million and savings from $9.2 billion to $10.1 billion. Total assets climbed from $10.5 billion to $11.5 billion.

In Canada 114 new credit unions were organized, raising the total to 4,772. Membership went from 4.2 million to 4.5 million, savings from $2.3 billion to $2.6 billion.

House Hearing Told:

Taypayers Paying For Union-Busting

tional Labor Relations Act can be strengthened.

The NLRB has found the company in violation of the act six times since 1959 "yet neither the rulings of the NLRB nor court orders have resulted in the company's bargaining in good faith," Scheurich testified.

Not a single Winn-Dixie employe is protected by a union contract and none of the employes it has fired for exercising their rights under the law has been reinstated or given lost pay in spite of court orders, the union official said.

Mrs. Louise Hearns and Mrs. Gustavia Gale, fired by Rutter-Rex 12 years ago in New Orleans, told how the clothing firm has resisted all orders to reinstate them and is now appealing an NLRB order for $160,000 in backpay due them and 180 other unlawfully fired employes.

"We expect a decision next year after the case is argued in the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, New Orleans," Counsel Jacob Sheinkman of the Clothing Workers told the subcommittee, headed by Rep. Frank Thompson, Jr. (D-N.J.).

Mrs. Hearns was a top stitcher when most of Rutter-Rex's 622 employes voted for the union in 1954 and later struck over management's refusal to bargain. She was reinstated briefly in 1955, then fired again. Three years later she got her first steady job again at the Louisiana Garment Mfg. Co., and once more went on an ACWA picket line when the employer balked at dealing with the union.

"When the strike began there 10 months ago," she testified, "I was averaging the hourly minimum, and on good days I would bring home $14 or $15. I am told that Louisiana Garment, like Rutter-Rex, has been breaking the labor law.

"I know very well that neither of these companies want to recognize the union that the people have asked to represent them. Because these employers are breaking the law, a person like myself who has been a school teacher and who wants a nice home and family had to go out on strike . . . and work as a maid to make ends meet."

If the law permits employers to "do these terrible things, I think the law should be changed," Mrs. Hearns said.

Mrs. Gale, mother of two sons, worked on a "felling" operation when the strike began at Rutter-Rex and applied for reinstatement when it ended "but they have never reinstated me" and "I had a very difficult time just managing to survive." She added: "I just don't think it's fair to let these companies treat people this way."

Four 'Victories'

In the Winn-Dixie case, Scheurich listed four different campaigns in which the Meat Cutters succeeded in organizing groups of store and warehouse employes to no avail.

The record of company resistance shows, he said, "how a powerful and rich corporation can successfully frustrate the efforts of its employes to organize into unions. It can disregard the labor laws. It can wilfully disobey the orders of the NLRB. It can refuse to comply with the orders of the courts."

While the company has continued to violate the law and show contempt for the courts, "not a single one of the owners and top policymakers of Winn-Dixie has been called to account," he declared. The worst that has happened is that management has had to "spend a small fortune on legal fees" but "even that expense is cushioned, for part of the cost is borne by the American taxpayer," Scheurich said.

"The cost of fighting organization by its employes is tax deductible . . . and in effect subsidized by the federal government," he continued. "The employes who have suffered from the company's illegal activity are not federally subsidized. They have lost their jobs . . . none has been reinstated or has received a penny of restitution from the company."

Congress must decide, the witness said, "whether the statutes they have written are to have any meaning, whether workers really are to have the right to organize" and to bargain collectively with their employer.

"The Winn-Dixie experience shows," Scheurich said, "that a determined and rich employer can make the present statutes a dead letter.

"The opportunities to stall, to coerce, to frustrate and to prevent employe organization, which are currently built into labor law and its administration, should be terminated."

This week the subcommittee began hearing testimony from employer witnesses. It has offered to give an early hearing to any employer cited in earlier testimony. One such employer is Pres. Robert T. Stevens of J. P. Stevens & Co., Inc., big government textile contractor who refused to appear but sent a statement attacking the hearings as one-sided.

U.S. Mediators Used in Over 7,100 Cases

Each week during the fiscal year ending June 30 U.S. mediators helped settle an average of 138 labor disputes, Dir. William E. Simkin of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service announced on the service's 20th anniversary.

The weekly average included 41 strike settlements and 97 without work stoppages, Simkin reported. All were among the year's total of 7,193 disputes in which the agency's 260-man staff actually participated.

He stressed the increasing use of preventive mediation, designed to improve union-employer relations with meetings during non-bargaining periods. Mediators participated in 1,175 cases of this type during the year, compared with 922 the previous year.

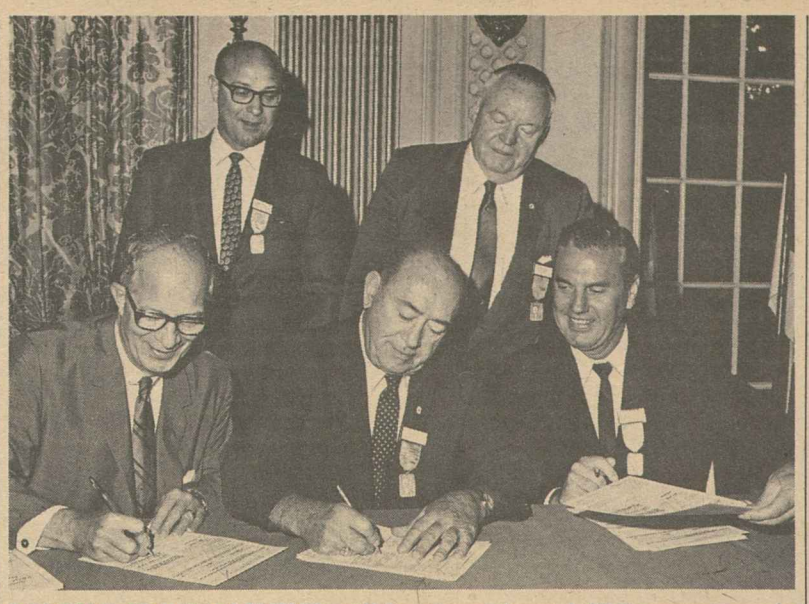
Defense Not Impeded

"In no case," Simkin said, "has a labor dispute or strike had actual serious effect on the production or delivery of weapons or other vital materials for Viet Nam."

He noted that Pres. Johnson invoked national emergency provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act four times during the year, but in each case settlements were reached before the 80-day injunction period ended.

The FMCS came into being on the effective date of the Taft-Hartley Act, Aug. 22, 1947.

Simkin expressed the service's pride in having been able to help employers and unions make the bargaining process work "successfully," and congratulated management and labor for "a most creditable job" in two decades of "exercising the privilege" of collective bargaining.



ON-THE-JOB TRAINING will be given about 1,500 young men in the next 20 months under a Plasterers agreement with the Labor Dept. and the Portland Cement Association signed during the union convention in San Francisco. Inking the pact are, seated from left, Vice Pres. James Piper of the association; Pres. Edward J. Leonard of the union and Dir. Hugh V. Murphy of the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Apprenticeship & Training. Standing are Howard Wiechman (left) of the association and Union Sec.-Treas. John J. Hauck.

Plasterers to Expand Apprentice Program

San Francisco—A $1.4 million tripartite program has been launched here to recruit and train 1,500 apprentice plasterers, cement masons and shop men.

Signing of the agreement formally setting the national apprenticeship drive into action highlighted the weeklong convention of the Plasterers & Cement Masons.

The agreement was announced by Hugh Murphy, administrator of the U.S. Labor Dept. Bureau of Apprenticeship & Training. It was signed by Pres. Edward J. Leonard for the union and by James Piper, senior vice president of the Portland Cement Association.

The apprenticeship program was undertaken against a background of growing demand for journeymen, Murphy noted. He cited the Bureau's statistics showing only 1,226 registered plasterer apprentices in the nation, 1,712 cement masons.

He warned that a shortage of journeymen in the craft would not drive wages up, but would merely force industry to go around it.

Leonard said the contemplated program "is the biggest shot in the arm this industry has ever received."

In his opening message, Leonard called on the delegates to put their full strength behind the union's trade promotion programs. Growing competition of other materials and processes, he said, makes trade promotion the union's "Number One subject."

He praised local unions' promotional efforts, singling out the activities of New York and California locals for special mention. He noted that the New York slogan—"Keep New York Plastered"—has been echoed on countless radio and television shows and kept the union members and their craft in front of the nation.

Schnitzler Talk

AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler reminded the delegates that the nation's minorities "want the same thing that you always wanted." He added "what we are actually talking about is the unorganized worker that is subject to a substantial part of the exception that has taken place."

He called on the union to share in giving "the attention and thinking, the contributions, the energy" that are needed to eliminate slums and provide equal earning opportunity for the nation's minorities.

The convention heard a warning from Al Barkan, national COPE director, of the rising danger of union-busting, union-weakening labor legislation.

He called on the delegates to do the educational job that needs to be done if the threat is to be averted.

"There is only one way you can stop this threat," he said. "And that is at the ballot box."

The delegates approved an increase in per capita tax from $24 a year to $36 a year. The increase was required, in part, to meet rising demands on the union's mortuary fund.

They approved a change from triennial to quadrennial conventions. They adopted a proposal to encourage efforts to prove portability-reciprocity arrangements between union trust funds in all areas of the nation.

Leonard, Sec.-Treas. John J. Hauck and Exec. Vice Pres. Joseph T. Power were re-elected to new terms without opposition.

Fire Fighters Ask Penalties For Assaults

The nation's fire chiefs and the union representing rank-and-file firemen have joined in agreeing that federal legislation "setting stiff penalties for interference with men of the fire service during riots or disturbances" will have a "deterrent effect" on their assailants.

Pres. William D. Buck of the Fire Fighters and Chief Lester Schick of the Intl. Association of Fire Chiefs said their respective organizations "expect to convey this sentiment to our national legislators, and we hope that appropriate laws will be forthcoming."

The two leaders branded as "unprecedented" the attacks on fire fighters performing their duties during the urban riots of recent years.

"The officers and men of the fire services have always taken pride in their service to the communities of the nation," they said. "To protect life and property, they risk their own lives for the common good.

"We are seriously concerned that a very small minority of the people in some overcrowded, low-income areas of our cities have added further hazards to fire fighting work.

"We are grateful and heartened by the fact that even during the worst of the disturbances, considerable numbers of residents went out of their way to help and to protect their fire fighters. Without the help of these people, the toll of loss in the disturbance areas would obviously have been much larger."

Buck and Schick emphasized that officers and men of the fire fighting services want to be considered friends of the community and feel they are entitled to a "measure of regard" based on history.

"Nevertheless, so long as the danger exists of attacks on fire fighters and their equipment," they declared, "there is great concern in the fire stations of the nation and there is a danger that trained, experienced men may start to look for other kinds of work. So, this issue affects all the people of all the cities."

Labor Board Caseload Sets New Mark in '67

The National Labor Relations Board set new high records in virtually all its case-handling activities for 1967, it said in a preliminary report for the year ended June 30.

For the first time in its 32-year history, the NLRB topped 30,000 in new cases filed in one year. The new all-time record is 30,425 cases received for processing—17,040 unfair labor practice charges and 13,385 election petitions—5 percent higher than the fiscal 1966 total of 28,993 cases.

Reflecting the steady increase of its workload in a volume double that of 10 years ago, the board set new records also in these areas:

- Cases of all types closed—29,494—including 16,360 unfair practice cases, also a new high.
- Cases pending at all stages of processing—10,331.

The board said 1,942 complaints were issued by the general counsel, up three tenths of 1 percent in a year; 1,053 initial unfair practice hearings were completed, a 2 percent increase; and 940 decisions were issued by trial examiners, up 8 percent.

The five board members issued 803 decisions in contested unfair practice cases, a 6 percent rise.

Filing of petitions for enforcement of NLRB orders in U.S. Courts of Appeals climbed 14 percent—from 193 to 220. The circuit courts made 241 decisions, eight more than a year ago, in NLRB cases. Of these, 81 percent sustained the board's position in whole or in part, compared with 79 percent in fiscal 1966, the report showed.

While the number of board-conducted elections fell from 8,392 to 8,110 for the year, the number of employes voting increased to 550,679 from 538,238 the year before, due to a rise of 10 percent in the average number of voters eligible.

Unions won 4,787 of the elections held, or 59 percent—down from 60.5 percent for the preceding year.

Backpay totals and numbers of employes ordered reinstated decreased also—backpay to $2.6 million from $8.9 million and reinstated workers to 3,577 from 6,187. In the preceding year, final settlements in the long Kohler Co. case inflated the backpay total.

Training Programs Aid Handicapped

The federal-state program for training the handicapped has helped 2 million find jobs since it was started in 1920, Vocational Rehabilitation Commissioner Mary E. Switzer said in her annual report.

During the year ending June 30, she said, 173,000 handicapped persons were rehabilitated, a raise of 12.5 percent over the previous year. Pennsylvania, with 13,112, led the nation for the sixth consecutive year.

Administration Rebuffed:

Foreign Aid Cut In Senate, House

from development loan funds intended to help the economies of underdeveloped countries.

As the AFL-CIO News went to press, the economy bloc was chopping away at a more generous bill, approved by the House Foreign Affairs Committee, carrying a $3.16 billion ceiling.

AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller, in a letter to all House members, termed the foreign aid program essential to economic growtth and political freedom throughout the world.

Labor's Role

He noted that the AFL-CIO has been directly involved in the program, helping to establish job training, workers' homes, better schools and credit unions in Latin America, Africa and other areas.

"America can remain free and secure only in a world where freedom is secure," he stressed.

In other congressional developments:

● A House subcommittee recommended pay raises for the federal government's postal and salaried employes, carrying a total price tag somewhat above the Administration proposal.

The bill would give postal workers a 6 percent raise Oct. 1 and an additional 5 percent raise next July 1. Other salaried federal employes would receive the 4.5 percent raise recommended by the Administration. However, they would receive additional raises in each of the next two years to bring them to full comparability with pay levels for comparable jobs in private industry. The amounts needed to close the gap vary, with the biggest differential in the middle and upper pay grades.

● Top Administration officials appeared before the Senate Finance Committee to urge major improvements in the House-passed social security bill.

Health, Education & Welfare Sec. John W. Gardner said the 12.5 percent across-the-board benefit increase in the House bill is too low. He said social security benefits should be raised beyond the amount necessary to merely keep up with the rising cost of living. "Social security beneficiaries should have a share in the rising level of living of the whole community," he declared.

Gardner and his top aides also reiterated their criticism of severe House restrictions on public welfare assistance and the aid to dependent children program.

● Two congressmen—a Democrat and a Republican—served joint notice that the House will have a new chance to vote on a federal rat control program.

Last month the House turned down an Administration bill aimed at eliminating rats from infested city slums, amid callous jokes and quips by opponents.

Representatives Henry S. Reuss (D-Wis.) and Charles McC. Mathias (R-Md.) said in a joint letter to their colleagues that they will introduce an amendment to the Administration's public health bill for a one-year, $20 million rat control program.

● Spokesmen for the three major religious faiths joined with labor and the Administration in urging passage of a federal open housing bill. The National Association of Real Estate Boards testified against the bill. But six real estate operators came before the Senate committee to back the legislation, declaring it would improve housing and neighborhoods and protect realtors who sell to Negroes and other minority groups from reprisals.

Sullivan to Watch Viet Nam Election

AFL-CIO Vice Pres. David Sullivan, president of the Building Service Employes, has been named by Pres. Johnson as a member of a group of American observers of the Viet Nam elections.

The White House said Sullivan and others—governors, members of Congress, clergymen, business leaders, educators—will be in Viet Nam from Aug. 28 to Sept. 6 to assess the fairness of the election campaign and the balloting for president, vice president and senators.

The delegation is going at the invitation of Premier Nguyen Cao Ky.

'Hey! They're After Us!'

Labor Reaffirms Bond With Urban League

Portland, Ore.—The AFL-CIO's long-standing demand for a "massive attack" on the problems of poverty and discrimination, with the emphasis on ghetto problems, was stressed by Pres. George Meany in a message to the convention of the National Urban League here.

Meany cites the ties between the league and organized labor, observing that "common adversity strengthens the bonds of friendship."

In mounting the "massive attack" on need and bias, Meany said, Congress must display "foresighted statesmanship" worthy of the world's most powerful legislative body.

"The AFL-CIO will exert all its energies toward this end," he pledged.

"Though the outlook may seem discouraging at times, I am confident that our common cause will prevail. It will prevail because true freedom in America cannot otherwise survive."

Meany took to task "enemies of social reform" who are using the recent rioting as a weapon against progressive measures.

"By their warped reasoning the way to cope with a bad situation is to make it worse," he said; "they would penalize millions for the sins of a few."

"This is, of course, precisely the wrong approach. But it represents an attitude that will make our joint endeavors even more difficult."

In his message, addressed to Exec. Dir. Whitney M. Young, Jr., Meany expressed regret that the recent riots have "deeply clouded" what recently appeared as "the dawn of a bright new day, in which not only discrimination but poverty itself would be eradicated."

"As you and other responsible Negro leaders have emphasized," he added, "the chief victims of the riots have been the Negro people themselves."

"This is not only true in terms of loss of life and property. Even more tragic in its long-term implications is the erosion of national support—especially legislative support—for new programs to meet urban needs."

He recalled that difficulties "are no novelty" to the AFL-CIO or the league, and added that if they increase, "so must our efforts to surmount them."

Meany said that although a "snail's pace is no longer a tolerable rate for progress," the construction of a new and better society, under the best of circumstances, must go forward brick by brick.

"And the foundation today, as it always has been, must be jobs at good wages for all, freely and equally available to all," he said.

"The demands of modern employment have added another element — job-seekers who are educated and adequately prepared to fill these jobs. It was in recognition of this that you established, and we are gladly helping to work with and carry forward, the program called LEAP the Labor Education Advancement Program."

LEAP has set in motion, Meany said, a program sponsored by the Urban League and the Building Trades Council in Baltimore, Md., through which minority group youths will be recruited and prepared to qualify for placement in building trades apprentice programs. The Manpower Administration is financing it.

"Undertakings like this make no headlines," he said. "No one of them, taken alone, is a solution to the total problem. But such steps as these, multiplied many times, are essential to the ultimate achievement of our goals."

75 Sponsor Bill to Create Million Jobs

More than 75 members of the House of Representatives have joined in co-sponsoring legislation to create one million new jobs in a year, mainly in the nation's troubled urban areas.

The measure was first proposed by Rep. James G. O'Hara (D-Mich.) and a number of other House members earlier this month. It would provide $4 billion in grants over a year to federal, state, and local government agencies, as well as non-profit groups.

The money would help them create jobs for the unemployed and underemployed. Sponsors foresee possibilities for new positions in medical and health services, reforestation, education, welfare services and urban development.

The purpose and the importance of the legislation was set forth at a press conference held by Representatives O'Hara, Hugh L. Carey (D-N.Y.) and James H. Scheuer (D-N.Y.).

In addition to providing jobs, the grants would support training programs. The sponsors hope that this feature will help prepare the newly hired workers for later, permanent jobs in industries.

O'Hara and Carey emphasized that the legislation is not meant to "make work" but to "make jobs." They stressed that jobs "are an essential answer" to big city problems and particularly needed as an answer to riots.

Scheuer said that the $4 billion appropriation called for "would more than be paid back in the first two or three years" in the form of an expanded economy and an increase in tax revenues.

AFL-CIO Urges House to Prohibit Hiring Discrimination Based on Age

The need for a federal ban on discrimination in hiring because of age is "great" and "virtually unchallenged," AFL-CIO Legislative Rep. Kenneth A. Meiklejohn declared in expressing labor's support for bills pending in the House.

Meiklejohn testified before the House General Labor subcommittee, which later announced it had reached agreement on legislation to protect older workers.

He cited widespread unemployment and limited hiring of unemployed workers 45 and older, declaring that the statistics hide withdrawals from the labor force of older workers who actually are not ready to retire.

"The inadequate number of job opportunities, in relation to the available manpower supply, enables the employer to follow certain preconceived notions about the employment of older workers," Meiklejohn said.

"Too often, they are placed at the end of the line. As a result, many of these workers become discouraged and they simply stop looking for work. But the official unemployment rates do not reflect this fact."

He called high joblessness among older workers primarily a result of employer attitudes, "conditioned in no small measure by some of the very employment benefits which have been achieved for workers, such as seniority, pension plans, promotion from within policies and early retirement."

Pointing out that there is no medical support for restrictive age limits in employment, Meiklejohn said that the "demonstrated failure" to use fully the capabilities of older workers for productive purposes is a "tremendous loss."

"Of equal if not more importance," he continued, "is the human loss in terms of the undermining of personal dignity and confidence that can afflict all too many workers, especially those with little or no skills, as they approach the age of 45 and begin to realize that if they lose their jobs, it is going to be terribly hard for them to find other

Meiklejohn urged a series of changes in the bills:

● Deletion of a proviso exempting from coverage small firms employing fewer than a specified number of workers.

● Inclusion of a clause prohibiting employers paying wage differentials to older employes from reducing the rates of other employes in order to comply with the law.

● The addition of protections for bona fide, non-discriminatory seniority systems.

● Exclusion of permits for involuntary retirement of employes under 65.

● Enforcement by the Wage-Hour & Public Contracts Division.

● Relief from discriminatory practices against workers under 45, such as air line stewardesses grounded as early as 32.

earnings annually, as against 3.9 percent for the full year 1966.

BLS said a large proportion of the manufacturing workers covered by new settlements are in women's apparel, meatpacking and other food products, metalworking and petroleum refining. Nonmanufacturing industries in which key settlements were reached during the first half of 1967 included trucking and construction along with railroads and telephones, where rounds of wage increases continued from late 1966.

The BLS survey covers contract settlements affecting groups of 1,000 or more workers in manufacturing and nonmanufacturing employment excluding government.

The study concentrates on wage rates negotiated in the first half of this year and effective within 12 months from the time of negotiations. All figures exclude the value of cost-of-living adjustments, the bureau said.

Labor Calls Nation to Meet City, Viet Nam Challenges

Senate Committee Acts:

Plans to Aid Cities Win New Hearing

The Senate Appropriations Committee has breathed new life into Administration requests for model cities, rent supplement and urban research funds—programs the President has termed "among the most important of this decade."

However, the permanence of their revival depends upon what happens on the Senate floor after Congress returns from its Labor Day recess and probably a later Senate-House conference. The House previously cut the heart out of all three programs.

The committee voted $537 million for the model cities program, $40 million for rent supplements and $15 million for urban research. The House had slashed model cities funds to $237 million, made no provision for new rent supplements and allowed only $5 million for urban research.

The model cities program, authorized by Congress last year, provides funds for cities with comprehensive plans to rehabilitate entire neighborhoods, as well as projects to improve transportation, health services, recreation and childcare.

The rent supplement program aims at easing some of the problems of public housing by authorizing pacts with non-profit organizations to provide modest apartments for low-income families. They agree to pay one-fourth of their income for rent and the government assumes the difference.

Urban research will provide grants for studies of new housing

Rail Unions Press Case On Increase

Six shopcraft unions told a special presidential board that they are willing to settle their long wage dispute with the nation's railroads on terms that are "reasonable, equitable and in the public interest."

The description was given to their settlement proposal in a brief filed with the five-member board during three days of hearings into the dispute. The carriers also submitted a brief and a settlement offer.

The unions, representing 137,000 workers, called for a two-year contract with a 6.5 percent general increase the first year and five percent the second, plus two annual raises of 12.5 cents each for all skilled workers.

The railroads proposed a six percent basic wage increase over 18 months. They offered only a

Court Voids Mississippi Anti-Handbill Ordinance

Jackson, Miss.—A harsh anti-union local ordinance, in effect since 1940 here, has been ruled "unconstitutional" by the U.S. Dist. Court for the Southern District of Mississippi.

In a suit brought by the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Judge Dan M. Russell enjoined the City of Jackson from enforcing its anti-handbilling ordinance.

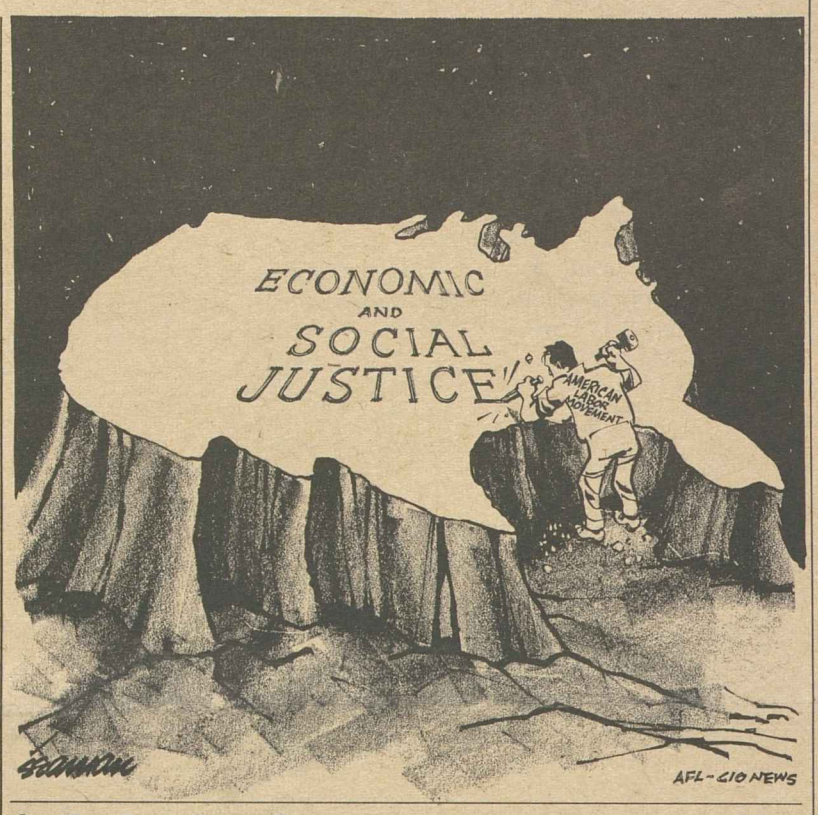
Anti-handbilling and other anti-labor ordinances have been harassing union organizing activities throughout the country, particularly in the South, for years.

"All union organizers may now, for the first time since 1940, handbill a company without first begging the City Council for a permit to do so; and the organizers may now handbill without fear of being arrested," declared IBEW Attorney Dixon L. Pyles.

Nine IBEW organizers had been arrested on criminal charges on the complaint of the Zinsco Co. which the union is seeking to organize.

The Jackson ordinance, enacted June 25, 1940, requires the issuance by the City Council of a permit for the distribution of handbills.

Judge Russell ruled that this ordinance was now "invalid, unconstitutional, null and void."



Strike Deadline Nears:

Auto Union Rejects 'Inadequate' Offer

Detroit—The Auto Workers rejected identical contract offers from the Big Three auto manufacturers as "entirely inadequate and inequitable" and served notice of their intent to strike one of the three unless a more acceptable offer is made before contracts expire Sept. 6.

Armed with strike sanctions approved overwhelmingly by locals representing 650,000 General Motors, Ford and Chrysler workers, UAW leaders were preparing, as the AFL-CIO News went to press, to choose the target company to be struck—should a strike be necessary.

Union bargainers will then return to the negotiating table for intensive talks in the few days remaining before the deadline. They will, the union said, make every effort to come to terms short of a strike.

In another development, the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers called similar contract proposals from GM "insulting" and turned them down also. The IUE represents 30,000 GM employes whose contracts also expire Sept. 6.

Offers 'Inadequate'

The auto makers waited until Aug. 29 to make their first contract offers to UAW and IUE in separate talks that started July 10. They proposed new three-year contracts with benefits estimated to average nearly 4 percent a year, but union statisticians said the offers contained only 1.5 to 4 cents an hour in "new" money this year.

The UAW's national councils at Ford, Chrysler and GM approved recommendations from the union's executive board that the offers be rejected.

Identical resolutions, passed at separate council meetings, recommended that a special convention be called later this month to beef up the UAW strike fund. Fund assets stood at $64. million as of July 31, but a long strike might exhaust the fund.

UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther told a press conference that the union is convinced that "an industry-wide conspiracy" has been put together under the guidance of General Motors "directed against the whole process of collective bargaining." He said that Chrysler Corp. rejected a UAW offer to eliminate the company from consideration as a target and that the rejection stemmed from the "conspiracy" run by GM.

Earlier the UAW bargaining committees called company proposals far short of expectations "when measured against the fantastic profitability and productivity" of the industry, and said they "do not meet the pressing needs of the industry's workers and their families."

The UAW expressed disappointment that the three major corporations "chose to delay making their first counterproposal until the second-last week of contract talks" and said it hopes that the "negative attitude which has characterized the corpora-

Idealism Test Posed By Meany

By Gervase N. Love

Labor Day 1967 is a time for the American people to invoke their common sense and not be diverted from the war on poverty by resentment at violence in slum areas, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany declared in his annual message.

Pres. Johnson, pursuing the same theme, recalled that the labor movement "spoke on behalf of the forgotten many to the privileged few in the 1930s" and now "must continue to speak — more firmly than ever—on behalf of the disadvantaged minority."

'Overcome Sensation'

Meany called for "sense to overcome sensation" and said that the slowdown in the drive for a better life for all Americans means that "the conscience and idealism of the affluent majority is being tested in the crucible of reality."

"It is one thing," he said, "to overflow with good will toward the disadvantaged who live a thousand miles away; it is quite another thing to recognize the comparable problems of those in the same city or the next block, especially if they are not asking favors but demanding rights.

"It would be an unthinkable tragedy if conscience and idealism failed to meet this test. The mind-

Construction Safety Bill Called 'Vital'

Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. told Congress that there is a "vital need" for legislation to provide for and enforce safety standards on federal construction projects.

He pointed out that injuries and loss of lives through accidents has become a "massive problem" in the construction industry and approximately one-fifth of the industry's annual $75 billion annual volume now involves federal projects.

Haggerty testified before a House Labor subcommittee in support of a bill introduced by Rep. James G. O'Hara (D-Mich.) that would apply standards to direct federal projects, as well as those federally financed, or federally assisted.

O'Hara introduced his bill last year but too late for hearings. A companion measure was introduced this year by Sen. Gaylord Nelson (D-Wis.). It awaits hearings in the Senate.

LEGISLATION to establish and enforce safety standards on federal and federally-assisted construction projects is vitally needed, Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the Building & Construction Trades Dept. told Congress. He testified for the bill introduced by Rep. James G. O'Hara (D-Mich.). Left to right, BCTD Legislative Rep. Walter J. Mason, Haggerty and O'Hara.

The legislation authorizes the Secretary of Labor to develop, promulgate and enforce the safety standards. He would be assisted by an advisory committee of equal numbers of representatives of labor, industry and the public.

The secretary, or his representative, would be empowered to inspect federal projects to see if they meet the standards. Those that do not would be ordered to comply within a reasonable period of time. If a "danger to workers" is spotted it would have to be corrected immediately.

The measure also would require contractors or subcontractors on federal projects to submit reports on accidents, injuries, occupational diseases, and related data, as specified by the Labor Dept.

Violators of the measure, known as the Construction Safety Act, could be fined up to $3,000 or sent to jail for up to 90 days.

Another provision of the legislation would permit the Secretary of Labor to develop expanded safety education and training programs for employers and employes.

Haggerty testified that the construction industry—for all its greatness and growing economic strength—"has neglected its first obligation, the protection of health and safety of workers."

The facts are, he continued, "that the approximately 4 million workers involved in the industry suffer a higher accident frequency rate than any other industry in the country, except mining."

He cited National Safety Council figures to show that the construction industry has an injury frequency rate of 28.6 per 1 million man-hours worked—more than four times the 6.91 rate for all industries.

Haggerty also presented NSC statistics showing that there were 240,000 disabling injuries and 2,800 deaths in the industry in 1966, increases of 2.5 and 4 percent respectively over 1965.

The dollar cost of accidents runs into the billions, Haggerty said, and man-days lost by accident are more than 10 times greater than time lost through strikes.

End Cost Boosted

In addition to the economic loss suffered by both employes and employers from accidents in the construction industry, there is a loss suffered to the taxpayer "through increases in end product cost" in the case of federal construction, Haggerty stressed.

To support his contention that the O'Hara bill represents "a sound and workable approach," Haggerty pointed out that the Maritime Safety Act, passed by Congress in 1959 to set safety standards in stevedoring and ship repair, has reduced injury rates by 39 percent in those areas over the past six years.

Also submitting testimony in support of the bill were Pres. Joseph V. Moreschi of the Laborers, Pres. Gordon M. Freeman of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, and Pres. Hunter P. Wharton of the Operating Engineers.

IUE Winner On 3rd Try At TV Plant

Los Angeles—The Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers won a big National Labor Relations Board election victory at Packard Bell Electronic Corp. plants here and Duarte, Calif. The plants were key targets of AFL-CIO organizing efforts in the Los Angeles area.

Union leaders described the result as a "major breakthrough" against one of the last remaining television manufacturers able to block unionization. The IUE lost elections at these same plants in 1963 and 1965.

This time the vote for IUE was 483 to 372, with 49 challenged ballots.

IUE Vice Pres. William Drohan, who headed the election campaign, said, "Most of the credit in this important victory must go to the teamwork between an effective in-plant committee of employes and IUE staff working closely with the AFL-CIO Los Angeles-Orange County Organizing Committee."

"It was a major target in the committee's organizing drive and as such it is a victory for all of the AFL-CIO," Drohan declared.

Douglas Barrett, IUE international representative, coordinated the election drive under Drohan. William Gilbert directed the AFL-CIO team of Charles Hogan, Ruben Diaz and Katherine Cline.

Gilbert said, "Here is another classic example of winning an ultimate election victory by having the persistence to stay with a company no matter how long it takes."

Habermeyer Renamed Rail Board Chairman

The Senate has confirmed Pres. Johnson's reappointment of Howard W. Habermeyer to a third five-year term as a member-at-large and chairman of the Railroad Retirement Board.

Davis Tells ICFTU Conference:

Strong And Effective Unions Goal Of Labor Education

Montreal—An effective trade union movement must develop an education program designed to strengthen the individual union as well as strengthening the movement as a whole, AFL-CIO Education Dir. Walter G. Davis told an international conference here.

Speaking at the first world conference on trade union education sponsored by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, Davis spelled out the fundamentals of programs to achieve these objectives.

A strong, effective union in the United States, he told the 200 delegates from over 50 countries, requires a national leadership attuned to all of the important social, political and economic matters affecting the union and the industry to which it is related, and an aggressive organizing program.

Tied to these, he added, is the need for an effective new member program, on-going staff training, an adequately trained education division, effective two-way communication between the national union and its locals. The union must participate fully in shaping policy at all levels and develop also a program review to update tactics and strategy in reaching its goals.

Davis noted that in the U.S. an educational objective is to promote the expansion of university labor centers, particularly in the South. "It is ironic, he said, "for us to find state universities, supported by the workers' tax dollars, providing services for business and management while refusing to provide comparable services for the labor movement."

He told the conference that a labor college is under consideration by the AFL-CIO, but there is no intention of replacing the university "with our own," for those universities which have concerned themselves with training of workers "are making a valuable contribution."

In terms of education designed to strengthen the entire movement, Davis pointed out that American unions today are "issue minded in terms of local and national political issues, administrative policies of government agencies, economic policy, etc."

These areas are important to any education effort from weekend institutes to summer schools and conferences, he said, and concern the major thrust of the national federation—the AFL-CIO.

Summing up the conference, Herbert A. Tulatz, assistant general secretary of the ICFTU, termed it a "turning point for the tradition-bound labor movement" and the beginning of a "re-thinking of aims and methods by which the union movement could contribute towards the educational needs of their communities."

The conference participants divided into five working groups and their reports, adopted by the conference, reflected a consensus that labor movements must participate more in the total community.

There were recommendations for greater coordination of activities of free trade union movements with the ILO and UNESCO as well as within the ICFTU and the trade secretariats.

Free and equal education regardless of financial condition or social status, integration of vocational education into the general education system, leave for workers participating in trade union courses and guidelines for the operations of labor colleges were among the recommendations.

Drive on Illiteracy Gets Union Backing

Montreal — Free world trade union educators called on unionists everywhere to spur the drive on illiteracy by supporting the observance of Intl. Illiteracy Day on Sept. 8.

The 200 delegates to the first ICFTU conference on education in the labor movement added its support to the international observance set up by UNESCO and urged an all-out effort to bring about elimination of this worldwide problem.

UNESCO has mounted an intensive drive on illiteracy and has given it a major priority in its activities as the major operating UN agency in the field of education.

Building Trades Up Hourly Rates 5.6%

The average hourly wage scale of unionized building trades workers increased 25.4 cents an hour, or 5.6 percent, from July 1966 to July 1967, according to the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics. The increase brought the bureau's index of such scales to 144.6, it reported.

Much of the increase reflects gains won in the usual heavy spring volume of bargaining talks, as well as deferred hikes from previous negotiations, BLS said. About two thirds of the increases were evenly split between 15 cents or less, and 16 to 25 cents.

Nearly three-tenths were for more than 25 cents, and a tenth were for 40 cents or more. Increases averaging 23 cents an hour went to 72 percent of the workers, it said.

JOB CORPS Dir. William T. Kelly presents his agency's gold award to Pres. Hunter P. Wharton of the Operating Engineers. The union conducts a highly-rated training program for needy youngsters and helps place them in good-paying jobs.

IUOE Given Gold Award By Job Corps

The Job Corps has presented its gold award to the Operating Engineers—a tribute to the union's success in training and finding jobs for needy youngsters.

The Operating Engineers, under the direction of their national administrator of training programs, John A. Jones, conduct a heavy equipment training program at Jacob's Creek, Tenn., which recently graduated 51 Job Corps trainees.

According to Reese Hammond, director of research and education for the Operating Engineers, 37 of these young men already have been placed in jobs throughout the nation, 26 in their home localities.

"Mighty Proud"

As he presented a plaque to IUOE Pres. Hunter P. Wharton, Jobs Corps Dir. William T. Kelly declared:

"You ought to be mighty proud. Your organization is interested in working with poor kids. You have heart, interest and imagination. You care.

"We've got 41,000 youngsters throughout this country," Kelly continued. "They're Negro, white, Eskimo, Puerto Ricans, you name it. They aren't shooting their way out of the Job Corps. They're not leading riots. These kids are tough and poor and in all our 123 centers we teach them what unions are all about. You are making our task much easier."

Kelly was accompanied by his assistant, Robert Young; David Oestrich, chief of placement, and Joseph Jay, who handles labor liaison.

At the invitation of Wharton, the federal officials sat in on an Operating Engineers board meeting, at which Hammond gave a report on the heavy-equipment pretraining program at Jacob's Creek, where such equipment as scrapers, dozers and front-end loaders is used.

Key to the success of the placement in jobs, Hammond said, was the full co-operation of 29 Operating Engineers local unions all over the United States. Many of these have taken youngsters from outside their territory.

The plaque presented to Wharton was hand-made by the Clearfield, Utah, Job Corps and was inscribed with the signatures of Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey, Sargent Shriver, director of the Office of Economic Opportunity and Kelly.

Trend Continues:

Living Costs Go Up, Buying Power Down

The cost of living rose four-tenths of 1 percent in July for the biggest jump in nine months, and for the twelfth month in a row a worker's paycheck bought less than in the previous year.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics report on living costs showed that the June consumer price index rose to 116.5 percent of its 1957-59 average, 2.8 percent higher than a year ago.

Because of this leap in prices, BLS said, the buying power of production or non-supervisory workers on private nonfarm payrolls suffered a drop of 1 percent over the year, despite an increase in their earnings.

The bureau said some 335,000 workers with cost-of-living escalator clauses in their union contracts will receive pay raises based upon the July index. About 265,000 of these —mostly in automotive, construction equipment and aerospace industries—will get 3-cent increases based on the rise in the index since April. Other gains will range from 1 to 5 cents.

BLS also reported that the wholesale price index also rose in July by two-tenths of 1 percent to 106.5 percent of the 1957-59 average, marking the third straight monthly increase.

Higher food prices, up nine-tenths of 1 percent, accounted for about half the overall increase in the consumer price index. But there also were increases in all other categories, excepting gasoline and summer apparels.

The cost of medical care services moved up six-tenths of 1 percent during the month and were 9.2 percent above last July. Hospital services rose nine-tenths of 1 percent, up 20 percent over the year. This was the largest year-to-year rise among all items.

Consumer services as a whole continued a steady rise and were up 5 percent over the year. July also brought monthly increases of 1.3 percent in home mortgage interest rates and five-tenths of 1 percent in property taxes.

Car Prices Rise

Overall apparel prices climbed upward, despite the reduction in summer clothing due to clearance sales. Used car prices increased sharply and new car prices rose slightly. The latter usually show a decline beginning in July.

On the earnings side, BLS reported that gross average weekly earnings of production workers (before taxes and deductions) reached a high of $102.14 in July. Hourly earnings went up 10 cents to a high of $2.66.

Spendable earnings—gross pay minus federal income and social security taxes — average $91.10 weekly for a worker with three dependents, up about 50 cents from June and $1.60 since July 1966.

Expressed in 1957-59 dollars, this worker took home $78.20 a week, or 77 cents less than he took home last July.

South Carolina Unions Press Organizing

Charleston, S. C.—Plans to accelerate a current statewide organizing drive and push for a state minimum wage law were drawn up here by 200 delegates to the AFL-CIO South Carolina Labor Council.

The convention, held annually, was the largest in the council's 11 years of existence. Since there was no election of officers this year, delegates concentrated entirely on enacting a program for the future.

In a keynote address, Pres. Sinway Young told delegates that "our strength depends upon organizing the unorganized so that labor can change the power structure in this state which tries to block unionism."

He deplored failure by South Carolina's recently-adjourned legislature to act on a $1.25-an-hour minimum wage bill that was before it. The convention enacted a resolution pledging an all-out drive for the measure next year.

Gov. Robert E. McNair spoke to the convention on economic plans now underway in the state. He promised to cooperate with labor and stressed that his office "would always be open" to labor leaders.

Other speakers included State Supt. of Education Cyril Busby; John Bolt Culbertson, a labor attorney who unsuccessfully sought the Democratic nomination for the U.S. Senate last year; Pres. George Baldanzi of the United Textile Workers of America; Wilbur Hobby of AFL-CIO's Committee on Political Education; and Dir. James Nelson of the AFL-CIO Appalachia Council.

Major resolutions adopted, in addition to those on organizing and the minimum wage bill, supported the Administration's efforts in Viet Nam and called for greater emphasis on unions apprentice training, vocational rehabilitation and safety programs.

AFL-CIO Convention Set to Start Dec. 7

The Seventh Constitutional Convention of the AFL-CIO will take place in Miami Beach, Fla., beginning Thursday, Dec. 7, 1967.

The meetings of the convention will be in the ballroom of the Americana Hotel.

Senate OKs Marshall for Highest Court

The Senate confirmed Thurgood Marshall, first Negro nominee for Supreme Court justice, by an overwhelming 69-11 vote after hours of speechmaking by southern opponents.

Marshall as chief counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, masterminded the legal fight that ended in the Supreme Court's outlawing of segregated public schools in 1954.

He was solicitor general of the United States when nominated by Pres. Johnson for the high court post on June 13. He was subjected to five long hearings before the Senate Judiciary Committee at which his views were questioned by southern senators, but was finally approved by a vote of 11 to 5.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany at the time charged the minority with a "racially-inspired" attack on the nomination.

The Senate confirmed Marshall as a 2d District Court of Appeals judge in 1962 by a 54-16 vote, and again as solicitor general in 1965 by a voice vote. As solicitor general he appeared before the Supreme Court in 32 cases and won 29 of them.

HONORARY MEMBERSHIP in the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers was presented to Vice Pres. Hubert Humphrey by OCAW Pres. A. F. Grospiron at the union's convention in New York City. The Vice President appealed to all union members to help the nation "meet the challenge" of building a slum-free society "where riots, hatred and lawlessness will become things of the distant past."

Oil Workers Boost Per Capita To Aid Organizing, Strike Fund

By Duane Emme

New York—More than 800 delegates to the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers convention here approved a 75-cent monthly increase in the OCAWs' per capita tax to expand the union's organizing program, strengthen its strike fund and meet higher costs.

Pres. A. F. Grospiron, Sec.-Treas. B. J. Schafer and Vice Presidents A. C. Sabatine and E. D. Swisher were unanimously re-elected. The first three are beginning second terms. Swisher has been a vice president since the oil-chemical merger established OCAW in 1955.

The union's new per capita rate is $3.30 per month. Of the 75 cent increase, 50 cents will be used for general operations and 25 cents will go into the union's strike-defense fund.

Grospiron said that the increased income to the operating fund would provide for "substantial" expansion of organizing efforts as well as cover new expenses.

Safety Stressed

A key resolution adopted by delegates pledged OCAW to the development of a far-reaching "health and safety" program to be implemented in collective bargaining agreements and by legislation where necessary.

The union has pressed hard for a bill now before Congress to set new safety standards for natural gas pipelines and for greater protection against the dangers from radiation hazards.

The program —"to put human values above property values"— was enacted immediately after the convention was addressed by Ralph Nader, the author and safety expert, whose personal probe of auto safety catapaulted him into national prominence.

Nader has since joined the fight for the pipelines' standards and protection for workers exposed to radiation and dangerous chemicals. Grospiron introduced him as a man who has become the "shop steward" for American consumers.

Nadar praised OCAW as an organization that has become completely involved in the "day-to-day struggle" for protection against the increasing hazards from the nation's "new technology." He urged all unions to join in what he termed a "struggle for bodily rights."

"What once was a battle for safety for workers has now become a battle for safety for everyone," Nader said. If the battle can be won, he added, "the real beneficiaries will be those yet unborn."

Sen. Robert F. Kennedy, (D-N.Y.) another convention speaker, attacked inequities in the nation's income tax system, which he said allow "many of our wealthiest to escape their fair share of the tax burden."

Kennedy said "there are 2,000 people here in the United States who make incomes of over $500,000 a year, and yet many of them pay absolutely no income tax whatsoever."

The convention adopted a resolution urging the closing of "loopholes" in the tax structure that benefit the wealthy and the big corporations, including the "loophole" on mineral depletion allowance.

Delegates increased the president's salary from $17,500 to $23,000; the secretary-treasurer's from $14,500 to $20,000, and each of the vice president's from $13,500 to $17,500. Salaries of district directors and international representatives were increased to $14,000 and $11,000, respectively.

In other major actions, delegates approved a "human relations" resolution committing the union to a continuing drive against housing and job discrimination; passed on plans for accelerated organizing; and emphasized the urgency of expanded federal aid to education.

Other resolutions called upon OCAW locals to set up "senior citizens" groups, promised an "extraordinary effort" of political action and full backing of COPE, backed the farm workers' struggle to have unions and endorsed the program of maritime unions to rebuild the nation's merchant fleet.

Convict Strikebreakers Protested by Laborers

The use of convicts as strikebreakers in Chesapeake, Va., violates justice, fair play and human decency, Pres. Joseph V. Moreschi of the Laborers charged.

Moreschi sent a sharp protest to Virginia Gov. Mills E. Godwin against permission granted to the city to use state prisoners to man garbage trucks.

The city's regular garbage collectors, "100 percent organized" in Local 1213 of the Laborers, stopped work in protests against "intolerable" conditions after city officials refused to bargain with their union.

Moreschi charged that city officials used "a non-existing law"—a resolution passed by the legislature in 1946—as the basis for their refusal to recognize the union. In fact, he noted, a 1962 attorney general's opinion held that the resolution was not a bar to negotiations with city employe unions.

Cheap Labor

The workers replaced by convicts, Moreschi said, were paid only $1.40 an hour—"below the poverty level." Most are excluded from the city pension plan. "Working conditions," he said, "such as lack of toilet facilities and inaccessibility to drinking water, are intolerable."

In addition, "there is no job tenure except at the whim of the politician."

Moreschi noted that shortly after the workers voted to "boycott" the city services, they were notified that the city had terminated their employment in accordance with "the law."

His union, Moreschi said, strongly protests "the use of convict laborers in any situation where state prisoners are competing with free laborers for the right to earn a fair living."

Pay, Fringe Gains End 29-Day Strike

Philadelphia—Five percent wage increases in each year of a 3-year pact have been won by 850 members of the Glass Bottle Blowers following a 29-day strike at Mays Landing, N.J. The workers are employed there at Wheaton Plastics Co. and Wheaton Plasti-Cote Corp.

GBBA Pres. Lee W. Minton, who announced the settlement here, said union negotiators estimated fringe gains at an additional 7.5 cents an hour. The contract also calls for an additional 2-cent increase in all existing rates in January 1969.

Fringe gains included increases in shift differentials, vacation pay, an increment to provide equity adjustments in certain job classifications, and improved pensions.

Teachers Urge Funds To Meet Ghetto Need

By Eugene A. Kelly

The American Federation of Teachers called for federal funds to be pumped into "the Ghettos of America."

Delegates closed their 51st AFT convention with resolutions urging more job opportunities, public housing, superior education, rent supplements, increased aid to dependent children, free medical aid for all, rat eradication and for the National Teacher Corps.

AFT spokesmen said the action, approved after long debate over the cause of ghetto uprisings in Detroit, Newark and other cities, indicates even stronger emphasis in future AFT programs on social changes affecting the schools and teaching personnel.

Humphrey Speaks

Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey, in a major address, congratulated the union on its continued growth and said he supports AFT Pres. Charles Cogen's call for a national conference on urban education.

Humphrey got a standing ovation when he called for a year-around school program, observing "in the context of our present needs, the nine-month school year is as out-of-date as a kerosene lamp."

"What right do you have to padlock a school playground; to close a swimming pool; to close off the auditorium when it is owned and paid for by the public?" Humphrey asked. He explained: "I am talking about turning our schools into summer enrichment centers."

In other actions, the convention:

● Overwhelmingly defeated an amendment to remove from the union constitution an article requiring permanent AFL-CIO affiliation.

● Gave the AFT executive council authority to charter locals of teachers "in educational institutions not supported by public funds." Teachers in Chicago and Philadelphia Catholic parish schools have voted to affiliate, and the union now is conducting organizing drives in those systems.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, in a message to the convention, urged the union to continue its efforts because "our schools are not good enough."

"It all adds up to this," he said: "America is just not making the investment it must make in its greatest asset—today's children."

All labor union members must see to it, he said, that America does more "by building the schools and providing the teachers—adequately paid ones—and upgrading our national standard of education."

In the only rollcall vote of the convention, delegates voted 1,145 to 1,042 against a proposal to drop a constitutional ban on union membership for those who hold to Fascist, Nazi or Communist tenets.

The convention also raised the minimum dues for members of new locals from $24 to $36 a year, except in special circumstances, and requested Cogen to "start action research programs in lobbying techniques, political power and legal alternatives" as an aid to locals "facing anti-strike legislation, injunctions or collective bargaining impasses."

At the first night session in recent AFT history, the delegates voted 280-173 against a resolution demanding a negotiated peace in Viet Nam. They adopted a substitute saying that, in view of a division of opinion in union ranks, the AFT "takes no position on the Viet Nam war."

Some 400 delegates left the convention hall for a bus trip to the Capitol, where they demonstrated in the rain with signs saying "Home Rule Means Better Schools" and other evidence of support for D.C. home rule.

The convention was told that many of New York Local 2's 47,000 members will refuse to report for school Sept. 11 unless the union wins a guarantee of smaller class sizes, more teachers and up to 300 more effective ghetto schools in the new contract it is now negotiating with the city.

Meany Endorses Dystrophy Drive

The March Against Muscular Dystrophy, the annual campaign for funds sponsored by the Muscular Dystrophy Associations of America, has been endorsed by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany.

Meany, Pres. William D. Buck of the Fire Fighters and Vice Pres. James H. Rademacher of the Letter Carriers are members of the association's national board. In a letter to the president, Jerry Lewis, Meany expressed the hope that MDAA's programs of research, treatment and education will contribute to the eventual elimination of neuromuscular disorders.

The AFL-CIO president urged all affiliates and members to support the drive for funds.

Two Veteran Organizers Retire in South

AFL-CIO Regional Dir. Charles H. Gillman closed out an active union career covering more than 30 years when he retired Sept. 1 at Atlanta, Ga.

Gillman went to work in 1929 at the Fisher Body plant of General Motors in Atlanta, and helped organize it as an AFL federal union. The union later became part of Auto Workers Local 34, which Gillman served as secretary for two years and as president for six years before he joined the organizing staff of the former CIO.

He served as Georgia regional director from 1940 to the merger in 1955, and 1956 became AFL-CIO director for the Georgia-Florida-Alabama region.

Another Southern labor veteran who retired is Carey Haigler, assistant director of the North Carolina, South Carolina and Tennessee region since March 1964, and before that, regional director of the two Carolinas before the consolidation of two regions.

Haigler was stationed at Charlotte, N. C. A long-time member of Steelworkers Local 1489, Birmingham, Ala., he served as local secretary, then president before becoming a USWA staff representative. He served as secretary-treasurer and later president of the state Industrial Union Council and was the CIO Alabama director before merger.

single five-cent skill adjustment and hinged it on acceptance of a "job evaluation" study.

An earlier panel, headed by Judge Charles Fahy, had recommended an 18-month pact with a six percent general wage boost and three five-cent skill increases. It rejected the idea of a "job evaluation" study.

The presidential board, created by Congress in July and headed by Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.), is to hand down its settlement recommendations by Sept. 15. These recommendations, unless the parties reach an agreement on their own, will become binding Oct. 15. They will remain in effect until the parties reach a contract agreement or until Jan. 1, 1969, at the latest.

The law directs the board to alter the Fahy proposal as it finds necessary to "(1) be in the public interest, (2) achieve a fair and equitable settlement within the limits of collective bargaining and mediation efforts in this case (3) protect collective bargaining, and (4) fulfill the purposes of the Railway Labor Act."

Unions' Case

The unions' case, as presented in the brief and by Vice Pres. Thomas Ramsey of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, shopcrafts' spokesman, stressed that:

● A two-year wage contract, rather than one extending for 18 months, would be better to encourage "a period of stability in the railroad industry."

● "On the basis of an increase in the cost of living and an increase in productivity" the unions proposal is fully justified.

The unions asserted that a climb in living costs has more than wiped out the shopmen's last pay hike, in January, 1966; and that productivity on railroads has increased an average of seven percent a year, compared to a 3.5 percent annual rise in industry as a whole.

The unions said their wage proposal actually is less than would be justified under a "catch-up" formula reflecting the full impact of changes in prices and wage adjustments for comparable work in other industries.

The shopcrafts advanced wage figures based on government surveys to support an argument that there is a "tremendous gap" between wages of skilled shopmen and those of comparable skilled workers in other industries.

Ramsey said that "the rates of railroad journeymen and mechanics are generally from 50 cents to $1.50 an hour under the rates paid to similar employes in other industries." The present rate for skilled shopmen is $3.04 an hour.

The railroads conceded to shopmen's skills but also said there was "no justification" for giving the unions even as much as recommended by the Fahy panel.

Employers' View

Francis J. Shea, the railroads' lawyer, told the board that railroads could not offer more because they have already settled with other rail unions on a five percent wage increase pattern, covering 1967.

If the shopcrafts get a sizeable wage adjustment for their skilled members, he claimed, other unions will demand new increases to further "catch up."

Board members in addition to Morse are AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, former Sen. Leverett Saltonstall (R-Mass.), Fred Kappel, retired head of American Telephone & Telegraph, and Theodore Kheel, a New York mediator.

Unions involved in the dispute in addition to IBEW are Railway Carmen, Machinists, Boilermakers, Sheet Metal Workers and Firemen & Oilers. They bargain jointly through the AFL-CIO Railway Employes Dept.

TV Pact Ratified By Screen Actors

Hollywood, Calif — The Screen Actors Guild announced that a nationwide vote of its members has given overwhelming approval to a new four-year contract covering actors in television entertainment films, as well as those produced for theaters.

The pact raises minimum rates 20 percent in two steps, increases residual payments for domestic and foreign television movies, brings further producer contributions to pension health and welfare funds and provides improvements in a number of other areas.

Exec. Sec. John L. Dales said the referendum approval was nearly 99 percent out of 7,605 ballots cast. The contract runs until June 30, 1971.

Fake 'Labor Paper' Mixes Racism With Ads from Gullible Businessmen

A sharp operator who sets up a phony "labor paper" in order to mulct gullible businessmen for his own profit is bad enough, and the extermination of such operators is a major goal of the Intl. Labor Press Assn., AFL-CIO.

But it's even worse when the "labor paper" couples its pursuit of gain with racism and far-right attacks on the labor movement itself, says ILPA Sec.-Treas. Kenneth Fiester.

This was the prompt reaction of Marvin Apte, assistant business manager of Local 349, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Miami, Fla., when he first saw a sheet called "National Federation of Labor News," which described itself as "The Official Organ of the National Federation of Labor, Inc."

Not only was an alleged "New Year's Edition" crammed with ads of all sizes—450 of them, plus a handful of "Compliments of a Friend" insertions that could have been sold hundreds of times to business suckers. Its banner headline read: "AFL-CIO Labor Leaders Should Be Tried for Treason!"

Inside pages were loaded with anti-labor and anti-civil rights material, some of it simply pirated from wire service and other stories, columns and the like published by Miami dailies.

Apte wrote to each of the advertisers who could be identified, pointing out these facts:

● The "National Federation of Labor, Inc." is a successor organization to the "United Southern Employees Association," set up a decade ago as an ally of the White Citizens Councils and other racist organizations.

● The leader of both these organizations, one W. A. Somersett, is also listed as editor and publisher of the "National Federation of Labor News." Somersett, whose criminal record under several names goes back to 1923 and was compiled in locations from Richmond, Va. to New Orleans, La., had no union connections before founding the "southern employees."

Apte's letter drew scores of thank-you replies from Miami business firms. No subsequent issue of the "Labor News" has appeared. What came instead, early in July, was a solicitation in its name for donations to meet the cost of a "Labor Day parade."

Apte went back to his desk. He also went to city and county authorities. No application for a parade permit has been filed, and Apte is assured that none will be granted.

Apte says he doubts that Somersett has given up. But neither has Apte.

Labor Calls Nation to Meet Challenges

Johnson Cites Union Role in U.S. Progress

less riots of this unhappy summer cannot be condoned . . . they are criminal wrongs and an affront to the very ideals which motivate the quest for a better society. But neither do the riots offer the slightest justification for calling a halt to programs that strike at the evils which breed riots."

The war on poverty and other forms of ugliness is one of two areas, Meany said, which are being re-thought by the nation, a matter "of taking a new look at American society as it is and as it ought to be, and a new look at the role of the United States in world affairs."

In the second "channel of decision flowing through the American consciousness and the American conscience," he maintained, there also is an urgent need "for common sense, a sense of reality and a sense of proportion."

The war in Viet Nam must be carried forward, he declared, just as the fight on poverty and discrimination must be waged.

"America can remain free and secure only in a world where freedom is secure," he emphasized. "Freedom can be secure everywhere only if it is assured to all Americans.

"This is what Americans must bear in mind during this period of national decision. It is my hope and my faith that they will decide wisely and well."

Johnson in his Labor Day statement called the history of the country's labor movement "a lesson in responsibility."

"The movement began," he said, "at a time when workers were treated more as commodities than as human beings; when most men and women were without power to affect the conditions and wages of their working lives; and when the laws offered no protection for collective bargaining.

Violence Rejected Early

"In another country, or in different hands, the workers' protest against these conditions might have degenerated into sustained violence. . . . But the American labor movement learned early that violence is the sure road to disaster. Labor in this country organized not to destroy, but to demand a part of the American dream."

In emphasizing the work still to be done, the President noted that one of every seven Americans lives in poverty—some victims of discrimination because of race, age or religion.

"We must cure these ills," he declared. "We must create more jobs and train the men and women to fill them. We must guarantee the right of every citizen to become the best that there is within him to be. . . .

"We are committed to the defense of freedom abroad, and we will honor that commitment. But we are also charged with the duty to assure the rights of every American at home. It is a duty we must fulfill."

Johnson pointed out that Labor Day finds 76.2 million Americans at work—1.6 million more than on last Labor Day.

A Common Challenge

But the country's work is not done "if we only magnify our own affluence," the President declared. He recalled that labor years ago had to "awaken the social conscience" of the owners and managers of property and production, and added:

"Today our common challenge is to extend the promise of America to those who are as unfamiliar with it as the railroad workers and coal miners were 70 years ago."

A determination that the country will not accept "roadblocks to justice" was expressed by Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey in a message in which he commended organized labor for all it has achieved—"not only for our working people, but for so many worthy advances for all of our population."

"Labor's goals are liberal America's goals," he declared, "just compensation, economic security, sound fringe benefits, good working conditions, the opportunity to learn, to advance, to live in dignity.

"Good housing, good health, good education and training, recreational opportunities, public safety —these too are the Charter for America for which labor rightly strikes."

AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler in his Labor Day message observed that nearly everyone who accepts the idea of collective bargaining also claims to believe in the right to strike, but "unfortunately, this belief sometimes wavers when it runs into reality."

"Yet in fact it is the right to strike that gives meaning to collective bargaining," he said, "and without that right the whole structure of labor-management relations would collapse. The negotiation of a contract involves basic economic decisions which in a free society should be made by the parties."

In discussing the labor movement's broader role rather than its primary trade union functions, Schnitzler stressed that organized labor has realized that its progress is inseparable from the progress of America as a whole.

"We are proud," he said, "that as our numbers have grown, we have been able to fill with increasing effectiveness the role of people's lobby. . . .

"We are the only large national force, as diverse in membership as America itself, that can speak for those who have no other voice—not just for union members, but for all."

Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz chose the holiday to look back on the past year "not in terms of the riots in a few cities . . . but in terms of all the other cities in which we've done so much better than we were doing before."

A Year for Building

He saw the year as one in which more people were working at higher wages than ever before and gains for minorities were greater than in any period in the past. He called the past summer one in which more young people than ever before had jobs which will lead to their return to school.

"I look ahead toward a year in which we build on what we've learned this year," Wirtz said, "sometimes bitterly, but learned it, nevertheless.

"I think of Labor Day as being this year . . . a day when it would be a very good thing for us to take inventory of the things that are good in this country as well as the things that are wrong.

"I think of it as a day to realize that the things which have happened which are bad are not America and the things which have happened that are good are truer to our traditions."

The Defense Dept. relies on the understanding and support of the American worker to assure that supply and equipment needs for the armed forces are fully and promptly met, Defense Sec. Robert S. McNamara said in reminding the services that on Labor Day, "we once again pay honor to the American worker."

"Experience has justified this reliance," he continued. "We are confident that labor will make its full contribution to the building of a strong defense team in order to preserve our nation's security and the security of the free world."

The active support of the North American labor movement over the years "has greatly helped" the Intl. Labor Organization in its effort to better the conditions of life and work of people the world over, ILO Dir.-Gen. David A. Morse said in extending his "warmest greetings" on Labor Day.

"The example set by the working people of the United States and Canada encourages all those who believe in strong and free labor unions," he said.

"It is my hope that the achievements upon which you can reflect this day will be yet greater next year and that conditions of freedom and justice will continue to prevail. In this spirit, and expressing the ILO's gratitude for your support, let me convey my very best wishes for your continuing success, which will in turn include our close and happy association in the years ahead."

President C. J. Haggerty of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept., denouncing recent urban rioting, declared that "once there has been a return to law and order, there must be a facing up by all segments of the American society to the monumental problems facing all of us."

These are found, he said, "in housing, employment and education, transportation and medical care, pollution control and vermin control and many other situations which must be improved if we are to accomplish the task of making our cities livable."

Concern in Canada

The continuing growth and increasing strength of the Canadian labor movement make it obvious that the nation's organized workers are "going to play a more important role in the society of the future," Sec.-Treas. Donald MacDonald of the Canadian Labor Congress said.

Despite gains all along the line, he found some factors in the economy which give cause for "serious concern," citing possible unemployment resulting from completion of centennial building projects, trade revisions and technological changes.

"It is therefore obvious that in these, and in many other areas, great challenges confront the labor movement and the Canadian people as a whole," he said. "A strong and united labor movement is now more necessary than ever."

WHEN HE WAS A PRO MUSICIAN known as Buddy James and playing the sax in big name bands, the Rev. James Perrone was a member of Musicians Local 400 in Hartford, Conn. Now, following service in Liberia as a priest of the Society of African Missions, he has been assigned to St. Odilia's Church near the Watts section of Los Angeles — and has joined Local 47. He has found music a fine way of communicating with young people, as the photo shows.

Priest Blows Union Licks To Watts Kids

Los Angeles—When the Rev. James Perrone blows a hot lick on his saxophone or clarinet to get across a point to the kids of St. Odilia's Church, on the edge of the Watts section, it's no rank amateur they're listening too.

Father Perrone is a full-fledged pro who was a member of Hartford, Conn., Musicians Local 400 when he was 13 years old, had a career as a sideman, under the name of Buddy James, with top dance and jazz orchestras, and then became a missionary priest.

He has now joined Los Angeles AFM Local 47 because "I want to identify myself fully with my fellow professional musicians."

Father Perrone is a member of the Society of African Missions and was assigned to St. Odilia's after service in Liberia.

In the Watts area, as in Africa, he finds music a "tremendous help" in breaking down barriers. In Liberia, where he taught in Cape Palmos and worked in the bush, he organized a boys' chorus with jazz rhythms and simple counterpoint the members could feel which won acclaim from Pres. William V. S. Tubman.

Here he uses his musical instrument to penetrate the reserve that under-privileged children often use to protect themselves from the world, and gets them started on the process of learning.

This is an extension of the vocational work to which he was first assigned on his return from Africa. He often found himself, he said, speaking at a communion breakfast and "then using the horn to communicate with these young people."

"I'm going to continue to play in dignified situations with the young people," he said, "and my order does not object."

Father Perrone sees nothing strange in a musician becoming a priest, "and why should I—music is a fine profession." He also sees nothing odd in a priest joining a union.

"You know we've always respected the labor movement," he said, "and I feel it's right for me to be part of it again."

Oklahoma Senator Asks Rejection of 'Work Law'

Sen. Fred R. Harris (D-Okla.) said in a broadcast news interview that the petition campaign to put a "right-to-work" proposal on the ballot in Oklahoma should be rejected.

He said he is opposed to the effort to outlaw the union shop because:

- "I do not think the adoption of a 'right-to-work' law would be good for Oklahoma.
- "I think that whether or not you have a union security agreement in a labor-management contract is a matter for negotiation in each case between labor and management, without government interference or prohibition.
- "We voted rather recently in Oklahoma on this issue, and I do not see any good purpose served by voting on it again and dividing our people at a time when we ought to be working together on so many things—particularly the creation of new private jobs in this state."

Harris declared: "I would not sign a petition . . . I think the petition ought to be abandoned. And I hope it will not be successful if it isn't abandoned.

An Unfinished Task

ON LABOR DAY 1967 the country marks the 85th anniversary of a holiday inspired and brought to reality by a handful of trade unionists struggling to assert the basic rights and dignity of the American worker.

When the first Labor Day parade was staged in New York City in 1882 after the dedicated efforts of Peter McGuire won congressional approval of a national holiday honoring labor, it was the beginning of a new movement that a few years later brought into being the first meaningful national federation of trade unions—the AFL.

In the years since some of the meaning of Labor Day has been drained away into a celebration marking the end of summer vacations, the beginning of a new school year, the last three-day holiday during the warm weather.

But for the trade union movement it is still a day of dedication and rededication—to the unfinished tasks of securing for all workers the same basic rights that were fought for 85 years ago.

Labor's work is never done as long as there are those who are denied social justice, who are not represented in an industrial democracy, whose political rights are mocked. On this Labor Day there is the simple realization that the work is still unfinished, that the battle goes forward.

Stay-In-School

IF THE CURRENT rate of school dropouts continues into 1975 there will be 32 million adults in the labor force without a high school education—32 million persons who will be unqualified for most of tomorrow's jobs.

This calamity must not be allowed to develop. And the only way to stop it is an all-out, vigorous stay-in-school campaign directed at every youngster, every parent and every person concerned with education and the community.

The lesson must be driven home that education is a necessity in a modern society, that dropping out of school before graduation to pick up a job for a few dollars is a deadend street that produces only cruel disillusionment.

The stay-in-school campaign is directed primarily at the youngsters who may make the wrong choice at a difficult moment in their lives. But it is also a campaign keyed to the future welfare of the country and its ability to progress toward a better life for all.

Tragedy in Czechoslovakia

THE MYSTERIOUS death in Czechoslovakia of Charles Jordan, executive vice chairman of the American Joint Distribution Committee, has shocked the free world both in terms of the personal tragedy and the revival of a virulent anti-Semitic campaign in the Soviet bloc nations.

The possibility of an impartial investigation into the death of this man who aided hundreds of thousands of victims of persecution has all but disappeared. The truth may be a long time surfacing.

But there is no mistaking the violence of the campaign in the Communist world as part of the wild attacks on Israel. The civilized world can only view Jordan's death with a sense of outrage and the wild and poisonous anti-Semitic campaign with deep concern and anxiety.

In Labor Day Messages:

3 Major Faiths Sound Themes Of Racial Justice, Right to Strike

DENIAL of the right to strike is justified only in the "rare cases when genuine damage to the general welfare clearly outweighs the values of freedom in labor-management relations," the National Council of Churches declared in its annual Labor Sunday message.

Even then, the council continued, "viable alternative methods must be found for securing freedom and justice" for the workers. Otherwise, the statement continued, "the right to strike remains a desirable element of our national labor policy."

"Public employes should not be denied the right to strike solely by virtue of their public employment," it declared. "In such areas as fire, police or other services, where a strike would seriously endanger the public health or safety, other alternatives must be found."

The council noted that the strike "is a last resort of free workers in self-defense against what they believe to be unjust oppression."

"The way to industrial, as to international, peace is through endless persistence, responsible patience and goodwill, and imaginative and cooperative search for alternatives to the strike," it added.

Citing the National Labor Relations Act's specific protection of the right to strike, the council noted the relatively small amount of time lost because of walkouts—"only one-tenth that lost from industrial accidents" in 1966—and called the right to strike "vital" to organized workers.

"No man, no group of men, can be compelled to work without a loss of freedom," the statement declared.

Government intervention, the council pointed out, may lead to "undue reliance" on government and destroy free bargaining. Recent bargaining in the railroad industry, it added, "illustrates the dangers of such precedents."

THE SOCIAL WELFARE DEPT. of the United States Catholic Conference, declaring that "labor relations in 1967 means race relations," keyed its Labor Day statement to the fact that the U.S. "has failed to preserve racial peace and to achieve racial justice."

"The more we build walls around the inner city," the statement declared, "the more we pen up explosive forces that will erupt in violence. Those who own or rent decent housing are not about to throw firebombs. But apparently some in rat-infested slums have concluded that no housing at all is better than the hovels they now inhabit."

To achieve racial peace and justice, the statement said, the first move should be "concerted efforts at every level of society to build bridges of communication between the races where today there are mostly barriers." It called for "strong steps" to restore or create understanding and trust, for intensive counseling and rehabilitative programs, and for supplemental education as well as training or retraining for school dropouts.

The department called on the country's religious bodies to "deepen their cooperation" in seeking racial justice and justice for the poor, seeking "to forge even stronger interreligious bonds, and urged organized economic groups, "particularly business and labor, to work for quick and effective solutions to the problems which confront us."

CONFIDENCE that the American labor movement will "play its noble part in bringing harmony where there is present disharmony, trust where there is now enmity, cooperation where there is now antagonism" in the quest for social and racial justice was voiced by the Synagogue Council of America.

The council declared in its Labor Day statement that "all Americans have a responsibility" when "inequities lay their ruthless hands upon a nation's life" and violence ensues.

"The time is now long since past when America can withhold a job from a man because of the color of his skin, or deprive him of the opportunity of a decent education or deny him the right of living in a house that will be for him a pride instead of a shame," the statement said.

"To right these egregious wrongs is surely our pre-eminent task, and we look particularly to the American labor movement because of its special awareness and concern, because of its dedicated responsibility to a fully realized America.

"The faith in labor's leadership, we are certain, will be justified in the critical days ahead."

The statement also reflected the traditional Jewish "deep respect and profound concern for the worker," recalling the ancient counsel that "learning uncoupled with work is learning which can ultimately bear no fruitful harvest."

Statement of Principles:

Coalition Drafts Action Program To Meet Nation's Urban Crisis

The Emergency Convocation called by the Urban Coalition in Washington Aug. 24 adopted a statement of principles, goals and commitments. The following are excerpts from that statement.

Emergency Work Program

This convocation calls upon the federal government to develop an emergency work program to provide jobs and new training opportunities for the unemployed and underemployed consistent with the following principles:

● The federal government must enlist the cooperation of government at all levels and of private industry to assure that meaningful, productive work is available to everyone willing and able to work.

● To create socially useful jobs, the emergency work program should concentrate on the huge backlog of employment needs in parks, streets, slums, countryside, schools, colleges, libraries, and hospitals. To this end an emergency work program should be initiated and should have as its first goal putting at least 1 million of the presently unemployed into productive work at the earliest possible moment.

● The program must provide meaningful jobs—not dead-end, make work projects—so that the employment experience gained adds to the capabilities and broadens the opportunities of the employees to become productive members of the permanent work force.

● Basic education, training, and counseling must be an integral part of the program to assure extended opportunities for upward job mobility and to improve employe productivity. Funds for training, education, and counseling should be made available to private industry as well as to public and private nonprofit agencies.

● Funds for employment should be made available to local and state governments, nonprofit institutions, and federal agencies able to demonstrate their ability to use labor productivity without reducing existing levels of employment or undercutting existing labor standards or wages.

● The operation of the program should be keyed to specific, localized unemployment problems and focused initially on those areas where the need is most apparent.

Private Employment, Assistance and Investment

All representatives of the private sector in this Urban Coalition decisively commit themselves to assist the deprived among us to achieve full participation in the economy as self-supporting citizens. We pledge full-scale private endeavor through creative job-training and employment, managerial assistance, and basic investment in all phases of urban development.

The alternatives to a massive and concerted drive by the private sector are clear. They include the burden of wasted human and physical potential, the deterioration of the healthy environment basic to the successful operation of any business, and the dangers of permanent alienation from our society of millions of citizens.

We propose to initiate an all-out attack on the unemployment problem through the following steps:

● In cooperation with government, to move systematically and directly into the ghettos and barrios to seek out the unemployed and underemployed and enlist them in basic and positive private training and employment programs. We will re-evaluate our current testing procedures and employment standards so as to modify or eliminate those practices and requirements that unnecessarily bar many persons from gainful employment by business or access to union membership.

● To create a closer relationship between private employers and public training and emergency employment programs to widen career opportunities for our disadvantaged citizens. To this end, we will proceed immediately to promote "Earn and Learn Centers" in depressed areas.

● To develop large-scale programs to motivate the young to continue their education. Working closely with educators, we will redouble our efforts to provide part-time employment, training, and other incentives for young men and women. We also pledge our active support to making quality education readily accessible to deprived as well as advantaged young people.

● To expand on-the-job training programs to enhance the career advancement prospects of all employes, with particular emphasis on those who now must work at the lowest level of job classifications because of educational and skill deficiencies.

Housing, Reconstruction and Education

This convocation calls upon the nation to take bold and immediate action to fulfill the national need to provide "a decent home and a suitable living environment for every American family" with guarantees of equal access to all housing, new and existing.

The Urban Coalition shall, as its next order of business, address itself to the development of a broad program of urban reconstruction and advocacy of appropriate public and private action to move toward these objectives, including the goal of rehabilitation and construction of at least a million housing units for lower-income families annually.

This convocation calls upon the nation to create educational programs that will equip all young Americans for full and productive participation in our society to the full potential of their abilities. This will require concentrated compensatory programs to equalize opportunities for achievement. Early childhood education must be made universal. Work and study programs must be greatly expanded to enlist those young people who now drop out of school. Financial barriers that now deny to youngsters from low-income families the opportunity for higher education must be eliminated.

Labor News Conference:

Tax-Exempt Billions Suggested As Source of Viet War Funds

THE AFL-CIO'S chief economist strongly urged Congress to look at "the very large sums of money now completely exempt from taxes" as a source of revenue to finance the Viet Nam war.

About $23 billion yearly income is exempt from taxes as capital gains, interest on state and local government bonds, and oil and mineral depletion allowances, said Dir. Nathanial Goldfinger of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research.

"A small degree of taxation on those exempt forms of income could raise at least $1 to $2 billion," Goldfinger declared on Labor News Conference, a public affairs program broadcast Tuesdays at 7:35 p.m. EDT on the Mutual Radio Network.

Goldfinger said the AFL-CIO is "in accord with the President's view that a tax increase is needed, but firmly opposed to the Administration's proposals" on how to do it.

"We think that the American public generally, not only the armed forces, should share in the sacrifice of the war in Viet Nam," he said, describing as "unfair" the Administration's plan to levy a flat 10 percent surtax across the board.

CORPORATE profits have "shot up" in recent years—much faster than workers' wages—and remain high, he said, declaring "the surtax rates on corporations should be at least twice the rate on individuals."

Goldfinger also urged that low-income taxpayers be exempt from the surtax and that the increase on other groups be progressively graduated, based on ability to pay. It is unfair, he charged, to apply the same tax rate to a $6,000-income family that is applied to a million-dollar-income family.

Questioning Goldfinger were Hobart Rowen, business and financial editor of the Washington Post, and Alan Adams, Washington correspondent for Business Week magazine.

Washington Window

By Press Associates, Inc.

AN EXTREMELY IMPORTANT decision currently before Congress is whether a man or woman, now on welfare, who is able and willing to work, should be trained in new job skills by the Dept. of Labor or by the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare.

Off hand, this would sound like one of those bureaucratic quarrels between government agencies as to who is to grow bigger and so gain in prestige and power.

Actually, it is a highly important question of greatest concern to organized labor which already has spoken out in favor of such training being done by the Labor Dept. in an atmosphere of practical job training, rather than by HEW.

The Johnson Administration has recommended that the community work and training program provided for welfare recipients under the new social security bill should be done by the manpower training division of the Labor Dept. The House bill which has now gone to the Senate places it in HEW. Strong efforts will be made in the Senate to undo that section of the House bill.

Here are some of the basic reasons:

● The House bill will produce an immense duplication of effort in the manpower training program since it sets up a new training program at great cost which already is being carried on by the Labor Dept. This costly duplication will mean that fewer welfare recipients will be reached because of budgetary reasons.

● The House bill does not provide for advanced planning regarding the utilization of manpower services. This kind of planning already has been done through current Labor Dept. manpower programs. The Labor Dept. already has the necessary expertise; HEW would have to start virtually from scratch.

● The job of Labor Dept. manpower experts is to train people to get and hold jobs in competitive industry. The job of welfare experts is to provide social services which are important but which do not contribute directly to make workers self-sufficient.

● Establishment of the program within HEW bars welfare trainees from the great body of knowledge of the labor market which has been built up by the Labor Dept. This includes experience in dealing with labor unions, with the employers and the general mechanism of how people get jobs and what training they should have for them.

● Finally, there is the highly important question of maintaining labor standards. Past experience has shown great danger of using the welfare recipient in search of work as a cheap source of labor both for private employers and for local and state bodies. Knowledge of the Fair Labor Standards Act and of state minimum wage laws is highly important in this connection. While Labor Dept. experts have this knowledge, this has not always been true of HEW case workers.

WHAT THE PROBLEM largely boils down to is that over the years the Labor Dept.'s Manpower Administration has built up the experience and the knowledge that are necessary for the efficient operation of manpower training programs. It has not been the job of HEW to do that. Opponents of the House bill logically ask: Why place the new training program in a department not designed to handle it and take it away from a department that is specifically designed for the purpose?

"The Labor Department has developed the skill, the knowledge and the machinery for effectively training those who have been marginally equipped to enter the labor market," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany commented on the House bill. "Welfare recipients need the best possible training, under good working conditions, and decent wages, to restore them to self-sufficiency."

This seems so elemental that it is hard to understand why the House should have insisted that the training program be placed in the hands of HEW. There is still time for the Senate to correct what could be a major blunder.

CONGRESS SHOULD look at the very large sums of income now tax-exempt as a source of revenue to finance the Viet Nam war, AFL-CIO Research Dir. Nathaniel Goldfinger (center) told Hobart Rowen (left) of the Washington Post and Alan Adams of Business Week magazine on Labor News Conference. The public service interview is heard Tuesdays at 7:35 p.m. EDT on the Mutual Radio Network.

Truth-in-Lending Hearings Tip Workers to Credit Gyp Tactics

By Sidney Margolius

YOU CAN LEARN a lot from the recent congressional hearings on the "truth in lending" bill that will help you protect yourself from overpaying for credit and from getting involved in even more serious abuses.

Rep. Leonor K. Sullivan (D-Mo.) has introduced a bill which would strengthen the disclosure measure already passed by the Senate. Mrs. Sullivan would require that true annual interest rates be disclosed on revolving credit accounts as well as on cash loans and installment plans for cars and furniture.

At congressional hearings, the AFL-CIO strongly backed Mrs. Sullivan's proposal to include revolving charge accounts, and also home mortgages and small debts on which credit fees are under $10 (exempted in the Senate bill).

The bill also would ban the use of garnishees to force payment of debts. This would be a particular help to moderate-income wage-earners. They often are trapped by deceptive credit plans based on the use of garnishees to club buyers into paying.

The urgency of eliminating garnishees is stressed by Mrs. Sullivan and the co-sponsors of her bill—Representatives Frank Annunzio (D-Ill.), Jonathan Bingham (D—N.Y.), Henry Gonzalez (D—Texas), Joseph Minish (D—N.J.) and Seymour Halpern (R—N.Y.).

However, some other organizations backing "truth in lending" want to wait until a federal investigation of garnishees is finished so as to have more information on that problem.

Whether or not the garnishee ban is enacted this time, the hearings brought to public attention the way working families are lured into credit purchases of overpriced used cars; appliances, jewelry and clothing sold by credit stores; goods sold by house-to-house canvassers; high-priced correspondence school courses; and even auto insurance and wigs sold on credit. Then they get hit by garnishees before they know what has happened, and sometimes even are frightened into paying unfair debts by the fear of job loss if their wages are garnisheed.

HERE ARE POINTS made at the hearings that can help you protect yourself:

● AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew Biemiller warned that credit rates as now quoted, such as 1.5 percent a month, imply that they are very low when in fact they are not. A "service charge" of 1.5 percent a month is the equivalent of a true annual rate of 18 percent.

Biemiller also supported the proposal to tell home buyers the full dollar cost of the interest on mortgages.

● Prof. Richard Morse of Kansas State University, author of Shopping for Credit, a pamphlet used by many teachers, reported on a survey which showed that a consumer who now asks dealers for the annual rate on installment credit is most likely to get a quotation that is only about half right. He reported the case of a bank advertising 5 percent interest on deposits and also 5 percent on car financing. The 5 percent on deposits was accurate enough. But the claimed 5 percent on financing actually was approximately 10 percent per annum because the bank figured the finance charge on the full original debt, even though it was being paid back each month.

● The hearings also showed that buyers who use revolving credit plans, but fail to pay within the period of free credit, then have to pay an effective interest rate of 18 percent not only on the succeeding months, but even the first month.

A shrewd buyer might get as long as 59 days of free credit before incurring a service charge, Robert Klein, Consumers Union economics editor, pointed out. But a less-shrewd one, or one with less cash on hand, would have to pay interest back to the date of purchase.

Bank credit card plans are being pushed hard, but are proving to be both an expensive way for stores to provide credit and for families to fiance purchases. The credit cards usually cost 1.5 percent a month or 18 percent a year.

News Magazine Finds:

Social Security Still A Family's 'Best Buy'

"IS SOCIAL SECURITY Still a Bargain?"

This headline in the weekly news magazine, U.S. News & World Report, no friend of social legislation, is answered with a resounding "yes".

The answer, the magazine reported, resulted from a new study by its own economic unit. The findings covered three pages; a separate article devoted four pages to the new bill passed by the House.

The magazine raised and dealt with each of the major attacks aimed at Social Security. After noting that it was a "real bargain" for retirees and those close to retirement age, it continued:

"Even the young man who starts out today on a working career of 40 years, paying the maximum payroll tax the whole time, has a good chance of getting more money back than he and his employer pay into the system.

"This is especially true if allowance is made for the value of extra protections that Social Security offers against the hazards of life—pensions for disabled workers, benefits for the dependents of a worker who dies before retirement age, hospital and nursing-home care in old age, and so on."

What about the argument that such a young man could do better if he could privately invest the money he and his employer pay in Social Security taxes?

IT WOULD BE POSSIBLE, the magazine concedes, for a shrewd and lucky investor to build up a retirement fund that would yield a better return than Social Security. But apart from the risks in such a course, no private fund would offer "the wide and growing range of coverage" provided by the federal system.

"Private insurance to offer the same kind of multiple benefits and protection as does Social Security cannot be had," the study points out.

What about the soundness of the Social Security fund itself? Here are excerpts from the report:

"Social Security financing is arranged in such a way that each generation supports the benefits of the next older generation . . .

"No generation quite pays its way on Social Security, but the next generation makes up the difference . . .

"If the system were to run into financial trouble some day, there appears to be little if any doubt that Congress would come to the rescue. Pensions unquestionably would be paid, even if it became necessary to finance them out of the general revenue of the United States Treasury."

The study acknowledges that some who pay Social Security taxes get no return—a worker who dies before retirement, leaving no dependents; a working wife who, on retirement, finds she gets more as the wife of a retired worker than she would from her own benefit; professional people and others who keep working past retirement age until they die, and never claim pensions.

"Even these people, however, have the advantage of protection for themselves and their families," the magazine comments.

Conversely, there are some who draw benefits which far exceed what they paid in—some, under a 1966 provision, who paid nothing at all, the article notes.

It makes this final summary:

"But for the great majority of people, even those who will pay the maximum taxes in years to come, Social Security turns out to be a good buy. This will continue to be the case under the new law to be enacted by Congress."

From Soup to Nonsense:

Super-Condensed Digests Make Instant Culture a Cinch

By Jane Goodsell

BEING AS MODERN and as rushed as the next person, I was enthralled by a brochure announcing an extraordinary breakthrough in literary condensations known as Masterplots. This richly bound 15-volume set contains more than 1,500 immortal books condensed into "easy-to-read comprehensive, entertaining digest form . . . for modern, busy people."

Of course, book digests are nothing new, but Masterplots is to old-fashioned condensations what the miniskirt is to the bustle.

Relieved of the tedious task of "wading through pages of excess detail," as the brochure puts it, "the reader finds himself more knowledgeable, better able to discuss the books intelligently than most who have read them in the original editions."

I see no reason to argue with this theory. Indeed, it seems to me so logical and practical that it should certainly be applied to activities other than reading.

Prompted by a zeal for public service, I have a few suggestions for streamlining in other areas:

THE 30-SECOND SYMPHONY. A fresh, new, practical approach to provide music-lovers with the great pleasures of our musical heritage without subjecting them to long, tedious hours of listening. Beethoven's Fifth Symphony is compressed into three meaningful, easy-to-listen-to bars which reflect the spirit of the original work.

THE 48-HOUR EUROPEAN TOUR. Expertly planned to acquaint modern travelers with the rich heritage of Old World culture without the burdensome chore of sightseeing. During full-hour layovers in London, Paris, Rome, Florence, Madrid, Zurich, Vienna, Copenhagen, etc., eminent historians will board the plane to lecture on the historic importance and contemporary interest of each city. The travelers will thus be provided with a rich store of background information and a collection of anecdotes, plus a well-balanced and thoughtful "appreciation" to enrich and enliven their conversation.

THE 1 X 1-INCH ART MASTERPIECE. A full square-inch segment of immortal painting, selected by a panel of at least three art experts. In viewing the most significant square inch of brush strokes (in the case of Botticelli's "Pallas and the Centaur," Pallas' left toe has been judged the very "cream" of the work), the busy art lover enjoys fuller appreciation and deeper understanding than he would gain from irksome examination of the entire canvas.

Year of Tumult Faces American Workers

Election Campaign Looms on Horizon

By Alexander Uhl

AS AMERICAN WORKERS celebrate Labor Day for the 85th year, there is every indication that they face a year ahead of more than ordinary tumult.

The year is a crucial election year—the nation faces a presidential election and a highly significant congressional election.

- What will be the story of an economy that has been on the flabby side for the past year? Will we succeed in keeping unemployment around the 4 percent mark as in the past year and, above all, what are the chances for cutting into the shockingly high jobless rate for the minority groups, notably Negroes?
- If there is no decrease in Negro unemployment or, more urgently, if there is an increase, will the nation be able to avoid another round of the tragic outbursts of violence that marked the summer of 1967?
- Can the 90th Congress tackle the problems that beset the country?

These are the problems. The answers are far from easy or even clearly perceptible.

One thing is certain. As Labor Day 1968 dawns, the nation will be preparing for an election that may, hopefully, break the legislative stalemate that has marked so much of 1967 and that may well mark 1968.

A Johnson-Humphrey ticket seems all but certain. Should the President run and be re-elected, his would be the second longest term in American history. Only Pres. Franklin Roosevelt's 12-plus years would exceed the Johnson nine years.

For the Republicans the picture is more than clouded. In the background lies the ghost of Barry Goldwater, scarcely a candidate himself but the symbol of the still unresolved struggle for control of the Republican Party between the extreme right wingers, mostly of the West, and the moderate "establishment" of the East.

Romney, Nixon, Percy, Reagan, even a possibly "drafted" Rockefeller, keep popping into the Presidential news with persistent regularity. A Nixon-Reagan or Nixon-Percy ticket could possibly satisfy the rightists, a Romney-Hatfield ticket the eastern moderates.

In the wings is Alabama's George Wallace, threatening an independent, segregationist ticket that could have unpredictable affects on both Democrats and the Republicans. The Wallace power, essentially, lies in the South, but his forays into the North have had enough success to make both Republicans and Democrats uneasy that he might hold the balance of power in more than one state.

For liberals, who have been sweating out the 90th Congress with its revival of the old GOP-Dixiecrat coalition that has delayed, if not killed, fulfillment of the great program of social progress enacted by the 89th Congress, 1968 means a new chance.

The Democrats must put on the electoral block no less than 23 Senate seats compared with only 11 Republican seats. The Democratic job in the Senate is to hold its own. Among Democrats whose seats are at stake are Senators Frank Church (Ida.); Joseph S. Clark (Pa.); Ernest Gruening (Alaska); A. S. Mike Monroney (Mont.); Wayne Morse (Ore.); Gaylord Nelson (Wis.); George McGovern (S.D.); Warren Magnuson (Wash.), and Abraham Ribicoff (Conn.). They'll all be running "scared."

Election Prospects

On the House side, there is a chance for the Democrats to recover from the setback of 1966. It is a presidential year and, by every precedent, the Democratic incumbents should benefit from the fact that their man is in the White House and is running for re-election.

On the other hand, the Democrats have a big job to do in addition. They lost a net total of 47 seats in 1966 of which 25 had been held by outstanding freshmen who had come in with the Democratic sweep of 1944. How many of the 25 will try again and be sent back to Congress?

If they do come back—or any considerable part of them—the 91st Congress may be in a position to pick up where the 89th left off.

As Labor Day 1967 approached, the first session of the 90th Congress was occupied with such matters as a possible tax boost, the slum explosions in many cities, the state of the economy, a creep-up cost of living, tight money and what to do about Viet Nam.

For American workers a key question is what state the economy will be in next year. Tight money is still with us and there are no signs that there will be any significant change in the situation over the months. This will mean a continuing 4 percent or more unemployment rate—a rate that labor economists would like lower.

An increase in the unemployment rate will be of deep concern for white workers, but could be catastrophic for Negro workers. They already are suffering a jobless rate twice that of the whites. This, in turn, inevitably would add to the restlessness in slum areas. (PAI)

ONE YEAR AFTER their Labor Day 1966 march from Rio Grande City, Tex., to the State Capitol in Austin, striking melon pickers under the banner of the AFL-CIO Farm Workers Organizing Committee find their grievances and hopes for a better life are receiving national attention. Meantime, they spent months of terror, beaten and harrassed by Texas Rangers serving the interests of the growers.

Revived Conservative Coalition Puts Damper on U.S. Progress

By Harry Conn

THIS LABOR YEAR was not really a bad one—only suffering in contrast with the usual and historic gains of the preceding year, highlighted by the accomplishments of the 89th Congress.

It is not hard to place your finger on what brought about the change and when it came. The date was Nov. 8, 1966—the fateful 1966 elections. It saw the political pendulum swinging back to the conservatives after the Johnson sweep over Goldwater in 1964.

The heaviest impact in the vote was in the House, which saw a loss of 47 liberal votes. Liberal versus conservative seats in the Senate were not greatly altered but the voice of dedicated Sen. Paul Douglas (D-Ill.) was lost.

On the state level, Republicans picked up eight additional gubernatorial offices, giving the GOP control of one-half of the nation's state houses. One victorious Republican had labor support—Spiro T. Agnew of Maryland.

Among the new Republican governors, however, were right wingers such as Ronald Reagan of California, Claude Kirk of Florida, John Williams of Arizona, Norbert Tiemann of Nebraska and Don Samuelson of Idaho.

Such prime labor legislative objectives as repeal of Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act were set aside but hope remained that other goals, such as situs picketing legislation, could still be passed in the 90th Congress.

The crucial battle in the 90th Congress has been the determination of the revived conservative Republican-Dixiecrat coalition to force a cutback in social legislation, particularly to starve out programs through denial of funds.

The President, Vice Pres. Humphrey and other Administration spokesmen insisted that this nation was wealthy enough, powerful enough and concerned enough to meet the demands of Viet Nam and other foreign commitments and still provide high standards here at home.

The pressure for more jobs and better housing, particularly for the Negro minority, became even more pronounced as racial unrest spread from city to city. Organized labor tried to do its part in backing training programs, supporting equal job opportunities and decent housing and pushing for a more effective War on Poverty.

But the labor movement was finding itself the target of harassment and unusually tough stands taken by management. Strikes were being forced, by the railroads, by radio-television networks, by newspapers, by truck firms, by copper firms, by employers in electrical appliances, rubber, shipyards, etc.

The year might also be listed as the one in which coordinated bargaining came into its own. Negotiations with the giant General Electric Co. put this concept to the ultimate test and it proved effective.

An encouraging aspect of the year was the continuing success in organizing. Significant victories were scored by the long-exploited farm workers and impressive growth was registered by workers in white collar industries, particularly among teachers and government workers. For the first time, the number of federal workers under union contracts surpassed the million mark.

Not long after last Labor Day, organized labor won one of its great victories in the waning days of the 89th Congress—passage of key amendments to the minimum wage law raising the floor to $1.60 an hour in three stages and extending coverage to 8 million more workers. For the first time provision was made for farm workers.

Also, in the final days of the 89th Congress the Dept. of Transportation was established with the backing of organized labor. Efforts of the Administration to bring the Maritime Administration into the department were defeated with the AFL-CIO Maritime Trades Dept. playing a major role.

Powell Removed

The 90th Congress was slow in getting started. The major fight in the early days ended with the removal of Rep. Adam Clayton Powell (D-N.Y.) as chairman of the House Labor Committee and assumption of the post by Rep. Carl Perkins (D-Ky.). Powell was denied his House seat.

An incalculable loss was suffered by organized labor the opening day of the 90th Congress with the sudden death of Rep. John Fogarty (D-R.I.), a member of the Bricklayers who was chairman of the House Appropriations subcommittee handling funds for labor, health, education and welfare.

In June, liberal and labor forces enjoyed one of their most meaningful victories—a defeat for the efforts of Everett McKinley Dirksen's (R-Ill.) to undermine the "one man-one vote" ruling.

With conservatives of both parties fighting social and progressive legislation, little emerged during the early months of the 90th Congress. A weakened education bill passed from the House but action is awaited in the Senate. However, the Teachers Corps, which had been left for dead, was revived and although weakened was finally passed for a three year period. Situs picketing passed the House Labor Committee.

The most critical action by Congress was related to the railroad shopcraft dispute and the steps for "mediation to finality" or "compulsory arbitration."

Prices Soared

On other bargaining fronts labor was involved in the sharp rise in the cost of living, and workers were demanding protections for increases which were being negotiated.

Important gains were chalked up by, among others, electric workers, oil workers and butcher workers.

One major merger was completed during the year, bringing in the unaffiliated Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers into the Steelworkers. As the year ended, a merger of the Pulp, Sulphite & Paper Mill Workers and the United Papermakers loomed.

The U.S. Supreme Court made labor history with a number of decisions: upheld payment of unemployment compensation to members of the Auto Workers during a strike in a case that went back to 1957 . . . upheld an NLRB ruling that the Celotex Corp. had to open its books in negotiating with the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers . . . ruled that prefabrication in construction was a subject for bargaining.

Among other highlights during the year were: the 25 millionth vote in National Labor Relations Board elections . . . strong labor support for Israel in the Middle East war . . . Edward P. Morgan ending 12 years of radio sponsorship by the AFL-CIO to enter educational television. . . Assistant Sec. of Labor Esther Peterson returning full time to the Labor Dept. and being replaced as Presidential consumer adviser by actress Betty Furness. . . A public opinion poll by the John Kraft firm showing union members strongly backing the AFL-CIO on major issues. (PAI)

Top Officers Re-elected by Marble Union

New York City—Delegates to the Marble, Slate & Stone Polishers convention here re-elected Pres. William Peitler and nine incumbent vice presidents, and approved an increase in the union's monthly per capita dues.

The per capita was raised from $1 to $1.50 a month, with the increase to be divided equally between the union's treasury and a mortuary fund.

Peitler has headed the Marble, Slate & Stone Polishers since 1960, having been named by the union's executive board to fill a vacancy left by the death of Pres. William McCarthy. Peitler was elected to his first full term in 1963. The union's president also holds the office of secretary-treasurer.

The convention reelected Vice Presidents John Olivari, New York City; Maurice P. Flynn, San Francisco; Wylie Lawhead, Bloomington, Ind.; Joseph D. Sheridan, Milwaukee; Francis J. Byrnes, New York City; Jack D. McCarthy, Los Angeles; William V. Peitler, Washington, D. C.; Joseph D. Fallon, Chicago; and Charles J. Conway, Philadelphia.

Michael Hogan was elected tenth vice president to fill the post left vacant by the death of William McIntyre on Aug. 13.

Meany on Labor Day:

Affluent Society's Conscience Being Tested

By George Meany

THIS LABOR DAY finds the American people at midpoint in a great period of national decision.

It is not the kind of decision that is immediately expressed at the polls, although a political choice will be the ultimate result.

Instead, it is a process of re-thinking—of taking a new look at American society as it is and as it ought to be, and a new look at the role of the United States in world affairs.

These are the two main channels in which decisions are being made, on a whole range of separate but related issues, in the minds and hearts of all Americans. These two rivers of thought will eventually converge, and will blend into the great decision that will determine the shape of American life for many years to come, and perhaps the future of the world as well.

Let us first consider them one by one.

Recent years have brought sweeping changes in American society, stemming from a re-birth of idealism and keyed to the vision of America that most Americans cherish.

Beginning in 1961, and continuing at an accelerating pace through 1966, the American people—through their elected representatives, supported by a national consensus—launched an unprecedented campaign to exterminate the remaining evils which blurred that vision.

This campaign drove into the darkest corners. It went under all the rugs where problems had been swept for generations. It dared to make a frontal attack on the "gentlemen's agreements" that had sustained racial discrimination for two centuries. It boldly struck and overthrew the fearsome barriers to greater educational opportunity. It proudly proclaimed that poverty was not a natural state for any free man, and declared a war to end it.

And this wasn't all. Ugliness in every form became an enemy—the pollution of rivers and of the air we breathe; profiteering on essential drugs and the callous promotion of dangerous ones; extortionate interest rates and consumer deception; despoiled forests and littered streets—these abuses and many more were suddenly matters of national concern.

Since the end of 1966 the campaign has slacked off. The elections that November involved no national issue and showed no consistent pattern, but they were interpreted by many members of Congress as evidence that the voters wanted to pause a bit; not to stop the campaign, but to slow it down. We believe this interpretation was wrong. And by accepting it as a guide for action, or inaction—as we in the AFL-CIO repeatedly warned—Congress made a serious mistake.

IT WAS A MISTAKE because the campaign that began in 1961 was still only a beginning. It had identified the needs, and had started to meet them. But in so doing it opened the eyes and awakened the expectations of all Americans who suffered from the abuses at which it was aimed.

The result of the subsequent slowdown has been disillusionment among many and disorder by a few. The disorders, in turn—with calculated and cynical assistance from the enemies of progress—have led some Americans of goodwill to question the basic concepts of the campaign itself.

To put it bluntly, the conscience and idealism of the affluent majority is being tested in the crucible of reality. It is one thing to overflow with good will toward the disadvantaged who live a thousand miles away; it is quite another thing to recognize the comparable problems of those in the same city or the next block, especially if they are not asking favors but demanding rights.

It would be an unthinkable tragedy if conscience and idealism failed to meet this test. The mindless riots of this unhappy summer cannot be condoned. Arson, looting and murder have no relation to civil rights; they are criminal wrongs and an affront to the very ideals which motivate the quest for a better society. But neither do the riots offer the slightest justification for calling a halt to programs that strike at the evils which breed riots.

Yet this is precisely what the reactionaries would do, and unfortunately there are troubled citizens, normally of good will, who are tempted to agree. They do not openly renounce their principles, but they are beset by doubts.

So they give no more than lip-service to the unfilled needs—not only to civil rights proposals as such, but to all the hopeful new programs to overcome poverty, ignorance and despair. There is a strong, cold undercurrent running against the idealism and the vision of recent years. Measures designed to help the poor are looked upon as measures to appease the rioters. This is a terrible untruth, but far too many have quietly accepted it as fact.

This is a time for the common sense of the American people to come to the rescue—for sense to overcome sensationalism. The criminal madness of a few must not be visited upon the many, of all races, who desperately need all the help and inspiration they can get. It is not just their future which hangs in the balance; it is ours as well.

This, then, is one of the channels of decision. The other, of course, involves the war in Viet Nam, and by indirection, the role of the United States in world affairs.

For almost a generation—since World War II—this country has by the sheer force of events become not just the arsenal of democracy but its one principal defender throughout the world.

It is a new role for America, where isolationism was a tradition for so long. And it is a costly and uncomfortable role.

TO DEFEND the freedom of the people of South Viet Nam, we have committed almost a half a million troops and suffered many thousands of casualties. It is a bloody, dirty and indecisive sort of war, not at all in the American tradition.

It is a war that is especially difficult for some young people to understand. They have had no experience with despotism, or with conquerors. They cling to the simple faith that all governments are much like our own, in the sense that their policies are controlled by their people. And because the United States is a large country fighting in a small one, they talk in terms of imperialism and arrogance.

Along with them, with less excuse, march some of their elders, who have forgotten what they lived through. Against all the weight of history they assert that if only the United States would give way, the Communist forces would at once be converted to sweetness and light, in Viet Nam and everywhere.

To complicate things even more, there is still another group which maintains we should annihilate every nation whose leaders question the position of the United States. These super-hawks have no apparent concern for the future of the human race as long as the last survivor can wave the Stars and Stripes.

Here, too, there is an urgent need for common sense, a sense of reality and a sense of proportion. This is the second channel of decision now flowing through the American consciousness and the American conscience.

In both these channels, so different on the surface, the same question is involved: Are Americans prepared to invest in their future?

On the domestic scene—the first channel—the issue is massive social change, supported by massive amounts of money. It involves jobs at good wages for all. It involves the kind of universal and unlimited educational opportunities that will equip every American to fill these jobs. It involves an end to slums and to ghettoes, not on paper but in fact; and an end to discrimination, not on paper but in fact.

The record since 1961 is proof that investment toward these ends pays enormous dividends, in cold cash as well as warm hearts. Clearly the investment should be greater, not less.

IN WORLD AFFAIRS the issue is an investment in freedom. This is painful as well as expensive, for it demands lives as well as dollars. But here, too, the dividends are there for the counting. By defending the freedom of one small nation by arms, and by helping to preserve the freedom of many others with dedicated manpower and sound financial aid, America is making its contribution toward the attainment of a peaceful future for all mankind.

I said that these channels of decision converge, and indeed they do.

There are those who see very clearly the need to carry forward the war in Viet Nam, but are obsessed by its costs. They call for a moratorium on progress in America, a suspension of investment in a better life and in the fulfillment of the American dream, until a military victory is assured.

They are wrong.

There are also those who are deeply moved by the shortcomings in American society, and see the war only as a financial burden that should be cast aside, on any terms, in the interests of faster domestic progress.

They are wrong, too.

They are both wrong because progress toward the perfection of American society and progress toward the security of other free peoples are inseparable parts of a single objective.

America can remain free and secure only in a world where freedom is secure. Freedom can be secure everywhere only if it is assured to all Americans.

This is what Americans must bear in mind during this period of national decision. It is my hope and my faith that they will decide wisely and well.

ORIT Greetings

Labor Day greetings from the Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers (ORIT) to the workers of North America are excerpted below.

AS THE REPRESENTATIVE of 28 million free and democratic inter-American trade unionists, ORIT takes pleasure in sending fraternal greetings to the workers of the United States, Puerto Rico and Canada on Labor Day.

At this time ORIT wishes to make mention of the continued efforts of the AFL-CIO against discrimination and in favor of equality, regardless of racial or religion differences. ORIT would also like to point out the vigorous support that the AFL-CIO is giving to the program that the United State government is carrying on with the view of ending poverty.

ORIT congratulates the workers of the United States, Puerto Rico and Canada on the economic and social progress they have achieved through their free and democratic trade unions.

At the same time, ORIT wishes to emphasize the support that this highly developed trade union movement has lent to the workers in the developing Latin American and Caribbean countries. This support has consisted of material and technical help as well as fraternal solidarity in our campaign against all types of dictatorships and in our efforts to reinforce the democratic process.

ICFTU Salutes American Labor

Excerpted below are the Labor Day greetings of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions to North American workers.

ON BEHALF of the millions of workers all over the free world, united in the Intl. Conference of Free Trade Unions, we send our fraternal greetings to all workers in North America on Labor Day.

On this occasion, we recall with warm esteem ties of strong humanitarian proclivities which bind you together as organized labor and give you the inexhaustible inner strength with which you have been able to lift the lot of the workers.

Your past battles, often bitter, for improved wages and working conditions, for enlightened labor legislation, and for other amenities related to an acceptable level of living and the respect of the individual, have been largely crowned with monumental successes in your long and progressive struggle. These victories should be consolidated and further buttressed while you engage your forces to further advances in those fields where antiquated labor practices and social injustices still prevail.

It is in this spirit that we share the pride of organized labor in the United States for its unrelenting fight to ensure trade union and social security rights for farm workers, for its strengthened organizational efforts, particularly within the ranks of clerical, municipal workers and teachers, for its tireless struggles in the support and promotion of civil rights campaigns, as well as for its solid opposition to the introduction of compulsory arbitration and any encroachment on trade union rights.

We congratulate the Canadian trade unions on this Centenary celebration year. We salute them especially for their sustained struggle to ensure the effective implementation of human rights legislation for all Canadians, particularly the disadvantaged minorities and their efforts to improve unemployment benefits.

Workers of North America, the whole free trade union movement is together with you in spirit on this Labor Day, united in our common cause for bread, peace and freedom, for social justice, and for prosperity all over the world.

Schnitzler on Labor Day:

Right to Bargain Includes Right to Strike

By William F. Schnitzler

AS WE IN THE LABOR MOVEMENT pause each Labor Day to take stock of what has happened during the last year and what we hope for in the year ahead, we invariably find in this inventory a mixture of old and new.

There are always new hopes, of course, for this is the nature of our movement. And there are always new problems, since they are a product of progress. But there are also old hopes, not yet fulfilled, and old issues, not fully resolved.

One of these issues is by its very nature a continuing one, and that is the rightful role of the labor movement in our free society.

It is a continuing issue because there is continuing change, both in American society and in the labor movement. The shape of the national economy changes, and so do the functions of government. New generations of workers come into the labor force and into the trade unions. New leaders emerge in labor, management and public affairs. Neither the problems nor the people are constant. Therefore a periodic re-examination of labor's role is not only wise but unavoidable.

There are, of course, a few immutable fundamentals:

Workers organize unions because it is the only way they can have an effective voice in determining their wages and other conditions of employment.

The resulting process of collective bargaining not only is incorporated into the official policies of the United States, but has the support of a great majority of the American people and is accepted by most employers of any consequence.

IN OTHER WORDS, it is obvious to all sensible Americans that collective bargaining is the only practical way to conduct labor-management relations in a free, modern society.

But this general consensus leaves out important particulars. One of them involves strikes.

Almost everyone who accepts the idea of collective bargaining also claims to believe in the right to strike. Unfortunately, this belief sometimes wavers when it runs into reality—such as a specific strike that annoys or inconviences the believer.

At such times, some of those who loudly assert their support of unions in general are found in the camp whose motto is "there ought to be a law." They say that in one case or another, disputes should be resolved by compulsory arbitration, by labor courts or some similar device.

Yet in fact it is the right to strike that gives meaning to collective bargaining, and without that right the whole structure of labor-management relations would collapse. The negotiation of a contract involves basic economic decisions which in a free society should be made by the parties themselves.

There are two fallacies that provide the principal foundation for the idea of compusory arbitration.

One is that there is always a "right" or "fair" solution to a labor dispute, which a wise outsider could determine. On what basis could such a determination be made? Obviously the decision—like arbitration awards of any kind—would be heavily influenced by precedent, by existing standards elsewhere and by the inherent tendency of such proceedings to compromise between the positions of the litigants.

SUCH A SYSTEM would be a built-in brake on progress. It would limit future gains to patterns already established. There would be no new precedents set, for the power to break through old barriers would be gone.

This would not just be bad for union members. It would blight the economic growth of the nation, and lead swiftly and inexorably to an erosion of purchasing-power and a resulting collapse.

The other fallacy is that strikes are often incompatible with the "public interest." A part of this fallacy is that strikes are frequent. This part is easily exploded by an example: Strikes have "cost" only half as much time as industrial accidents and a fraction of the time lost through illness—or coffee breaks.

What about the rest of this fallacy—the so-called "public interest" strikes?

First, a distinction must be made between those strikes that cause public aggravation—a newspaper strike, let's say, that deprives readers of the comics and the columnists—and strikes that really threaten to cause lasting damage. When the former are sifted out, very few remain.

With respect to those few, the labor movement takes this position: If workers are to be denied the freedom to strike for reasons genuinely involving the national interest, two other provisions must apply. The best possible alternative mechanism must be created for resolving disputes over conditions of employment; and the industry or service where strikes are forbidden must not be operated for private profit.

Surely a basic freedom should not be surrendered without some assurance that justice can otherwise be obtained; and surely this freedom should not be sacrificed for the benefit of private gain.

Let us turn now from the primary function of trade unions to the labor movement's broader role—in some respects an even more important one.

For many years, the AFL-CIO and its predecessor federations have realized that the progress of wage-earners is inseparable from that of America as a whole. We are proud that as our numbers have grown, we have been able to fill with increasing effectiveness the role of people's lobby—advocating and supporting measures that lead toward a better life, with full and equal opportunity for all.

Only a handful of our legislative goals are concerned with unions or union members as such. They are heavily outweighed by the whole range of public issues in which we are involved—civil rights, education, housing, social security, medical care, the beautification of the countryside and purification of rivers—these and all other matters that relate to the general welfare.

We are the only large national force, as diverse in membership as America itself, that can speak for those who have no other voice—not just for union members, but for all. This is our mission. And let us, as we re-examine where we are and where we are going, rededicate ourselves to its more effective fulfillment.

MacDonald's Message:

Membership Gains In Canadian Unions

Excerpts from the Labor Day statement of Sec.-Treas. Donald MacDonald of the Canadian Labor Congress follow.

AS WE CELEBRATE this Labor Day the Canadian Labor movement stands at one of the most important stages of its history. Many significant events have taken place in the past year and we are now at a point where we face decisions which may well have a marked bearing on the whole future of our movement.

Trade unions stand at an all-time high in point of membership, and the prospects for continued growth are exceedingly good. The membership of the Canadian Labor Congress is crowding the 1.5 million mark. Many of our affiliated organizations are finding their personnel resources taxed in meeting requests for information and organization.

Outside the established trade union movement there has been an enormous surge of interest in collective bargaining among many professional and semi-professional groups. The practice of bargaining collectively, which has always formed the basis of the trade union movement, is being widely accepted.

Suggestions that working people are getting too large a slice of the economic pie are contradicted by the figures. While there have been some fluctuations in the share of the gross national product going to salaries, wages and supplementary income, these have not been of major proportions.

Despite the marked advances made by labor on both the organizational and economic fronts, progress in the field of legislation has been slow. And, while labor has continued to press for much-needed improvements in various forms of social legislation, we have been confronted with intensive drives to introduce legislation of a type which would seriously damage the bargaining process and hamper workers in the exercise of their right to have efficiently functioning organizations.

As far as the general emloyment situation is concerned, there are some factors which give cause for serious concern. The completion of many major centennial projects across the country, as well as Expo, means the end of undertakings which have provided a great deal of work in construction and allied industries. The possibilities of trade revisions having a major impact on some industries may easily be reflected in employment conditions. The challenges of technological change are still not being adequately met.

It is therefore obvious that in these, and in many other areas, great challenges confront the labor movement and the Canadian people as a whole. A strong and united labor movement is now more necessary than ever.

Pres. Haggerty Says:

Building Trades Leader Calls For 'Sanity, Constructive Action'

Given below is the text of the Labor Day statement of Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept.

IT WOULD BE WONDERFUL for America and all the citizens if Labor Day, signalled the end of belaboring days. The times and events cry out for sanity, for constructive action.

In the recent weeks the structure of our democracy has been imperiled. Looting, arson and lawlessness have swept more than 60 communities across the nation in a rising tide of disorder.

On most issues, there are two sides to the argument. But not in this instance. Established order must prevail if our country is to survive. Vicious, rampaging violence cannot be tolerated and whatever steps are required to put down insurrection when it occurs must be taken.

Violence, nowhere or ever, has produced positive results. It does not eliminate conditions it seeks to destroy but often causes them to endure. Violence does not make life in the slum more tolerable. It does not create understanding or produce responsible leadership. Instead, violence breeds fear and pushes into the background those who would build. With the destruction of property goes the destruction of hope and the wrecking of dreams.

Once there has been a return to law and order, there must be a facing up by all segments of the American society to the monumental problems facing all of us in housing, employment and education, transportation and medical care, pollution control and vermin control and many other situations which must be improved if we are to accomplish the task of making our cities livable.

That the job must be done is incontrovertible. The need and its urgency call out.

Sixteen million poor people live in our metropolitan areas.

There are 8 million homes in America in need of repair.

It has been estimated that it will cost $50 billion in federal funds over a 10-year period—and five times that much from the private sector—to meet the challenge.

Labor should and must be in the forefront. Indeed, no group will be more important to the effort to revitalize the cities than the building tradesmen.

Although by no means the principal consideration, union members would reap great rewards from the job that needs doing, for the vast amount of work would mean an end to many seasonal work slumps and perhaps produce full-year employment for skilled craftsmen.

NO ONE has a monopoly on good ideas, vision or hard work. But in this nation there must be individuals who, collectively, could make a start toward solutions. There has not been any real attempt at gathering together such a group.

Today our destiny seemingly is being decided on an ad hoc or a stop-gap basis as we move from crisis to crisis and program to program.

What is necessary, it seems to me, is a systematic approach and a comprehensive national strategy. It must be planned and developed by all of us—the executive branch of the federal government, the Congress, state and local officials, members of organized labor, industry and business, the schools—all working together.

On this Labor Day of 1967, the Building & Construction Trades Dept. of the AFL-CIO, its 18 affiliated national and international unions and its 3.5 million members stand ready and willing to participate.

Senate Committee Acts:

Plans to Aid Cities Win New Hearing

techniques and a wide range of probes into the complex problems of city life and city technology.

The President, who only recently prodded Congress to act on these programs, among others, said the committee's action helped reaffirm his pledge to bring new hope and progress to the nation's cities and their strife-torn ghettos.

Sen. Warren G. Magnuson (D-Wash.), who steered the bill through committee, reported that 200 cities have already submitted "comprehensive and carefully planned" applications for aid under the model cities program—"blueprints for rejuvenating entire slum neighborhoods in virtually every major city in the U.S."

He estimated that the $40 million in rent supplements would generate at least $500 million in private construction and the $537 million model cities allotment would bring up to $4 billion in other funds—private, state, city and federal.

"Having stimulated these massive efforts, having aroused the expectations of millions of our fellow citizens, we dare not now renege on our commitment," he emphasized.

"Now Congress must act. I will urge my colleagues in the Senate to raise their voices in support of this appropriation and the American city," Magnuson declared.

Appropriations for the three programs were included in a $10.4 billion appropriation bill approved for 16 independent federal offices and the Dept. of Housing & Urban Development.

Other major items in HUD appropriation include $27 million for neighborhood facilities, $750 million for urban renewal, $275 million for low-rent public housing, $175 million for mass transportation, $165 million for water and sewer facilities, $75 million for open space land programs and $40 million for urban planning.

Floor Action Next

On the Senate floor the bill will likely face a tough attack from conservative Republicans and southern Democrats. If approved by the Senate, it will go to a House-Senate conference committee.

Another measure that faces tough sledding when it gets to the Senate floor is a Senate Labor Committee-approved version of the Administration's anti-poverty bill.

The measure, reported out by the committee, carries a $2.8 billion emergency job program for the slums tacked on to a $2.25 billion antipoverty program. The Administration had sought only a $2.06 billion antipoverty program.

Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D-Pa.) who sponsored the emergency job program conceded that the proposal would encounter rough going on the floor.

In another development, the Administration was reassessing the foreign aid situation after the House voted 202-194 for a bill that lopped $563 million from the total $3.46 billion foreign aid authorization sought by Pres. Johnson for the current fiscal year.

The bill now goes to a Senate-House conference which must iron out differences between the House measure and an even more battered $2.6 billion aid bill enacted previously by the Senate.

In other developments in Congress:

- The Senate sent to its Judiciary Committee a House-approved measure to protect individuals pursuing their civil rights from violence. It ordered the bill back to the floor in 60 days or by Oct. 24.
- Sen. James O. Eastland (D-Miss.) in retaliation introduced —astonishingly—an open-housing amendment. His obvious aim was not to secure open housing but to stir up enough controversy to kill all civil rights legislation in the Senate.
- The Senate approved a one-year extension of the Administration's highway beautification program and sent the measure to the House. It provides $85 million to control outdoor advertising and junkyards and to landscape roadways.

Kaiser Death Loss to Labor, Meany Says

In the passing of Henry J. Kaiser, labor has "lost a close and cherished friend" and all of America "a dedicated humanitarian," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany said in a message of sympathy to the family. Kaiser died at 85 in his Honolulu home.

Kaiser was "builder whose greatest monuments will be the hospitals and medical centers that bear his name, and the people" who have benefited, the message continued.

Meany recalled that Kaiser won the AFL-CIO's Community Services award in 1965 "for his great concern with the welfare of people" and his belief that America "first is a nation of people and second a nation of brick and mortar."

Kaiser won fame for his shipbuilding performance in World War II and later built an empire in steel, cement, aluminum, homes and resorts. He produced the Kaiser-Frazer auto and the Henry J, but gave them up for the familiar Jeep.

His interest in health led to development of the Kaiser Foundation and its medical care program. The latter includes self-sustaining hospitals and medical centers where care is provided by independent partnerships of doctors under a prepaid health plan. More than 1.25 million union members and others in California, Oregon, Washington and Hawaii are members of the plan.

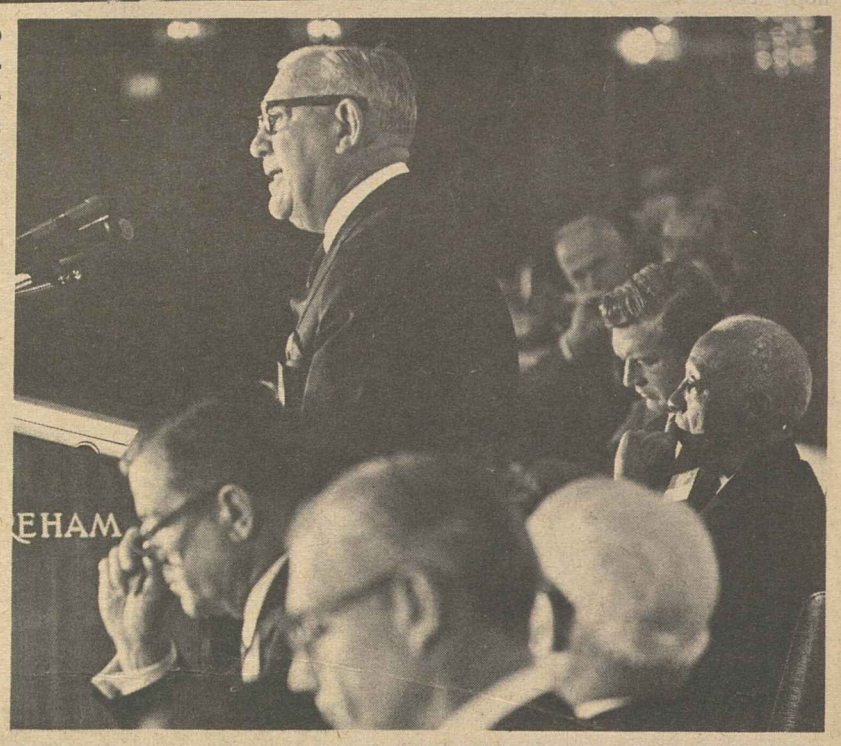
In earlier days Kaiser built Boulder Dam as an "open shop" project but went union shop at Grand Coulee Dam. He found, his lawyer recounted, that "the more expensive job was the open shop job."

Broadcasts Listed For Labor Day

AFL-CIO leaders will make major Labor Day speeches on the four nationwide radio networks on Monday, Sept. 4. The schedule:

Vice Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, ABC, 7:15 p.m.; Vice Pres. I. W. Abel, CBS, 7:35 p.m.; Vice Pres. Paul Hall, Mutual, 9:15 p.m.; Pres. George Meany, NBC, 10:45 p.m.

All times are Eastern Daylight. Since some stations will carry the programs at different times, listeners should check local program listings.



AN APPEAL for legislation to provide 1 million jobs "immediately" and other new programs to solve the nation's urban "crisis" came from leaders in all segments of American life meeting at the call of the Urban Coalition. Nearly 1,000 representatives of labor, business, religion, civil rights groups and local governments were on hand. Top photo, the convocation listens as Pres. A. Philip Randolph of the Sleeping Car Porters reads a statement of "principles, goals and commitments." Randolph was co-chairman of the meeting. Below, Sec. Joseph D. Keenan of the Intl. tions' behavior at the bargaining table will now give way to meaningful, realistic and good faith bargaining."

A statement by Reuther said "we are asking for nothing more than equity out of the increased productivity and profitability . . . made possible by our developing technology . . . We are determined to settle for nothing less."

The employers in their first economic proposal offered basic general wage increases of 29 to 46 cents an hour over three years; additional increases, still to be negotiated, for skilled trades workers, and improvements in some other benefits, not including three that the UAW has given high priority—wage parity for Canadian workers, an end to the "degrading" hourly wage system, and special benefits for the skilled trades.

Managements' wage offer called for increases of 13 cents an hour the first year, plus 2.8 percent each of the following two years. The 2.8 percent equals the current annual improvement factor now in Big Three contracts.

The companies' proposed changes in the cost-of-living escalator clause—including a ceiling of 12 cents over the life of the contract. Under the present contract, UAW members have received 18 cents an hour over the past three years. They did not make any offer on UAW's high-priority goals of guaranteed annual income or salary status for blue collar workers, with guaranteed monthly salaries similar to those of white collar workers and executives.

They proposed to raise pension benefits by $1 a month for each year of credited service for those retiring at age 65 or later. A new disability plan, improved health and welfare plans and improved relocation allowances are included in Big Three offers.

American Motors Corp., fourth big auto maker, was notified that the UAW has rejected its proposal for extending the present contract. The union said it will be ready to "negotiate on realities" when Big Three bargaining concludes. The AMC contract expires Oct. 15.

Louisiana Vote Won By Clothing Workers

Haynesville, La.—Employes of the Haynesville Mfg. Co. registered a 146-83 vote for the Clothing Workers in a National Labor Relations Board election.

Jubilation over the victory was restrained by news of the death of Gladys Cohen, campaign director, the day of the balloting. She had been organizing director in ACWA's southwest region since 1960.

Wirtz Sees Job Training Endangered

Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz warned Congress that the House-passed social security bill would reduce the coordination and efficiency of federal job training programs to "utter hypocrisy."

In testimony before the Senate Finance Committee, Wirtz urged the Senate to remove the House bill's placement of job training in various welfare agencies and put it in the hands of the Labor Dept. as Pres. Johnson recommended.

He pointed out that the social security legislation advanced by the President would place the responsibility for welfare activity with the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare and manpower activity with the Labor Dept.

This, Wirtz continued, would take advantage of each department's long role of experience in the respective fields and "eliminate overlapping and duplicating administrative functions."

Jobless Rate Dips, Soft Spots Remain

3.8 Percent Mark Set In August

By Duane Emme

Employment showed "moderate gains" in August for the third consecutive month, while the jobless rate edged down to 3.8 percent, the Labor Dept. reported. But there were still some soft spots in the overall job picture.

Payroll employment rose 300,000 in the month to 66.2 million seasonally adjusted, about the same as last August. Unemployment dropped seasonally to 2.9 million, about 120,000 higher than in August 1966.

The jobless rate at 3.8 percent was down one-tenth of 1 percent from July. Since December 1965, the rate has fluctuated between 3.5 and 4 percent. In August 1966 it was right where it was this August.

Commissioner Arthur M. Ross of the Bureau of Labor Statistics said the figures show that "the economy has resumed an orderly expansion after going through a soft period in the first half of the year."

He noted, however, that about half the improvement in employment in August was attributable to the end of a strike in the rubber industry and the return of auto workers to jobs following model changeovers, which came earlier than usual.

No Predictions

Ross refused to forecast the trend for the future. He noted that the decrease in the unemployment rate represented some improvement but said the test ahead would be "to move down from this level to a full employment economy."

Also, the department noted that much of the jobs gain was in government, services and trades. Its figures showed a slight gain in manufacturing and construction over the month but continued sluggishness over the year.

Manufacturing employment in August was 19.3 million, down 200,000 from its January peak. The department noted that in "both employment and hours of work" this was still significantly below the last quarter of 1966.

Construction employment at 3.2 million "continued to lag behind year-earlier levels," despite some pickup in the housing industry, the department said.

On the unemployment side, the total of 2.9 million jobless was composed of 1 million adult men, 1.1 million adult women, and 900,000 teenagers, 16 to 19 years of age.

Unemployment rates for adult men were unchanged over the month at 2.4 percent. For married men, the rate was 2 percent, also

Meany Hits Congress Lag In Meeting Crisis of Cities

TRADITIONAL WREATH at statue of Samuel Gompers in Washington, D. C., was laid by AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler and Vice Pres. Joseph D. Keenan at ceremony arranged by the Greater Washington Central Labor Council, headed by J. C. Turner. It was one of many Labor Day observances, in the capital and throughout the nation. (See story, Page 8)

Vital Needs Stressed in Broadcast

Riots in slums and ghettos made the past summer a "long, sad" one, but the "tragedy" is that we still only talk about resolving the crisis of our cities, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany stressed in a Labor Day radio address.

Meany said that all Americans must share the blame "for tolerating the slums which breed diseases and crime, helplessness and anger" and the responsibility for not helping solve urban problems that plague the nation.

Congress Blamed

"But," he added, "let us not hesitate to place the greatest burden of responsibility where it belongs, upon the Congress of the United States. It is the Congress that has failed in its responsibilities—failed miserably."

Meany spoke over the National Broadcasting Co. radio network. Other Labor Day radio addresses, were delivered by AFL-CIO Vice Presidents I. W. Abel, Joseph A. Beirne, and Paul Hall.

Congress was criticized by Meany for its failure so far to enact any of 23 programs affecting urban problems which Pres. Johnson proposed in January. They include proposals for jobs, housing, urban renewal, education, civil rights, model cities programs and mass transit.

If these measures had been passed six months ago, "there might not be a crisis today," Meany observed.

"Most of these measures," he said, "have been suggested, urged, demanded by the AFL-CIO, not for months but for years."

Company Proposal Called Inadequate:

160,000 Auto Workers Strike As Ford Rejects Union Offer

By Eugene A. Kelly

Detroit—The Auto Workers called nearly 160,000 Ford Motor Co. workers out on strike at 92 Ford locations in 25 states after management negotiators refused a union offer of final and binding arbitration of all bread-and-butter contract issues.

The walkout came after Ford refused to improve an Aug. 29 offer the union called "entirely inadequate and inequitable." The offer was for wage increases averaging 13 cents an hour this year, with smaller amounts the two following years, plus some pension improvements far short of UAW proposals.

Union analysts computed the actual offer of additional wages as 1 cent an hour the first year, with the other 12 cents merely an extension of present improvement-factor and cost-of-living increases.

The Big Three auto manufac-

Copper Contract Talks Resumed in Washington

Representative of 20 unions and eight big copper, lead, zinc and silver firms were called to Washington for talks with government officials as a strike of 37,000 nonferrous metal workers, now in its eighth week, spread to new locations as far distant as Connecticut and Nevada.

Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz and Commerce Sec. Alexander Trowbridge met separately with officials of the Big Four firms—Kennecott, Anaconda, American Smelting and Phelps Dodge Corp.—and then with leaders of major unions involved. These include the Steelworkers, Machinists, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, and the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. for the national strike coordinating committee.

Wirtz and Trowbridge said in identical telegrams to the parties that the strike "is having an adverse impact" on the economy and "constitutes an increasingly serious threat to the conduct of the defense procurement program."

But the Office of Emergency Planning told newsmen the strike has not caused any depletion of the 261,000-ton copper stockpile accumulated by the industry before the unions walked out July 15.

Earlier, Pres. Johnson had told a news conference that the Administration was giving "careful attention" to the strike, but had reached no decision to invoke emergency injunction provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act.

The two Cabinet members called the conferees to Washington "to discuss the current industry-wide strike" but said later that their objective is to seek resumption of meaningful negotiations.

Previous talks have not budged management from what union ne-

Sullivan Lauds Turnout For Viet Nam Election

AFL-CIO Vice Pres. David Sullivan, an American observer to the recent Viet Nam elections, said on his return that the people of South Viet Nam "are to be congratulated on their turnout for the balloting."

"As a friend of Viet Nam," Sullivan said, "I wish the newly elected government the best of good fortune and I am hopeful that social justice for all will be one of its top priorities."

The president of the Building Service Employes was one of 22 prominent Americans named by Pres. Johnson to observe the election campaign and the balloting for president, vice president and senators.

The turnout of South Vietnamese voters—4.8 million in all and 83 percent of those registered to vote—elected Lt. Gen. Nguyen Van Thieu as president and Nguyen Cao

NLRB Hits Stevens Anew For Firings

The National Labor Relations Board hit J. P. Stevens & Co. with two more orders to reinstate and give backpay to employes it fired illegally to smash their union, the Textile Workers Union of America.

In two unanimous decisions the NLRB added the names of 18 more firing victims to the list of 88 whom the nation's second largest textile chain must reinstate.

But Stevens—a major government contractor—continues to resist two previous findings and de-

CWA Petitions Back Jobs, Housing, Schools

The Communications Workers have begun a nationwide petition drive—with a goal of 1 million signatures—calling on Congress to provide jobs, housing and education to meet the needs of the cities.

CWA Pres. Joseph A. Beirne urged the union's 30,000 local officers and stewards, representing 420,000 workers, to take the lead in the petition campaign.

"Let us overwhelm this 90th Congress with our feelings," he said.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany strongly endorsed the petition drive, declaring that it is "one of the ways in which Congress can be told about the concern of the American people."

Meany urged state and local AFL-CIO organizations to support the petition campaign, which calls on the federal government to become the "employer of last resort" for those without jobs, to clean up the slums and to initiate a total education campaign.

Meany termed the city riots "the visible manifestation of deep problems of poverty, idleness, frustration and despair."

Neither the cities nor the states can solve these problems by themselves, Meany noted. "However, if Congress should concern itself in ways other than rejecting a rat control bill, some progress could be made."

The CWA executive board said in a statement setting up the petition drive that "massive action" is needed to overcome the problems of the cities.

"The pressing needs of the minorities—of the poor whites, as well as the poor Negro, Puerto Rican, and Mexican—are for jobs now, better housing now, and education now," the board stressed.

It called for "creative, constructive, practical action" to prevent "further rioting, disorder and unchecked crime in the slums."

The union statement warned that "if Congress turns its back" on the cities, "next time it could be your town."

Asbestos Workers Elect Hutchinson as President

Chicago—Albert E. Hutchinson was elected president of the Asbestos Workers at the union's 21st convention here.

Hutchinson, of Los Angeles Local 5, ran unopposed. He served as secretary-treasurer from 1960 until his election as president. He succeeds Hugh E. Mulligan of Chicago Local 17, who was appointed this summer to fill the unexpired term of C. W. Sickles, now president emeritus.

The 334 delegates representing 18,000 members elected Andrew T. Haas of Philadelphia Local 14 as secretary-treasurer. Haas, a vice president since 1957, defeated J. Wayne Kelly, San Francisco Local 16. Election of vice presidents was slated for later in the convention.

Dr. Irving J. Selikoff, medical consultant to the Asbestos Workers and professor of environmental medicine at the Mount Sinai School of Medicine, New York, said there is no reason why dusts from insulating materials cannot be eliminated as a cause of death. Dr. Selikoff has been working with the union to eliminate asbestosis as a dangerous disease.

He reported on a six-year study of 632 members of Local 12, New York, and Local 32, Newark, who had long service in the industry at the time the study began. Dr. Selikoff said a medical profile of the entire international union is being compiled from answers to questionnaires sent to all members. More than 13,000 replies have come in.

He said that during the study, 255 deaths were reported among members of the two locals—over 50 more than expected when comparing workers in the insulating industry with other white male Americans of the same age. There were more deaths caused by lung cancer and stomach cancer than expected.

In 1963, 370 members of these two locals studied were alive. By April 30, 1967, 94 had died. The expected number of deaths over that period was 47. Dr. Selikoff found that not one of the members who smoked pipes or cigars died of lung cancer.

"As bad as the dusts were," he said, "cigarettes were worse."

Dr. Selikoff said it takes 20 to 25 years to learn how dusts affect workers.

Orders 18 More Rehired:

NLRB Blasts Stevens Anew For Union-Smashing Firings

lays of 18 months and more are still in prospect as management takes the cases through court appeals.

In the latest rulings, the board upheld Trial Examiner Boyd Leedom's landmark decision of last Jan. 31 and Examiner Thomas A. Ricci's finding of Mar. 23 that Stevens management violated the labor law repeatedly and deliberately to thwart TWUA's 1963-66 Carolina organizing campaigns.

AFL-CIO Dir. of Organization William L. Kircher said of the findings—the fourth in 17 months against Stevens—that they demonstrate once again that a rich corporation can commit "economic mayhem" against its workers "and not only get by with it but continue to get fat contracts" from the U.S.

Leedom was NLRB chairman in the Republican Administration of former Pres. Eisenhower, when Stevens Pres. Robert T. Stevens was secretary of the Army. Leedom's decision scored management not only for repeatedly violating employe rights, but also for setting policies that he said led many company supervisors to lie on the witness stand. Upholding his findings in the main, the board noted Leedom's opinion:

"I have the inescapable . . . conviction . . . that many of the witnesses called by (management) testified as they did pursuant to a policy, made at a higher level of management than theirs, to defeat this union's organizational effort . . . at the cost, if necessary, of committing unfair labor practices and then denying the unlawful acts."

The witnesses followed a pattern, Leedom observed, of believing they were engaged in a crusade "to overcome a common enemy," unionism, and "so either believing or rationalizing that their position is just, they engage in the common error of fighting real or pretended 'evil' with evil."

Leedom had ordered reinstatement with backpay for 13 unlawfully fired employes. The board added names of two more workers and dismissed the complaint as to seven others. Also it sustained union objections to company conduct in an election held Mar. 9, 1966, at the Dunean plant of Stevens in Greenville, S.C., and ordered a new vote when the NLRB regional director deems the atmosphere conducive to a fair election.

Board Denials

The board denied special remedies sought for the first time by the TWUA—to give the union access to Stevens parking lots and equal time to reply to company antiunion speeches, both for a one-year period, and to conduct any election for the next five years off Stevens premises.

The NLRB also turned down the union's request, made in previous cases, that management be ordered to bargain with the union because its illegal conduct made a fair election impossible.

But the board did agree that Stevens should read the NLRB notice to assembled employes, or permit an NLRB agent to do so; mail copies of the notice to employes of all its North Carolina and South Carolina plants; and give the TWUA access to plant bulletin boards for one year.

The case heard by Leedom involved Stevens plants in Greenville, S.C., and Roanoke Rapids, N.C. Ricci held hearings involving discharges at those two plants and one in Rock Hill, S.C. He ruled that three union members had been fired on phony grounds and ordered reinstatement with full compensation for lost pay since August 1966.

In both cases the NLRB used the new simplified notice form. It states that "after a trial at which all sides had the chance to give evidence, the NLRB found that we, J. P. Stevens & Co., Inc., violated the National Labor Relations Act and ordered us to post this notice to inform our employes of their rights."

The notices conclude: "We will give back to these employes their jobs and seniority, and we will make up the pay they lost and also pay them 6 percent interest."

Employes of Stevens and other firms recently testified before a House Labor subcommittee on the illegal acts of management. Two employes of a New Orleans firm—J. H. Rutter-Rex Co.—said they have waited 12 years for reinstatement and backpay ordered by the board and a court.

The AFL-CIO told the NLRB at special hearings in July that it should use its authority to order lawbreaking employers to pay their workers the wages and fringe benefits they would have received except for management's refusal to bargain in good faith.

The AFL-CIO and the TWUA also have urged that the President issue an executive order forbidding government departments to sign contracts with law-defying employers like Stevens.

Gervase Love Retires From AFL-CIO News

Gervase N. Love, assistant editor of the AFL-CIO News, retired Sept. 1 following 17 years of service to the federation and the former CIO.

An early member of the Newspaper Guild, he was an international vice president of the union from 1945 to 1947 and before that was active in the drive that ousted Communists from positions of leadership in the union.

Love, now 65, began his newspaper career while still in high school, writing sports part-time for the Democrat & Chronicle in his native Rochester, N. Y. He also worked for the Washington Post and the Rochester Post-Express while attending Catholic University and the University of Rochester, from which he was graduated.

In 1926, he joined the staff of the Rochester Journal-American. Over the ensuing 22 years he held various editorial posts with the Buffalo Evening News, the Baltimore Evening News, the Philadelphia Daily News, the Philadelphia Record and the Labor Bureau of the Middle West.

Railway Clerks Help Conyers Rebuild Office

The Railway and Airline Clerks announced it has sent a check for $1,000 to Rep. John Conyers, Jr. (D-Mich.) to help him rebuild his district office, which was burned out in the recent rioting in Detroit.

In announcing the donation, Pres. C. L. Dennis of the Railway Clerks pointed out that a number of case workers on the congressman's staff used the office in helping to meet the problems of the poor in the area.

Dennis also noted that a substantial number of union members also live in the district and "they have many times expressed their appreciation for the prompt service rendered them" from the office.

In a letter to Conyers, Dennis said that the check was "tangible evidence of that appreciation."

He added, "Like you, we deplore the rioting that has visited some of our cities just as we both deplore the conditions which cause this unhappy violence to erupt."

RETIREMENT GIFT of an encased pocket watch is presented by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany to Gervase N. Love, who has just wound up a long newspaper and labor career that was topped off by 17 years of service as assistant editor of the AFL-CIO News and the former CIO News.

160,000 Walk Out:

Auto Workers Strike At 92 Ford Plants

turers gave the union identical contract proposals Aug. 29. It was the first offer from the companies since negotiations began July 10. When Ford talks collapsed a day before contract expiration Sept. 7, the union said the sticking point was the company's unwillingness "either to give us an economic proposal reasonably reflecting productivity increases or profitability or, in the absence of those, to give us the figures" on worker productivity and company profits.

Earlier UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther charged at a press conference that General Motors had "blackjacked" Ford and Chrysler into a secret pact under which Ford would take a strike and the other two would cooperate by locking out their workers, if necessary, to defeat the union. GM and Chrysler denied it.

Checkoff Halted

Both GM and Chrysler refused a union request for a contract extension as Ford pickets took up their stations at production plants and parts depots. GM and Chrysler continued operating, both announcing that most contract provisions would be continued, but that the checkoff of union dues, the requirement that new employes must join the union within 30 days, and machinery for settling worker grievances would not be operative.

The nationwide strike was the first in the auto industry since the UAW struck GM in 1964. No critical defense production is involved, the union said, but it offered to review its position if the facts indicate any threat to the national defense.

Ford workers will be eligible for strike benefits of $20 to $30 a week, depending on family size, after the first week. The union announced that all members of its Ford staff will move from salary to strike benefits. Other members of the UAW staff have been asked to donate 25 percent of their pay to the strike fund, increasing this to 50 percent, if the Ford walkout continues beyond two months.

The union announced that all UAW local unions will receive a call soon to attend a special convention in Detroit Sept. 23. Delegates will be asked to approve a dues increase during the strike period—probably raising the amount earmarked for the strike fund from $1.25 to $5. The fund now is around $65 million. Ford strike benefits will take out money at the rate of more than 4 million a week, the UAW said.

Other Talks Halted

Union negotiations with GM and Chrysler were recessed for the duration of the Ford strike, and offices of the UAW bargaining committees were removed from GM and Chrysler locations. The next meetings, the committees said, "will be on neutral ground."

Ford announced that it has 85,000 new model cars in stock and will introduce them as scheduled Sept. 22. It said it expects that the 1968 models already produced, plus 150,000 leftover 1967 models, probably will be sold in about a month.

A day before the strike, the UAW offered Ford a 30-day contract extension, provided management would agree to arbitration of "all unresolved economic issues."

The proposal called for a three-man arbitration board with the company choosing one member, the union another, and the two arbitraters choosing a third.

The UAW stipulated that the arbitration decision would be effective Sept. 7, 1967, for a period of not more than 3 years, and would be final and binding.

The arbitration board would have 30 days to deliberate, with five advance days allowed for selection of a chairman.

The strike followed management's rejection of this proposal.

A week before the Big Three contracts expired, the UAW proposed that Chrysler or one of the other two firms extend its contract beyond the expiration date to insure uninterrupted production in the event one of the Big Three was struck. The companies announced their refusal on the last day of the contract period, leading UAW to charge they were joined in a "collusive conspiracy" spearheaded by GM.

As to identical company contract proposals, the union called them "little more than a token response" to the needs of employes.

Big Three profits, the union charged, have far exceeded the average rate of return on investment for U.S. manufacturing firms. It said that in the past five years, the profit after taxes was 20.3 percent for Chrysler, 21.9 percent for Ford, 24.5 for GM, as against 11.6 percent for all manufacturing corporations.

The industry's offer was called "inadequate and inequitable" on these grounds:

- The proposed wage increase of 13-cents an hour would be less than 1 cent an hour more than would have been included in the current annual improvement factor and cost-of-living adjustments.
- The offer gave no consideration to the inequities of skilled trades workers and would undermine cost-of-living protection.
- It made no response to union proposals for guaranteed annual income and salary status, basic improvement in pensions, correction of overtime abuses by management, and many other clauses.

Copper Contract Talks Resumed in Washington

gotiators called a "cheap offer" made July 13 by Anaconda. The unions asked federal mediators at Butte, Mont., and elsewhere not to schedule further meetings unless the companies were prepared to bargain in good faith.

Wages, pensions and living-cost escalator provisions are the major unsettled issues in the contract dispute with firms producing most of the nation's nonferrous metals. Besides the Big Four they are Magma Copper Co., Inspiration Consolidated Copper Co., U.S. Metals Co. and Miami Copper Co.

Other unions are joining the strike as their contracts expire. The latest to join include USWA Local 6445, with 940 Anaconda workers at Ansonia, Conn.; unions in the Metal Trades Council at Yearington, Nev.; USWA Local 1936 with 220 members at AS&RC's Whiting, Ind., smelter.

Three additional firms were struck—Apex Smelting Co. with 300 workers at Cleveland and Chicago; White Pine, Mich., Copper Co., with 1,750 members of USWA Local 5024; and Calumet & Hecla, Inc., where picket lines of 27 office and technical employes at Calumet, Mich., are being respected by 1,200 USWA production workers.

Besides the USWA, IBEW, IUE and IAM, the striking unions are the Auto Workers, Operating Engineers, Sheet Metal Workers, Iron Workers, Carpenters, Painters, Boilermakers, Bricklayers, Molders, Plumbers & Pipefitters, Blacksmiths, Teamsters, Railroad Trainmen, Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen, Railway Carmen and the Office & Professional Employes.

Selma Negro Community Turns Out To Support Strikers, Union Drive

Selma, Ala.—"This is the greatest thing that ever happened to the Alabama labor movement."

The speaker was Barney Weeks, president of the Alabama State AFL-CIO.

He spoke from the pulpit of Browns Chapel, the church in the heart of Selma's Negro district which—just two and one-half years ago—was the command post for the civil rights march through Alabama that led to passage of the Voting Rights Act.

The occasion was a mass rally supporting nearly 400 striking members of the Ladies' Garment Workers at Laura Industries and an affirmation of welcome from the Negro community for a major trade union organizing campaign in Dallas County.

Nearly 1,000 persons filled every seat and standing room space inside the church; hundreds more gathered around a loudspeaker outside.

The strikers, 90 percent of them Negro women, have shown "unprecedented heroism and unity," the Rev. P. H. Lewis, pastor of the church, declared.

New Struggle

The Negro community, victors in "a movement for civil rights, is now engaged in a labor movement for human rights," he declared.

The Rev. F. D. Reese, president of the Dallas County Voters League, told the enthusiastic audience, "If we have to march again, we're ready. We've got our marching shoes warm and dry."

He pledged, "We're not going to see these ladies at Laura defeated. Whatever needs to be done to see that they win is going to be done."

Rev. Reese appealed to the small number of strikebreakers who have taken jobs at the struck plant, "Don't cross that picket line."

More than 400 persons attending the rally filled out cards for an area organizing drive announced by James M. Pierce of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. Pierce, who described the rally as the "most moving experience" he's had in the labor movement, pledged assistance to every group of workers seeking union representation.

Ramelle MaCoy, the ILGWU's assistant regional director, told the gathering that a victory for the strikers would be "a victory for all working people," a setback would be a defeat for the entire community.

It was MaCoy who called on the company to bargain while outside, on the street in front of the plant, virtually the entire work force was gathered in a demonstration of support for their union.

After refusing to deal with the union, the employer went outside to appeal to the workers to return to their jobs.

His answer was a chorus from a song that has been sung on picket lines from coast to coast—"Roll the Union On."

After more than a month on the picket line, the strikers' enthusiasm and morale remain high, the ILGWU reports.

The Laura plant makes raincoats on federal contract, the ILGWU said. Most of its workers receive only the federal minimum wage; those who meet a high production quota for two successive weeks are paid 10 cents an hour above the minimum.

Not only is there no premium pay for working on a holiday but, the ILGWU reports, an employe who refuses to work on a day off is fired and the announcement of the discharge is made over the plant's public address system.

Shortly before the Browns Chapel rally, the strikers elected two spokesmen to bring to Washington, D.C., a petition protesting the fact that a company that defies the nation's labor laws is working exclusively on government contract business. The petition was signed by 386 employes of Laura Industries.

Viet Labor Role Hailed In Election

Ky, the present premier, as vice president.

Sullivan and the other observers flew back to Washington, D.C., on Wednesday, Sept. 6, and went immediately to the White House to report to the President.

In a statement issued just before leaving Saigon, Sullivan said his 9-day visit to Viet Nam and observance of the election "made a deep impression on me."

He said that he was impressed by "the spirit and will of the Vietnamese people to build a free and democratic nation" and their turnout at the polls despite "Viet Cong threats and violence."

Sullivan also cited "the positive role that the Vietnamese Confederation of Labor (CVT) took in "assuring the full, intelligent participation of the people in the election."

Noting that the confederation is "the largest peoples' organization in the country, Sullivan expressed confidence "that CVT, its leaders and its militant membership will continue to add their weight to the development of a stable and prosperous society for all Vietnamese."

He reported that he carried "warm fraternal greetings" from AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany to Tran Quoc Buu, president of CVT, and in turn brought back the best wishes of CVT to Meany and the American labor movement.

"I bring back . . . the good news that our Vietnamese brothers share our ideal that every working man has both the right and the duty to take part in the economic and social development of his nation, the right and the duty to fight for and share in our common goals—social justice for all," Sullivan concluded.

One-Page Form Covers Welfare Plan Changes

The Labor Dept. has issued a new single page form to be used in reporting amendments to welfare and pension plans, as required by the Welfare & Pension Plans Disclosure Act. The form was made effective Sept. 1.

The department said the new Form D-1A replaces previous methods of reporting changes unless the administrator of a plan chooses to file a completely new report. Copies of the form and instructions for filing may be obtained from the Office of Labor-Management & Welfare-Pension Reports, Dept. of Labor, Washington, D.C. 20210.

The Law's Delay

A WORKER cannot be fired for the simple act of joining a union or becoming actively involved in union activity. The United States Congress has said so. It's the law of the land.

But not for the giant J. P. Stevens textile chain. This outpost of feudalism in the South operates under its own laws. If a worker is found wearing a union button or reported as signing a union card, he is fired.

For the fourth time in 17 months the National Labor Relation Board has found the Stevens company guilty of violating the law by firing workers for union membership or activity. The company has appealed the earlier decisions to the courts and will probably follow the same path for the latest pair of NLRB rulings.

Meanwhile, the fired workers are without jobs. And given the pervasive influence of the giant textile chain, many of them are blacklisted and prevented from securing a decent job in the communities in which they live.

The NLRB has used up all the remedies at its disposal to stem this planned and premeditated union-busting campaign. The company apparently views lightly the cease and desist orders and continues on its way perfectly aware that when it exhausts all its legal appeals years from now and the decision goes against it, the penalties assessed will be much lighter than recognition of a union of its workers and a contract assuring decent wages and working conditions.

With every new NLRB order against Stevens it is becoming clearer and clearer that legislation is necessary to provide the board additional remedies so that it can put a quick and effective stop to Stevens-style union busting.

A worker's right to join a union must be inviolate in a democratic system.

Congress Holds the Key

WE ALL SHARE in the responsibility for the crisis in our cities, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany said in his Labor Day broadcast, "but let us not hesitate to place the greatest burden of responsibility where it belongs, upon the Congress of the United States.

"It is the Congress that has failed in its responsibilities—failed miserably."

Meany noted that a few weeks ago the President called attention to 23 programs affecting urban problems which have been pending before Congress since the session opened, adding; "Not one of these programs has been enacted."

Meany stressed that "each of us could do something" in our own communities to meet the crisis in housing, jobs and education but that "the insensitivity and the blindness of Congress is the chief barrier."

"Congress," he concluded, "holds the key to the future. Congress must use that key to open the gates of progress—progress that today is not just desirable, but urgently necessary."

Donahue Cites Early Struggles:

Dignity, Justice Remain Goals Of America's Union Movement

Following are excerpts from the remarks of Assistant Secretary of Labor Thomas R. Donahue at the annual Labor Day ceremony at the Shrine of the Sacred Heart Church, Washington, D. C.

ON THIS LABOR DAY 1967, we pay tribute to all those who labor and to those institutions and those individuals who have supported America's workers in their struggles to obtain a fair share of the fruits of their labor.

One of those individuals who saw the justice of the workingman's struggle in the last century was James Cardinal Gibbons. His entire career is a chronicle of his concern for the dignity of man.

It was Cardinal Gibbons' special sort of courage, wisdom, and leadership which brought him to see in the Knights of Labor not a secret, alien organization to be feared, condemned and put down, but rather an attempt by the disfranchised, oppressed working man to achieve dignity for himself and a decent level of life for his family.

It was another of Cardinal Gibbons' exciting virtues that he put his beliefs into action. In this instance, he did so in 1887 by convincing Pope Leo XIII of the merit of the Knights' cause and he won the Pope's endorsement of their struggle for social justice.

The victory was critical to the entire development of the American labor movement and critical to the identification of the Catholic church in America with the struggle of her sons.

It is proper today to ask where that climb has taken us and whether the struggle is worth it.

We really only have to examine our unions, and to compare our nation and our unions with any other nation in the world to see the dividends we have reaped.

THE AMERICAN TRADE UNION movement is the strongest bulwark of democracy throughout the world. At home, it has been the constant prodding force behind the growth of the nation's economy. It has sought, and insisted upon, the more rational sharing of our national wealth and the larger participation of all citizens in our America.

The American trade union movement has been the single loudest citizen voice speaking for the poor and underprivileged of our nation.

It has fought for medicare and schools, for minimum wage and welfare legislation, for training and for jobs and it fights today for what Pres. Johnson has termed the "unfinished agenda of our social responsibilities."

It fights for civil rights and against poverty—for education and against hunger—for dignity and against inhumanity.

It fights in the halls of state and federal legislatures for progressive laws which will aid all Americans.

It fights, too, on the concrete sidewalks where lonely pickets walk, and on the dusty highways and in the fields of California and Texas where the cry of "huelga" rises from the throats of a new generation of the poor and the deprived.

This is the history of labor in America. This too, is its present and its future, because today's challenge is as great as any ever was.

Cardinal Gibbons employed his pen throughout his years to direct America's attention to a continuing examination of its economic institutions and the distribution of its wealth.

In an article entitled "Wealth and Its Obligations"—published in April 1891—he wrote:

"The economic conditions in the United States are fast approaching those of England. The homes of the poor are marked by destitution and squalor; the right of heaven is being closed out from miserable tenement room and attic; flesh and blood are becoming more cheap and bread more dear; the well-being of the car-horse is more solicitously watched than that of the driver. Small wonder that strong men . . . band themselves together and sometimes resort to violence."

Now 76 years later we hear the echo of those words in the ghettos of our cities. And a terrible cry for help can be heard amidst the broken shop windows and the flames of those cities . . . a cry which seeks to wipe out destitution and squalor, to let the light of heaven into those ghettos.

That cry can only be answered by jobs, housing, education, equality, dignity—in short by the fullest participation in and sharing of our America. These are the items on the unfinished agenda of our social responsibilities and they will only be reached by your action and mine, by our concerted insistence that we as a nation meet our obligations to our fellow man.

The trade union movement must hear that cry for help and there is no doubt in my mind that it will continue to respond and demonstrate its sense of justice and responsibility.

And the church must hear this cry—as it did the supplication of the working man in Cardinal Gibbons' day—and answer it in every level of its work, in every way that God will direct it.

Obligation of Stations:

Broadcast Fairness Doctrine Gets Teeth in New FCC Rules

The following is excerpted from "New Free Speech Breezes Clear the Airwaves," appearing in the September issue of the AFL-CIO American Federationist.

THAT THERE IS CONGRESSIONAL regulation of the broadcasting industry stems from the fact that, unlike newspapers or magazines, where theoretically anyone can become a publisher, there is a limit to the number of channels and frequencies that can utilize the airwaves.

With the number of broadcast facilities limited by the medium itself, Congress provided that those fortunate enough to be awarded licenses must serve all Americans, not just their own interests. With licenses limited, and competition thus minimized, it is evident that handsome profits are more than a by-product.

In the past, stations found that serving the community was easy so long as it meant only public service announcements during unsold time or Sunday morning church services. But when the radical-right broadcasters appeared on the scene and personal attack became a $20 million a year industry, alarmed individuals and groups took their complaints to the FCC.

During the last four years, several FCC directives on fairness made clearer the rights of those attacked and the rights of those seeking to answer controversial issues. The most important was a 1963 directive, reiterated in 1965, to the effect that a station cannot require that answering time be sponsored or paid for, the failure of which would "thus leave the public uninformed," even if the original charge was made in a paid broadcast.

The FCC has since taken two significant steps:

1. It moved to give greater strength to the fairness doctrine by elevating to commission rules the provisions governing personal attacks, thus applying the $10,000 fine provisions of the act.

2. It ruled that cigarette commercials come under the provisions of the doctrine and free airtime must be given to the views of anti-smoking groups.

In announcing its rules, the commission said it was taking the step because procedures it had spelled out and notifications it had made "have not always been followed, even when flagrant personal attacks have occurred in the context of a program dealing with a controversial issue."

The new rules state that whenever a station's facilities are used to attack an individual or organization, the victim must receive, within a week, an offer of a reasonable opportunity to respond as well as a tape, transcript or accurate summary of the attack.

If the station fails to live up to its obligation, it can now be fined up to $500 a day up to a maximum of $10,000 for each attack. For the first time, penalties other than outright revocation of a broadcaster's license are provided.

Stations which turn over their facilities to radical-right preachers, such as Billy James Hargis, Carl McIntire, Life Lines, Dan Smoot, Manion Forum and scores of smaller-bore radical righters, must themselves bear the responsibility for notifying the person attacked. Considering that McIntire, Hargis and Life Lines are on the air 6 to 14 times weekly, it is conceivable that a station could devote a good part of its time to corresponding with victims of the electronic clergy and self-appointed "truth" salesmen.

The Institute for American Democracy, which watchdogs extremists of the left and right, said the rules would help "rescue a segment of the nation's airwaves from domination by the would-be brainwashers of the radical right."

Dr. Franklin H. Littell, chairman of the Washington, D. C., organization (now forming monitoring groups around the nation), said the personal attack rules have been ignored by hundreds of radio stations.

Among those groups consistently attacked are civil rights organizations, the National Council of Churches, the United Nations, labor unions, the U.S. Supreme Court and the FCC itself.

IN AN ARTICLE describing the daily "gloom, doom, hatred and fear" of the radical right, TV Guide noted recently that "whole sections of the nation are awash with a brand of vitriol which is neither rational political dissent nor the constructive goading of responsible reformers."

The line is always the same: everyone is suspect. The federal government is honeycombed with traitors and communists. The utterances are anti-Catholic, anti-Semitic and anti-Protestant, except for those of the fundamentalist beliefs.

The goals of unions: social security, medicare, civil rights, minimum wage, one man-one vote reapportionment, are constant subjects of attack. Unions themselves are special targets during strikes.

But the concern isn't entirely over the radical right. There also are the station editorials which usually avoid direct attack to concentrate on a public issue.

In these instances, a local organization or individual can seek to offer an alternative view, but the station can make a judgment as to the proper spokesman—if any—and what form the answer will take.

For example, if a station editorializes in opposition to an increase in social security benefits, the local AFL-CIO central body, an interested citizen, the local senior citizens' group and the local Democratic Party may each independently ask for answering time. The station must determine if it feels it has already offered a rounded discussion of the issue. If not, it can select the spokesman, decide on how much time and choose whether a station announcer will read the prepared text or the opposing individual himself.

All these judgments can be made subjects of a complaint to the FCC, but complaints generally involve outright refusal of time.

Slums, Poverty, Civil Rights:

Speak Out on Public Issues, Social Worker Staffs Urged

SOCIAL WORKERS must go beyond the traditional role of easing the effects of human problems and speak out with stronger voices to eliminate the causes of the problems, an AFL-CIO spokesman declared.

Social workers see community problems like slums, poverty and civil rights first-hand and should "involve themselves more" in political action and legislative work to solve them, Leo Perlis, director of AFL-CIO Community Services Activities, advised in the nationwide radio interview, Labor News Conference.

Perlis said most social workers are only "on the periphery" of action directed at finding remedies for the problems whose effects they must cope with. They need to "transcend their immediate profession and become, in a sense, prophets . . . speak out on issues affecting the people of our day," he said.

He urged social workers to "act not only as professionals with a limited professional concern, but also as citizens and professionals whose concern is with the welfare of humanity."

Perlis said money is the greatest need in mounting the kind of effort it will take to find the effective long-range solution to human problems.

"SO THE ACTION must start where the money is," he declared, "and the money is in Congress." That, he said, is one of the major goals of the National Urban Coalition recently convened in Washington. Representatives of labor, business, religion, civil rights groups and local governments participated in that conference.

Similar conditions should be formed at the state and local levels, Perlis said, for "unless the people themselves are involved—unless we do take an interest—unless we are concerned—we are going to have more problems and we are going to have greater problems."

Questioning him on the AFL-CIO produced program, broadcast Tuesdays at 7:35 p.m., EDT, on the Mutual Radio Network, were Sam Sharkey of the Newhouse Newspapers and Harry Conn of Press Associates, Inc.

Washington Window

By Press Associates, Inc.

NOT MANY YEARS AGO, there was a congressman who became more or less famous for everlastingly asking: "Where's the money coming from" every time Congress appropriated a nickel for something with which he disagreed.

That question might well be legitimately asked now as Congress studies plans to pay for the war in Vietnam and to avoid a huge budget deficit that might well result in a new wave of high interest rates.

Pres. Johnson has asked for a flat 10 percent across-the-board surtax that would apply both to individuals and corporations.

Labor has accepted the necessity for a tax boost that would help meet Vietnam costs, but disagrees with the way in which the President wants to do it. It has suggested that the flat 10 percent boost be modified to place the burden of raising the needed money squarely where it belongs—on those best able to pay. That means the corporations that have been making huge profits over the past six years.

There is still another way to raise the needed money—through closing of some of the notorious tax loopholes that have grown rather than diminished over the years. There are billions of dollars to be collected in these areas—dollars that are one of the answers to the congressman's question "where is the money coming from."

It may be that the current tax debate may not be the time for the kind of discussion that tax reform will need, but there is a bright spot—the promise by Pres. Johnson during the year that he will submit tax reform legislation to Congress.

What the President will suggest, of course, is now unknown, but there are certain tax loopholes that need no introduction.

A major one, of course, is the 27.5 percent oil depletion allowance that has made it possible for millionaires to escape the payment of a single penny in income taxes.

Another loophole is the capital gains one that places a tax on only half of profits and at a top 25 percent rate.

A third is double depreciation that permits real estate investors to pile up tax free cash returns that lead to great fortunes.

A fourth is the tax-free bond gimmick that helps not only runaway shops but giant corporations to profit by anti-labor financing offered by communities that do not hesitate to prey upon their neighbors.

THESE ARE some of the more notorious and dramatic types of tax dodging that have become common in the American tax system. As Philip M. Stern wrote in the now classic "The Great Treasury Raid," tax loopholes have cost the U.S. Treasury billions upon billions of dollars. Stern's book tells the story of:

- How five people had incomes of $5 million—but paid no tax.
- How one person has $20 million income—but paid no tax.
- How one oil millionaire has paid no tax since 1949.
- How "housewives" may be worth up to $7 million to their husbands.
- How some individuals have saved millions in taxes through special laws of their own.

Over the years since the income tax first went into effect there has been a continuous ingenious devising of loopholes that Congress itself has created in favor of certain taxpayers or the even more ingenious manipulations of the law by tax lawyers whose job is to find loopholes for their clients.

It has always been a proud boast that Americans pay their taxes honestly, and for the most part they do. Certainly, workers, with withholding taxes, pay their share.

The President promised tax reform proposals last January. Treasury Dept. officials have reiterated the promise since then. Sec. of the Treasury Joseph H. Fowler repeated the promise recently when he appeared before a House committee in behalf of the President's tax bill. There would be nothing healthier for the United States than a message from the President putting the finger on tax loopholes.

SOCIAL WORKERS should speak out on the causes of human problems as well as work to ease their effects, AFL-CIO Community Services Activities Dir. Leo Perlis (center), said on Labor News Conference. Harry Conn (left), editor of Press Associates, Inc., and Sam Sharkey, labor specialist for the Newhouse Newspapers, questioned Perlis on the public service interview aired Tuesdays at 7:35 on Mutual radio.

Health Plans Held Factor in Death Rate Cut

Ann Arbor, Mich.—Two government health care programs—medicare for the aged and medicaid for the poor—may be a factor in a drop in the nation's death rate, a top government official suggested here.

Under Secretary of Health, Education & Welfare Wilbur J. Cohen noted that the rate "dropped far below normal" during the first six months of 1967.

Although more data would be needed to draw any conclusions, Cohen said it has been suggested that the increase in the use of medical facilities under the two programs contributed to the decline in deaths.

Anti-Poverty Weapon

Speaking at the University of Michigan's School of Social Work, he said the social security program is the biggest and one of the most effective anti-poverty weapons the nation has developed.

Social security cash benefits, he said, now keep 8 million persons above the poverty line and the Administration's proposed benefit increases would raise an additional 2.1 million persons out of poverty.

The nation's goal, he said, should be more than just escape from destitution. It should encompass access "to positive enjoyment of good health, education, meaningful employment and economic security."

John C. Shinn Named To Labor Dept. Post

John C. Shinn, a 48-year-old government career employe, has been named by Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz to be deputy assistant secretary for labor-management relations. He will assist Thomas R. Donahue, assistant secretary, who directs the department's activities in the labor-management area.

Shinn has been in the department for 27 years, having begun his service with the Wage-Hour Division in 1940. He has been deputy director of the department's Office of Labor-Management and Welfare-Pension Reports since 1959.

Mail Handlers Seek Union Bargaining Law

Detroit—The right of postal workers to union representation and collective bargaining should be firmly established by law, delegates to the Mail Handlers' 30th convention declared.

At the present time federal employe unions are recognized under a procedure spelled out in a presidential order originally handed down by the late President Kennedy. The same order sets up guidelines for collective bargaining.

The convention resolution points out that such a presidential order could be abolished by the next Administration if it turns out to be an unfriendly one. The mail handlers, along with other government unions, want to see their rights firmly established by law.

Harold McAvoy won unanimous re-election as president of the union. A new full-time post of secretary-treasurer will be filled by Lester Moody, previously regional vice president from Cincinnati. Andrew W. Carniato of New York City, previously board chairman, won a close race for another new full-time post, administrative aide. He had a two-vote margin over Jesse Brownlee of Los Angeles.

Resolutions adopted by the convention urged:

Reduction of employe contributions to the pension fund.

Disciplinary action against supervisors who violate the collective bargaining agreement.

Negotiations to be conducted while the employes are on the clock.

Payment by the federal government of the full cost of hospitalization benefit insurance.

Creation of an impartial labor relations board for government workers.

Reduction of the maximum lifting weight to 60 pounds from the present 80 pounds.

Postmaster Gen. Lawrence F. O'Brien told the convention that his proposal of last April in relation to the future of the Post Office did not propose the turning over of the department to a private corporation.

He said his proposal called for "removing the Post Office from the Cabinet and turning it into a public, government-owned corporation . . . perhaps designed along the lines of the Tennessee Valley Authority."

O'Brien said that under such a plan "our employes would find far greater opportunities and a larger voice in postal personnel management. Employe organizations would be counted on to help us plan our personnel policies and, indeed, any changes that might affect the postal worker."

Problems Remain:

Millions Are Aided In Year of Medicare

Medicare's first year brought needed hospital, doctor and nursing home care to millions of older Americans.

"Above all," an article in the September issue of the American Federationist stresses, "it was health care with dignity and self-respect and not with humiliation and charity."

The article, by Lawrence T. Smedley of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security, also discusses in detail the shortcomings of the program—many stemming from compromises required to pass the legislation over the bitter opposition of the American Medical Association.

There have been predictible problems on the payment of bills submitted by doctors who won't accept the simplified direct billing system.

There is a very real problem of soaring costs, in some instances involving inefficient hospitals and in some cases what appears to be old-fashioned price-gouging by doctors.

Nevertheless, the Federationist analysis stresses, "the successful and competent beginning of one of the largest peacetime programs in history was an outstanding administrative achievement."

Instant Growth

Unlike most new programs, medicare "did not have an opportunity to start small and grow." In a single day, it covered 19 million persons for basic hospital care and a labor-backed enrollment drive helped induce 17.6 million of them to sign up for the voluntary medical insurance program which, for $3 a month, covers the bulk of doctor bills and other costly services.

It has paid out in benefits more than $3 billion and estimates are that a majority of persons covered have already received benefits under the program.

A significant statistic, Smedley notes, is that 20 percent more elderly persons received hospital care during medicare's first year than in previous years.

Recuperative care in nursing homes, paid for by medicare, has also freed hospital beds for intensive care patients.

Despite these achievements, medicare's first year has also pointed up the pressing need for reforms.

Most irritating to the patient has been the direct billing method most doctors insist on—requiring a patient to pay the fee the doctor demands before he can apply for reimbursement from medicare, and with no assurance that his doctor's fee will be within the "reasonable" charge allowed.

The deductibles, exclusions and other limitations on benefits also work a hardship on many moderate-income elderly, sufficient in some cases to discourage them from obtaining needed care.

Of major concern to the entire medicare program is the spiraling cost of health care, reflected both in rapidly rising hospital bills and in steep hikes in doctor fees.

More adequate cost controls and greater incentives for efficiency are clearly needed if good health is not to be priced out of reach.

As to doctor fees, a survey showed that median fees of general practitioners for office follow-up visits have risen 25 percent since medicare started and fees charged by internists 40 percent. But the survey showed no change in fees charged by pediatricians, who, of course, treat only children and not medicare patients.

In summary, medicare is off to a promising start, but both short-range and long-range improvements are needed to accomplish the goal of bringing quality health care to all who need it.

Joblessnes Rate Dips But Soft Spots Continue

unchanged. For women, the rate moved down slightly to 3.9 percent. The teenage rate was 13.7 percent, up from July and over the year.

The job situation for well-trained and experienced workers "remained relatively good" in August, but not so good for those with less skill and experience, the report observed.

The jobless rates that bore this out were: 2.2 percent for white-collar workers, 2.4 percent for skilled craftsmen, 4.8 percent for semiskilled blue-collar workers, and 7.8 percent for unskilled workers.

Unemployment among nonwhites of which Negroes make up 92 percent of the total—was 630,000 in August, one-fifth of the entire jobless total, the department said. The unemployment rate for nonwhites was 6.9 percent, "twice as high as that for whites," it pointed out.

Although these figures showed some job improvement in the situation for nonwhites, Ross said that unemployment among nonwhites was "still far too high" and it was too early to predict any improvement trend.

The Labor Dept. reported that excessive inventories—which have been a drag on production, unemployment and hours in recent months—are now under better control and both sales and new orders have improved.

Reflecting this, it said, was an average factory workweek that moved up from 40.3 to 40.6 hours between July and August. The average workweek for workers on all private payrolls was 38.6 hours, down 0.5 hour from August 1966.

The report said that weekly earnings for factory workers averaged $114.50 in August and hourly earnings averaged $2.82. Over the year, these figures represented gains of about $2.70 and 12 cents respectively.

Meanwhile, the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Employment Security reported that five of the nation's major manpower centers were shifted this month from low unemployment categories (1.5 to 2.9 percent) to moderate unemployment categories (3.0 to 5.9 percent).

The five areas showing a greater rate of unemployment were the Quad Cities area (Davenport, Ia., and Rock Island, Moline and East Moline, Ill.), Asheville, N.C., Pittsburgh, Pa., and Knoxville and Memphis, Tenn.

The bureau attributed the increases in unemployment rates to slowdowns in farm machinery production, declines in manufacturing generally, and a continuing downtrend in the steel industry.

Fact Sheet Issued On Tax Proposal

A legislative fact sheet on AFL-CIO tax policy in terms of the Administration proposal for a temporary surtax is now available from the federation.

The fact sheet, "A Fair Tax Policy," spells out the three major changes in the Administration bill proposed by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany to make the needed increase more equitable in its application.

Copies are available in reasonable quantities without cost from the AFL-CIO Pamphlet Division, 815 Sixteenth St., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006.

House Urged to Stiffen Senate's Clean Air Bill

A Senate-passed clean air bill is "a good first step on the long road" toward reducing the danger of air pollution—but it needs to be strengthened, the AFL-CIO told the House Commerce Committee.

The Senate bill gives the federal government new emergency power to crack down on sources of air pollution. The measure also authorizes a $700 million appropriation to fight air pollution over three years.

The money would go toward research into new ways of reducing sulphur and other pollutants in fuel, for devices to cut factory emissions of pollutants, and for special regional "air quality commissions" that would be organized in areas having common atmospheric conditions.

AFL-CIO Legislative Director Andrew J. Biemiller, in a statement filed with the House committee, proposed several amendments to the Senate bill.

Biemiller urged the House to amend the Senate bill to empower the secretary of health, education and welfare to set federal industry standards on pollution in cases where states do not have satisfactory standards.

The standards has been urged by Pres. Johnson in his air pollution message to Congress but were dropped by the Senate.

Biemiller noted that only 25 states have air pollution control statutes, that there are no effective interstate programs, and that most local programs also are completely inadequate.

National pollution control standards, as recommended by the AFL-CIO, would include "industrial siting and zoning, design of highways and freeways, establishment of traffic patterns, disposal of solid wastes, imaginative land use ordinances and other programs."

The AFL-CIO also proposed that the Senate bill be changed to include a directive to the HEW secretary "to strengthen national standards governing emissions" from internal combustion powered vehicles.

The statement also urged a provision directing the secretary to provide Congress and the President with an estimate of additional manpower needs under the legislation.

With these amendments and enactment of the broad program provided in the Senate bill, "a beginning will be in sight in our efforts to restore and conserve our priceless and limited air resources," Biemiller declared.

Public Relations Aide Named by Musicians

New York—Appointment of Abe L. Savage as director of public relations for the American Federation of Musicians was announced by Pres. Herman D. Kenin.

For the past 15 years Savage has been public relations director for the union's Local 802, covering New York and Long Island.

Wurf, Pachler Fraternal Delegates:

U.S. Labor's Viet Nam Stand Stressed to British Unionists

Brighton, England—The AFL-CIO "stands four square" behind the United States effort to defend freedom in South Viet Nam, Pres. Jerry Wurf of the State, County & Municipal Employes told the British Trades Union Congress here.

Wurf, an AFL-CIO fraternal delegate to the annual TUC meeting, also emphasized that America has no economic, political, or territorial designs in Viet Nam or anywhere in Southeast Asia, and "has welcomed every move for ending the war through negotiations."

President William J. Pachler of the Utility Workers—Wurf's fellow fraternal delegate—reported on U.S. labor's continuing push for economic and social progress in our "highly urbanized, highly-industrialized and technologically-advanced society."

Pachler particularly stressed labor's determination to advance equality, end racial discrimination, reduce poverty and rehabilitate and rebuild the nation's slums.

In discussing U.S. policy on Viet Nam, Wurf quoted a recent address by the Socialist Prime Minister of Singapore, Lee Kuan Yew, whom he described as an "authentic voice of the Asian peoples."

Warning Issued

In a speech at Singapore University, Yew said, "A United States withdrawal would greatly hurt the small and middle fishes in Asia. . . . I don't believe that the U.S. can withdraw from Viet Nam early or in haste. . . . If South Viet Nam is erased from the globe, what would be the fate of Laos and other friendly nations in Southeast Asia?

"Every day hundreds . . . die on the battlefield. For what? Just to defend Viet Nam. No, also to prevent another Viet Nam."

Wurf said that the "shortcomings" of the United Nations, as illustrated by the recent Middle East crisis, should not cause despair but should spur a more determined effort "to build the UN into an effective instrument for preserving peace and promoting human rights and freedom."

"As free workers," Wurf declared, "you and we know that there can be no just or enduring peace as long as millions are in poverty or denied their individual dignity and human and national freedom."

He described "bread, peace and freedom" as the ideal that "cements" the AFL-CIO, the TUC and other free labor movements in cooperation. He pledged that American labor "will spare no effort to strengthen the free trade union partnership of workers of every race, creed, color and continent."

Wurf scored France's General De Gaulle for his "hostile" attitude toward the U.S. and Britain. He also deplored DeGaulle's effort to blame Israel for the Mideast war and his intervention in the affairs of Canada.

"He does not speak for the French people when he follows a policy of rewarding their enemies and punishing their friends," Wurf suggested.

Pachler said that progress has been made in the U.S. toward eliminating discrimination and poverty even though there "remains a very long way to go." The AFL-CIO, he added, is strongly supporting programs "to keep us moving still further along."

He cited legislation enacted to assure equal employment, public accommodations, financial aid to schools and job training as examples of progress to benefit Negroes.

But we must do more," Pachler continued. "And in view of the AFL-CIO that means stepping up public investment to create more jobs, to improve our education systems, and to build more and better housing."

Pachler hit out at Stokely Carmichael, the self-styled Negro leader "who carried his message of violence to your shores just a few months ago."

Describing Carmichael as one who "offers no solution, no remedy and no program except one that preaches hate and destruction," Pachler added:

"Fortunately, despite the impression he tries to create, he represents few people, and he represents none at all who are sincerely concerned —as is the labor movement—with creating a society in which a man's position depends on his abilities and talent and not his color."

WASHINGTON STATE AFL-CIO representatives toured migrant camp areas, then presented $1,000 check to help relieve shortage of food, medicine, clothing among farm worker families. Shown at presentation ceremony at state labor convention are Council Pres. Joseph Davis (right) and Dir. Lee Luskon, Yakima Valley Council for Community Action.

Washington Convention Asks Fair Housing Law

Yakima, Wash.—Strong support for a statewide fair housing law was voted unanimously by more than 500 delegates to the Washington State AFL-CIO's 10th annual convention here.

The proposed law, aimed at eliminating discrimination by real estate salesmen and brokers, will be on the 1968 general election ballot.

The state labor federation, during the convention, also presented a $1,000 check to assist migrant farm workers stranded in the Yakima Valley. State AFL-CIO Pres. Joe Davis pledged that labor will renew its efforts in the next session of the legislature to bring farm workers under unemployment compensation coverage.

A unity appeal by Davis helped bring about acceptance of a compromise resolution on apprenticeship standards and programs, which includes appointment of a committee of craft and industrial union members to make a study and bring back recommendations on apprenticeship problems.

Republican Gov. Daniel J. Evans also had a unity plea, but his proposal got a cooler reception from the convention.

Evans urged that labor and industry negotiate their differences on legislation and agree on a common program.

Davis termed this a "threadbare" philosophy. He charged that what the governor "is asking labor to do is to give industry a veto power over labor's programs."

Delegates approved a constitutional change allowing past presidents and secretary-treasurers full delegate status at future conventions, with expenses paid.

The state federation elects its officers and board members through referendum rather than at conventions.

Alaskan Unions Rally To Flood Relief Effort

Fairbanks, Alaska—Labor Day was anything but a day of rest for scores of AFL-CIO leaders and members here who are putting in long hours trying to help this flood-stricken city.

Nearly 80 percent of Fairbanks' residents were driven from their homes by the flooding of the Chena and Tanana rivers in mid-August, and the city faces a tremendous job of rehabilitation.

Labor is working closely with the Red Cross in helping to catalog information about flood victims and their needs. Unions here and in Anchorage also are the sources for available manpower to do the rebuilding.

Pres. DeWayne Carlson of the Alaska Federation of Labor, assisted by Joseph Rodell, AFL-CIO Community Services liaison with the Red Cross western area, are heading up labor's cooperative effort.

Carlson recently extended Alaska labor's "most grateful thank you" to the Red Cross "for the assistance it has given our community following this disaster."

The Red Cross estimates it has spent more than $1 million so far in assisting Alaskan flood victims. It predicted the total expenditure will run close to $4 million. As of Labor Day, it had received 3,200 applications for aid.

Red Cross Aid

Carlson reported that thousands have received emergency help through Red Cross donated food, clothing and shelter. Red Cross canteens were airlifted from Washington and Oregon, to provide food while restoration work goes on.

The agency also has supplied blankets, utensils, furniture, clothing, work supplies and equipment and medical aid and nursing care—and it has emphasized that "all such help is an outright gift."

Fairbanks Mayor H. E. Boucher issued a Labor Day statement directed to citizens in the "southern 49 states." He said, "If you want to help us, give to the Red Cross or United Fund. With its help, Fairbanks will be bigger and better, the freeze-up notwithstanding."

The "freeze-up" is the threat that follows the flood. Snow fell on Labor Day and an early winter can only add to the city's hardship.

Broadcast Workers Vote on New Pacts

Miami Beach—The Broadcast Employes reached tentative agreement with the National Broadcasting Co. on terms of a new three-year contract covering 1,400 technicians and writers on NBC-owned stations in New York, Chicago, San Francisco, Los Angeles and Washington, D. C.

The agreement, subject to membership approval, broke an impasse that threatened a strike. NABET sent it to referendum with a recommendation that it be ratified by secret-ballot vote but said no recommendation will accompany a contract proposal by the American Broadcasting Co. affecting 1,600 NABET members in the same cities.

An 11-member negotiating committee headed by Regional Dir. Edward M. Lynch of Buffalo, N.Y., called the ABC offer less acceptable than the NBC "package" and said it will decide, if ABC members reject it, whether to reopen negotiations or strike.

Major issues in month-long negotiations included wages and hours, grievance machinery, and use of manpower in color television. Terms of the NBC agreement were withheld pending membership vote.

The union represents 2,500 engineers and other technicians who work with radio and TV controls, audio equipment, lights, projection and videotape equipment; and about 500 newswriters, maintenance personnel and other non-technical employes. Members in 37 NABET bargaining units recently voted for strike authorization by a 97 percent margin, the union said.

The NBC offer includes wage retroactivity to Mar. 31. Contracts due to expire on that date were extended five months because of an attempted raid by the American Communications Association, an affiliate of the expelled Teamsters.

IUD Issues Call For 7th Convention

The AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. has sent its official call for the IUD's seventh constitutional convention to the department's 60 affiliates, representing 6.5 million workers.

IUD Pres. Walter P. Reuther said sessions will be held Nov. 15-16 at the Statler-Hilton Hotel in Washington, D. C.

New Senate Bill Seeks Jobless Pay Standards

Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy (D-Minn.) called on Congress to "try again" to improve unemployment compensations through strong federal standards of benefits and a major extension of coverage.

McCarthy and 12 other senators cosponsored a bill incorporating major improvements long urged by the AFL-CIO. It resembles, but strengthens, the Administration bill McCarthy had introduced in the 89th Congress.

The new measure would:

- Extend coverage to 10 million additional workers, including those who work for small employers, state and local government employes, workers on large farms and employes of non-profit establishments.
- Raise the ceiling on benefits—based on half of lost wages—to two-thirds of the statewide average wage by 1972.
- Require a minimum of 26 weeks of state benefits, with up to 26 additional weeks financed by federal funds for workers with a steady job history.
- Raise the payroll wage base on which employers are taxed.
- Limit the causes for disqualifying workers from unemployment compensation.

McCarthy noted that there has been no major revision in the federal law since 1939 and said the time has come to "bring the unemployment compensation system into line with current economic realities and make adjustments in the light of the nearly 30 years experience."

In 1966, the House passed what the AFL-CIO termed a "completely unsatisfactory" bill without federal standards on amount and duration of benefits. It merely extended coverage to some 3.5 million additional workers.

The Senate then passed a bill including many of the standards sought by the Administration, but with a more limited expansion of coverage.

12 Co-Sponsors

Although the Senate acted in August, the House did not agree to go to conference on the legislation until mid-October and the legislation died with adjournment of Congress soon thereafter.

Joining McCarthy in sponsoring the new bill are Senators Clifford P. Case (R-N.J.), Vance Hartke (D-Ind.), Robert F. Kennedy (D-N.Y.), Lee Metcalf (D-Mont.), Jennings Randolph (D-W. Va.), Robert C. Byrd (D-W. Va.), Walter F. Mondale (D-Minn.), Jacob K. Javits (R-N.Y.), Gale W. McGee (D-Wyo.), Harrison A. Williams, Jr. (D-N.J.), Philip A. Hart (D-Mich), and Wayne Morse (D-Ore.)

Scores Congress Lag:

Meany Hits Inaction On Vital City Needs

need is for jobs," Meany said. He urged passage of a bill introduced by Rep. James G. O'Hara (D-Mich.) and 76 other members of the House to provide a million new jobs in a year through $4 billion in grants to federal, state and local government agencies, as well as non-profit groups.

The legislation would give "meaning and substance" to the "landmark" Employment Act of 1946 which called for a full-employment economy, Meany said.

"It would start," he said, "where the task must start—by providing decent jobs for Americans who want them and need them, it would put these people to work doing some of the things left undone in America."

Meany pointed out that the grants permitted by O'Hara would create jobs in urban improvement, education, hospitals, reforestation and many other areas of the economy where jobs are needed and where they "do not now exist."

He also called for improvements in social security—"far greater improvements" than those approved by the House—and a tax increase more "equitable" than proposed by the Administration.

He emphasized that it is "disastrous in principle and false in fact" to argue that domestic progress must be sacrificed to the war in Viet Nam.

"It is disastrous in principle because America cannot truly stand for the security of free people abroad if it fails to provide true security for its people at home.

Ample Resources

"It is false in fact because the resources of this nation, the richest and most powerful the world has ever seen, are ample for both tasks."

Meany concluded that there is still time for Congress to pass the vital legislation proposed by the President and he urged workers to appeal to their congressmen for action.

Abel, president of the Steelwokers, who spoke over the Columbia Broadcasting System, also underscored the importance of solving urban problems and ending "the literal imprisonment of millions of Americans in the nation's ghettos."

He emphasized the need for jobs, job training and education.

"Our economy," he noted, "is producing more jobs, but the lack of education and training make it impossible to match the jobless of the slums with the new jobs being created."

In addition to pressing Congress for strengthened manpower and training programs, labor is developing job training programs of its own in cooperation with industry and government under the existing Manpower Development & Training Act, Abel noted.

He cited the example of a new program begun by the Steelworkers in cooperation with steel companies and the government that will teach new skills to some 1,600 unskilled and untrained workers.

Beirne, president of the Communication Workers, told his listeners on the American Broadcasting Co. network that labor today is "infinitely more interconnected and inter-twined in society" than it was when the first Labor Day parade was held back in 1882.

He ticked off labor's interest in eliminating slums, securing "quality" education, improving communications, getting a fair tax system, protecting natural resources and helping the less fortunate areas of the world.

"The fact is that there is only one substantial private organization in the United States whose primary dedication is to the widest and best interests of all the American people"—and that organization is the labor movement, Beirne asserted.

Ending poverty, keeping pace with technology and applying its benefits fairly, "building a society of unlimited opportunity and boundless horizons"—these are the present goals of American labor, Beirne concluded.

Sea Power Stressed

Hall, who heads the Seafarers and the AFL-CIO Maritime Trades Dept., pointed to the important role maritime workers play in maintaining a life-line to U.S. forces in Viet Nam. He spoke over the Mutual Broadcasting Co.

The "unhappy fact" is that the nation was caught short with an inadequate merchant fleet when the Viet Nam war was intensified, and the fleet is still being neglected, Hall declared.

He noted that the U.S. has dropped from first to sixth place among all nations in shipping since the end of World War II—and from first "all the way to 16th in shipbuilding."

He pointed out that while the U.S. has been going backward on the high seas, the Soviet Union is rapidly moving ahead. The situation "is so acute," he warned, that the USSR may, "within a few years, have a 2-to-1 superiority over the U.S. in merchant shipping."

"This isn't just a maritime problem—it's an American problem," Hall said.

Fire Fighters Ask Federal Protection

Attacks on fire fighters and interference with their efforts to put out fires should be a federal offense, Fire Fighters Sec.-Treas. Albert E. Albertoni told the Senate Judiciary Committee.

He said a union study of riots in 11 cities showed that "not a single person has been arrested and convicted because he interfered with, harassed or attacked a fire fighter."

In those 11 cities, he said, four fire fighters were killed and 418 injured as the result of attacks.

Idaho Newspaper Assails New 'Work' Law Drive

Pocatello, Ida. — One of Idaho's leading newspapers sharply criticized a new effort to enact "right-to-work" legislation outlawing union shops.

"It is bad legislation," the Idaho Sunday Journal said in an editorial. "A misnomer, 'right-to-work' is designed to destroy organized labor. It upsets worker stability, disrupts labor-management relations and cheapens the economy."

For these reasons, the newspaper noted, "the people of Idaho have rejected it seven times."

The editorial noted that an "ultra-conservative lumber executive" is leading the drive for a "work" law.

"For the good of the state," the newspaper said, "we hope this eighth attempt will be the final one."

Nation's Needs Form Labor Day Themes

Americans celebrated Labor Day 1967 in many different ways. But whether they joined traditional parades, picnicked in the park or stayed home, there were ever-present reminders of the critical problems that confront the nation.

Pres. Johnson, in a special Labor Day statement, noted that the holiday is designated "to honor the working men and women of the country — and to remember that from our earliest days, many of our great leaders have been laboring men."

He urged Americans to "pause and reflect" upon the gains of recent years, but—more important—to consider the "unsolved problems" on the road ahead—"the great unfinished business of democracy."

"We have moved forward, but not nearly far enough," the President asserted. "We who own so much must work more actively for equal opportunity — because we have learned that a victory for the poorest among us is a victory for everyone among us."

In saluting "the many good leaders of labor as well as those who follow them," the President concluded that workers' past achievements "are not a record to rest upon —but a foundation to build upon."

In Washington, a Labor Day mass heard Patrick Cardinal O'Boyle warn that "time is running out on us very rapidly."

"We must find a way as soon as possible to provide gainful employment and adequate housing—which means open and non-segregated housing—for the disadvantaged and poor of our city and the nation."

"Even if racial prejudice were to be totally eliminated from our society," Cardinal O'Boyle said, "we cannot hope to solve the urban crisis in the country without far-reaching economic and social reforms."

After the mass, Assistant Sec. of Labor Thomas R. Donahue placed a wreath at the statue of the late James Cardinal Gibbons of Baltimore, a pioneer supporter of organized labor.

Donahue called upon labor and the church to heed a "cry for help" coming from city slums. "That cry can only be answered by jobs, housing, education equality — in short, by the fullest participation in and sharing of America," he said. (Text, Page 4.)

In another Washington observance, AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler and Vice Pres. Joseph D. Keenan placed a wreath at the statue of Samuel Gompers in a ceremony arranged by the Greater Washington Central Labor Council.

In Pennsauken, N.J., in keeping with long tradition, a wreath was laid at the grave of Peter J. McGuire, early leader of the Carpenters who lauded the drive to establish Labor Day as a national holiday. Congress designated it as such in 1894.

In New York City, more than 1,500 persons attended an annual mass for labor at St. Patrick's Cathedral, presided over by Francis Cardinal Spellman.

Also in New York, St. Clement's Episcopal Church held a unique Labor Day service. A "worker priest" was the celebrant, a union official preached a sermon and a former UAW organizer played a guitar while worshipers sang labor songs instead of the usual hymns.

In Muskegon, Mich., Labor Day ceremonies featured an inter-faith religious service. Flint, Mich. staged a picnic. A crowd estimated at 15,000 attended a Greater Lansing, Mich. AFL-CIO Council celebration that featured "old-fashioned" prices: 5-cent rides, nickel ice cream cones and 10-cent hot dogs.

The Cincinnati AFL-CIO Labor Festival was held for its sixth year and in Cleveland, AFL-CIO Organization Dir. William L. Kircher was the main speaker. The Barberton, Ohio, Labor Day Festival ran all through the three-day weekend.

LABOR DAY MASS at the Sacred Heart Shrine in Washington, D. C. was followed by the placing of a wreath at the statue of the late James Cardinal Gibbons, a pioneer supporter of unions. Left to right, Bishop John S. Spence of Washington, Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy (D-Minn.), Patrick Cardinal O'Boyle, archbishop of Washington, and Assistant Labor Sec. Thomas R. Donahue.

ICFTU Fund Receives Histadrut Contribution

Brussels—Histadrut, the Israeli labor federation, has contributed $5,000 to the Solidarity Fund of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions. The fund is used to strengthen trade unions in developing nations and to provide disaster relief for workers and their families.

Labor Agency Chief Selected In New York

New York—Arvid Anderson of Madison, Wis., has been appointed city collective bargaining director and fulltime impartial chairman of the new Board of Collective Bargaining, an independent agency serving 200,000 city employes.

Two other impartial members of the seven-member board also were named—Saul Wallin of Boston, member of a committee that helped develop the new agency, and Eric J. Schmertz, who serves as a member of the State Mediation Board.

Anderson will be paid $35,000 a year, the other two $150 a day for time spent on board business. They were picked by four non-paid board members—Pres. Harry Van Arsdale, Jr., of the New York City AFL-CIO and Seafarers Pres. Paul Hall, for the Municipal Labor Committee; Deputy Mayor Timothy W. Costello and Jesse Freidin, attorney; with the approval of Mayor John V. Lindsay.

The city council created the new office effective Sept. 1, following a long study by the American Arbitration Association. The agency will supervise representation elections among city employes, assist in mediating disputes and establishing fact-finding machinery with nonbinding recommendations.

Salary and fees of the chairman and impartial members will be paid by the city and the labor committee, representing participating unions, Costello said.

Anderson, 46, said he hopes to start his now duties soon in what he called a "pioneering role" in the field of public employe relations.

Farm Union Honored By Church Group

Los Angeles—A Catholic bishop called on California growers to abandon their fight against unionization of farm workers and cooperate with the AFL-CIO United Farm Workers Organizing Committee.

Bishop Hugh A. Donohue of Stockton made the appeal at a Labor Day breakfast in Los Angeles sponsored by the Catholic Labor Institute.

The institute presented its annual Father Coogan award to the farm workers' union.

Normally the award is presented to both a company and a union which have worked together for industrial peace and social justice. But the institute said that this year no company qualified for the honor.

Cesar Chavez, UFWOC director, accepted the award, which is named after the founder of the Labor Institute. "It will mean a great deal of encouragement to us in our struggle for social justice," Chavez told the gathering of more than 600 persons.

A CALL for legislative action to meet the nation's urban crisis and pledges of support for unions involved in major strikes highlighted actions taken by the Executive Council.

Council Rallies Aid For Major Strikes

By Saul Miller

New York—The AFL-CIO rallied its growing membership in support of a sweeping program of jobs, housing and education for the nation's crisis-stricken urban areas and to the aid of thousands of union members currently fighting for a measure of economic justice on the picket line.

The problems of the cities and of striking Auto Workers, Teachers, copper and Brick & Clay Workers dominated the fall meeting here of the federation's Executive Council. But it found time for proposed changes to strengthen organized labor's structure, to be briefed on foreign affairs developments and to prepare for the 1968 elections.

The council's major policy statement on a 10-point program for dealing with the urban crisis, with emphasis on one million public service jobs and massive housing programs, was keyed directly to the role of the government as the employer and landlord of last resort. (Story, this page.)

Tied in were statements calling for congressional action on anti-poverty and social security legislation designed to deal with the problems of the cities and of all Americans who are in need, aged, disabled or ill.

Internally, the council interpreted the application of the federation's Internal Disputes plan to unions representing workers in the federal government, elected John H. Lyons to the council to replace Harry C. Bates who retired, and reviewed a report showing an average paid per capita membership of 14,284,183 for the first six months of 1967. (Story, this page.)

Commenting at a press conference on strikes and disputes involving public employes, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany declared they would not be a major problem if public officials would drop their opposition to genuine collective bargaining and stop pressing for punitive legislation and injunctions.

Meany hailed the membership growth of the federation and the successful organizing campaigns that were in part responsible, adding that "right now we are making more progress than ever."

In the strike area the council took these actions:

● Pledged full support to the UAW in its strike against Ford Motor Co., declaring that the success of the strike "is a matter of concern to the entire trade union movement." The council charged that the Big Three of the auto industry "have forced this strike by their adamant refusal to give UAW members their proper share" of the gains of advancing technology. (Story, Page 5.)

● Supported the members of the Teachers union in disputes in New York, Michigan and Illinois and called on all AFL-CIO unions

Council Asks Action Now:

10-Point Program for Cities Proposed to Avert 'Disaster'

New York—A broad but specific 10-point program to meet the nation's urban crisis has been formulated by the AFL-CIO as the basis of a "great national effort" that must be undertaken immediately.

Complacency in the face of the growing turmoil in the cities can lead to disaster, the federation's Executive Council warned. The nation cannot wait to get started "and the federal government must supply the leadership and resources," the council emphasized. The AFL-CIO program, based on a detailed analysis and recommendations of its Economic Policy Committee, promised no overnight successes, terming it rather a "step-by-step proposal for both immediate action and solid achievement."

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, discussing the council program at a press conference, said it emphasized the need for government action, that when jobs and housing are needed the government must be the "employer and landlord of last resort."

Business as usual and "profits as usual will not solve the urban problem," Meany stressed. Labor is convinced also, he added, that the country can meet its commitments in Viet Nam and at home, that "we don't have to abandon one or the other."

In terms of jobs he commented that the emphasis is on government financing for public facilities programs of which there are thousands waiting to be started. This, he emphasized, "is not raking leaves or putting people on the dole" but providing gainful employment on projects that are badly needed. (Text of the 10-point program appears on Page 7.)

The council said that the urban crisis is rooted in the "radical social and economic changes of the past quarter of a century as well as in the tragic history of Negro slavery, segregation and discrimination." It pointed up population shifts, migration from farms and rural areas, the lack of jobs for uneducated, unskilled workers and the critical lack of housing.

"Immediate measures" are needed to provide jobs, decent housing and community facilities, the council said, and planned programs over the next decade or two are required to revitalize the metropolitan areas. To accomplish this aim it proposed the following program:

1 Million Jobs

1. One million public service jobs for those now unemployed or under-employed based on congressional approval of a $4 billion program to fund federal, state and local government agencies and non-profit organizations along the lines of the bill, introduced by Rep. James G. O'Hara (D-Mich.). The Clark bill reported out by the Senate Labor Committee is a step in the right direction, the council said.

2. Two and one-half million

Honest Bargaining Held Key to School Disputes

New York—The path to better schools is reached not through court injunctions but through "honest good-faith collective bargaining," the AFL-CIO Executive Council said in a statement of support for union teachers.

In New York, Michigan and Illinois, members of the American Federation of Teachers are "engaged in crucial battles for their own economic advancement and the improvement of the public school system," the council said in a statement. In those states, and in future battles that are "certain to come," the AFL-CIO "solidly supports its affiliate, the AFT" and urges members of affiliated unions to "give these teachers the support they need at this time," the council declared.

The AFL-CIO "has a long-time heritage of support for public school systems" and the achievement of "decent standards of pay and working conditions for the teachers into whose care we entrust our children," the council recalled.

"We say to the boards of education and the local and state officials," the statement added, "that their use of court injunctions will not educate children, will not provide the better school systems we need, will not solve the problems of the neglected youngsters of the ghettos and will not provide the

AFL-CIO Membership Registers Sharp Growth

New York—The paid per capita membership of the AFL-CIO climbed to 14,284,183 for the six-month period ending June 30, 1967, Federation Pres. George Meany reported.

The rising membership trend that started in 1963-64, Meany told reporters, has produced an increase of 1,549,000 members in a three-year period.

The 14,284,183 figure for the first six months of this year was almost 900,000 higher than for the same period a year ago, according to the report of Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler to the Executive Council. The membership figures are based on actual per capita payments to the AFL-CIO by its affiliates and averaged over a six or 12-month period.

Meany commented that the growth resulted from union organizing campaigns and with some exceptions has been pretty much across the board. Besides the actual growth in numbers, he said, unions were making more progress than ever in winning for their members benefits and conditions unheard of 20 years ago while playing a tremendous role in the life of the nation and its communities.

In reply to a reporter's query he said the growth figures contain an answer for some of labor's critics, declaring "I don't think we are moribund; I don't think we are going out of business; I don't think we are wedded to the status quo; I don't think we are old, grumbly or grouchy or what have you."

The figures showed a per capita membership of 12,735,000 in the 1963-64 year ending June 30, climbing to 12,981,000 in 1964-65 to 13,385,000 in 1965-66 and to 13,957,000 in 1966-67.

GOVERNMENT POLICIES in the area of labor-management relations, which are under his direction, were discussed by Assistant Labor Sec. Thomas R. Donahue with members of the Executive Council in New York. Donahue is a former executive assistant to the president of the Building Service Employes.

Senate Remedies Urged:

Major Defects Cited In Social Security Bill

New York—Labor looked to the Senate to remedy major defects in the House-passed social security bill.

The AFL-CIO Executive Council said the 12.5 percent raise in benefits voted by the House is "not nearly enough," particularly for those receiving the lowest payments.

It charged that "drastic and punitive" restrictions on public welfare programs "would fall most heavily on innocent children" and tougher eligibility standards for medical aid to the needy would deprive "hundreds of thousands" of persons of adequate health care.

The Executive Council urged the Senate to restore key provisions of the Administration's proposals "as a down payment on the fully up-to-date social security system the nation should have as soon as possible." The Senate Finance Committee is currently holding hearings on the social security bill.

Pres. Johnson's proposal for higher benefits would raise at least 2 million social security beneficiaries out of poverty, the council said, while "the House bill would achieve this goal for only half that number."

It criticized the House refusal to extend medicare coverage to the disabled, declaring:

Most Needful Group

"This is a group with limited incomes and higher-than-average medical costs who particularly need and deserve the protection medicare can offer."

The council noted also that the House bill "does virtually nothing to put brakes on skyrocketing fees and charges paid under medicare. These rapidly rising costs," the statement charged, "are forcing up, at an unprecedented rate the medical costs of all Americans."

The "worst features" of the bill, the council said, undermine the "fundamental principle that people who are unable to work or cannot find jobs are entitled to public assistance."

It said the need is for higher minimum levels of welfare payments, coupled with "greatly stepped-up training and employment programs for welfare recipients."

Instead, the statement noted, the House voted to force mothers with children into questionable training programs, "with no assurance that the training would be adequate or that there would be employment after training is completed." The House bill also puts a ceiling on the number of children in a state whose families could be given assistance because of the absence of a father.

The federation's leadership also expressed dismay that the House refused Pres. Johnson's request to transfer the community work and training program for welfare recipients to the Dept. of Labor and the lack of safeguards against sub-minimum wages.

Enactment of a good social security bill is "a major legislative objective of the AFL-CIO this year," the council statement stressed.

Apart from the retrogressive public assistance features, the House bill improves the social security system "somewhat," the Executive Council said. But it "falls far short of the steps which can and should be taken now to improve the lives of 23 million elderly and others on social security."

Council Sets Disputes Plan Policy For Federal Government Unions

New York—A union that has not secured exclusive recognition with a federal government agency or unit should not be allowed to preclude other unions from attempting to win that recognition for its members, the AFL-CIO Executive Council ruled.

The ruling came in an unanimously adopted statement by the council on the application of the federation's internal disputes plan to collective bargaining relationships with government agencies based on an extensive study by a council subcommittee.

The statement laid down these guidelines for the operation of Article XXI of the federation's constitution, the article that sets up the disputes plan:

- It is not a violation of the disputes plan for an affiliate to attempt to secure exclusive recognition in an appropriate bargaining unit of federal employes governed by Executive Order 10988 even though one or more other affiliates are the formal or informal representatives of employes in that unit.
- It is a violation of Article XXI for a union which seeks only formal or informal recognition to attempt to sign up members of an incumbent union which already has formal recognition.
- The interpretation of Article XXI is not intended to cover cases involving state, county or municipal employes, for the "time is not ripe for the resolution of the problems presented by the various complex state laws governing collective bargaining by state employes."

Executive Order 10988 issued by Pres. Kennedy in 1962 providing for collective bargaining for federal employes, set up various forms of recognition keyed to the number of workers a union represented. The lowest form, requiring the smallest number of members, was informal recognition; the next highest form is formal recognition. A union chosen by a majority of workers in the bargaining unit receives exclusive recognition.

The order was issued after the AFL-CIO adopted its internal disputes plan which did not specifically cover unions in the federal service. The council, given the authority under the article to interpret its application, set up a special subcommittee to study the situation after a number of cases arose.

Months of Study

The subcommittee, headed by Vice Pres. Paul Phillips and including Vice Presidents A. J. DeAndrade and John J. Grogan, recommended the statement adopted by the council. The recommendation came after months of study and a survey of all affiliates, soliciting their views.

The subcommittee reported that a majority of the affiliates that replied with specific opinions on the matter favored the view that the protection of Article XXI should not be afforded where the incumbent union has only informal or formal recognition and another union seeks exclusive recognition. Three affiliates said the union with informal or formal recognition should be protected.

Assessing the replies and the arguments, the subcommittee concluded that "only the highest form of recognition available should be considered an established bargaining relationship entitled to full and absolute protection under Article XXI."

The text of the council's statement:

Pursuant to its authority to interpret Article XXI of the AFL-CIO Constitution, and upon the recommendation of its special committee to study Article XXI's application to collective bargaining relationships with government agencies, the Executive Council hereby decides that it is not a violation of Article XXI for one affiliate to attempt to secure exclusive recognition in an appropriate bargaining unit of federal employes governed by E. O. 10988 even though one or more other affiliates are the formal or informal representatives of employes in that unit. The council is of the opinion that a union which has not secured the highest, most advanced form of certification and recognition available under E. O. 10988 should not be allowed to preclude other unions, and the members of the bargaining unit, from enjoying the benefits that flow from exclusive recognition.

Consistent with its earlier decision in the Massillon Hospital Case No. 64-84 the council wishes to emphasize, therefore, that it is a violation of Article XXI for a union which seeks only formal or informal recognition to attempt to sign up members of an incumbent union which already has formal or informal recognition.

Finally, nothing in this statement is intended to cover cases involving state, county or municipal employes. The council does not believe that the time is ripe for the resolution of the problems presented by the various complex state laws covering collective bargaining by state employes. Experience under the limited decisions announced herein will serve as a guide to the full resolution of that issue at the proper time.

Success Noted In Mediating Disputes Cases

New York—Mediation continues to prove successful in settling over 60 percent of the cases filed under the AFL-CIO internal disputes plan, the federation Executive Council reported.

The council reported that 84 cases have been filed in the first eight months of 1967 bringing to a total of 683 the number filed since the plan went into operation as Article XXI of the federation's constitution in 1962.

Of those 683 cases, 420 have been settled by mediation or mediation is still in progress.

Of a total 235 determinations made by impartial umpires under the plan, violations were found in 168 cases. The subcommittee of the Executive Council set up to receive appeals from the umpire's decisions received 76 cases. In 62 it denied the appeal; in 9 it referred them to the council.

The subcommittee received 41 complaints of non-compliance with the determinations of the umpires and achieved compliance in 22.

Since the last report the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen was found to be in non-compliance and placed under sanctions required by the plan. Other unions under sanctions are the Air Line Pilots Association, National Maritime Union, Brotherhood of Railroad Signalmen of America, Journeymen Stonecutters of North America, Switchmen's Union of North America, and the Intl. Typographical Union.

Expanded Funds Sought For Anti-Poverty Effort

New York—"There must be no retreat" in the war on poverty, the AFL-CIO Executive Council declared.

It termed the programs launched by the Office of Economic Opportunity "a good beginning" and urged Congress to put aside partisan politics and provide more money to expand the effort.

The Executive Council gave a strong endorsement to the poverty bill reported by the Senate Labor Committee—including the billion dollar emergency job program sponsored by Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D-Pa.). The Senate bill, it said, should be "adopted without amendment."

The emergency employment section of the bill, the council noted, would provide an estimated 200,000 "meaningful" jobs in both the public and private sectors of the economy. "We strongly urge the Senate to approve it," the resolution said, as "an important first step" toward a needed million jobs.

Pledging the labor movement's determination "to push steadfastly on to victory over poverty," the council declared:

"We must bring the millions living under conditions of privation and poverty into the mainstream of our national life.

"The war on poverty being carried on under the Office of Economic Opportunity is an important step in this direction. It was intended and to a large degree has been successful in involving the poor in such community action programs as Head Start, neighborhood health centers, legal services and the Neighborhood Youth Corps."

These, the council said, deserve "the continued support of the American people and of Congress."

The Executive Council urged the House Labor Committee, currently working on the poverty bill, to reject a proposal to pay a 25 percent wage subsidy to private firms employing unskilled youth.

It stressed that "the AFL-CIO strongly opposes such a wage subsidy as an ill-advised incentive for short-term, substandard jobs when the emphasis should properly be placed on the training necessary for permanent employment . . ."

VIET NAM was the subject discussed when AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Joseph Curran (left) introduced his son, Joseph P., to AFL-CIO Vice Pres. David Sullivan during the Executive Council meeting in New York. Sullivan was one of the U.S. observers of the Viet Nam election and young Curran recently returned from two years service there as an Army sergeant.

The COPE Administrative Committee, which includes all council members, voted to set up a series of meetings around the nation in the early spring of 1968 involving union staffs and officers and local labor officials in preparation for the 1968 elections.

The council also voted contributions to the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, Group Health Association, National Advisory Committee on Farm Labor, League for Industrial Democracy, Jewish Labor Committee and the Intl. Federation of Petroleum & Chemical Workers. No action was taken for the time being on a request from the Urban Coalition for financial support on grounds that the specifics of how it will function were not available.

THE AFL-CIO's new vice president, John H. Lyons, president of the Iron Workers, is welcomed by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany following his election to the Executive Council to fill a vacancy created by the resignation of Harry C. Bates, president emeritus of the Bricklayers.

John H. Lyons Elected To Executive Council

New York—John H. Lyons, president of the Iron Workers, has been elected a vice president of the AFL-CIO and a member of its Executive Council.

Lyons was elected to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Harry C. Bates, a member of the council since the formation of the AFL-CIO and a member of the former AFL Executive Council for 20 years.

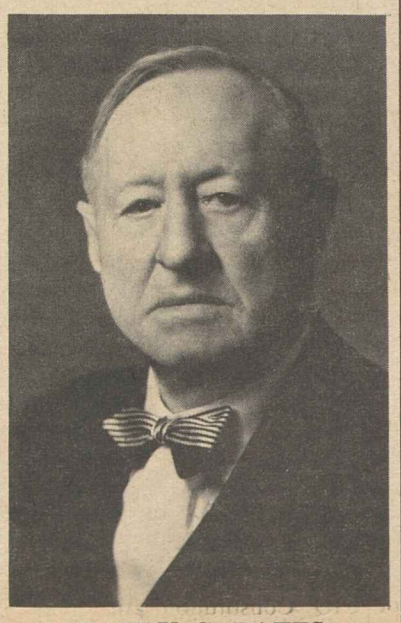
Lyons, 48, has been president of the Iron Workers since 1961 and a member of the union for 30 years. He worked at the trade while attending the University of Missouri where he received a degree in mechanical engineering in 1942. After service in the Air Force he worked on construction jobs throughout the country until 1954 when he joined the union's staff. He was elected a vice president in 1958.

The council adopted a resolution accepting with deepest regret Bates' resignation and expressing its appreciation for the services he rendered. Bates served for many years as president of the Bricklayers and is currently president emeritus of the union. He will be a vice president emeritus of the AFL-CIO.

The council noted that Bates has "devoted his entire life to the trade union movement, to the cause of achieving a better land for his fellow man," and that he has been "a source of strength and wisdom to this executive council."

Lyons is a vice president of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades and Metal Trades Departments and serves as a member of the AFL-CIO Internal Disputes panel.

He has been active in public affairs, serving on government advisory councils and committees on equal employment opportunity, employment security and juvenile delinquency. He is a member of the National Commission on Codes, Zoning, Taxation & Development appointed by Pres. Johnson early this year to make an in-depth study of major urban problems.



HARRY C. BATES

U.S. Urged to Restrict Private Capital Export

New York—The AFL-CIO called for government restrictions on the outflow of private capital to "protect the national interest."

An "immediate and thorough congressional investigation of the economic and financial operations of U. S. private investment in foreign countries," is urgent, the AFL-CIO Executive Council declared.

The council's statement pointed out that the sharp rise in the past 15 years, mostly to industrial nations, has "cost American jobs, cut into American exports and added to imports." Unregulated outflows of U. S. private capital "are not in the best interests of the American people," it said.

The book value of direct private investment in foreign countries skyrocketed from about $12 billion in 1950 to $49 billion in 1965 and is "considerably more at present," the council declared. The AFL-CIO does not oppose the export of private capital as a matter of principle, the council added, but contended that "private capital should not have absolute freedom of movement from U. S. to foreign countries regardless of consequences."

It noted that business profits are under various restraints in the U. S. such as health and safety standards, tax policies and minimum wage laws. "Under these measures our nation has prospered, business has expanded and profits have grown," the council declared, adding, "it is now time for government restrictions on the outflow of private capital."

A background paper issued by the council detailed the kind and locations of foreign investments of U. S. companies, the changing pattern of these investments and their impact on international trade. On the latter, the paper declared "it is clear that soaring investments of U. S. companies in foreign countries has had an adverse impact on international trade in at least several industries and a large number of products." The export of capital has also had an adverse impact on the balance of payments deficit, the paper added.

Pay Reforms Pressed for Federal Jobs

New York—The AFL-CIO Executive Council urged the House Post Office & Civil Service Committee to carry out the mandate of the 1962 salary reform law by bringing all salaried federal employes up to the pay levels of comparable jobs in private industry.

The council also declared that postal workers are entitled to a higher pay classification as well as a general salary increase.

"Postal employes have an additional problem," the council said, because "there are no jobs in private industry to which their task can be compared."

Present pay grades for non-supervisory postal workers, the statement contended, "do not properly reflect the value and importance of services performed."

It urged that all postal salaries through Level 5 be raised a grade "to bring elementary justice to post office clerks and letter carriers."

Potters' Vice President Leonard Greco Dies

New Brighton, Pa. — Leonard Greco, a vice president of the Operative Potters and secretary-treasurer of the Beaver County Central Labor Council, died here at the age of 64.

A double-amputee himself, he was a frequent visitor to veterans hospitals, encouraging servicemen who lost their legs. Greco was president of the Pennsylvania AFL-CIO Union Label & Service Trades Dept. and was a past president of his local union.

Massive Action Asked To Save Nation's Cities

new housing units each year including specific numbers of low-cost and moderate-cost housing, rent supplements, open housing in the suburbs and cities, urban renewal keyed to balanced neighborhoods and an adequately financed model cities program.

3. Improved and expanded mass transit.

5. A substantially expanded Neighborhood Youth Corps program to help youngsters remain in school and to provide work and training for dropouts.

6. Programs to assure quality education for all groups including federal subsidy for the More Effective School plan and vocational education geared to the modern job market.

7. Manpower training linked with job placement and increased training allowances.

8. A restructuring of the public welfare assistance program based on need alone with a federal minimum standard of payments and adequate federal funds.

9. Relief of rural poverty by federal legislation especially in the southern and southwestern states including a complex of programs to assist people living there.

10. Economic planning, under federal leadership to inventory needs for housing, public facilities and services to facilitate application of the nation's resources to meet the needs of a rapidly growing urban population.

Pay TV Plan Backed With Safeguards

New York—Subscription television, subject to appropriate restrictions and safeguards, was approved by the AFL-CIO Executive Council.

The Council adopted, with two members recorded as abstaining, a statement giving general support to the proposals of the Subscription Television Committee of the Federal Communications Commission. Those abstaining were Vice Presidents Richard Walsh and David Sullivan, the presidents respectively of the Theatrical Stage Employes and the Building Service Employes.

The FCC committee report sets up certain safeguards on the type of service, the preempting of time from free TV and the preempting of programs from free TV.

The council noted that the 1957 AFL-CIO convention adopted a resolution of opposition to pay TV and that the issue had not been considered by subsequent conventions. Last month a meeting of affiliates having a direct interest in the STV proposal was held with the preponderant view that the FCC should permit STV subject to restrictions and safeguards and continuing review by the commission.

The council noted that while the system would have an adverse effect upon employment in some fields it could have a beneficial effect on employment in others and that the development of new programming resources "would be in the interest of the viewing public."

Max Greenberg of the Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Union is at left; Pres. Paul Jennings of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers at right.

Ban Sought on Plants That Flee to Mexico

New York—The AFL-CIO called for repeal of a section of the tariff code that permits runaway American plants to locate in the Mexican border area and exploit low wages for greater profits.

The federation's Executive Council warned that operations in the area are expanding sharply and that the loss of jobs by U.S. workers and gain of extra profits to U.S. companies "are clear." The council statement called for U.S.-Mexican border commissions to consult with organized labor of both countries on the problem and urged the U.S. "to establish a general policy in opposition to this type of unregulated low-wage operations and to refuse assistance and advice to the foreign movement of plants that result in the loss of American jobs." Since the plants in the area are operating within the U.S. economy, the council added, U.S. labor standards should prevail.

The runaway pattern is based on setting up factories on the Mexican side of the border with the exclusive objective of producing goods for export. These plants import machinery, raw materials and semi-finished goods into Mexico duty free. When the products are shipped in finished form into the U.S. the tariff is based not on the cost of the product but on the value added in the Mexican plant, which is essentially the low wages of the Mexican border workers.

The council noted that the AFL-CIO has consistently supported efforts to improve economic, social and political relations between the U.S. and Mexico in terms of mutual benefits to workers in both countries. "At no time, however," the council added, "has the AFL-CIO approved programs designed to encourage runaway plants, undercut U.S. labor standards or to subsidize unregulated imports based only on low-wage competition from other countries."

The problem, a background paper issued by the council noted, grows out of the Mexican National Frontier program, designed to develop the border area, a strip 12.5 miles wide plus the state of Baja California. The program is geared to attracting U.S. capital in exchange for cheap Mexican labor.

The growth of the runaway pattern is detailed in the background paper which notes also that the U.S. government has set up a border commission which will meet with its Mexican counterpart to determine future policies.

Probe Pushed to Unveil Farm Bureau Activities

New York—A government investigation of the American Farm Bureau Federation and its use of U.S. "property and personnel to advance its fortunes and its ultra-right-wing philosophies" was called for by the AFL-CIO Executive Council.

The call for an in-depth investigation was coupled with support for the one-man efforts of Rep. Joseph Y. Resnick (D-N.Y.) "in his endeavors to get the Farm Bureau to make public the true nature of that organization."

The council called also on the House Agriculture Committee to aid "rather than hamper" Resnick's attempts to "unveil the tainted business and lobbying activities" of the Farm Bureau.

The council's statement reviewed the role of the "ultra-conservative, big-business oriented" organization, citing its record in opposing programs for small and medium-sized farmers, progressive and liberal legislation and its all-out attack on the labor movement. It cited its role also as a "haven for right-wing extremists, providing them platforms and pay for speeches and distributing literature which attacks with venom the institutions that are the foundation of democracy and freedom."

Resnick's investigation of the Farm Bureau was termed "courageous" by the council, which pointed out that he has revealed "startling, new information about the operations" of the Farm Bureau.

Resnick's charges, the council noted, involved the organization's tax-exempt status, its insurance business, its operation of migrant labor camps, its use of government buildings, its various profit-making business enterprises and its control of the rural press.

The Farm Bureau, the council said, opposed all rural area development and anti-poverty programs, medicare and improved social security, minimum wages and labor act protection for farm workers. The organization actively backs "right-to-work" laws, would prohibit industry-wide bargaining and backs the shackling of unions with anti-trust laws.

'Impact' Funds Voted to Aid Latin Workers

New York—The "impact projects" program of the American Institute for Free Labor Development has had a significant and important effect in Latin America, the AFL-CIO Executive Council declared in appropriating an additional $50,000 for the program.

The council has approved a total of $200,000 since November 1964 for these small, local action projects that give immediate, tangible aid to democratic union members throughout Latin America and complement other AIFLD programs in low-cost housing and worker banks.

Federation Vice Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, AIFLD secretary-treasurer, and William C. Doherty, Jr., the organization's administrator, told the council in a report that in view of the past effectiveness of the program, the additional funds would be in keeping with AFL-CIO policy.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, in announcing the appropriation at a press conference, reviewed some of the 96 projects approved for 17 Latin American countries since the initiation of the program and praised its accomplishments as an outstanding demonstration of American labor's concern for Latin American workers and helping build free and democratic labor movements in those countries.

Labor Dept. Fills Intl. Affairs Posts

Two high-level appointments have been made in the Labor Dept.'s international affairs program.

Darwin M. Bell shifts from the Peace Corps Latin American program to become deputy assistant secretary of labor for international affairs. Herman N. Blackman, a career employe, becomes administrator of the Bureau of Intl. Affairs.

19 Unions Hold Firm:

Full Support Voted To Copper Strikers

New York—Members of 19 affiliated unions on strike against major U.S. copper, lead, zinc and silver firms were assured in an AFL-CIO Executive Council statement that "all of American labor" stands back of the 40,000 strikers.

Forced to walk out July 15 by management's "take it or leave it" one-offer stance, the nonferrous industry's miners and other workers have "battled for fair wages and working conditions in an industry where both are notoriously inadequate," the council said in voting support.

"Standing together, these 19 unions, led by the United Steelworkers of America, are presenting a united front against corporations which have refused to provide their workers with realistic conditions," the council declared.

American labor not only believes the strike justifiable but also "supports the coordinated efforts of the unions involved," said the statement. It pledged "any and all support necessary to assure the workers involved the victory to which they are entitled."

The council action followed a pledge of strike support from the Steelworkers executive board, which voted at a Pittsburgh meeting to "lend our solid support to this strike until victory is achieved, no matter how long" the struggle.

USWA Vice Pres. Joseph P. Molony told his union's board the companies "still are unwilling to move from their pre-strike positions and from their totally unrealistic and unacceptable initial offers."

Molony and other members of the 19-union coordinating committee returned from Washington after an attempt by Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz and Commerce Sec. Alexander Trowbridge to get negotiations resumed proved futile. The companies refused to bargain, the union men reported.

The strike is "directly attributable to the industry's stubborn refusal to recognize the pressing and legitimate needs of its workers, and to its refusal to bargain in good faith," the USWA board declared.

Noting that "workers strike only as a last resort," the statement said the strikers "would like nothing better than to achieve a just settlement and return to their jobs" but "they are determined not to return until an equitable settlement is reached."

Union negotiators said they are "convinced that the industry is attempting to create a situation in which the government would allow a further increase" in the price of copper. The last price hike in January of 2 cents per pound "in itself could finance a settlement" of 20 percent, they said.

They noted that nonferrous metals workers lag behind employes in other major industries in wages, pensions and other contract areas. With their 1964 wage gains "virtually wiped out" by constantly rising prices, they perceive that industry, despite its "extremely high profitability," remains blind to its responsibility "to share these profits equitably with its workers," the USWA statement said.

The union has sent a request for financial assistance to all local unions, staff members and others. Its executive board urged additional funds to supplement the "substantial amounts currently being expended for strike relief."

Fruitless Talks

The July 15 walkout followed more than two months of fruitless negotiations and extension of the contracts for two weeks. Key issues include a wage increase, cost-of-living protection, wage structure revision, major pension and insurance improvements, and changes in other provisions.

Industry's Big Four companies, and four smaller firms following their lead, made one offer estimated by the unions to be worth an inadequate 12 cents an hour each year. The companies are Anaconda, Kennecott Copper Corp., Phelps Dodge Corp., and American Smelting & Refining Co.—the Big Four—plus Magma Copper Co., Inspiration Consolidated Copper Co., U.S. Metals Co. and Miami Copper Co.

Besides the USWA the striking unions are the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, the Machinists, Operating Engineers, Auto Workers, Sheet Metal Workers, Iron Workers, Carpenters, Painters, Boilermakers, Bricklayers, Molders, Plumbers & Pipefitters, Blacksmiths, Teamsters, Railroad Trainmen, Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen, Railway Carmen and the Office & Professional Employes.

U.S. Crackdown Urged On Alien Strikebreaking

New York—The AFL-CIO called on the U.S. Attorney General to take all necessary steps to stop the use of alien labor for strikebreaking purposes.

The Federation's Executive Council adopted a statement declaring that the use of aliens as strikebreakers in Texas and California "is becoming more critical daily and demands immediate correction."

Pointing out that the AFL-CIO has supported liberal immigration but has opposed any policy which would permit the use of immigrant labor to depress American standards of wages, benefits and conditions, it stressed that this very situation exists today.

Holders of special visas—commonly known as green cards—have been hired and exploited in fields where American workers are now on strike, the council declared, citing experiences in Texas and California.

Noting that earlier this year the Immigration & Naturalization Service had enacted regulations designed to eliminate the practice, the council said the interpretation of the regulation "has rendered it impotent and devoid of meaning." What is happening, the council said, is that green card holders already in the states are being used as strikebreakers and growers, who are not struck, are importing workers who are then transferred into strikebound fields.

Once a strike has been certified by the secretary of labor, the council asserted, no holder of a special visa "should be allowed to offer himself for employment within the area of a labor dispute so long as the strike exists."

Strict enforcement of this policy in the field with adequate and efficient personnel is a necessity, the council said in calling for action by the Justice Dept.

Concern To All:

Labor Rallies Behind UAW Ford Strikers

New York—The AFL-CIO Executive Council pledged its full support in the current strike of 160,000 Auto Workers against the Ford Motor Co., declaring that "the success of the UAW in this strike is a matter of concern to the entire trade union movement."

All federation affiliates, the Council said, can be counted on to rally to the support of the UAW and its members in their "battle for economic justice with the auto industry."

The council noted that the union was "forced to strike" Ford to obtain "the honorable and equitable contract terms the company refused to accept at the collective bargaining table."

The statement added that the union's walkout resulted from the "adamant refusal" of auto's Big Three companies to "give UAW members their proper share of the fruits of the industry's advancing technology."

Other developments in the strike that began Sept. 6:

● Ford management and union representatives met briefly Sept. 11 and agreed to resume bargaining talks interrupted by the walkout. Talks on non-economic issues were scheduled for Sept. 15 at Ford's central offices in Dearborn, Mich.

● UAW Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey notified all local union presidents that the special UAW convention scheduled for Sept. 23 has been rescheduled for Sunday, Oct. 8 at Cobo Hall, Detroit. It will review the status of 1967 auto bargaining; consider revising the union dues schedule "to provide adequate strike funds to meet the challenges" of 1967-68 bargaining, and the union constitution relating to dues payments, the strike fund and related subjects.

● Ford locals began registering strikers for benefit payments of $20 to $30 a week due the week of Sept. 17.

UAW headquarters reported that 28 local plant agreements have been reached by Ford labor and management bargainers, with 70 local pacts still unsettled.

The union said it expects about 3,500 delegates from all U.S. and Canadian locals to attend the Oct. 8 convention. Present dues of $5 a month may be raised to $5 a week for the duration of the contract emergency, union sources said.

Meanwhile UAW Vice Pres. Leonard Woodcock, head of the union's General Motors Dept., and Douglas Fraser, head of its Chrysler Dept., made the rounds of regional and local union groups to arrange dues collections and distribution of new dues books because of the expiration of Big Three contracts. GM and Chrysler refused a union request for contract extension and all UAW members are working without contract protection at plants of the unstruck firms.

In Canada, the UAW continued contract talks with Ford, GM and Chrysler for 45,000 union workers, whose contracts are still in effect. GM contracts expire Oct. 31 for 23,000 workers; Chrysler contracts Nov. 15 for 11,000, and Ford pacts Dec. 1 for another 11,000. Non-economic issues are the main subjects of talks in Toronto and Windsor, the union reported.

Negotiations on U.S. contracts began July 10. The Big Three firms made one economic offer, which the UAW called "entirely inadequate and inequitable" in view of lush company profits. An offer to raise wages 13 cents an hour the first contract year was merely an extension of current contract provisos, according to UAW bargainers.

ON STRIKE FOR JUSTICE, Auto Workers picket signs proclaim at Ford assembly plant in Los Angeles, where 2,600 UAW members are on strike and plant executives watch from roof in background. Some 160,000 workers walked out Sept. 6 at 92 Ford locations.

3M Company Must Participate In Coordinated Talks, Court Rules

St. Paul, Minn.—The Minnesota Mining & Mfg. Co. must bargain with a union committee that includes "observers" from other unions in 3M's 70-plant chain, a U.S. District Court judge ruled in a test of the right of unions to engage in coordinated bargaining.

The ruling brought management back to the bargaining table within hours under a prior agreement between labor and company representatives.

Judge Philip Neville issued a temporary injunction under Section 10(j) of the labor act restraining the company from refusing to bargain with the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers at St. Paul, Maplewood and Hastings, Minn., where OCAW Locals 6-75 and 6-418 represent 3,500 3M employes.

The judge's order will remain in effect until the National Labor Relations Board, and the courts, dispose of an OCAW charge that the company has refused to bargain with it, he specified.

The order also:

● Restricts the two local unions to the presence at their negotiations of not more than three selected officers or members of other unions, plus a representative of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept., as in the past.

● Applies only to the locals that brought the NLRB charges.

● Prevents members of "outside" local unions from voting on acceptance or rejection of company proposals, and limits their role to one of "assisting and advising and negotiating" for the host locals and not for their own locals.

IUD Executive Dir. Jack T. Conway said that as a result of the ruling, three representatives of unions representing 20,000 other 3M workers will sit in as members of the OCAW bargaining committee at various stages of negotiations.

Referring to rulings by the Supreme Court and Circuit courts in previous coordinated bargaining cases, Neville cited two applicable sections of the labor act: "It shall be an unfair labor practice for an employer . . . to refuse to bargain collectively with the representatives of his employes" and "employes shall have the right . . . to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing."

Interpreting this language literally, he said, "the unions may select union members . . . or anyone to represent them at the bargaining table; as indeed 3M can select whom it wishes on its bargaining committee."

He concluded there was reasonable cause to believe that the NLRB would find 3M guilty of unlawfully refusing to bargain. Besides, he reasoned, 3M will not be harmed if the NLRB and the courts later rule in its favor, whereas union members may suffer "irreparable harm" under the standards set down by the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in a General Electric Co. case involving coordinated bargaining.

Company negotiators walked out of bargaining sessions July 14 when OCAW bargainers showed up with observers from unions at two other 3M plants. OCAW filed charges Aug. 7 with the NLRB, which issued a complaint and prepared to take testimony.

The 3M firm has 70 plants making adhesive tape and other products. It has contracts with 55 local unions and more than 20 international unions.

Strong Support Voted Striking Clay Workers

New York—The six-month strike by members of the Brick & Clay Workers against four plants of Boren Clay Products Co. in Greensboro, N. C. has received strong backing from the AFL-CIO Executive Council.

The council called all AFL-CIO affiliates "to give this struggle their full support" and also to join the union's boycott against Boren's bricks and clay pipe, shipped to the Midwest and East Coast.

The union overwhelmingly won a National Labor Relations Board election at the four plants in June 1966 but for the next nine months the company flatly refused to offer anything except a pension plan, termed "inadequate" by the union.

The union seeks a 20-cent-an-hour raise, an "adequate" pension program, an insurance plan, vacation and holiday benefits and a dues checkoff. The workers voted overwhelmingly to strike and the walkout began March 20.

Brick & Clay Workers' Pres. Paul Pelfrey said the "small but determined" band of members—86 in all—are solidly continuing the strike even though Boren has hired strikebreakers to operate at one-third capacity.

He charged that Boren officials "kept up a constant harassment" of local union officers and yard stewards. The union has unfair labor charges pending with the NLRB.

The council pointed out that in addition to its harassment of union leaders, Boren "has sought to arouse racial antagonisms and in other respects engage in tactics similar to those of giant J. P. Stevens & Co.

"Such flagrant attempts to frustrate workers in their lawful desire to organize and bargain collectively are as reprehensible when applied to a few workers as to many," the council asserted.

Steelworkers Vote Auto Strike Backing

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Steelworkers' executive board knows that union members can obtain justice "only through resolute action" of the members themselves, it said in voting support for the Auto Workers in their strike against the Ford Motor Co.

Now involved in a "bitter struggle" with copper producers, the USWA board cited the "arrogant attitude" of large and powerful corporations. It said "we well know that neither the interest of the consumer nor the needs of the nation's economy" are persuasive in getting many big firms to bargain.

The USWA is "wholeheartedly in sympathy" with the auto strikers and will "provide any assistance necessary," it declared.

White House Fellow Named Aide to Wirtz

J. Timothy McGinley has been appointed a special assistant to Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz. McGinley, 27, served on the labor secretary's staff during the past year as a White House Fellow, one of a group of young men and women chosen for a year's service with key government officials.

He previously has been administrative assistant to the dean of Harvard University's Graduate School of Business Administration.

Survey Finds Strikers Eligible for Welfare

Most communities do not discriminate against striking union members in their relief programs but aid in many of them is either "grossly inadequate" or "completely lacking," Leo Perlis, director of AFL-CIO Community Services, reported following a recent survey.

He based his finding on a questionnaire sent to local and county welfare departments to find out if strikers are eligible for surplus food, food stamp, general assistance and aid-to-dependent-children programs.

Of 288 communities replying, 279 had general assistance programs, with strikers eligible under 234 of them.

There were 166 areas having aid-for-dependent-children-of-unemployed programs, with 141 of them giving such aid where the jobless parent is a striker.

There were 192 communities having either surplus food or food stamp plan, and in all instances workers on strike were eligible.

In a letter to local AFL-CIO Community Services Committees, Perlis pointed out that while the results still show some discrimination against strikers, they represent progress in getting them accepted for aid programs in the past 20 years.

Even so, he observed, the results point up "the gross inadequacy of the public assistance program and its total absence in some areas, including such major industrial centers as Birmingham, Jacksonville and Nashville, for example."

He pointed out that the same situation "applies in the case of surplus foods, the food stamp and aid-to-dependent-children programs."

Big-City Lag

Major industrial centers such as New Haven, Newark, Terre Haute and Trenton "have neither a surplus food nor a food stamp program," and 23 communities, including New Orleans, Newark, Gary, Indianapolis, Miami and Minneapolis, "have no aid for dependent children of unemployed," Perlis noted.

He urged local community services committees and their representatives "to follow up with cities that do not have these programs, to find out why not and what can be done to initiate them."

'We Must Begin . . .'

ALL OF THE NEW MIGRANTS to America's cities of the past quarter of a century—whites and Negroes, Puerto Ricans and Mexican Americans—have faced the difficulties of adjusting to a new and strange environment. But these difficulties have been especially harsh for Negroes.

The Negro migrants to the cities of the past quarter of a century have brought with them a history of slavery, segregation, lack of education, and, frequently, poor health, as well as suspicion of government authorities. On coming to the cities of the North and the West, the new migrants have faced the discriminatory practices of those areas, lack of adequate housing and the impact of automation on job opportunities for uneducated, unskilled workers.

The northern and western cities are suffering, in part, from the social ills and delinquencies of the South—including color bars in private, state and local government employment; backward standards of education, vocational training and public welfare generally, with particularly low standards for Negroes and Mexican Americans; social patterns to enforce the dependency of both poor whites and Negroes.

Since World War II and particularly since the early 1950s, the spread of automation has been reducing the number of unskilled and semi-skilled jobs that require little or no education or training. The types of jobs that helped to adjust previous generations of foreign immigrants and rural American migrants into America's urban areas have not been expanding.

GOVERNMENT REPORTS indicate that probably about 20 percent of the population, within city limits, earns less than the amount necessary for a minimum decent standard of living. Within ghetto areas, perhaps 60 percent to 70 percent or more of the families are in that category. The result is badly overcrowded housing, inadequate diet, poor medical care, few books and magazines for about 20 percent of city families and about 60 to 70 percent of those who live in ghetto slums.

The hard-core slum areas continue to deteriorate. People with jobs, some skills and some regular incomes have been moving out. They are replaced with new migrants from the rural South—added to the remaining lowest-income families, the jobless, the aged and fatherless families.

Much of the long-delayed legislation of the 1960s to achieve partial adjustments to the radical changes in American life, were first steps, without previous experience, precedents and trained personnel. Moreover, federal appropriations for even these purposes were kept down by public apathy. Yet they were greatly oversold and their adoption aroused expectations of overnight solutions that were impossible to achieve.

America's urban crisis is a national complex of social problems—rather than simple problems of individual communities. No city or state government can solve them in isolation. Neither can private enterprise, even with the promise of tax subsidies. Their solution requires nationwide social measures, with adequate federal funds and standards.

Step by step, we must begin immediately to rebuild America's cities and lift the living conditions of the American people.

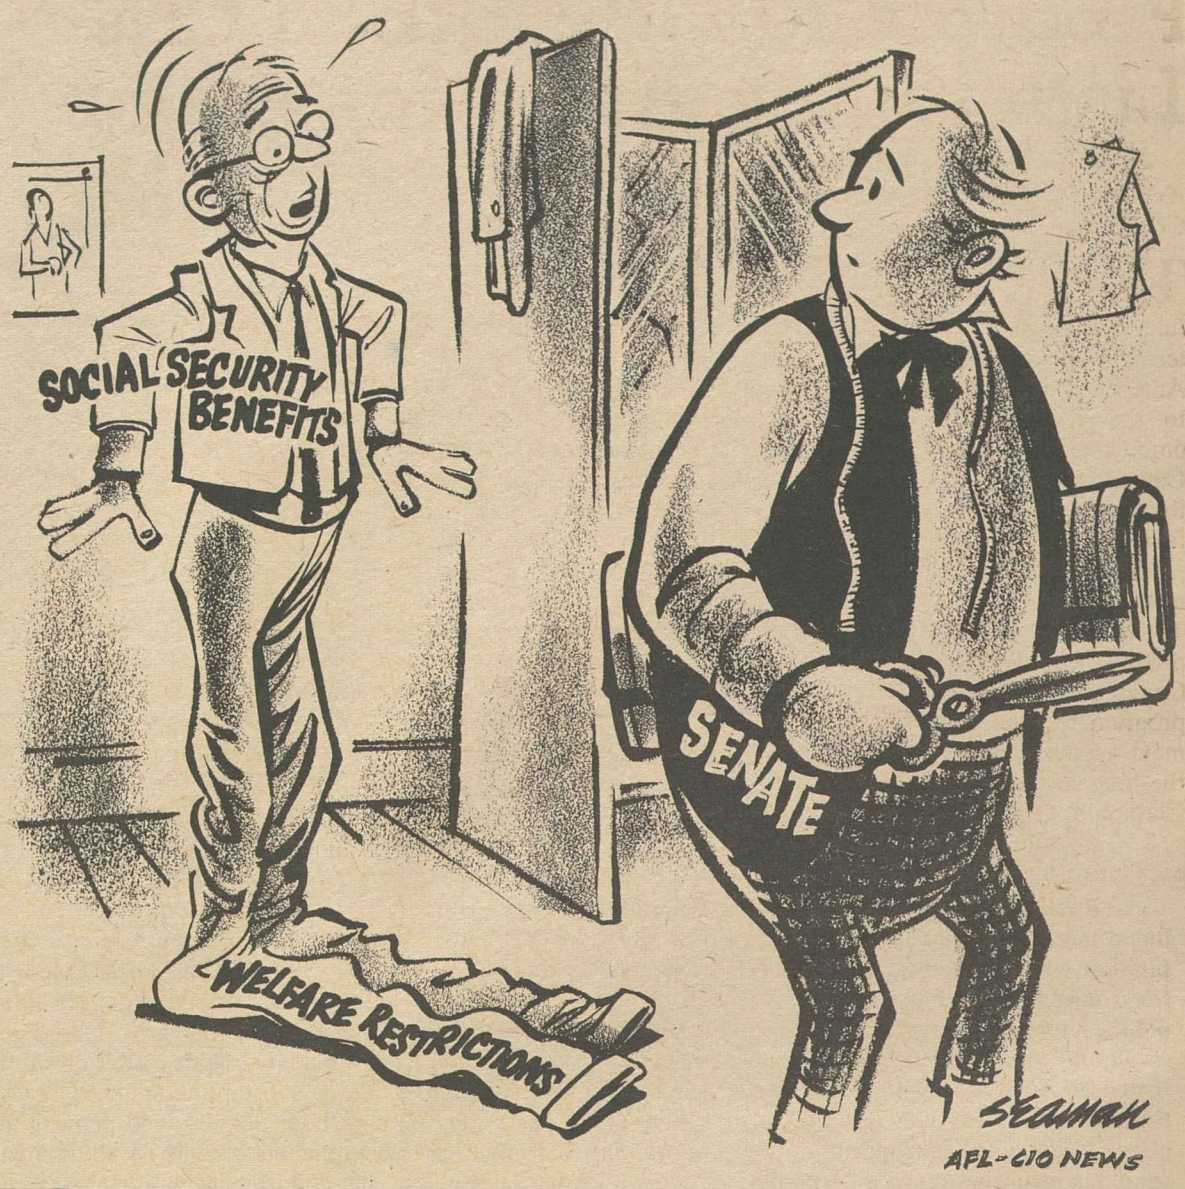
'It Needs Lots of Alterations'



Reminiscent of Bygone Era:

Industry's 'Peeping Tom' TV An Affront to Workers' Dignity

The following article, "TV—Peeping Tom of Industry?" appeared in the Aug. 31 issue of the IUE News.

"IN A HOUSTON JAIL, several television cameras are mounted in front of cell blocks in which the most troublesome prisoners are housed. Cameras are set up in full view of the prisoners. In a nearby viewing room, one guard watches a monitor and stands ready to sound an alarm if prisoners begin to create a disturbance. Prison officials report that simply because the cameras are always 'on guard', there has been a significant reduction in disturbances . . ."

This paragraph appeared in an article, "Can Your Company Use Closed Circuit Television?" in the September 1964 issue of Business Management magazine. Because "your company" probably doesn't run a city jail, the connection may be where the same article talks about the use of closed-circuit TV (CCTV) for plant security. At IBM's Endicott, N.Y., research and development facilities, CCTV is used to prevent stealing of secrets.

"In addition to strengthening security," says the article, "the presence of the cameras (boldly mounted in open and visible places) serves to make company employes more conscious of the confidential nature of their work."

The interrelation of management gain by transmission of production data on CCTV and possible worker loss via speed-up and subcontracting is illustrated in the June 1962 Factory magazine article, "Plant-wide TV System Keeps Eye on Production," concerning Hughes Aircraft Co., El Segundo, Calif. Says this article:

"Each monitoring station, by simply pressing a button, can get the machine load story. The scheduling department televises an endless rotating record of all machines on a plant-designed data presentation table. When there's a change, the operator immediately inserts the correction on the record with a grease pencil.

"Shop supervisors use these data to estimate production and delivery date of parts they will need. If production is too slow, they can ask for a speedup.

"If any machine or group of machines is over or under load, production and engineering supervisors can shift the work load within plant or contract some of the work outside . . ."

CCTV is used for security against theft and occupational hazard, for making possible remote control of what otherwise would be hazardous or awkward work, for legitimate maximizing of efficiency. It also helps management snoop on workers, facilitates speedups and the timing of subcontracting, and—along with other snooping devices—tends to convert the worker's sale of time and ability to produce into a sale of dignity. How much dignity does a woman worker have, on the foreman's TV screen, as she adjusts a garter?

At GM's Delco Radio, Kokomo, Ind., a few years ago, UAW said, workers could be watched over CCTV and overheard on intercom speaker-receivers at various points.

AN EXTREME CASE was reported in 1963, when the Communications Workers found a wide-angle lens camera attached to cabling in a telephone company building in New York. The camera was "focused for a direct side view of the urinals," CWA reported. AT&T wanted to identify the person who had been scribbling obscenities on the toilet wall.

IUE has had its share of such snoopery. In one case, union pressure helped persuade GE management to remove TV cameras mounted so the entire large motor generator fabrication shop could be watched at Schenectady.

A landmark victory was won at Electronic Instrument Co., Inc., Flushing, N.Y., in a magnificent decision by arbitrator Hubert T. Delany in 1965. EICO management installed TV cameras so the plant manager could watch the 95 IUE production workers.

Delany called this "a management action which does affect the working conditions of the employes and in fact imposes an appreciable and intolerable burden on them" in violation of the contract clause barring removal of beneficial conditions without good cause.
